The Eastern salutation was graphically depicted, and the reason given for the command "Salute no man by the way" made it clear to the Western mind. The meaning of the expressions, "He shall carry the lambs in his bosom," "He knoweth them all by name," "Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me;" the pictures conveyed by "The lost sheep," "A wolf in sheep's clothing," "The lost piece of silver," "Two women grinding at the mill," "The coat of many colours" were rendered easy of comprehension and more forcible by the living way in which they were represented.

New York Notes.

AN assistant who has recently come to All Souls' Episcopal Church, Rev. M. K. Schermerhorn, has started a new organisation for youths that is likely to do much good, and is capable of almost indefinite expansion. It is called the Order of the Silver Star, and youths between the ages of fifteen and twenty-one years are eligible for membership. Only those lads are invited to join the Order who seem likely to develop something rather above the average in character. But when a boy has once become a member he receives special guidance and help from the president, who exerts himself to obtain suitable employment for him at the right time. All young men who graduate honorably at the age of twenty-one years become "honorable associates." It seems probable that this organisation has an extensive future before it.

Rev. A. B. Simpson, president of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, is expected to start for Cuba and Porto Rico in the course of a few days with a view to inaugurating mission work on those islands. Mr. Cody and De Barritt are already in Havana preparing the way for future work by holding meetings and studying the conditions of the city. The Alliance is also fully alive to the opportunities that will be shortly presented in the Philippine Archipelago.

The large training-school established by the Alliance for the preparation of those who wish to engage in home and foreign mission work is at Nyack, on the Hudson River. During the past winter about a dozen young men have been brought down to the city, where they have taken active part in house-to-house visitation and other forms of work.

Mr. P. W. Radcliffe is an alert, active, and successful evangelist, who takes particular delight in winning souls where the difficulties are great and success seems unlikely, and—leaving behind him a good force of converts to help the pastor carry on the work where he left off. He is finishing a two months' campaign at the Jane Street Methodist Church, in an unpromising neighbourhood. Roger Martin.

Work in Geneva.—With reference to a recent communication bearing this title, M. Ernest Favre, writing from 8, Rue des Granges, Geneva, says:—"If it were deemed advisable to have services every Sunday in the Victoria Hall, the question of expense would not be a hindrance. We are happy to receive financial help for societies working in Roman Catholic countries, such as the Evangelical Society of Geneva, or for the Central International Committee of the Y.M.C.A.; but we do not require financial help for the work done in our own town—it is our duty and privilege to provide this for ourselves. It is needless to say we shall always be thankful for the sympathy and prayers of Christian friends for the work in Geneva."

Missionary Loan Exhibition.

So marked and wide-spread had been the enthusiasm in Glasgow before the exhibition opened, that one after another of the committee declared all the labour was well repaid by the bringing together of Christians of every name—"with, indeed, those of no name at all," as one pithily expressed it. Such a large company of missionaries, from every part of the globe, had never been brought together in Glasgow on any previous occasion. From the outset personal and denominational considerations were completely lost sight of in the united striving after the advancement of the Kingdom of the Redeemer, till difficulty was often experienced in finding out to which society or mission particular individuals belonged.

The morning gatherings for prayer, under the charge of Mr. Thomas McLaren, have been times of real blessing, and through every part of the work it has been felt that the spiritual side was ever in the minds of the helpers, constituting the motive power behind all arrangements and plans. Success, so far as numbers were concerned, was assured from the meeting on the morning of the first Sabbath, March 5, when Colonel Musa Bhai, from India, stirred the hearts of old and young by his testimony to the Gospel as the power of God among his swarthy countrymen.

A CONTINUOUS STREAM

of meetings has since been kept up in the great St. Andrew's Hall, the average being not less than four per day, while in each of the nine lesser halls or "courts," over which the exhibits are divided, "talks" of a more or less formal character have be given in close succession. In this way the visitors have had abundant opportunities of hearing the various aspects of missionary work and life treated. In order to afford if possible additional facility for spreading such information as was actually desired, missionaries were repeatedly "put in the witness box," and all within hearing invited to question them at will.

The visitor was expected to begin his inspection in the hall known as the "China Court," but which also accommodated the exhibits from Japan, Tibet, and Nepaul, in addition to the still more general ones of the Bible societies. A native guest room had been arranged in one of the corners; and in order to gratify as far as possible the desire for a practical demonstration of the manners and customs of the people, a series of was given by missionaries to illustrate these. The result proved how wide was the opening for such object lessons. Many old and deeply interested friends of the missionary cause declared that a new light altogether had been shed on questions which before they had been unable to understand. Prayer wheels from Tibet, images of Buddha and other deities, with all the different paraphernalia of heathen worship produced looks which were eloquent of deep-seated compassion for the multitudes in thraldom and darkness. Every helper and steward was frequently presented with requests for the Bibles and other relics of William C. Burns, Gilmour of Mongolia, and Robert Morrison.

RECEPTIONS IN NATIVE COSTUME

The interest in the Indian department seemed to centre mainly round (1) the various

RELICS OF WILLIAM CAREY;

(2) a model zenana, in which two lady missionaries were always to be found, explaining the condition and habits of the women; (3) a model of a ward of Delhi Hospital, with lady missionaries in charge, and two others dressed respectively as a Mohammedan and a Hindu patient; and (4) the Burmese collection of curios, including the famous Golden Book of Burmah.

The famous Bible lost by Dr. Andrew A. Bonar in Jacob's Well, and subsequently recovered, would itself have been sufficient to draw crowds to the Bible Lands section. But another notable attraction consisted in a panorama of Jerusalem, constructed and explained daily by Mr. J. W. Moodie (the soldier evangelist). A model of the Tabernacle, occupying the centre of the room, was also a never failing object of interest, and the subject of many lectures.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS

were necessarily represented to a limited extent. Mementos of the Waldensian persecution were well to the front, as well as the garments and instruments connected with ritualistic tortures. A copy of La Noble Leçon, the brief rhythmical confession of faith of the Waldenses (500 or possibly 800 years old), a baptismal register, 1692-1706, and a much-charred Bible of 1580, all elicited expressions of deep interest.

According to the arrangements the tour was expected to finish with African affairs, and it was observed that almost continually persons of all classes were to be found standing before the Livingstone memorials with feelings of deep emotion. Among these were to be found the letter in which he announced to Dr. Moffatt the death of Mrs. Livingstone, and the page of his journal containing the last entry, on April 27, 1873, with the words, "knocked up quite." A special feature of the court was a reproduction of the hut in which the missionary-explorer died. Much attention was directed in the talks to the successful working and hopeful prospects of industrial missions.

On all hands special emphasis was laid on the growing place for the Scriptures and other on the education of children, on medical mission work, and on open-air preaching. The missionaries laboured hard to enlist the prayerful interest of all comers for their respective spheres, and the reception with which they met was sufficient to fill their hearts with gratitude. The impression is growing that the results of the Exhibition in this respect will be far reaching indeed.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE IN MISSION WORK,

Arrangements were made for the attendance of large bodies of school children. Christian Endeavour companies and Sabbath School classes were being carefully conducted round by their leaders and teachers.

Special preparations were made to bring under the notice of visitors the interesting and attractive missionary literature of the day, and the entrance hall was set apart for this purpose. The department was placed under the charge of Messrs. R. L. Allan and Son, who made an excellent display of the publications of various societies, as well as those of publishing firms.

T. C. M.

Tempest and Calm.

Hark to the voice of the tempest,
Hark to the hurricane's roar,
Lashing the restless ocean,
Sweeping the peaceful shore.

Loud is its voice of terror,
Awful its mighty breath,
Sad with the wail of sorrow,
Dark with the wings of death.

As the flight of a great destroyer
Hath it passed over sea and land,
Scattering grief and anguish
Broadcast on every hand.

. . . . .

O God of the calm and tempest,
Creator of land and sea,
In pitiful supplication,
We stretch out our hands to Thee!

We know that the winds and waters
Of old at thy word were still,
And rejoice that Thou still doth hold them Obedient to thy will.

. . . . .

O God! there are fiercer tempests,
Than these in this world to-day—
Storm-winds of dire destruction,
Making men's hearts their prey.

O Thou who hast still the power,
As in days of thy flesh of old,
Who led captivity captive,
Spoiling the spoiler bold,

O! save us, or, Lord, we perish,
Bid sin and its sorrows cease—
In our hearts, our homes, our nation,
Master, breathe forth thy peace.

Harriet Julia Evans.

Friendless and Fallen.

Conveniently situated in a quiet little street close to the great London railway termini near King's Cross, stands an unpretentious building which is notable among London philanthropic institutions as the only "open-all-night" and free shelter for young women.

A glance at its interior reveals a delightful homeliness and quietude. It is a shelter in the best sense of the word, and many girls in times of extreme tension and temptation have found it to be a social bridge leading over a black river of sorrow and sin into happier and purer conditions of life. Always known as a shelter, it is actually a cleanly and comfortable residence, under sound Christian direction.

The greater value attaches to the work, since each new comer is separately dealt with, in order that her physical and spiritual needs may be satisfied. It is well used by the police, as a kind of temporary depository for the homeless, and many and thrilling are the stories told of tragic adventure and rescue, in which the devoted workers have been enabled to bring troublous cases to a happy conclusion. Mothers have received back and lost wives have been restored to their husbands and families, while vicious traffickers in human flesh have been robbed of their prey.

THEIR ERRING DAUGHTERS,

The shelter is, however, but one of the useful institutions in connection with the familiar work among the friendless and fallen, directed by Mr. William J. Taylor. The offices at Euston Road are the centre of multifarious labours, which, conducted with sanctified common sense, meet the needs of each of the classes into which the unfortunate naturally come. The Society has two homes for those who have fallen deeply into evil ways, another for the more hopeful cases, and a third for the very young who need lengthened training, in addition to a preventive home for respectable friendless girls rescued from circumstances of grave moral danger.

A brief talk with the kindly superintendent, upon whose shoulders rests so heavy a burden, quickly demonstrates a chief reason why, under the blessing of God, the work shows such abiding results. The aim is not merely to rescue from the thorny ways of misery and the "paths of primrose dalliance," but to lead the soul to the Saviour. The work is essentially a Christian one, and although a vast number of services are conducted annually in the various homes by bands of voluntary workers, importance is attached to quality rather than quantity. With such kindly and careful oversight and valuable personal dealing, it is not surprising to find that "after many days" grateful hearts bear witness from all parts of the world to the precious help afforded

IN TIME OF NEED.

At the bright and cheery training home at Parsons' Green the young women go through courses of instruction in such useful matters as cookery, dressmaking and nursing. The demand for servants trained here is twelve or thirteen times as great as the possible supply. The religious services held on Sundays are frequently attended by many former inmates (now in situations), who are gladly welcomed by the executive of the home.

The permanent worth of the many efforts put forth is attested by the present standing of many a girl who, has long manifested a consistent life. Some eighteen years since, a young but desperate woman drunkard, of evil repute, threw herself into a canal, but was fished out with difficulty. Later on she was rescued from the Thames at Gravesend, where she lay, overcome by drink, with the tide lapping over her. Taken to the rescue home, she became an exemplary character, and is to-day highly respected in a position of trust. The records abound with such cases, and the solid value of such work to the community at large surely calls for general recognition.

Owning her weakness, her evil behaviour,
And leaving, with meekness, her sins to her Saviour,

Many of the cases are of such a sad, indeed terribly painful character, that it is not possible to do more than refer to them. The old story of human perfidy recurs, in one form or another, again and again, often aggravated by circumstances of callous and calculating wickedness. The man often escapes, the woman is left to suffer. That suffering itself, in many instances, has been sanctified to the sufferer, and sincere, if tardy, repentance has led to salvation. Mr. Taylor is able to point to many who are members of churches and industrious toilers in the service of the King.

The committee, while thanking all who have so far assisted this mission of mercy, ask for special help to further reduce the debt. Communications may be addressed to Mr. W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston Road, London, N.W.

A Working Men's Mission.

THE difficult problem—How to reach with the Gospel the bona-fide working men in poor neighbourhoods—has been clearly solved by the splendid results that have been achieved by the Brothers Thos. and James Young, in the New Cut and neighbourhood. Messrs. Young are hard working sons of toil, who were soundly converted to God some thirty years ago in the times of Richard Weaver, William Carter, and Ned Wright, all of whom did such excellent service in the old Victoria Theatre, Waterloo Road, in reaching a class untouched by ordinary Christians.

No sooner had these sturdy young fellows tasted the sweets of the good word of life than they became all on fire to spread the message which had brought about such a radical change in their own lives. They began to testify of Christ in the open-air in the New Cut, and much interest was created among the motley crowds that assembled. The impressions made deepened night by night until it became a necessity that an in-door service should be started somewhere close by. A conference of the young family was called, with one or two other friends, and resulted in the decision to rent a small room at £10 per year, to be paid out of their hard earnings week by week. Empty boxes at first constituted the sitting accommodation until they could make some comfortable forms after the day's toil was completed.

The next step was to secure part of an old warehouse in Collingwood Street, Blackfriars. This was altered and fitted up, and in its turn it soon became insufficient. Further extensive alterations and additions had to be made, and now our friends possess a structure capable of seating some 400 persons, with an upper floor consisting of a smaller hall with accommodation for 400 more, schoolrooms, and other conveniences. In addition to this there are two branch stations in York Street, Walworth, and in Decima Street, Bermondsey, each of them filled with the very class which are so very hard to get at.

These devoted evangelists are worthy of the highest esteem, and we greatly rejoice in their ever-growing usefulness among the working folks of South London. Hundreds of this class have been rescued from degradation, misery, and crime, and are now active disciples of Jesus Christ.

The lease of the Collingwood Street premises will soon expire, and a building fund has been started, with the object of providing a suitable mission hall when the term is out. We trust that this useful work will not in anywise be hindered for lack of support. Mr. F. A. Bevan, of 54, Lombard Street, is the treasurer. The address of the Brothers Young is 33, Nelson Square, Blackfriars Road.

Midnight Meeting Movement.—Mrs. G. S. Reaney has written a pathetic booklet, entitled "Anywhere, Anything, only——" with the object of enlisting sympathy on behalf of the midnight meeting movement, which deserving work is just now in urgent need of support. "It is impossible," says Mrs. Reaney, "to over-estimate the value of the faithful ministry of such as seek the erring and lost in their own highways and byways amid their own cruel and disastrous surroundings." The secretary of the movement is Mr. C. W. McCree, 8a, Red Lion Square, W.C.

Free Church Council.

THE fourth National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches of England and Wales is meeting this week at Liverpool. There were large gatherings on Tuesday, the opening day, when addresses of great interest were delivered by Drs. John Clifford and Alexander Mackennal—the outgoing and in-coming presidents.

Dr. Clifford's utterance was a sermon based on Jer. xxxi. 10, 11—"He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him." The richest draught of consolation in Jeremiah's Gospel is in the assertion of the principle on which these national and institutional changes proceed. God's goal, he says, is always constructive, not destructive; the gathering together in one the children of God that are scattered abroad, and not the driving them away from home and fatherland. He shatters the social form of Israel's life for the sake of the more perfect and adequate rebuilding of the nobler Israel on the basis of the original redemptive idea.

This law is older than all churches, more fundamental than all States, and as wide and deep as our human life. It is the vital condition of progress. It goes back to the creative and and belongs to the principles that precede the foundation of the world. It is true of the whole man and of all men, in all times, and in all places. The nursery is broken up and the toys are scattered, but it is that the life of the school may begin, and the education of the home be advanced by the regulated drill of the specially-trained teacher. Then God breaks in on the sheltered life of the school, and forces the youth into the tented field to face the shocks of temptation, the seductions of the world, and, by incessant combat, make himself a man. It is hard and sometimes sad, but it is really as beneficial as it is inevitable.

REDEMPTIVE PURPOSE OF GOD,

Proceeding, Dr. Clifford spoke of reconstruction as the law of progress, illustrating the proposition from Israelitish and Roman history. He continued: What a scattering there was at the Reformation! How it still appals men who fail to recognise the work of God! With what energy they empty the vials of their scorn upon it, both man and thing; but it is useless, they cannot destroy the fact. It is the most signal and decisive achievement of the modern world. It broke up the unity of Christendom. It shattered the hoariest edifices of tradition. It lifted the "dead hand" from the throbbing heart of Europe, rising up in newness of life. It undermined the edifice of Latin Christianity, an edifice built on false ideas of religion, of the Church, and of the way of salvation. But it put in its place a unity more spiritual and inward, healthy and quickening; a unity that develops the man instead of destroying him, reverences the reason instead of poisoning it, stimulates the search for truth instead of quenching it, and, whilst securing all the advantages of consecrated co-operation, develops and perfects the highest type of individual manhood. That reconstruction is going on now. The are operative all around us. Christ has been drawing us into closer fellowship with Himself, with his ideas, with his revelation of life and duty, with his conception of the Kingdom of God, and thereby He has drawn us into closer union with each other. This federation of the Free Churches of England and Wales, is one of the latest and most prophetic signs of his unifying activity. God is gathering his Israel, dwelling in "many folds," and keeping him as a shepherd doth his flock.

FORCES MAKING FOR CHURCH UNITY

On "The Crisis in the Church," the preacher said:—This "crisis" is the outward and visible sign of the struggle of mutually exclusive ideas. It is another form of the ancient battle between Jeremiah and the priests; between Jesus and the Pharisees; between Luther and the Pope; between Puritanism and Romanism. God will break up this political Israel, so that the ideas of Christ may reign in the land, and He may gather into a purer and more fruitful unity the whole of the people of God in these realms. It is as certain as day is day and light is light, that a priesthood, with its officers, its sacrificial and propitiatory functions, was no part of the "mind of Christ" or of his Apostles, and to claim it as a "development" is to mistake corruption for progress and degeneration for advance.

Oh that all men who are assured of the will of Christ would co-operate to give Him his rightful place in the life of the world—that those who remain in our National Church, but are opposed to everything that savours of were ready to demand freedom to govern themselves in subjection to the Lord Jesus, the one and only Master of his people! They hold the key of the situation just now. They could retain their episcopacy, their Prayer-book, their buildings, the prestige of their history, their social influence, their parochial system, their power for conversion; and whatever property they lost would be used in larger national interests than their own, such as ministry to the aged poor and the education of the young; and their gains would be immeasurable; and mainly this, the Protestant Church in Ireland being witness, the restoration of the Christian people to power would be an effective check on priestism and the recovery of the lost functions of the Christian Church.

THE TYRANNY OF PRIESTISM,

The new president, Dr. Mackennal, spoke on "Our Growing Work." He gave a brief historical synopsis to make it evident that the work of the Free Churches is no spasmodic effort, no mere stroke of policy, still less an outbreak of despair. In the course of his address he said:—The history of the Protestant sects among the English-speaking people during the last three hundred years is part of the wealth of this National Council. Should we fall to lamenting among them, let us not forget that these divisions have been forming character, moulding types of men. We cannot afford to lose the Congregational tradition, the Presbyterian discipline, the Methodist habit, the temperament of the Society of Friends. These are "the riches of Christ's inheritance in the saints," and we must see to it that they are preserved. Hitherto we have not had many serious differences of opinion among us, for we have been considering mainly those things in which we knew we were agreed. But as our work broadens, diversities of judgment are sure to appear, and we must not be afraid of them. Differences of judgment among Christian men are only the outcome of "diversity of gifts;" even controversy, and settling questions by the major vote, may be carried on in a Christian spirit. "Let the righteous smite me, and it shall be well with me; it shall be an excellent oil, which will not break my head."

THE VARIOUS DIVISIONS

School for Bible Study.—On Wednesday next (March 22nd) at Morley Hall, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W., a meeting will be held to discuss the subject of Mr. J. Herbert Tritton's letter, in our last issue, re the establishment in London of a permanent School for Bible Study. Friends interested in this project are invited to send for particulars. Lord Kinnaird will preside.

Wells Road Gospel Mission.—For thirty-two years mission work has been maintained at the Wells Road Mission Hall, Sydenham. The annual report tells of much excellent effort in the various departments. The workhouse and infirmary are regularly visited, and much is done for the aged and infirm of the district. Encouraging instances of manifest blessing are recounted. The services are conducted in hearty and homely fashion that is well suited to a working class district. There is a deficit on the year's working. Address Mr. Burton, as above.

British and Foreign Bible Society.—At the Guildhall, on Saturday, the annual meeting of juvenile collectors of this society was held, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. Mrs. Bishop gave an interesting account of her travels in the East, and spoke of what she had seen of the society's work in the countries that she had visited. It was her experience that wherever the Bible went it wrought a great change in the lives of the people. Speaking of the society's work in Russia, she said that there was unlimited liberty for the circulation of the Holy Scriptures there, and indeed their Bibles were carried free on the State railways.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Two Hundred Little Girls.

A VISIT to Miss Sharman's Homes for orphan girls is a delightful experience, for though very large, each wing is so bright and clean, and the bright little lasses are so modest and well-behaved.

Neatly dressed in trim dark frocks, with crocheted collars of their own working, they study, and cook, and wash, and sing in such a nice spirit—not only one of the largest families in England, but one of the happiest. "Half of them are ill," said the matron, "with either whooping cough or influenza. All this floor is full of sick cases; and to crown all, Miss Sharman is herself down with influenza and bronchitis."

Just think of it! Fancy calling on the doctor and saying, "Please, doctor, will you come and attend a hundred little girls?" Think of the washing and medicining and preparing of little delicacies

FOR TINY CONVALESCENTS!

Happily, Miss Sharman has some very kind and hard-working helpers; and, although it has meant a great deal of hard work, every one of the sufferers is getting better. "They are so good and patient and grateful," adds the matron, "although they are weak."

Some of the orphans have sad stories indeed. Quite a number of them are children of consumptive fathers and mothers whose dying moments were relieved by the thought that kindness and good training would be the lot of their little ones. Some are sisters, so that although father and mother gone, they have still some earthly relationships to cheer them. Kind Miss Sharman, you see, has not the heart to separate them, so sometimes she takes all the girls of a family. There is Baby Beatie, for instance, and her little sister, besides a group of four other "tinies," each under four years of age.

There are pretty photographs in the secretary's room showing many of the bright and chubby babies: "Dimples," whose poor mother died, leaving her so very young and helpless; and a dear little toddles, who, being "Putt" by name and very plump of person, has acquired the name of "Putty." She has several sisters in the Homes. Of course, as the little girls grow up they are taught all kinds of useful work, in addition to getting a REALLY GOOD EDUCATION.

The schoolrooms, in spite of there being so much sickness on the premises, were spotless. The large grounds and playrooms are all in good order. In one of the latter I saw a huge dolls' house. It could be lifted by means of two iron handles, and inside there were no less than six large rooms, all nicely furnished, and with a lot of dolls looking so comfortably at home as though they said, "we belong to the homes, too, and want the little sick girls to play with us."

Everywhere the teachers are careful to train their charges to love Jesus, so that when the girls are grown up and go out to situations they are able to become useful workers in the kingdom. The Lord speaks, no doubt, to some of these lambs of his. There is little five-year-old Violet whose father, mother, and three sisters were burned to death in a great fire. She only is left, and when the girls were singing the other day of the faithfulness of God, Violet said, gravely, "Yes, nursie, I know God is true."

Perhaps you ask "what becomes of them all?" Well, they get such good training in the Homes that there is no trouble at all in getting them into situations. Miss Sharman gives a watch to each girl who stays seven years in her first place, and no less than twenty watches have been won. As for the needlework; it is so carefully done that Royalty itself has sent orders for some.

Miss Sharman has been toiling for orphan girls for thirty years, and many of her girls have grown up to bless her; and now that she, with so many of her precious charges, is laid aside, let us specially and for them. With such a large family to find in breakfasts, dinners, and teas, and suppers, one may wonder whence comes the money to pay all the tradesmen's bills. Well, Miss Sharman's bills get paid in very much the same way as those of the famous orphanages near Bristol, which were started by that good man, Mr. George Müller. The money always comes, according to the need, in answer to prayer.

PRAY FOR HER

Just a word in conclusion. The doctor says the children may have plenty of oranges; would it not be nice to send them some? If any of our young readers think, so they may address them to Miss Sharman's Homes, Austral Street, West Square, London, S.E.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 167).
(Ruth.)

By whom and to whom were the following said? Complete the texts and give chapter and verse:—

1. The Lord deal kindly ——
2. Intreat me not ——
3. For the Almighty hath ——
4. Let me now go to ——
5. Go not to glean ——
6. Let her glean ——
7. Who was Naomi? Give names of her sons.
8. Who was Ruth? Give name of her husband.
9. Who was Boaz? Give name of his wife.

(Children under ten do any three, between ten and thirteen any five.)

ANSWERS TO BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 166).

1. John vi. 68. By Peter to Christ.
2. Luke ii. 32. Simeon to God.
3. John xii. 21. The Greeks to Philip.
4. John x. 27. Jesus to the people.
5. Matthew vii. 13. Jesus to the people.
6. Matthew v. 14. Jesus to the people.
7. John viii. 12. Jesus to the people.
8. Proverbs iii. 6.
9. Luke xxiv. 29. The two disciples to Jesus going to Emmaus.

The hidden text is "I am the way." John xiv. 6.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Zeldah Albert*, Violet Ashworth*, Frances*, John and Mary Allsop.

B—Phyllis Boyd, Mabel Birney, Rose Butler*, Ella Berryman, Mabel Berry, Daisy*, Gordon and May* Bligh, Herbert Braddon, Emily Bridgewater.

C—Anna Chanyen, John Colville, Arthur* and Winnie* Cox, Eleanor Chance, Lois Craven*, Edith*, Mabel and Ida Cole, Ethel Colgrave, Lydia Cleary.

D—Stanley Drew*, Nellie Dowsett, G. Constance, Elizabeth and —Drayson, Catherine* and Agnes* Darke, Ivy, Violet and Kitty* Donaldson-Selby, Ralph and Dorothy Daintree, Violet Dodsworth.

E—Muriel Ecroyd.

F—May Fitzgerald, William and Temperance* Foskett, Charles Faillettas.

G—W. Gordon and Mildred* Greenwood, Clarice and Bertie Gale, Kathleen Gough, E. Mabel Golding*.

H—Beatrice Hastings*, Francie and Florence* Hoyte, Eric and Mary* Hill, Dorothy* and Gertrude Hewer, Ruth Hinder, Jennie Holmes*.

J—Emily Jones, Agnes Jones, Nellie Jelfs*, Betty Jacobs*.

K—Eva Kalb*, Maurice Kalinsky.

L—May, Henry, Edward and S. Elizabeth Law, Edith Lockhart, Blanche Lindup*, Cecilia Lichtenstein.

M—Florence Mitchell, Margie Marston, May Mills, Dorothy and Elsie* McMullin, Mabel Morris, Lewis and Arthur Morice, Dorothy Morgan, Charles Macdonald*, Marie Meek.

N—Valerie Noel, Edith Nash.

O—George O'Beirne.

P—Myrtle Perry, Mary Plumb*, Kathleen Pincott, Daisy Phillips, Kathleen* Pasley, Hattie Peters*, Daisy Pym.

R—Una Reynolds*, Kate Rosenbloom*.

S—P. Southam, Kathleen Scorer*, Dotty Stocks*, Dorothy Stocks, Douglas and Kathleen* Shepherd, Ethel and Jessie* Snowball, Flora* Simmons, Ivy*, Muriel* and Rosetta Sherwin, Douglas Stevens, Gladys Stockman, Solomon Stockfish, Esther Simmons*.

T—Derwent and Edwin Turnbull, Florence and Eileen Tomlinson.

W—Dorothy White, Noel and Phillis Wright, Ella Williamson*, F. Gwendoline and Edith* Wallis, Madeline Woodford, Cecile Wright.

No. 165.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Enderby Anderson, Gladys Allan, William Aston.

B—Leonard Bentall*, Ashley Bowker*, G. T. Burke, Rhoda and Ruth Braithwaite, Isa Bell, Elizabeth and Janet Black, Stanley, Lily and Gordon Boxer, Henriette Bardot, Ernestine Buhl, Sylvia, Maud, Evelyn and Dorothy Barrett, Eva and Robert Browne, Leonard, Lindsay and Corbet Browne, Teresa, Lilian, Avory and Frank Blackie, Rose Butler, Mary and Susette* Beck, Mabel Birney, Dorothy*, A. and M. Bellerby, Florence Blackman, Allen Baker, Ethel and John Benger, Ralph Bourne, Gladys, Godfrey, Percy and Dorothea Bates, Mary Bryant, Maggie and Charlie Banks, Annie Brisland, Dorothy Berry, Hannah Bridgman, Harry Butler, Ernest Bond.

C—Willie and Mary* Charles, Alice Crang, Dorothy Charles, Ethel Craigie, Daisy Clarke, Walter Carter, Richard Cornthwaite, Jessie Carter*, Cicely and Millicent Craven, Joan Clarke, Gladys Calvert, Daisy and J. Clarke, Nellie and Janie Crawford, Dorothy Clarke, Daisy* and Florence Combes*, Edith Corrick.

D—James Davey, Vera Dickinson, Marie Denizot, Blossom Davis, Cecil Darley, Mai and Ethel Davidson, Phyllis and Faith Duncan, Violet, Ivy and Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Dorothy and Marjory Dyke*, William Dilly*, Mary Duff, Violet Dodsworth.

E—Helen Eardley-Wilmot, Maud Eddy, Muriel Edwards*.

F—Maggie, Eva, Bessie, Kate and Mabel Fletcher, Netta*, Flossie*, Lewis and Agnes Fullarton, Jeanne Faucon, F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Hyacinth Fitzsimons, Francis Field, Bessie, Blanche* and Mary* Freeman, James and Marian Freegard, Richard Farmer, W. Arthur Findlay.

G—Walter and Helen Gray, Minnie and Evelyn Giddings, Thomas Groomb idge, Mary Glass, Dorothy, Stuart, Jack, Edith* and Margaret Gray, Harry Gribble, Alfred* and Frank Gibbs, Agnes Grierson, Norman* and Elsie* Good, Daisy and Hedley George, Dorothy* and Nancy Grove, David Gardiner.

H—Willie Hooper, Edith Harvey, Freda Hunton, Violet Holford, Helen and M. Hunter, L. Kathleen Hughes, Georgette Hofmann, Sand and May* Handsaydo, Margaret Hogg, Rosy Hamilton, Ella Hake, Mary and Freda Haines, Edith and Winnie Harrison, Theodora Hill, Dorothy Harris, Mary Hill, Cyril Hills, Edith Holmes, Ethel Hutchings, Netta and Gladys Hussey.

I—Isabel and Ami Inglis.

J—Lizzie Johnstone, Emily Jeynes*, James Jackson*.

K—Ethel and Ray Kelsey, Helen Knight, Jeanie Kyle, Wm., T., Agnes*, Alex* and Isa* Kay, Elizabeth Keddie.

L—Alice Lemar, Nellie and Edith Lockhart, Henry Laing, Murray and Graham Lloyd, Hannah Lovell*, Guinefred and Elsie Leigh.

M—Dora Marples, Dora Muir, Dorothy and Margaret Morris, Ian McGregor, Avie Mallory, Lois Mewburn*, Barbara and J. Maconchy, Olive Mewburn, Lillie Mallory, John MacMurray*, Mary and E. Vallerie Maitland Kirwan, Margaret Macphee*, Edith Marnham, W. C. Mallinson*, J. H. Mather*, Mildred Morgan, Bessie Millar, Dugald and K. G. McGilp, Abraham* and Bella Mack*, Louis Maclachlan, Annie* Macnair, Daisy, Annie and Nellie Mackenzie, A. R. Marlow*, Margie Marston, Reginald Measor, Christina Marshall, Evelyn Moir*.

N—Peter, John and Cissy Nicholson, Maude and Amy Nottage, Edith Nash, Herbert Newton, Mary Neligan, Mary*, Dorothy* and Henderson* Nathan.

O—Eva and Maude Oakes, Katie Oliver*, Mattie and F. A. Osmond.

P—J. E. Pearce, Daisy Phillips, Winnie Page*, May, Vera and Daisy Petrides, Muriel and Dorothy Patten*, Walter Perryman, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Geoffrey, Percy and Clarice Peach, Kathleen Pincott, Laura Percy*, Evelyn Pechey, Jessie, Eddie and Willie* Palmer, Joanna Pearman, Edith Purkiss.

R—E. Marjorie and Herbert Rainey, May Reed*, Cyril* and A. M. Roberts*, Willie Rigby, Willie Rogers, Elmina, Isabel and Jessie Roe.

S—Bessie Scantlebury*, Janet, Arthur and Sydney Speed, Bessie Symes, Mervyn, Eric, Gladys, W., Llewellyn, Undine and Gwendoline Shaw, McLeod Staight, Kathleen Scorer, Vera Stapylton, Madeline Smith, Gertrude Scott, Nannie Sturrock, Violet and Evelyn Shaw, C. R. Salvesen, D. D. and T. M. Stanier, Marie Sleigh*, Cicely Sherbrooke, Ivy*, Muriel* and Rosetta Sherwin, Bertha Stocker, Constance Schaeffer, Ronald Studd, Florrie Smith, Nelly Sery, Herbert Stuart, Bob Salt, Lilian Sargeant, May Short, W. Stangoe*.

T—George Taylor, Sarah Tyson, Marjorie Tracey, Alice Truelove, John and Janet Thomson*, Alice and Frank Thompson, Annie McT. Taylor, Olive Tritton, Herbert and W. S. Toller, E. Thorne*.

U—Lilian* and Queenie Upton.

V—Nelly Vickers, Gertrude Vellacott*, Kenneth Vining.

W—Thomas and Robert Weddell, Edith Whiting, Amy Wingrave, W. H.* and Ethel Williamson*, Charles Wingrave, Myra Webb, George Wright*, Leonard Wall, Greta* Watson, Pringle* Wilson, Sydney Wisdom, Louisa*, Violet* and Arthur Walker, Edith Wilkins, Charles and Winnie Williams, Florrie White.

Y—Gladys, Maurice and Eva Young, Annie Yeo*.

FOREIGN LIST.

Correct answers received from:—

No. 158—Elsie and W. B. Henderson (Jamaica), Ruth Sprigg (Cape Colony), Maria Lister (S. Africa). No. 159—Dora May*, Elsie* and W. B. Henderson (Jamaica), Daisy McArthur (Natal). No. 160—Queenie* and Llewellyn Dale* (India). No. 161—Lottie*, Rotha*, and Ivan St. George, Dora Wallace (Canada), Queenie* and Llewellyn* Dale (India). Nos. 163 and 164—Willie*, Kate*, Nettie* and Ina* Thomson (Bulgaria).

Personal.

Dora May, Elsie Henderson.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers."

Edith Grieve, Ella Hake, Gussie Clark.—Many happy returns of your birthday.

Francie Figgis, Enderby Anderson, Gilbert Allsop.—I am sorry you have been ill, and hope you are better now.

Beatrice Hastings, Ernest George, Winnie and Edith Harrison.—Many thanks for your interesting letters.

Muriel Sherwin.—Thank you for your letter. I was so pleased to read about your "little girl," and hope you are a good example to her.

May Petrides.—Some of the texts in Vera's clock were incomplete, and you had given ten words for 9 o'clock.

Louise Filhol.—I am sorry that you and your little sisters were unable to find the hidden text, but as you are all under 13 years, this was not necessary.

Gwennie and Evelyn Moir.—Many thanks for the pincushions and text-books which you have so kindly sent. Evelyn had given seven words for 8 o'clock in her "clock."

A Gibbs, Thomas Groombridge.—Several texts in your clocks were incomplete, or references omitted.

To all.—Remember you must always put your age on your "Searcher" papers.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Soldiers' Home, Winchester, March 22. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birmingham and neighbourhood, to March 29; South Malling, March 22. Mr. Hewlett, Christ Church, Dover, to March 20. Mr. J. M. Wigner, Collingham, Notts, March 18-25. Mr. C. H. Collier, Zennor Hall, Balham, March 1 to 19. Mr. W. H. Wilson, Southport, March 19; Stalybridge, March 20-22; Mr. E. Collier, Wandsworth Road Railway Mission, March 20-23; Upper Norwood, March 24. Mr. Mont. Goodman, Conference Hall, Stratford, to March 16; Shoreditch Tabernacle, March 19. Scripture Union Anniversary Meetings, at Exeter Hall, Strand, Thursday, March 23, at 8 and 6.30. Chairmen, Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., at 8; Mr. Chas. J. Procter (of Liverpool) at 6.30.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending March 25.

Sun., Mar.	19	Luke	xx. 19-36	Thurs., Mar.	23	Luke	xxi. 25-38
Mon., ,,	20	,,	xx. 37-47	Fri., ,,	24	,,	xxii. 1-13
Tues., ,,	21	,,	xxi. 1-13	Sat., ,,	25	,,	xxii. 14-23
Wed., ,,	22	,,	xxi. 14-24

A Book for the Times.—Rev. John Urquhart's work, "The Inspiration and Accuracy of the Holy Scriptures," is full of important facts and arguments for the integrity and authority of the Bible. In obedience to the wishes of many friends, he has prepared a cheap edition of the book, with the hope of placing copies in the hands of theological students and Sunday School superintendents all over the country. For such a purpose the original price (7s. 6d.) was practically prohibitive. The new edition is clearly printed on good paper and well bound, and though unabridged (600 pages), it may be had, in numbers not fewer than three, at 1s. 11d. per copy, post paid. Already some colleges have been supplied, and Mr. Urquhart will be glad of the co-operation of friends of the Bible in placing copies in other seminaries and public institutions. Communications may be addressed to him at 74, Bath Street, Glasgow.

About Books.

THE HOLY LAND.

Mr. Townsend MacCoun, M.A., an American scholar who, from his writings on geography, deserves to rank as a specialist in that science, has successfully met a want which has been felt by many a minister and Sunday School teacher. There is no lack of large works on the Holy Land, and small books and sets of maps are easily accessible. What many require, however, is not so much topographical description as comprehensive and precise information in manual form, relating to every period of Bible history. This desideratum is admirably supplied by The Holy Land: in Geography and in History. (Two volumes, 7s. Partridge & Co.) Here are 145 maps, describing the lands of the Bible as sectioned off for careful study. One volume contains the geographical letterpress, alongside geological and physical maps and charts; the other volume is devoted to historical chapters, with explanatory maps, both ethnic and political. As a cartological production this work deserves cordial recognition; being based on the latest research, it may safely be recommended for the purposes of thorough Bible study. Full indexes enhance the value of the work for ready reference.

A DEVOTED MISSIONARY.

There is a perennial interest in missionary biography; and, among the many records of lives devoted to Christ in the closing quarter of the nineteenth century, honourable mention must be made of Benjamin Escande, who laboured in connection with the Paris Missionary Society, first in Senegal, then in Madagascar. The story is well told in Benjamin Escande: Souvenirs Intimes, a fully illustrated volume. (6fr. Geneva: J. H. Jeheber, 28, Rue du Marché.) Those who are acquainted with that excellent monthly, Le Journal des Missions Evangéliques, know how eloquently French missionaries write of the peoples among whom they labour and the progress of the Gospel in their midst. Here we have typical letters by M. Escande, full of animation and uniformly spiritual in tone and substance.

The biographical sketch is by M. Ernest Barnaud, and a cordial introduction is supplied by M. Benjamin Couve. Of Christian parentage, Escande was consecrated to the Lord from his birth. As a child he was a model of obedience, and set his heart upon giving his manhood to God. In 1881 M. Coillard pressed the cause of missions upon the churches of France, and Escande offered, waiting upon God to open his way. Difficulties that seemed great were in due course removed; and, having gone through the prescribed course of study and training, the young man was sent to inhospitable Senegal. After eight years' service, he returned to his native land in 1896 for a brief furlough. At that time the Madagascar field was waiting for Frenchmen to enter, and Escande responded without hesitation to the call, knowing all the while that what with political disturbance and Jesuit intrigue, work could not but be difficult in the extreme. He went out in September, 1896, and after nine months' labour was assassinated. He was in company with his colleague Paul Minault at the time, and it was while Escande was attending to his wounded companion that the bandit's bullet killed him.

M. Escande was a grand worker; his letters show the man of resource—preacher and teacher, practical as well as pious. For the most part the illustrations are from his own photographs. The fragrance of his life, as outlined and reflected in these pages, should do something to promote among his countrymen the great and good cause for which he gave himself, especially in the needy field of Senegal. The last dated letter in this book indicates the surrendered mind and heart of the true missionary. Concluding a letter to a friend ten days before his assassination, M. Escande said: "All to Jesus and all for Jesus; that should be our motto."

The Illustrated Missionary News is an old friend. We welcome it now in an improved form, edited by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle and Mr. Jesse Page. This monthly is rich in missionary intelligence and arguments for extended service. Right of tone and worthy in object, this magazine appeals to a large class of earnest Christians, and it will not appeal in vain. (1d. monthly. Marshall Bros.)

The monthly paper issued in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews is appropriately styled Trusting and Toiling. The volume for last year (Marshall Brothers) gives a readable account of work by various agencies in many lands, and contains papers in continuance of the Rev. John Wilkinson's deeply interesting autobiography.

Christ in the City (2s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.), by Rev. H. B. Ottley, a collection of Advent Lectures to city men, is spiritual in tone, of vigorous expression, and obtains additional interest from its wealth of anecdote and historical allusion. The fervent appeals for more practical piety and national righteousness have our sympathy, but we observe with regret occasional expressions involving sacramentarian teaching.

Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston have issued a Chart of the Life and Ministry of our Lord (7s. 6d.), which will be of great service in school teaching and Bible class study. Prepared by Canon Linton, late of Birkenhead, and provided with a descriptive handbook, this is a really good piece of work—plain in design and execution, and furnishing a useful conspectus of the Gospel story, with full references to the sources in the fourfold narrative. This chart will be welcomed by many as meeting a distinct need in the work of religious education.

The third part of Dr. Bullinger's new work, Figures of Speech Used in the Bible, deals with twenty-four forms, and explains and illustrates hundreds of passages of Scripture. Among the specially fruitful sections of this part are those devoted to Paronomasia, Synonymia, Parallelism, and Correspondence. A recognition of these literary features in the Book not only adds interest to reading, but does much to save the student from mistaken conclusions and unsound interpretations. (By subscription. From the Author, 25, Connaught Street, W.)

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has issued a new series of twelve penny pamphlets bearing striking titles, and in every way suitable for circulation among men and others who have come under atheistic influences. The whole form the first part of a forthcoming volume, "The Christian's Armoury," and as meeting objections regarding revelation and religious truth, the pages will be of value to Sunday-school teachers and Gospel preachers. (Snow & Co.) Mr. Bradlaugh offers these publications at half-price (sixpence per dozen) in parcels of 5s. worth and upwards, direct from the Anti-Infidel Tract Depot, 70, King's Cross Road, W.C.

Songs and Verses (3s. 6d. Ward, Lock & Co.) is a volume of the new library edition of Whyte Melville's works. The first half is devoted to characteristic lyrics of unequal merit, the best of them spiritual and touching, but many redolent of the stable and the stirrup-cup, and curiously out of harmony with the long poem entitled "The True Cross," which constitutes the latter portion of the book. The author's reputation is, of course, mainly derived from his stories and songs illustrative of life in the hunting field; but, although "The True Cross" can scarcely be called a conspicuous success, it is sufficiently vigorous to induce a regret that the undoubted ability of its writer was not more consistently devoted to the treatment of great subjects.

A pamphlet of great importance, and essentially practical in design, is How to Avoid Tubercle, by Tucker Wise, M.D. (1s. Bailliere, Tindall and Cox).

The Dragon in the Castle (2d. Partridge and Co.) is a neatly prepared booklet for the young, in which the case against strong drink is put by means of allegory.

The March number of Miss Mason's Rest and Reaping (1d.) is bright and interesting, containing much instructive scriptural teaching and helpful contributions on missionary work.

An instructive booklet by Mr. Thomas Newberry is The Millennial Reign and Everlasting Kingdom. The treatment is but slight, but the pages are sure to proved helpful to students. (3d. Pickering & Inglis, Glasgow; or The Author, Alexandra Villa, Weston-super-Mare.)

Under-Currents (Alfred Holness), a collection of short poems by Mr. W. J. Willmott, contains some neatly-written verse of lofty aim and often of apt expression. One of the number, "A Mother's Trust," has met with much acceptance in separate form.

Rev. C. Musgrave Brown, of Toxteth, Liverpool, has issued a useful "Tract for Churchmen," entitled Royal Condemnations (1547-1576) of Mediæval Fasting, together with the True Scriptural Teaching. (6d. per dozen. Marshall Bros.)

Among other revivals may be observed that of catechisms among Nonconformist bodies. Many will welcome a revised and improved edition of A Short Catechism for Use in Congregational Sunday Schools. By J. Hilton Stowell, M.A., with a preface by A. M. Fairbairn, D.D. (1d. Congregational Union, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C.)

The third edition of Echoes from the "Liberator" Prison (1s. Unwin Bros.), by Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, is issued. This well-known and forcibly written book, which gives such heart-breaking accounts of the sorrows endured by those who were robbed of their support by the Liberator crash, should be helped to a wider circulation than it has yet attained.

How to Deepen the Spiritual Life in Our Churches (1d. Christopher & Son, 15, Commercial Road, Newport, Mon.), by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Maindee, is a lucid and helpful examination of some of the weaknesses that hinder a close communion with God. It insists, in clear-cut and homely terms, on a deeper study of divine truth, and an increase of private prayer, resulting in earnest labour in the great harvest field.

The Ideal Publishing Union issue several very useful books on temperance subjects. The Case for Sunday Closing (1s.) has been compiled for the use of reformers, and bristles with serviceable information. The Beverages We Drink (1s.), by Mr. Walter Edwards, is a pithily written illustrated handbook dealing with many liquors both alcoholic and non-alcoholic. The annual volume of The United Temperance Gazette (2s.) is a welcome issue; and Reminiscences of a Temperance Advocate (1s.) by Mr. Frederick Atkin, is written in cheery and anecdotal style.

Obituary.

REV. WALLACE MCMULLEN, D.D.

THIS esteemed gentleman, general secretary for home missions to the Methodist Church in Ireland, died somewhat suddenly on Monday night in Dublin in the eightieth year of his age and the fifty-eighth of his ministry. Dr. McMullen has had a distinguished career, and has long been a prominent figure in the Methodist Church in Dublin, in which he has successively occupied several high offices. The other churches in Ireland and many philanthropic societies will deplore the loss of one whose broad-minded sympathy was given to every good object, irrespective of class or creed.

PRINCIPAL KING, WINNIPEG.

The death of Principal King, D.D., of Winnipeg, Manitoba, brings sorrow to many who remember him in his native Borderland and to old fellow-students in the United Presbyterian Church. He was born at Yetholm in 1829, and had thus nearly completed his seventieth year. His father was a strong anti-Burgher, and his son John inherited a good deal of his decision of character and firmness. From the parochial school of his native village he passed to the University of Edinburgh, where he took a prominent place. After the usual theological curriculum of the United Presbyterian Church, he studied for some time in Germany, and then, after licence, went out to Canada. After a short settlement at Columbus, in Ontario, he was translated to Toronto, where he built up a strong congregation, to which he continued to minister for twenty years. In 1883 he was elected by the General Assembly of his Church Principal of the Manitoba College. When he entered upon his duties the college was comparatively young and was financially weak; but it grew under him in every way, and now takes rank as a seminary not inferior in teaching power to any of the Assembly's other colleges.

The Peace Congress.

THE prospects of the International Peace Conference have been greatly brightened by several recent events, notably by the successful settlement of outstanding difficulties between this country and France and Russia. The date of the Conference has been fixed for May next at the Hague. Every nation in Europe will be represented that has a standing army. The delegates will be divided into three sections, each with a special list of questions for consideration. The first will deal with the questions of disarmamen and the reduction of peace effectives; the second with arbitration; and the third will be called the "Section of Initiative," and will deal with certain subsidiary but important questions. In this country the movement has been gathering force week by week, and by to-day 200 town and other public meetings have been or are to be held in favour of it. On Tuesday next there will be a great peace demonstration in London, under the presidency of the Bishop of London.

How essential it is that something should be done in the direction of the forthcoming Peace Conference may be judged from a speech made by the French War Minister in answer to a question why he did not propose to raise the "effective" of the army. M. Freycinet replied that the population of France being stationary, this increase "could not go on for ever," and that the field of war being limited, there was no room for more troops. The suggestion is that the perpetual increase of soldiers has gone on till their very numbers tend to defeat their purpose: on any conceivable battle-field they would become unwieldy and useless, because they would be too thick upon the ground. This is a grim reductio ad absurdum of the situation. Such statements as these go far towards ensuring some practical result from the Conference of the Hague.

The Barnsley Y.M.C.A. celebrated its second anniversary on March 9 by a reception and public meeting. The reports given showed much valuable effort.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Aitken at Dorchester.

THE picturesque little town of Dorchester has been the scene of a deeply interesting religious movement in the form of a mission, conducted by Rev. W. Hay Aitken, assisted by Rev. J. Nunn and Mrs Crouch. The place has been stirred, and it is hoped that much good has been effected. Fifteen years ago Mr. Aitken conducted a mission in the same church, and he publicly stated towards the end of his mission, just closed, that he had been greatly cheered at the testimony received during this visit to the abiding and satisfactory results of that former effort.

Night by night the church of St. Peter's has been crowded with a most attentive and interested audience, and the feeling has seemed to deepen from day to day. The impression made upon Christians by the morning addresses on the spiritual life has been most marked and definite, and it is hoped that the heart-searching teaching on the subject of holiness has led in many instances to a fuller consecration of life and heart to God.

Perhaps the most striking feature of the mission has been the remarkable work amongst the children under the teaching of Mr. Nunn. It was a sight to stir the heart to see All Saints' Church literally packed with young people who seemed eager to drink in the preacher's words; and, although no attempt was made by him to play upon the tender sensibilities of childhood, it was touching to see the tearful faces of youthful seekers after God. Mrs. Crouch's meetings for women were also very much appreciated.

A large number have professed to give themselves to God, both old and young, and there seems every reason to hope that this mission will again mark an epoch in the spiritual history of the town, as the former mission certainly did.

A united mission in Huntingdon, conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, under the local Free Church Federation, has resulted in much blessing.

Much blessing has resulted from the mission at Gayton, Norfolk, by Mr. R. Williams, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings were largely attended, and there was much spiritual awakening.

Mr. Walter Duff has held a gospel mission in Limavady, Co. Derry. All the pastors joined in the special effort, and many young men and women have come out boldly for God. The work is spreading all over the district.

Mr. C. Inglis has held a Gospel Mission at Trinity Chapel, John Street, Edgware Road, W. Large numbers attended the services, and the work was much blessed to believers, and to a number who decided to follow the Master.

Mr. Thorne has conducted a series of Gospel services in the Victoria Hall in connection with the work so long and so successfully carried on by Mr. Thomas A. Leigh. The attendances have been most encouraging, and many have professed to decide for Christ.

The annual mission for young people at Barry Dock, South Wales, has been most successful. Upon several occasions the inquiry rooms have witnessed scenes of prayer and tears. Many have professed conversion, and the effort is being followed up in the Sunday school. G. R. C.

Rev. John McNeill has had a ten days' mission at Wick. There has been manifest interest and deep impression. Mr. McNeill has been receiving many letter telling of blessing which has come to the writers. He has conducted mid-day meetings in the surrounding district. He is now at Thurso.

Mr. Charles Cook, of Hyde Park Hall, has just completed a month's mission at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. On Sunday evenings during the month Master Percy Kahn sang, and the meetings were crowded. On Thursdays Mr. Cook gave lectures, illustrated by dissolving views. Many very interesting cases of professed conversion were recorded.

A mission has been conducted at the Conference Hall, Stratford, by Mr. Chas. Galletly, of the Evangelisation Society, and we are most thankful to God for the blessing vouchsafed. We believe many were savingly converted, while Christians were led into fuller light and more complete consecration. Mr. Galletly is a most able evangelist, and eminently suited to give Bible readings for meetings of Christians.

E. Fox Butlin.

Mr. W. D. Dunn is at present paying his third visit to Aberdeen, and is being much used of God. Large audiences have gathered daily at the Y.M.C.A. Hall for Bible reading, and the Gordon Mission Hall has been crowded on week nights with men and women to hear the Gospel; while a special meeting on Sunday evenings has been held in the Albert Hall. Much blessing has come alike to saved and unsaved. An interesting and helpful feature in the meetings has been the singing of Mr. McAusland.

Mr. Monro Collings, of Gosport, has concluded a three weeks' mission in Feltham under the auspices of the Christian Union. The signs of definite blessing have been abundant. Many have professed conversion. From 150 to 200 people in this small place have flocked day after day to the afternoon Bible readings. On the last Sunday all the Free Churches united around the Lord's table, and none will forget that hallowed season. A year ago Mr. Collings conducted a fortnight's mission here, when many professed to find "joy and peace in believing," of whom by far the greater part remain until this day.

P. Mallinson, President.
John W. Robinson, Secretary.

A remarkable mission has been conducted in the Tatham Street Primitive Methodist Church, Sunderland, by the Brothers Weaver. The church, which is one of the largest of the Nonconformist churches in this town, has been filled for fourteen days with eager companies drinking in the "wonderful words of life." On the Sunday hundreds could not find admission. The missioners conducted the services with their well known prudence and ability; the power of God worked through them and rested upon all. Mr. Frank Weaver sang with telling effect, and Mr. Bewley Weaver preached with great power. Nearly 200 went into the inquiry room; some of them appear to be remarkable trophies of God's saving grace.

J. F. Sherman, Minister.

Kirkpatrick-Durham, a village in Kirkcudbrightshire, has been the scene of an interesting work carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Corsie, of Helensburgh. The village, which lies six miles north of Castle Douglas, is situated in the centre of a locality noted for its associations with the persecuted Covenanters. Mr. and Mrs. Corsie's work commenced on January 29 and continued till March 1. The interest deepened and grew as the work made progress. There have been many interesting cases of what appears to be real conversion to God, and a quickened interest in Gospel truth and in the services and work of the Church has been awakened. Our friends purpose beginning a mission in the neighbouring village of Corsock, six miles distant, and many prayers will follow them for blessing there. James Craig.

F. C. Manse, Kirkpatrick-Durham, N.B.

A remarkable work of God has recently taken place at County Road Wesleyan Church, Liverpool, in connection with a ten days' mission, from February 25 to March 6, by Mr. Josiah Nix. The church, which accommodates about 1,000 people, was well filled every night, while on the two Sunday evenings every available seat was occupied, and hundreds had to be turned away. Services were held every week evening and on Thursday afternoons; the Saturday night meeting took the form of a temperance demonstration. Mr. Nix's Gospel messages were accompanied with great spiritual power; numbers were convinced of sin and led to a knowledge of the truth. Over 500 persons found their way into the inquiry room, where they were attended to by a band of efficient workers. The majority of the professed converts were young people. At the Temperance Demonstration on Saturday, March 4, 700 persons signed the pledge. The success of the mission was in a large measure due to the earnest co-operation of Rev. E. Omar Pearson, the minister of the church, and of the workers, who were present night after night. R. A.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. Monro Collings.—Till Mar. 26, Isleworth; during April, Haling Road Hall, Croydon.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Mar. 18-28, North Shields; 29, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 30, Gateshead; Apl. 5, lecture at the Metropolitan Tabernacle; 9, Queen's Park Congregational Church, Manchester; 15-24, Bristol.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Mar. 18-27, Farnham; Apl. 1-10, West Hartlepool.

Gipsy Smith.—Mar. 18-27, West Hartlepool; Apl. 1-10, Walsall; 15-24, Swindon.

Mr. Geo. Clarke.—Till Mar. 26, Southampton; Apl. 2-17, Finchley.

Mr. E. P. Telford.—Till Mar. 28, Rotherhithe Free Church; 26-Apl. 3, Stoke Newington; 9-20, Gainsboro'.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Apl. 2-17, Sunderland.

Mr. Newton Jones.—Mar. 18-27, Whitstable.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Mar., Barking.

Rev. A. T. Jones.—Mar. 19-27, Bible readings, Evangelistic addresses, Duckpool Road Baptist Chapel, Newport, Mon.

Mr. John Elliott.—Mar. 19, Mount Pleasant Hall, Brixham.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Mar. 19-31, Dundee.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—Till Mar. 30, Edinboro' Castle and Hastings; Apl. 2, Bromley; 9-20, Canning Town.

Mr. Jas. Sprunt.—Mar. 19, Winchester; Apl. 2, Reading; 9, Willesden.

Mr John Burnham.—Mar. 22-29, C. M. Chapel, Blaengarw.

Mr. William Grove.—Apl. 8-24, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Mar. 19, Mr. Wm. Hill; 26, Messrs. Loveridge and Owen; Thursdays, Mr. Rickman. Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sundays during Mar. at 7, Mr. W. T. Munn; Thursdays at 8, Mr. A. C. Burley.

Requests for Prayer.

For a rich blessing on a mission this month in South Wales by Mr. Thomas Payne.

For blessing upon the united meeting of Bible classes in business houses, to be held on March 18 in Exeter Hall.

For blessing on revival meetings now in progress at Hanley Christian Mission.

Notices.

A correspondent desires to know the first line of the hymn (and where to find the same) in which the following stanza appears:—

"He bids his angels pitch their tents
Round where his children dwell;
What ills their heavenly care prevents
No earthly tongue can tell.

Applications for Tracts.—M. A. Warnett, 6, Industrial Buildings, Craven Lane, Gomersal; O. C. Farr, Codicote, Welwyn; C. W. Benger, Grove Cottage, Grove Road, Mitcham; Mr. Charles Whitehelo, Emmer Green, near Reading, Berks; W. Mayes, 15, Thorpe Road, Forest Gate.

Communications Received with Thanks.—W.H. G.H. McQ. J.F.W. J.A. C.W.C. J.T.G. J.B. J.M. M.Y. G.H. W.E. W.C. T.C.M. E.M. S.S. C.M.B. M.G.G. R.C. W.W. W.S. N.R.H. W.S. G.G. H.J.M. H.S.R. A.T. J.W.W. H.T. J.L.T. J.G.K. W.B. E.W.W. W.W. L.M. E.H.W. H.G.G. E.H.K. R.A. R.C. J.F.S. R.B. F.A.S. J.H.C. J.C. A.R.N. J.E.J. J.G. C.F. G.R.C. C.D. C.W.M.C. J.P. E.C.T. E.F. F.P. G.H.S. W.W. W.C.O. R.C. E.F.B. W.F.G. H.T. A.W. M.C.L.W H.H.P. J.J.W. C.M.W. C.P. G.N.P. C.N.B. J.K.Q. M.M.D. R.O.M. J.A. W.S.D. N.R.H. H.A.J. W.T.K. M.A.L.W. W.R.C. J.S. F.T.H. A.M.G.W. M.S. H.A.E. W.C.B. P.M. J.G. W.J.H.

Out of Rome.—Continental contemporaries continue to report the emancipation of Romish priests. Le Chrétien Français informs us that Monsignor Stephen, who has exercised episcopal authority in the patriarchate of Babylon, has now joined the company of those whom the truth has made free from Rome. He is said to be a distinguished man, and to have assumed a truly evangelical position. M. Sallé, well known as a preacher in Belgium, has also broken with Rome. At a recent meeting in the Temple at Belleville, an address was delivered by Abbé Hautefeuille, a young priest, who on arriving in Paris undertook menial work rather than remain in the Papal fold. He was followed by Abbé Sanset, who, still wearing priestly robes, explained why, after twenty years of service, he had left the Church of his childhood.

Medland Hall.—At this known centre, the only metropolitan free shelter for men, the work continues to prosper. On such economical lines is the institution managed, that the cost of the ordinary working does not exceed 1½d. per man per night. This includes rent, wages, gas, firing, cleaning, repairs, bread (½lb. to each man), and various incidentals. At a recent Sunday evening service, word was received that a considerable number of men were wanted for work at six o'clock the next morning. Suitable men were selected, extra food was prepared, workmen's tickets to destination were taken, and at the appointed time all the men were set to work at 18s. a week to start with. Between 300 and 400 men have been sent to Canada, where employment and homes had been previously secured for them.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

GREAT care and prayerfulness of spirit must be used in replying to the question, "What would Jesus do under certain circumstances?" It does not follow that the first answer that occurs to the mind is necessarily the right one. Further heart-searching and waiting upon God may reveal a more excellent way. Oftentimes those most ready with a solution are more superficial in Christian character than others who, with deeper thoughtfulness, take time to reply.

We must seek the principles that underlay the acts of our Lord during his earthly ministry. He responded, for instance, at once to every appeal for help without investigating the case. But why? Because He "needed not that any should testify of man, for He knew what was in man." He read at a glance "the thoughts and intents of the heart;" while we, lacking that Divine omniscience, must often spend time and trouble in searching out; else may we do grievous harm by a too ready response to the appeal of a worthless scoundrel, and learn, when too late, that our charity had been more wisely expended upon his long-suffering wife, from whom no appeal had come.

There is truth in the contention that we must have regard to the spirit rather than the letter of our Saviour's words, or his precise act on any occasion. But vague talk about his spirit may in reality be a mere excuse devoid of honest endeavour to reproduce anything like Him. We are subject to human limitations, admittedly; but "where there's a will, there's a way." And what stupendous results would be produced in commercial and social life, in church and on 'change! We ought to encounter them at every turn. But is it so? Alas, human nature is so apt to agree in the abstract, and in a general way "believe in it," and that is all. To how many is it "a hard saying," and they "go away sorrowful"! "How hardly" shall such "enter the Kingdom of Heaven!" "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves.

"Called to be saints." Is not this the great end for which the Divine Spirit always calls? Saints! i.e., holy ones—those who through Christ Jesus are without spot or wrinkle or any such thing. This is the ideal for each of the Lord's disciples. Upon the attainment of this the whole heart must be set. Holiness is the one thing which clears the vision of faith, making it possible even now to see God. Every life has a radiance about it when spent in the real presence—the human face lifted habitually to the face of God. The full apprehension of this call quickens into activity every faculty of the soul till at length it is clothed with the beauty of the Lord our God. And without holiness no man shall see the Lord.

Some weeks ago an article appeared in these columns upon "The Duty of Confessing Christ," by Rev. G. B. F. Hallock, D.D. It urged the necessity of young converts allying themselves definitely with some place of worship. At the request of several ministers and evangelists, it has been reprinted in pamphlet form, and may be had from our publishers at 3d. per dozen, or 2s. per hundred. It states the case precisely and forcibly.

It is an interesting coincidence that the article on "Undenominationalism" (p. 11) should have reached us in time to appear in the same issue as the report of the Free Church Council gatherings. Many of our readers are on a platform different from that occupied by Mr. Gooch, but we have given him the opportunity of a fair hearing. There appear to be many points of contact between the omni-denominationalism of the Free Church Council and the undenominationalism of which he speaks. For practical purposes they are at one when it comes to aggressive work and earnest spiritual endeavour.

Owing to the space required for these matters, it has been found necessary to hold over several important articles (including one of the series by Dr. Robertson, of Venice, upon the condition of Popery in Italy), and a number of lesser items.

A needful hint, wisely put, was given to the ministers present at the Free Church Council on the subject of special missions.

> Give up, for the time being, all the usual weekly meetings. The Church will not suffer, rather the reverse. The best cure for dyspepsia is temporary abstention from ordinary food, and sometimes the adoption of a hot water diet!

We have known many a mission "fall flat" because ministers and people have not foregone other engagements to enter heartily into it, and because after it was concluded the ordinary church routine was too quickly resumed, instead of special efforts being made to consolidate and build up the faith of the converts by special classes for their instruction.

> Much of the service rendered by the Federation defies arithmetic. It belongs to the "inner sanctuary;" perhaps the poorest work of all is that which is easiest to measure out. Ours is supremely a spiritual movement, and is having great unseen spiritual results.

So said Rev. Thomas Law in his report. The union of the Free Churches for spiritual ends is itself a power for good of inestimable value. It has done much already in fostering a truer Christian spirit in all the churches affiliated, and the spirit is deepening in every centre.

Most cordial has been the welcome Dr. Fairbairn has received on his return from India, not only from his numerous personal friends, but from the students of Mansfield College. He is able to speak with authority of the powerful influence which the true missionary exerts upon the Hindu, even when the Gospel is not openly accepted:—

> One thing impressed me greatly (he says), the devotion for the people of those who know them best, and have lived longest in close intercourse with them. . . . I found more appreciation of the good things in Hindu men and in the Hindu religion among the missionaries than in any other class of the European Community. It is possible that the missionary does more to reconcile the Hindu to the British régime than any other single Western element operating in India.

Thus the spirit of the Gospel is making its quiet but resistless way to the ultimate overthrow of Hinduism in God's good time.

Public sentiment in Cardiff is deeply stirred just now over the action of the tramways company in suddenly commencing a service of omnibuses on Sunday, a provision that the bulk of the residents deem to be totally unnecessary in a town of that size. The Free Church Council has taken the lead in protesting against the innovation, with the result that a public expression was taken at all its places of worship on Sunday. Canon Thompson also laid the same resolution before his congregation in the Parish Church, with a like result. A spirited Christian public opinion is of great service in cases like these. Numberless evils might be checked, and enticements to evil be destroyed, if the people of God would rise up thus, instead of, too often, allowing matters to go by default.

The decision of the judges in regard to the Kempton Park Racecourse Company, which legalises "betting in the ring," and enables book-makers to carry on their pernicious trade without interference, is one that may represent the letter of the law, but it is a serious blow at social morality. Lord Davey in his dissentient judgment from his colleagues put the case tersely from the other side:—

> "I have a difficulty in understanding why, under the provisions of an Act directed to the suppression of a particular kind of gaming, a person should be allowed to transfer his business for the day or more to an enclosure in Kempton Park, and carry it on there, in precisely the same manner, which he could not do in his own office in London or elsewhere."

In the present state of public opinion we fear that there is little hope of any legislation with a view to amend this iniquitous law. This makes the crusade against gambling all the more urgent and imperative. No opportunity should be lost to raise the tone of social feeling and custom, and to re-awaken the national conscience in regard to this crying evil.

Meanwhile, the bill against another mischievous trade, which is productive of the ruin of thousands of unfortunate people—that of money-lenders—is likely to become law. These harpies have preyed long enough on the misfortunes and credulity of those who in their pecuniary troubles foolishly hand themselves over into their power, with the certainty that they will never get free till they have paid "the uttermost farthing—and more."

Preaching in Carlisle Cathedral, Archdeacon Diggle expressed his conviction that the disquiet and unsettlement in the Church at the present time is due to great ignorance, and particularly ignorance in one department of sacred knowledge:—

> At the last ordination in a neighbouring diocese, three candidates for deacon's orders failed to satisfy the examiners, and they all failed in one subject—in knowledge of the Bible. He was persuaded that the mischief which had come upon them had arisen because they had been going away from the Bible. They had not been making the Bible their first and deepest study.

This is a pretty strong indictment coming from such an authoritative source, and is true in Nonconformist as well as in Church circles. The Archdeacon also touched another diseased spot when he proceeded:—

> Articles in what were called religious journals took the place of the study of the inspired Epistles and Gospels; and until they went back to the well-spring and the fountain of truth, he saw nothing for it but going on in the same condition of anxiety in which they now found themselves. He read article upon article in newspapers and magazines upon the subject, and not once in fifty times did he ever find any appeal made to the Word of God in these questions which were disquieting them now. What they wanted was a better trained ministry, and particularly a ministry better trained in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.

Nothing but the sword of the Spirit itself can do the work of the Spirit.

Mr. Watts, a non-Christian, writing on "The Bible: Past, Present and Future," says:—

We cannot think that in time to come the Bible will be estimated as being different from any other book, except in so far as its contents mark the difference.

We desire no other estimate. The Book must be its own final appeal, not what some one has said about it. Repeated and impressive testimony is borne by men who have been sceptics, that they disbelieved the Bible until they read it for themselves; then they were mastered by it. One of them, who began a thorough reading for the purpose of fastening on all its discrepancies, was at the outset struck with the evidence the Book gave of God's interest in man; and, as he read on the evidence was uniform and cumulative, and overcame him. The Book has a grand unity underneath great diversity. We only wish men did know its contents, for certainly these differentiate it from every other book by an infinitude of thought: it is as high as heaven; they are as low as earth.

The recent tendency in "liberal criticism" of the New Testament has been to rehabilitate the early date of the Gospels and Epistles in an extraordinary manner. Even so dispassionate an authority as the English Historical Review, in dealing with Professor Harnack's "Chronology of the Christian Literature," allows that the dates accorded to the books in the traditional chronology are substantially accurate. Referring to the same book, the Dublin Review says that it substantiates the "essential truth of tradition." By tradition is meant the conclusions of the earliest Christian writers, whose testimony, until the rise of the Tübingen School of critics, had been unquestioned from the beginning. Now they are unquestioned in their essential features by all ecclesiastical scholars with a reputation to lose. The fierce fight on this crucial question has thus ended in the complete rout of unbelieving critics. The genuineness and authenticity of the New Testament writings can never more be questioned.

The importance of this result is only truly seen in the light of the motives which led to the attacks on the date and authorship of these writings. If the Gospels and a large number of the Epistles could have been proved to be the outgrowth of the second century, a sufficient amount of time would have elapsed for the rise of legend and myth in regard to the subject-matter of the Gospels; and an attack on the miraculous elements in them might have been successfully made. The traditional dates did not allow for this process of myth-making; and so they were assailed with a pertinacity and wealth of apparent scholarship, which to many seemed irresistible. Now that the traditional dates have been reinstated, the theories built on a later origin disappear into thin air. The testimony to the facts they embody is in the strict sense contemporary; it is the testimony of eye-witnesses to the truth, and therefore, as their honesty is not now questioned, they stand firm in evidence of the supernatural origin of our faith.

In view of the manifest signs of revival which are reported from various parts of the world, and particularly in connection with evangelistic and church work in Great Britain and America, an especial interest attaches to the new and interesting halfpenny monthly The Revival (Morgan & Scott). The fourth number, which is now ready, contains much that is helpful and stimulating, pointed appeal, apt anecdote, and telling accounts of revival work. Many of our readers will, we think, find the new publication congenial and helpful. It is eminently suitable both for home reading and for general distribution in connection with mission work.

In connection with the remarkable religious awakening on the Continent, the progress of Protestantism in Italy must be giving the Papal authorities considerable anxiety. The correspondent of the Morning Post in Rome thus calls attention to the situation:

If there is a movement in some Protestant nations to return toward Catholicism, it is interesting to note that in Italy, which remained almost untouched by the Reformation, a serious Protestant movement is taking place. The Valdese Church, which formerly had a very tormented existence in the Alps and in its colony near Messina, has been growing in different parts of Italy since 1870.

What seems news in some quarters is not surprising to our readers. The persecution of the Waldenses is not forgotten in the joyful remembrance of the Glorious Return, and our pages have from time to time rehearsed their evangelistic achievements and told of the steady expansion of their teaching and influence.

It is said that the solution of the grave difficulty between England and Russia, in the matter of the Newchwang railway, was the result of the personal interference of the Czar, who overrode the demands of his Ministers and gave way to the English claims in order to preserve peace, and so further the prospects of the Hague Conference. This is, if substantiated, a splendid proof of the good faith and earnestness of the Russian Emperor, and should awaken a spirit of concession all round. Such acts on the part of the author of the Rescript are the best guarantee that the Conference will lead to a real and substantial benefit to the peoples of the earth. As the time for holding the Conference draws nigh, all Christian people by example and precept should use their influence in directing public opinion, and in supplicating God, "the only Ruler of princes," to turn their hearts with one accord in the desired direction.

The R. C. Bishop of Newport, in the last of his lectures on "The Office of the Catholic Church," referred to present-day controversies, and said that any church divided upon questions of ritual was divided also upon the deeper questions of faith:—

It was ridiculous to suppose that cultured and scholarly men were contending for the colour of a stole, or a posture, a vestment, or a miserable whiff of incense. These things were contended for because they were symbols, touchstones of belief. Here and there might perhaps be found a foolish curate who had not read deeply enough to apprehend the significance of what he practised, but the majority of the Ritualists knew well what they were about. Catholics prayed that their zeal for ancient and Catholic rites might lead them to see the deeper importance of the ancient and Catholic doctrines underlying that worship, and to hold those doctrines more firmly.

The Bishop's next remarks show that he understands the position of the other side quite as little as his "foolish curate" understands his own:—

They could understand the Low Churchman and the Nonconformist's love of what is called simplicity of worship. It was because they had thrown overboard a large portion of the Christian inheritance. They prayed that their friends might recover that belief in our Lord's sacramental legacies to men which would naturally and surely reconcile them to ritual. In the meantime Catholics did not admit that the simplicity of the worship of these bodies led the worshippers more directly or more surely to Christ. Catholics rather contended that the lack of ritual signified a vagueness of faith, a contentedness with this world, a coolness towards the Heavenly Father and towards Jesus Christ, such as Christianity was especially instituted to render impossible.

In justifying the new movement in America, some writers on Imperialism are prone to exaggerate its benefits for rulers and ruled. In the North American Review there is an article on "Imperial Responsibilities and National Gain," in which Colonel Sir G. I. Clarke speaks of our own rule in India, Africa, and other parts of the world as though it were an unmixed boon. It is little short of hypocritical to speak of the continual extension of our empire as though it were the outcome of a pure desire to do good, and as though its history were perfectly free from sad records of crime and sensuality and oppression. Nor is it right to forget that the conditions of life for the Anglo-Indian are such as make the maintenance of a high ideal of personal character a very difficult thing. This rosy view of Imperialism in its motives and outcome is perilous in the extreme, and ministers to a false pride and a fatal self-complacency.

A Trumpet Call.

O ye Christian men of England,
There is peril at your door,
'Tis a peril deep and deadly,
'Tis a peril worse than war.
It is not the roar of cannon,
Ah! we know that sound too well,
It is not the march of armies,
Nor the crash of shot or shell.

'Tis a peril yet more deadly
Than the clash of mortal strife.
'Tis a peril moving swiftly
Into English home and life;
'Tis the peril of the altar,
Of the priests who seek to-day
To reform the Reformation
Just by sweeping it away.

Will you hand the priest your conscience,
Let him secretly install
All the evils of Confession,
Holding heart and soul in thrall?
Brothers, wake ye to the danger,
Now with all your powers withstand
All the subtle forms of priest-craft
Stealing thro' our native land.

Will you let your wives and daughters
To the vile Confession go?
Let your conscience answer bravely,
With a mighty, thundering, NO!
Let a tidal-wave of protest
Like an ocean billow roll,
Surging onward thro' our country,
Stirring deeply heart and soul.

Oh! forget not, men of England,
How our fathers, long since dead,
Yielded up their lives in witness,
How for truth they suffered—bled.
Oh! forget not, even striplings,
In their timid, gentle youth,
Calmly went to stake and burning
For the sake of God and truth.

Rise, ye Christian men of England,
In your majesty and might,
Sweep away the noxious poison,
In the name of God and right.
Shall the work of your reformers
Now be secretly undone?
Answer, NO! with voice of thunder,
And the victory is won.

S. Trevor Francis.

Author of "Whence—Whither?" and other poems.

Undenominationalism.

Its Raison d'etre.

By Pastor FULLER GOOCH.

THE word at the head of this article is long and unsightly in its appearance, and is only used for lack of another equally expressive and comprehensive. It represents the position taken by those who desire to be regarded as unconnected with the manifold divisions of Christendom, and yet to be one with all true Christians found within its borders.

From the treatment that undenominationalism receives for the most part from all the various sections of the Church of Christ, it might be supposed to represent nothing but spiritual outlawry, schismatic ill-will to all outside its pale, and a Cave-of-Adullamite discontent with all things as they are. Ignored on the one hand as too small to be worth notice, and scathingly rebuked and hardly spoken of on the other, it and its adherents often fare badly among the ranks of denominational advocates. And yet to reproach those who take the position from the force of conviction, and in the spirit of Christ, as Ishmaelites, whose every man's hand is against his brother, is as false and contrary to fact as can well be.

That there are those who, dissatisfied with others, piqued at lack of being valued by their fellows at the price they put upon themselves, and, breathing the air of bitter, iconoclastic revenge, seek to add to the existing sects another of their own production under cover of so-called undenominationalism, is undoubtedly true; but these do not represent the honest and true undenominational position. It is surely well to know the ground conscientiously taken and held by those whose reason for a position of

SEPARATION FROM DENOMINATIONAL BONDS

is not unkindness of thought, or want of brotherly love to those who differ from them, but a sincere desire to be loyal to the claims of Christ, as those claims press upon their individual conscience and heart. The writer therefore asks the patient consideration of those who read, while he endeavours to make clear the stand which he, in common with many more, has taken in the matter.

That this stand involves separation from denominational ranks, and very different standpoints on some lines of thought, is no more a hindrance to mutual regard and respect than the same fact in its bearing upon the differences between Baptist and Methodist, Episcopalian and Congregationalist, and so forth through all the manifold divisions and camps of denominational Christianity. All thought and action based on the study of the Word of God, and arrived at through exercise of on the teachings contained therein, are entitled to impartial and respectful consideration.

THE RIGHT OF PRIVATE JUDGMENT

1. First, then, we reject the generally-accepted idea that different views on secondary points among those who "hold the Head," and recognise the presence and power of the "One Spirit," either necessarily must, or rightly should, mean separation into rival sects or parties, even though there be a tacit recognition of all as belonging to Christ. The unity of the Body is a fundamental truth of revelation, not only to be held as a theory, but manifested as a fact. The central point and unvarying rule of Christian unity and fellowship is the Risen Christ; not any one or other view of baptism, or particular system of doctrinal belief, or form of Church government, as formulated by this or that particular church. Each church holding the Head has some truth which other churches would do well incorporate, and no one

HAS ANY MONOPOLY OF TRUTH.

Seeing eye to eye is prevented by the exclusion of fair and impartial inquiry concerning the points of difference. Each sect trains its ministers and its members to see truth from its own standpoint, and so perpetuates the division, and prevents the rapprochement of soul and thought toward others.

If one holds a truth that his fellow-Christian has not yet seen, surely the way to win him over to the seeing of it is not to hold him at arm's length, or compel him to find a spiritual home elsewhere because he has not received it. Or, if my brother has light not yet shining on my path, am I likely to benefit by its gleam while refusing to walk in oneness with him?

ALL CHRISTIANS ARE LEARNERS

in the one school of Christ, under the teaching of one Spirit, and all are bound to make one manual of faith and practice their common text book and unchallenged rule. So long as there is loyalty to Christ Jesus as Redeemer and Lord, surely there should be not mere recognition of rights of private judgment within prescribed circles, but a coming together in close and hearty union as helpers of one another's faith, and seekers of each other's advancement in truth and love. A basis of practical fellowship should exist exclusive of division and sectarian aims.

2. We are also firmly persuaded that the adoption of human names, and even divine ordinances, as denominating the people of God, is contrary to the New Testament rule and subversive of the true spirit of Christ. That it has come to be accepted and practised by multitudes without design or wilful opposition to the Word of God we freely admit; but none the less to us a principle is involved, and one that we hold not only dear but sacred and divine.

It is not that honoured names like those of Calvin, Luther, Wesley and others are not held by us in veneration and loving esteem; nor that the ordinances of Christ, as we are led to see them set forth in the New Testament, are not obligatory or of importance in their own sphere. But we hold that One Name, and only one, has any right to be lifted up or used as a badge of discipleship and centre of unity. It is as true to ask to-day as ever it was, "While one saith, I am of Paul, and another, I of Apollos, are ye not carnal?" "The whole family in heaven and earth," or if you will "every family," is of God, named not after men, but after Christ, the Son of his love in whom all who believe are one, and called to live in the true oneness of his Body.

THE EXALTATION OF MEN,

however good and noble their life has been, to be denominators of separate sections of the indivisible family of God on earth, is diametrically opposed to the foundation law of truth, which finds its outward development in the divinely-inspired record, "The disciples were called Christians first at Antioch." There, in the place where the middle wall of partition was broken down, and the door of faith opened to the world without distinction, was the all-uniting and all-comprising name assigned, which, Scripturally understood, denominates every blood-bought and blood-washed soul of this Gospel day.

3. It appears to us, on a review of Scripture teaching on the subject, and of the whole course of Church history, that the direct leading of the Spirit, and line of working on the part of that Divine Agent in all that is of God, is on the side of undenominational methods and principles of action. "The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things he possessed was his own, but they had all things in common; and with great power gave the Apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon them all."

In so far as the Church has got away from Pentecostal principles and paths, it has not been by the leading of the Spirit, but by failure to walk in his ways; and the lack of Pentecostal power must surely be attributed to

THE LACK OF PENTECOSTAL PRACTICE.

Whenever and wherever revival times have been experienced, it has been in connection with a laying aside of ordinary sectarian methods of working, and a coming together of those of different persuasions to combine on one common platform of prayer, praise, and testimony. In proportion as revival power has been given, this spirit of abandoning pro tem. denominational distinctions and limitations has spread and increased; and only as the special manifestation of the Spirit has decreased has there been a return to the straitened paths of separation and exclusive service. A fact this, which proves that unity, not dependent on variety of thought on minor matters, is the chosen sphere of Divine manifestation.

No greater hindrance to the spread of the Gospel to-day can be found than the divisions and discords, the numberless sects and parties, found among those who profess to hold one faith, to be seeking one object, and to be heirs of one eternal home. It is so abroad as well as in our own land. Missionaries are often confronted with it as an argument against Christianity; while many a district remains unevangelised, and many a sphere is spoiled, by reason of compacts entered into, or feuds between rival societies or differing sects. This is often to the regret of societies and workers involved as much as to others outside, not being the result of personal feeling so much as the inevitable outcome of the systems adopted.

When love, not of this brotherhood or that, but of

THE WHOLE BROTHERHOOD

of an unbroken Church of God prevails in any sphere, blessing is surely given, sceptics are silenced, believers are built up, souls are saved, and Christ is magnified. It is the unvarying result of maintaining "the unity of the Spirit."

We do not deny that these things are found in connection with denominational distinctions. Given a church waiting upon God in the spirit of faith and prayer, backed by holiness of life, and God will surely bless; but we contend that in all such cases the blessing is in spite of denominationalism, and is not its natural fruit. The denominational system has become in the course of centuries so ingrained in multitudes of God's true people, that to question it never occurs to the mind, and the adoption of it is a sin of ignorance, not a trespass of known law.

Believing that the principles adopted at the start are those that God intended us to pursue till the end, we seek, even though but a small minority among the great host of the servants of Christ, to return thereto and abide therein.

W. Norwood.

Postal and Telegraph Senior Christian Association.—The annual conference in London was held in the City Temple on March 14 and 15, when delegates from the various provincial branches with London workers and members met for a time of united conference and prayer. The meetings were addressed by Rev. J. A. Bevan and Rev. J. Gregory Mantle. There was a hearty spirit of prayerful interest, and the proceedings were very refreshing.

Letters from America.

DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN AT WASHINGTON, D.C.

"I HEAR a 'going in the tops of the mulberry-trees,' and am assured, in spite of coldness and indifference, that we are on the eve of a great awakening." This conviction has frequently been expressed in these columns, by ourselves and others, and it has taken possession of missionaries in India and other parts of the world. It was uttered with emphasis, in the words quoted above, by Dr. Chapman, of Philadelphia, in the address with which he closed at Washington, D.C., on Friday night, March 3.

A FRUITFUL MISSION-WEEK

The invitation to undertake this mission came from the Christian Endeavour Union, the young people's initiative being cordially accepted by the evangelical pastors and churches in the city, who formed an executive committee and assumed the responsibility of arrangements and expenses.

We were at Hillsboro', N.C., engaged in an interesting work among the coloured people, from which Mrs. Morgan and I went to Washington (317 miles) for the last two days of Dr. Chapman's meetings, leaving Mr. Wintle to continue those at Hillsboro', reference to which will be made in a subsequent letter.

The Washington Post daily reported the meetings in that city, and said at their commencement:—

The size and enthusiasm of the audience which gathered at the Calvary Baptist Church to participate in the first of these evangelistic meetings greatly exceeded the expectations of those interested in them.

The preparatory services in the various churches throughout the city and the large amount of personal effort expended have evidently aroused a great interest in Dr. Chapman's coming, and the meetings promise to be the most successful of the kind which have taken place in Washington since the great Moody revival some years ago.

The meetings take place at 4.15 in the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, and at 7.30 at the Calvary Baptist Church.

For Sunday, at 3, a meeting for young people, particularly Sunday scholars, at Calvary Church; at 4, for men only at the Y.M.C.A. building; at 7, for women only at the Mount Vernon M.E. Church; and at 8 o'clock there will be a meeting for men only at Calvary Church.

I was reminded of the crowds that gathered in 1859-61—half across the street long before the meetings commenced—to hear at the Surrey Theatre. Dr. Chapman's evening meeting began at 7.30; doors opened at 7. In ten minutes the house was packed with 2,000 people, and not a seat to be had.

RICHARD WEAVER OR WILLIAM CARTER

His discourses are full of personal reminiscence; I can only speak of the last two days. He said that the methods he pursued, which are successful in the most conservative as in the most popular church. In his first pastorate he desired to introduce a less formal and more spontaneous mode of worship than he found there; accordingly he got some Gospel songs and placed them in the pews a few days before the Sabbath. A precise and conservative elder observed and gathered them up, and told the minister that they could not be used there—it was not a mission-hall. After plodding on for some time without success, he mentioned his position to Mr. Moody, who replied: "Well, you cannot go along on present lines; and after all they can but get rid of you. Slip them in again."

ARE SIMILAR TO THOSE OF MR. MOODY,

Accordingly, late one Saturday night Dr. Chapman put the hymn books in the pews, and on the Sunday morning gave out "Ring the Bells of Heaven." This moved the church, and then the town. The conservative elder himself asked: "What kind of hymn was that you sang first? It was like

A SONG THAT ANGELS SING.

Let us do all we can to save the people."

The success of the same method in what is emphatically a people's church may be gathered from the following sketch of the preacher and his present pastorate in the paper named above:—

J. Wilbur Chapman was born in Richmond, Ind., on the 17th of June, 1859. His mother died when he was but twelve years of age, and his father when he was nineteen. He pursued his classical studies at Oberlin College and Lake Forest University, and graduated from Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1882.

He entered upon his duties at Bethany Church, Philadelphia, early in 1890, and commenced what is, perhaps, the most remarkable experience of any American church along evangelistic lines. In less than three years there were added to the church membership 1,100 souls on confession of their faith, more than half of them being men.

The church was so perfectly organised under his direction that it would be difficult for a person to be in attendance at any of its services and not be reached by its members in a social as well as a spiritual way.

Dr. Chapman is a magnetic man, speaks fluently, uses choice words, has engaging manners, employs few gestures while speaking, and these are always graceful. His strength and influence are in his intense earnestness and heartfelt sincerity.

Again and again Dr. Chapman showed that he has a well-balanced mind and a full-orbed perception of the truth in Jesus. He urged not a particular doctrine of holiness, but Holiness. He exhorted to testimony not about ourselves, but about our Saviour. "Abide in Him, and men will perceive that you have been with Jesus." Reginald Radcliffe was walking in London with his friend, Rev. W. Pennefather. A beggar put out his hand and said to the latter, "O man, with heaven in your face, help me!" The testimony of heaven in the face leads people to say, not "what a wonderful man he is," but "what a WONDERFUL GOD HE HAS."

The afternoon addresses were really Bible readings. The first we heard was on prayer, a very valuable discourse on an all-important subject. On the last morning the subject was "Winning Crowns" (of which five were enumerated); in the afternoon, "Missing Crowns." The evening meetings were remarkable for their lucid exposition of the Gospel; intensely earnest invitations to come to Jesus now; and exhortation to yield absolutely and to accept fully, from subjects such as "The Prodigal Son" (Luke xv.), "The Great Salvation" (Heb. ii. 3), and "A Great Repentance" (2 Sam. xii. 13).

In speaking of his own experience, Dr. Chapman attributed much of the blessing he had received to Mr. Moody and Mr. Meyer. The latter, sitting with him one evening in his library, said: "Dear friend, do you ever think that when we stand before the judgment-seat of Christ we shall be rewarded or suffer loss according to our actions? Will they stand the fiery trial, or be burned up, while we are saved indeed, but so as by fire? Will our works stand that test?" Dr. Chapman said: "I did not sleep much that night, and I have tried since then that everything I do or say may stand the touch of fire."

TO HAVE MY MOTIVES RIGHT,

In his address on "Winning Crowns," he said that when he came to Bethany Church he received the most hearty welcome from a kind and genial people. The last person who greeted him after the others had left was an old man, leaning on a staff, who said, "I am afraid of your making a failure here. You see we have always had men of wide experience, and you are a much younger man." He followed this with other discouraging remarks, and the new minister began to wish his anxious moderator had waited awhile before coming to such a sad conclusion. But his surprise was great when his tottering friend drew closer and said, "But I have made up my mind to help you." Dr. Chapman wondered how. He certainly could not preach for him. Then the other whispered, "I have entered into a league with two other men to pray, as long as you are our pastor, that God will endue you with power." "Those three in covenant," added the preacher, "soon grew to ten, to twenty, to fifty, and now there are more than 500 men pledged to pray for the blessing of God to rest upon all my work for Him. They have been praying for me while in Washington; they are praying to-night. I believe that every faithful minister could be transformed into a man of power by a people who continually prayed for him. It is often said in praise or blame, 'It's all the minister.' No, it is it is the church and the spirit in the church that moves the community."

NOT THE MINISTER ALONE,

When Mr. Hall Caine published his novel, "The Christian," we represented to the publishers the inconvenience that might arise by the identity of title with that of this publication; but without effect. I did not anticipate the way in which this would be fulfilled. The Washington Post, in its final report, contains the following:—

The meeting was opened with a song service, led by L. P. Zimmerman, who organised the choir, the music of which has been such a feature of the revival meetings. Prayer was then offered by R. C. Morgan, of London, a well-known evangelical worker and a member of the firm which publishes the books of Mr. Moody, and the editor of Hall Caine's "The Christian."

As a practical result of the series of meetings, the following Sunday was to be observed in the Sunday-schools as "Decision Day," following the plan adopted by Dr. Chapman in his own church in Philadelphia.

At the close the minister thanked Dr. Chapman as the instrument by whom God had done a marvellous work among them.

Dr. Chapman began a similar mission in Chicago in the following week, Mr. Harper Garcia Smyth having preceded him to prepare the choir there. R. Cope Morgan.

Hillsboro', N.C., March 6, 1899.

Thoughts for Parents.

IMAGINATION.

"We know in part, we prophesy in part."—(1 Cor. xiii. 9.)

IMAGINATION expands the mind by expanding the boundary of thought. Not a few parents repress imagination in their children, thinking it evil; whereas, rightly guarded, it has a most important part in training. By the power of his imaginations man's thought rises to God; he is able to enter into the feelings of others. By the use of imagination the arts and sciences are advanced, for it is a constituent part of inventions, pictures, music, &c.

Guard sacredly your children's imaginative powers; learn to distinguish between the fanciful and the false. The last, which poses as truth, is hurtful; but the fanciful is known to be beyond human experience and does not deceive. This is why fairy stories are not hurtful, but exciting tales of false adventure are.

Inspire your child's imagination by tales of heroism, and let your heroes be of the homely sort, that the daily common life may be raised by thoughts of noble deeds.

Frances S. Hallowes.

Oxford Notes.

A PARENTS' annual meeting in connection with Sunday-schools affords a good opportunity for emphasising the importance of the home life and example. Rev. J. Robertson, pastor of the Congregational Church, George Street, presided over a meeting of parents on Wednesday week, in which it was urged that the church and the Sunday-school could not do everything for the children; behind all there must be the religion of the home.

The record of the police court affords a loud call for aggressive work in the City. The East End of London could reveal no more terrible indictments of unnatural crimes, child neglect, and rowdyism than the last fortnight has brought to light.

While a representative committee is busy arranging a Sunday Closing Campaign, it is startling to see in the local paper "Balliol College Sunday Evening Concerts." If we have rightly read the mind of Christ, the principle that forbids the opening of public-houses on Sunday also cuts at the root of Sunday entertainments, or large college lunches entailing much extra work on the already overworked scouts. There must be no compromise in a campaign of righteousness.

The students of Mansfield gave Dr. Fairbairn a very warm welcome on Friday on his return from India. They met the carriage in a body, unhorsed it, and dragged it round the grounds. Dr. Glover was the preacher on Sunday, and after the service many remained behind to welcome the Principal home.

Sunday Goods Traffic.—Effort continues to be made by the Shareholders' Union for the Defence of the Sabbath towards the minimising of the labour caused by the running of goods trains on the first day of the week. A strong memorial was recently presented to the directors and shareholders of the Midland Railway, but it was not kindly entertained. All railways shareholders who feel the burden of the existing condition of affairs are invited to co-operate with the union through its secretary, Mr. J. F. Wilson, 22, Western Road, St. Leonards.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, March 26. Deuteronomy i.

IT is good to rehearse the story of past failure, not to dishearten, but to humble, and to set forth the dealings of God for the direction and guidance of those that follow.

There is little to distinguish Kadesh-barnea among the sand-dunes of the desert. It was situated on the frontier, where the land of Canaan fades into the southern desert. But it is a notable place in the spiritual chart, and few are they that have not had some notable experiences there. Kadesh-barnea, in the history of Israel, was the point where, through want of faith in God, who went before them in the way (32-33), the people turned their backs on the rest, victory, and wealth, which He was prepared to give them, and went forth to wander and die in the desert. For us, it is the division between Rom. vii. and viii., or between Heb. iii. and iv. When we look at circumstances more than at God's all-wise and all-loving providence; when we count that our habits, temperament, and inherited tendencies are too masterful for divine grace to cope with; when we think of giants more than of God; in a word, when we fail to believe that God is able to make possible the obedience which He commands, notwithstanding all that stands in the way—we have come to Kadesh-barnea, and are turning back to the desert.

They could not enter in, because they did not believe in God; and thus the one condition on which all things become possible was wanting. God can do all that we trust Him for. All things are possible to him that believeth. "Let us, therefore, fear lest, a promise being left us of entering into that rest, any of us should seem to come short of it."

MONDAY, March 27. Deuteronomy ii.

The way of God's people is a very precise one. There are many roads which branch off from it that they are not to take. Mount Seir, Moab, and Ammon were distinctly forbidden to Israel. So, in after years, Paul was forbidden to preach the word of God in Asia. Very often it is thus that God shows us his way. We go down the long corridor, out of which doors appear to open, but they are all locked against us, till we come to the one through which we are to pass. God's positive guidance often comes through his distinct prohibitions.

But when we have found out his way by patient waiting, then He goes before us: "Rise ye up, take your journey. . . I will begin to put the fear of thee upon the peoples. Begin to possess. I have begun to deliver up. The Lord our God delivered up all before us." It is very blessed when the soul is walking with God, for God goes in front, removing every obstacle and making an open way.

There are three of our Lord's words, which taken together, inspire one with unfailing courage. "We must work the works of Him that sent Me," classing us so lovingly in his mission (John ix. 4 R.V.); "Arise, let us go hence," as He takes his way with us to Calvary; "Thou shalt find a shekel, that take and give unto them for Me and thee;" where He makes Himself responsible for all charges that may be incurred in our common pilgrimage.

In the American Civil War, some officers said to Lincoln, "It will be all right if God is on our side." He quickly turned on them and said, "Gentlemen, the first question is not whether God is on our side, but whether we are on his."

TUESDAY, March 28. Deuteronomy iii.

It was sad indeed that Moses might not live to complete the work he had so gloriously begun. But the law cannot conduct us into the land of rest. Strict obedience may win some of the lower and more transient blessings, but faith alone can secure the supreme gifts of God's grace.

How earnestly Moses besought the Lord to allow him to pass the Jordan! Thus, in after years, Paul asked that the thorn might be taken out of his flesh; and Jesus, that the cup might pass from Him. But it might not be. God still sometimes says to us, "Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto Me of this matter." Of God's promises this is never said; but of things which are not included in these, very often the strong impression arises that we are praying against his purpose. Indeed, the power to continue praying comes to an end. We are no longer sensible that the Divine Spirit is making intercession within us, or that the Saviour is adding his supplications with ours before the throne.

At such times, however, God is sure to add some loving alleviation. Moses is bidden to see the land, and then is lovingly put to rest on the bosom of God. Paul is assured that Christ's strength will more abundantly rest upon him if the thorn remains. And for the blessed Lord an angel appears to strengthen; and He perceives the joy set before Him so clearly that He dares to endure the cross and despise the shame. In the case of Moses also, the joy was added of passing over Jordan, and standing on the transfiguration mount with his Lord. It is best as God arranges for us. "In his will is our peace." "After all the time is short, the end approaches; the veils will be lifted, faith will be crowned; the net broken, and the bird recover its liberty."

WEDNESDAY, March 29. Deuteronomy iv.

Let us gather out the sublime thoughts of God which this chapter contains. "He is so nigh" (v. 7). We need not go to heaven to bring Him down, or back to Pentecost to bring Him hither. He is here, "nearer than breathing, closer than hands or feet." Poor sufferer, tossing through the long nights, He is so near thee in the hot furnace of pain! Lonely widow or orphan, bereaved indeed, He is so near thee, lean on his bosom! Pioneer in some foreign land, amid Sabbath-breaking and impurity, He is so near to strengthen and refresh! Oh, for opened eyes!

"The Lord thy God is a devouring fire" (v. 24). Isaiah xxxiii. 14, 15 proves that this emblem sets forth the purity, and love, and cleansing grace of God. He is a devouring fire as against the sins of his people; jealous of everything which deflects their allegiance from Himself, and intent on eliminating from us the dross which has vitiated our peace and his joy in us.

"The Lord thy God is a merciful God" (v. 31). The allusion here is to the backslider, who has done evil, and been scattered from the land of rest and peace. When he is in tribulation, and desires to return to his old position, he is encouraged to come back to God, because He is so merciful, never failing the penitent soul, though it may have failed Him; and never forgetting the ancient covenant by which He has once bound Himself. Prodigal child, come home. Only love awaits thee!

"There is none else" (v. 39). This was the supreme reason why Israel should be true to her allegiance. And, indeed, we also are shut up to Christ. We may say with Peter, "To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." There is none other Name, given under heaven among men, by which we can be saved. "Only Thee, my soul's Redeemer!"

THURSDAY, March 30. Deuteronomy v.

O my soul, this chapter speaks deeply to thee! Thou too hast heard the voice of the Lord God proclaiming his holy law out of the midst of darkness, fire, and tempest; and thou hast trembled and withdrawn thyself, and been terribly afraid! No wonder, for thou hast greatly sinned!

The holy Adolphe Monod, on his death-bed said: "Sin has two divisions, the evil that we have done and the good that we have left undone. As to the first point, I confess honestly, and without figure of speech, that there is not a single commandment of God which I have not transgressed, either in letter or in spirit. As to the second, it weighs upon my heart, and harasses me, perhaps, even more than the first."

But remember, my soul, that what Moses did in answer to Israel's request, going near and hearing what God said, and coming out to tell forth his words, thus acting as mediator—all this was realised literally and terribly in our blessed Lord, who went into the midst of the punishment which our sin had incurred, and took it to his own sacred heart. The thunder and lightning of a violated law expended themselves on Him; the fire of God's wrath on sin consumed Him, and spent itself, so far as they are concerned who shelter in Him. "I have," says Monod, "a firm, single, and peaceful confidence in the redemption of Jesus Christ, in his blood and sacrifice, accepted before God in expiation of my sins, taking the place of the good which I have not done, and repairing the evil that I have done. God can no more condemn me than He can condemn his own Son."

FRIDAY, March 31. Deuteronomy vi.

"What is this gloomy hour which puts nature into mourning? The sun is veiled, day is changed into night, the earth trembles, the rocks cleave asunder, the tombs open, the veil of the temple is rent in twain. Ah! why is this?" There is but one reply: We have not feared the Lord our God, to keep all his statutes and commandments; we have not loved the Lord our God with all our heart, soul, and might; his words have not been in our heart or taught by our lips; we have forgotten Him amid untold mercies; we have not done what was right and good in his sight. And, therefore, in the person of his Son, God has taken the consequences of our sin and shame home to Himself, bearing them to the uttermost. What a word is this! "Houses full of all good things, which thou filledst not, and cisterns hewn out, which thou hewedst not, vineyards and olive trees which thou plantedst not, and thou shalt eat and be full; beware lest thou forget!" This house of love, the Church, in which we live at peace—let us not forget that He laid its foundation-stones deep in the agony of Calvary. These good things, given for our spiritual help—let us not forget that they were purchased by his blood. These cisterns of living water—let us not forget that they were hewn out by nails and spear. These olives, with their anointing oil, reminding us of Pentecost, these vineyards of blood, recalling the cleansing power of his grace—let us not forget the cost by which He planted them. He said, "This do in remembrance of Me;" let us not forget.

SATURDAY, April 1. Deuteronomy vii.

So sweet and full are the words of this chapter that comment seems superfluous and impertinent. The soul simply revels in the variety and completeness with which every possible spiritual want is anticipated.

There is a covenant for us, also, into which the Father has entered with his Son, and with all who believe in Him. That covenant is not dependent on anything in us. He did not set his love upon us, nor choose us because of any special good He saw in us; but because He loved his Son, and those who had an affinity to Him by faith. To this covenant He will be faithful and true, whatever may befall in heaven and earth.

On our side all that is required is separation from the sins of the world around us. There must be no fellowship between light and darkness, between those who believe and unbelievers. It is neglect of this which has brought sorrow and suffering into so many lives. God is not slack in punishing those who violate the provisions of his covenant; and for those who truly believe, obedience is easy because it is guaranteed through the grace of the Holy Spirit.

And when we realise God's requirements through the operation of the Spirit, we find ourselves possessed of the spiritual counterparts of all the blessings enumerated at the close of the chapter. Not that they are rewards, for all is of grace; but that they are the natural results, fruits, and concomitants of a life which is hidden with Christ in God. O grave of Christ, what harvests of blessing have sprung from thee!

Madura and its Marvels.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

OF all the wonders which we have beheld during this tour, certainly the most surprising have been reserved to its end. Indeed, I am completely baffled, and shall not attempt to describe the marvellous relics of the great past in the vast and magnificent buildings which tower over the flat-roofed houses of Madura. I had never realised that Hindoo architecture could achieve such splendid results.

From time immemorial Madura is said to have been the political and religious capital of the South of India. The Pandyan dynasty goes back far beyond the Christian era; but its greatest monarch was Tirumala, who reigned in the seventeenth century, and it is to his munificence that the present erections are due.

As we entered the city we were arrested with the vast crowds of natives dressed in every costume (and in none) pouring through the wide streets, and doing business in the bazaars. There was in the scene than in any place we had visited. Presently our further progress was arrested by an idol procession. The doll-like image, screened from the intense sunshine by a gorgeous umbrella, was seated on a peacock, resplendent with flashing jewels, which was placed on a car drawn by long ropes. Tom-toms and native instruments, a retinue of dancing-girls, priests, and attendants, a holy elephant or two, richly caparisoned, together with throngs of people, made up the procession. They halted from time to time, and the idol was presented for worship; nor can I dismiss from my memory the expression of awe, reverence, and dread that passed over the faces of the crowd as I happened to catch sight of them from the rear. Sometimes as many as 150,000 people will troop into the city to join in the processions and bring offerings to the temple.

A MORE DISTINCTLY ORIENTAL ASPECT

One morning, as we drove out into the country, the road was filled with crowds of natives bearing votive-offerings, through which it was difficult to make our way. A special feast was to be held at a neighbouring temple, and one long stream of men, women, and children was hastening thither.

But the great temple is the wonder of the place, with its four towering entrances thickly covered with elaborate figures of gods and goddesses, elephants and horsemen; its hall of a thousand pillars, which is singularly beautiful; its spacious tanks, reached by steps, and surrounded by arcades; its imposing corridors of stone, lined on either side by carvings of the principal Hindoo deities. These and many other of the monuments are perfectly marvellous, not only for the grace and beauty of their carving, but from the fact that each statue is executed in a single stone.

Imagine what it must be to walk through a long stone gallery, in which a dozen carriages could drive abreast, with lofty monoliths on either side, elaborately carved. Some of the smaller frescoes are highly objectionable; and on every side there is the significant emblem of the impurity with which the worship of Hindooism is associated.

Here is a well, filled with the mixture with which the figure of the god is daily washed, one draught of which will and above it is a most terrible picture of the sins it will purge. Here is the place where, once a year, women are rid of demons. The hair of their head is said to stand on end, amid their frenzied excitement; and through it the demon passes out. Here is a pillared hall, 111 yards long by 35 wide, with four ranges of columns, 120 in all, each of which differs from the others, and all most elaborately sculptured. To this, the goddess is removed in hot weather, as it is cooled by streams of water encircling it. It is said that this choultrie cost over a million sterling, and the temple four millions; not an excessive estimate considering the elaborateness and quantity of the sculpture, and that it is executed in the hardest granite.

WASH AWAY TEN THOUSAND SINS;

It is sad enough to make the heart—break! And it is still worse to know that there has been a revival of Hindooism throughout these districts, partly through the influence of Mrs. Besant, and partly as an off-set to the marvellous successes of the missionaries of the American Congregationalist Board. In all my travels, I have seen nothing more perfectly organised than this noble monument to consecrated men, methods and means.

The large missionary compound in the city contains the bungalows for the missionaries, the schools for girls, the training-home for native Bible women, who visit 1,000 homes in the city and conduct services in all the adjacent villages. In addition to these, there are in the city three churches, the High School for boys, and the spacious hospital erected by the gifts of grateful patients to the beloved, clever, and consecrated physician, Dr. Van Allen.

At some distance from the city there is another large compound, with extensive educational appliances for schools, college, and a seminary for theological students, another church crowning the settlements on the hill.

WHAT BLESSED TIMES

we had there! My heart was greatly drawn out to the large body of native pastors, catechists, and Christian workers of both sexes. It seemed as though four services in the day were not too much for them or me.

In addition to the services, I managed to snatch time to visit the magnificent palace, founded by the monarch already alluded to. Its courtyard is 100yds square, surrounded by noble columns and galleries. The reception-hall rises into a lofty dome, 73ft. high and 61ft. in diameter. The Royal bed-chamber is a vast hall surrounded by carving, which depicts the gali, a monster of the lion type, like our fabled griffin. When he brought his wife to see it for the first time, and asked what she thought of it, she said: "A stall in my father's stables is as good as the whole of your palace," for which he stabbed and killed her on the spot.

Thence we travelled to Tinnevelly, famous for the great work done here by the missionaries of the C.M.S. These have received me very warmly, and with the consent of the Bishop I am holding three meetings a day in the church, a special platform having been erected for our use.

It is not necessary for me to dwell on the features of this well-known mission work with which the names of Hough, Tucker, Fenn, Sargent, Thomas, and Kember must be immortally associated; nor need I enumerate the causes for anxiety when so vast a number of native pastors, catechists, and schoolmasters are necessarily employed. I can only hope and believe that a very definite blessing may come upon us in answer to many prayers.

The weather is becoming very hot, but I keep encouraging myself with the thought that I have but one mission more after this—that at Colombo, and then the steamship Oriental for "Home, Sweet Home."

Tinnevelly, February 22.

South America.—Writing on February 14, from Adroque, F.C.S., Buenos Ayres, Senor Emilio Olsson says: "I have safely arrived at Buenos Ayres after my very long and difficult journey in the dark interior. I have carried the Bible for the first time through the heart of South America, a distance of 6,000 miles from Buenos Ayres to Para on the Amazon. In Bolivia I travelled over 1,000 miles on muleback, and the Word of God was taken to many dark places never before visited by any missionary of the Cross. Over 2,000 Scriptures, Bibles, Testaments, and portions, with Gospel cards in Spanish, were put into circulation, and probably we reached about 30,000 souls with the message of salvation. My trip lasted 170 days."

Central America.—Writing from Barbadoes, Mr. John Rymer, who has recently left British Guiana, says:—"Three young persons—a Christian brother and his wife and another sister, Creoles of British Guiana or the West Indies—came on with us to Barbadoes, and proceeded on to England by the Ocean Boat, to go forth and join the work in Central Africa associated with us, and more especially connected with the labours of Mr. F. S. Arnot. They are thus taking back the blessed message of life to the land of their forefathers. Nine have gone forth thus from British Guiana. One of their number has gone to be with the Lord, leaving eight in the field when these three have reached their respective spheres.

Prospects in France.

By Pastor R. SAILLENS.

AMIDST all that is sad and disheartening in the state of France at the present time, there are rays of light, signs of better things which seem to be forthcoming.

There is no doubt that "secularism" has had its day. On the impulse of Gambetta's often quoted words, which are ever true, "Le Cléricalisme, voilà l'ennemi," the fathers of the present Republic applied themselves with a will, not only to the destruction of Roman Catholic teaching, but of every religious idea, which they confounded with Romanism itself. The schools became secularised, and "civic morals" took the place of the Ten Commandments.

It must be confessed that this attempt has been a failure; even worse, though shorter lived, than that of the former Roman Catholic system of education. Any effort to do away with the mystical tendencies of the soul, and to build the morals of a nation on purely utilitarian ground, must end in a tremendous return of superstition. And this is what is taking place now. Rome was at its lowest ebb in France twenty-five years ago. Would to God that Evangelical Protestants had been strong enough, and sufficiently helped from outside, to step in in its place and thus avert the reaction which is now in full sway! But God's time will come. And there are many among us who believe that this is Rome's supreme effort, which may be violent as it is desperate, but which will be followed by

A TRUE NATIONAL REFORMATION.

That people are interested in religious matters more than they were before, is undeniable, and therein lies a great hope for us. That men of talent, like François Coppée, Huysmans, or even Brunetière, should publicly proclaim that they regret their past lives of infidelity and sin, and that they return to the religion of their childhood and to the reading of the Gospels, is, on the whole, a happy symptom. I know full well that the religion which they advocate is not ours, and that one of the first results of their conversion has been an outcry on the Protestants, whom the people are taught to believe to be a sort of infidels. But these are only side issues; the main fact, one over which we cannot but rejoice, is the proclamation by leading Frenchmen of Jesus Christ as the only leader of modern society, and of the Gospel as the only book on which

A NATION'S MORALITY MAY BE BUILT.

As a consequence of this revival among the people, there is a kind of awakening among the priests themselves. They read the Gospel, the whole Bible, far more than they used to do. At the Depôt Central, Paris, and no doubt at many other booksellers', there has been for a year or so quite an affluence of priests wishing to purchase the Scriptures, many of them in the original tongues. Your readers are acquainted with the many exits from the Church of Rome which have taken place of late among the clergy, and which would be far more considerable if the bread-and-cheese difficulty did not prove too much for those timid souls.

Thus the present religious tendencies in France might be summed up in two words—The people feel the need of a religion, of a Christian religion, and for want of a better are returning to Rome; while many of the priests, led by the same spirit of inquiry, are turning towards Evangelical Christianity. Am I not justified in saying that, on the whole, the prospects are more encouraging than they have ever been since the Reformation? Even if we have to pass through a short period of persecution (as is most likely), it will be worth while enduring something for the Master, to PREPARE FOR THE TRIUMPH OF HIS TRUTH.

The work which it is my privilege to conduct in Paris is so far unhindered, and is giving us much encouragement. Since the foundation of our mission church ten years ago, 704 members have been inscribed on the rolls, three-fourths of whom were born Roman Catholics. Owing to the inevitable dispersion of working men and their families, the present membership is about 300. We have been able to enter into a new meeting-place instead of our old Rue St. Denis, which the landlord has pulled down. Our present location is 61, Rue Meslay, near the Porte Saint Martin. The hall contains 500 sittings; rooms for smaller meetings are on the first floor. On the street we have been able lately to open a small temperance restaurant, which renders good service to the clerks and working people of the neighbourhood, and promises to be entirely self-supporting in a little while. Though we had no idea of doing such a work, we were driven to it by the prospect of seeing a marchand de vin (wine and spirit bar-room) occupying those premises so near our mission hall, and it would have been such an injury to the work that we took the shop at once.

Besides this large meeting-place, we have two mission stations, one in the north and one in the south of Paris. Beyond all this, my colleague, Pastor J. Sainton (formerly of the Mission Intérieure), conducts a mission church on similar principles on the left side of the Seine, 48, Rue de Lille, and has been much encouraged of late. Altogether, our Baptist Mission in Paris has two churches and seven mission halls in the faubourgs, with about 420 members, several of whom give their evenings freely for the preaching of the Gospel to their former co-religionists. Some of our young men have gone, or are preparing to go, to the Congo and other heathen fields as missionaries.

Similar work is carried on in all our large cities—Lyons, Marseilles, Toulon, St. Etienne, &c. May I appeal for help at the present time, so that we may enlarge this work by enlisting men of gifts and faith whom we cannot employ through lack of funds? Mr. William Olney, Hill View, Champion Hill, S.E., is the honorary treasurer for England of the French Baptist Mission.

61, Rue Meslay, Paris.

Armenian Distress.

LAST week we noted the action taken recently by the Turkish authorities in the closing of Protestant Orphanages for distressed Armenian children. In a circular letter the Duke of Westminster, after referring to the present destitution in Armenia and the repressive measures of the Porte in relation to the orphanages, proceeds to say:—

"As if the cross borne by these sorely-tried people was not heavy enough, the Russian Government is now mercilessly enforcing an edict issued in May, 1898, requiring all Ottoman subjects of Armenian extraction to quit the provinces of Baku, Kutais, Tiflis, Erivan and Kars within a year from the date of its promulgation. Several thousands of refugees are understood to be affected by this order. The sufferings of old and young of both sexes, especially widows and orphans who had sought an asylum in Russia from persecution in Turkey, are stated by eye-witnesses to be heartrending and pitiable in the extreme. Nor can this be surprising when it is borne in mind that the former homesteads of the refugees have been burnt or seized by Kurds, when their arable and pasture lands also passed into other hands.

"Looking at the reports received from official and private sources, it is no exaggeration to state that not less than 80,000 Armenian men and women and children are partially or entirely dependent upon charitable gifts from benevolent societies in Europe and America. There are, I am sure, on both sides of the Atlantic, many who are anxious to assist in befriending the distressed and persecuted. It is estimated that £20,000 is now required for the purchase of seed corn alone, and a similar amount required for the annual maintenance of the orphanages."

Moneys to the credit of the "Armenian Relief Fund" will be received by Messrs. H. S. King and Company, bankers, 45, Pall Mall, London, S.W.

Tract Work in Wales.—There are several centres in and around Brecon, South Wales, where tracts are systematically distributed. Many of the workers look to me to replenish their store, and as the shelves of my tract room are almost empty, I appeal to your readers for new or old religious literature, illustrated preferred. D. Devoir Thomas.

Protestant Outlook.

AT an influential conference of clergy and laity held at 25, Onslow Gardens, on Wednesday last week, under the chairmanship of Prebendary Webb-Peploe, the following resolution was unanimously agreed to:—

That this conference is of opinion that the bishops, with the clergy, are equally bound by the Prayer-book, and have no power to authorise any violation thereof.

At a Protestant meeting at Buckley recently, Rev. Idloes Edwards, a local Nonconformist minister, declared that Hawarden was the hotbed of Romanism in the county of Flint. Not only had a leaflet been circulated declaring that it was a sin to enter a Nonconformist place of worship, but a book essentially Romish in character, and entitled "Catholic Religion," had been given by a clergyman to a girl of Nonconformist family.

At a meeting in Manchester of the Northern Protestant Electoral Council a letter was read from Lord Lorne, M.P. for Manchester, criticising the Church Discipline Bill, which has been drafted to meet the existing difficulties in the Church of England. The chairman, Mr. Austin Taylor, held that what was wanted was not an "impartial" view of the situation, as desiderated by Lord Lorne, but a view in the interest of the preservation of the Protestant character of the Church of England.

Writing with reference to the recent statement of Lord Halifax, regarding the growing membership of the English Church Union, a correspondent says:—

His lordship does not say how many have left the society. Comparing a leaflet, dated December, 1895, with the "Directory" for 1899, I observe a drop of 1,718. If in the course of five months before that some 2,500 joined, there are over 4,000 to be accounted for by lapses and deaths. The E.C.U. policy is evidently alienating many of its lay members.

The ministry of good books in combating the evils of Romanism and Ritualism is so widely recognised as to need no enforcement. The proposition being admitted, it is a pleasure to name the works of the late Miss Emily Holt as standing by themselves in the class of stories illustrative of sound Protestant doctrine and principles. Forty in number, and portraying English life over a period of a thousand years and more, these excellent books are about to be re-issued in a uniform edition at £3 for the set. Originally published at prices varying from 3s. 6d. to 5s., Miss Holt's stories have been general favourites; and if placed in school and village libraries, they are calculated to assist the Protestant movement as well as help in the cultivation of good literary taste. A list of the volumes and other particulars may be had from Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co., 48, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Rev. Gwilym Rees, congregational minister, of Wellingborough, recently publicly alleged that improper questions were put to young people by some of the Church clergy of the town. The two vicars of Wellingborough demanded either a withdrawal or proof, and suggested that, failing either, they would take legal proceedings. Mr. Rees challenged the clergy to deny his statements. On Friday last, at a Protestant meeting, Mr. Rees produced documents in which it was declared that questions relating to the Seventh Commandment had been put to young persons by two curates at Wellingborough whom he named. The statements were all verified by oath, and the chairman of the meeting, who had seen the questions, considered them unfit to repeat to the gathering. Mr. Rees added that as soon as the clergy favoured him by instituting the threatened legal proceedings he would produce a number of boys and girls who would tell their story in their own words on oath, and a number of parents who had, in consequence of the questions, withdrawn their children from confirmation and other classes in connection with the local churches

An address to the Bishop of Gloucester from lay communicants is being extensively signed in the diocese dealing with disputed matters in the government of the Church. The signatories express their devotion to the Church of England, as Catholic yet Protestant, against the errors and corruptions of the Roman Communion; their adherence to the doctrine and rites of the Church of England as set forth in the Book of Common Prayer; their disapproval of the inculcation and practice of habitual auricular confession as tending to revive some of the most dangerous abuses of the mediæval Church; and their conviction that a dignified simplicity of ritual should distinguish the public worship of the Reformed Church from that of the Church of Rome. The address concludes:—"At this juncture, when, unhappily, certain of the clergy seem to be disregarding both the teaching of the Prayer-book and the authority of their Bishops, we seek to strengthen your endeavours 'with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrine contrary to God's Word,' and we offer our hearty support of such measures as may tend to accomplish this end, and secure due submission to your authority."

In a long letter in last Friday's Times, Rev. A. R. Cavalier, of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, exposed a disgraceful instance of Ritualistic intrigue, resulting in family estrangement and division. Briefly put, it was as follows: While Mr. Cavalier was recently visiting India, his fourth son, fifteen years of age, came under the influence of a certain "Father" Bridge, of North Kensington, who gave him a Romish manual of devotion and other mischievous books, and also heard his "confession." Acting in collusion with a youthful Ritualist who helps the "Father," the distracted lad ran away from home, and only after being lost nearly a fortnight was he traced to Ilkeston, where he was staying with "Father" Wason, who "was willing to harbour him for a year!" The young runaway was in the meantime acting as an acolyte, and playing the organ occasionally. Being passed on to Mildenhall, Suffolk, the lad spent more time in a missionary institution observing a very stringent rule; and not until urged to come home after more than a month's absence, to say good-bye to his parents who were about starting for Australia, did he return to Kensington. Then his old affection seemed to return, and he expressed sorrow for what had passed. Mr. Cavalier adds:—

The innocent, happy, and dutiful boy of the past is now melancholy, morbid and in a state of extreme nervous weakness. The voyage may restore his health, but his moral and religious tone has been grievously impaired.

Thus one clergyman, "Father" Bridge, received him for confession, and gave him a book full of most objectionable teaching, without the knowledge of his father. Another young clergyman, "Father" Wason, offered him shelter if he would run away from home, and kept him in hiding from his family, causing us much serious anxiety and trouble, and teaching the boy to disregard those whom it was his bounden duty to obey.

The Indigent Blind Visiting Society is steadily multiplying its agencies for good in the Metropolis. Among recent developments may be mentioned a weekly class for the blind poor residing beyond Bow Bridge in the East of London. A lady supporter of the Society is taking a personal interest in the work, which will reach some 150 blind and guides every week. Mr. W. Mead, superintendent, himself blind, will be glad to hear from friends who know of blind people not yet sharing the advantages of Christian care and instruction. He may be addressed at 95, Gurney Road, Stratford, E.

The Evangelisation Society for Liverpool and neighbourhood came into being as an outcome of the first visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1875. Evangelistic work has ever since been vigorously carried on in the neglected parts of Liverpool and neighbourhood, in conjunction with the churches of various denominations. As time goes on, the need is more widely felt. Last year the total number of evangelistic meetings held was 992, as against 965 in the previous year. The committee are constantly hearing testimonies of the result of these meetings. As many as forty-three preaching stations were supplied last year, and on an average eighteen meetings were supplied every Sunday. The superintendent of the mission is Mr. Thos. Lydiatt, 3, Hackins Hey, Liverpool.

Nellie.

By the Author of "His Boy."

(all rights reserved.)

IV.—"SHALL HE NOT MUCH MORE CLOTHE YOU?"

NOW that Nellie had decided for Christ, I went to the friend who had promised to take her into her home, and told her the good news, and asked when it would be suitable for the girl to come to her. On my next visit to Nellie I was able to tell her that in less than three weeks she would be away from the locality where her life had hitherto been spent, and would start a new life in a new home, among new and certainly better surroundings. Then a woman was found who promised to make Nellie's outfit, and we counted up together what could be got for five pounds. I told her to go on preparing the things; for, though I had no money whatever to pay for them, I was praying God to supply the needed sum before the expiry of the three weeks.

It was the first time I was in the position of having to ask our heavenly Father to send me money for any such purpose; but, as He had answered prayer in the case of Nellie's conversion, my faith went out to Him with the assurance that he would supply this lesser need. For the first fortnight I thought my faith quite strong, and I opened letters different times with the feeling that there might be a draft or cheque for five pounds enclosed. But two weeks passed without any money coming, and I think my faith was rather weaker during the third week. Different times Nellie said, "Have you got the five pounds yet?" and it was rather discouraging to answer time after time that I had got neither the five pounds nor yet part of it. So the time wore away, till it was to be paid for the outfit. I was asked at that time by a friend in Glasgow if I would come and take an afternoon meeting for her. As I had taken one for her a month or so before in a kitchen in a poor locality of the city, I thought it was this same meeting she was asking me to address, and I replied that I would come.

TWO DAYS BEFORE THE MONEY WAS REQUIRED

The following day I was met by this friend, to whom I had told part of the story of Nellie once before. We entered a car together, and I finished the story to her as we drove along, telling her of Nellie's conversion, of the new home she was going to, of her outfit being got ready, and of our prayer to God to send the money. I had not noticed which car we had entered until we were crossing Kelvinbridge, and then I saw that I was being taken in the opposite direction from where the kitchen meeting had been held. I asked the lady where she was taking me to, and she replied giving me the address of a lady farther west, informing me at the same time that it was not a kitchen but a drawing-room meeting she was taking me to.

I thereupon objected to address the meeting, as I had never spoken in a drawing-room before. I would prefer either not to go, I said, or else just to go as a listener, as I was sure I could not take a meeting where the ladies knew a great deal more than I did myself. She tried to persuade me to come, saying that the same address I meant to give at the kitchen meeting would do for a drawing room meeting, as hearts were alike everywhere, and the needs of the soul the same. But as I still objected, she said:—

"Come along, then, and I will explain that there has been a mistake. We may turn the gathering into a testimony-meeting; and, though it should be the first time a meeting of the kind has been held in this room, it might be a good and profitable change."

On arriving at the house, where there would be over twenty ladies gathered, I found two or three friends whom I knew well. After it had been explained that I would not take the meeting, prayer was offered by the lady of the house; then we sang a hymn and read a chapter; but, when the testimonies were proposed, although I am sure many there must have had reason to testify of the great things God had done for them. The lady who had asked me to take the meeting, seeing that the testimonies were not forthcoming, appealed to me to see if I would not tell the story of Nellie, which would not seem to me as if I was giving an address. So I related to them the incidents I have told here. As everything had just recently happened, the story was told with a heart that rejoiced in all that the Saviour had done.

ALL WERE SILENT,

When I finished speaking, one young lady rose from her seat, and, crossing the room, lifted a little basket. Coming forward and standing among the others, she said: "I am quite sure that this is where prayer for the five pounds is to be answered, and that we are the people who are to give it. So I am just going right round for a collection, and I am sure it will amount to the required sum."

She went round to each with the basket, and then, coming over to me, she emptied the contents in my hands, asking me at the same time if I though there would be the five pounds I needed.

"I am sure of it," I replied. "It has been so constantly asked that I am certain no less than the needed money will be here."

As may be guessed, it was quickly counted, and, to the delight of all, we found we had £5 1s. 6d. We had some little short prayers after that, as many of them were touched by the story of the girl whose heart God had won by his love.

MINGLED WITH MUCH THANKSGIVING,

I lost no time in going to Nellie and showing her the money, and it was with a calm quiet gladness she looked at it all. The God of salvation had heard our cry for clothing for the body, as He saw that it too was needed as well as the robe of righteousness which she had received in simple faith.

V. THE ADVENTURES OF THE FIVE POUNDS.

Before telling of Nellie's entrance into her new home, it will perhaps be of interest if I record a strange incident which happened in connection with the five pounds.

On the evening of the day on which I got the sum, I had occasion to visit a friend resident at some distance from Glasgow. Naturally I soon told her of this answer to prayer, and showed her the money. After a little talk over it, I was going out for the evening, when this friend, who was engaged in a shop, advised me to leave my purse behind, as she thought it was too much money to be carrying about. I took her advice, and, taking the purse out of my pocket, I gave it to her. She showed me where she put it—in a drawer in the workroom at the back of the shop. This workroom could be reached by a back door without passing through the shop, and I went out by that door, feeling that it was wisest to leave the money.

I stayed overnight at this place. In the morning, being rather hurried, I forgot all about the purse until I was on my way home. On discovering that I had left it, I at once wrote to this friend, asking her to return it immediately, as I had to pay the money on Monday, or Tuesday at the latest—Tuesday being the day Nellie was to go to her place. What was my surprise when I got a reply stating that I must have taken the purse, as in the drawer where it had been put! The workroom, too, had been searched, but it was nowhere to be seen. I replied that I was sure I had left it, as I had never taken it out of the drawer; and, if it was gone, the only thing I could think of was that some tramp had come in at the back entrance and got it somehow. All that could be done now was to pray that whoever had taken it might have his heart touched and return it. My name and address were printed inside the purse, and so I knew that, if the heart of the thief was touched, he could send it without making himself known.

IT WAS NOT TO BE FOUND

On the Monday, I expected all day that the purse would arrive, but was disappointed; still, I kept believing. I had no way of making up the money, and I thought that the One who had so graciously answered the first prayer could answer this one.

On the Tuesday morning, to my great delight, as I watched the postman turning the corner of our road, I noticed that the first thing he held in his hand to deliver was a little square parcel. Before he rang the bell, I had given thanks to God in my heart, as I felt sure this was my purse. The little parcel was handed to me when I opened the door, and you may guess it was not long in being opened.

IT WAS MY PURSE!

Along with it, there was a little note, written in very poor handwriting, with no signature. The writer stated that he had been a thief for about ten years, and a few of these years he had spent within prison walls; when he was not in prison he should have been there, as he was living by theft all the time. This man had gone through to the back court behind the shop where my friend worked to see if by any chance he could pick up anything. He had been looking through the workroom window, and, as the gas had been lit and no blind down, he had seen us quite plainly, and noticed the purse being taken out, and where it was put. Waiting on till the workroom was quite empty, he had then gone in and taken the purse.

That bit of the story was simple enough, but the wonder was how he had returned it. He went on to say that he counted over the money and went straight to his quarters in a model lodging-house, thinking what a fine time he would have on the Saturday with some boon companions, and reckoning up all that he could do with the money. But on the Saturday afternoon, when descending some steps on his way out, the result being that he had to return to his lodging. He saw that he would not be able to get out that day, and so had to content himself indoors. On the Sunday he had another look at the purse, and another count of the money. In examining the purse to see if anything else could be found, he noticed a little pocket-book attached, and began to read some jottings written in it. Among other things, I had written down my request for the five pounds, with the date on which I began to pray for it; and on the opposite page I had written the date on which prayer was answered and the amount received. On reading this, the man had been touched. As he expressed it in his note, he thought that if he kept the money he would be committing a double robbery—first robbing a woman, and then robbing God. He struggled against the feeling at first; but it became more intense, and on the Monday he was glad to get rid of it by posting on the money to me.

HE FELL AND TWISTED HIS ANKLE,

(To be Continued.)

Christian Endeavour Notes.

THERE are nearly 600 Christian Endeavour societies in London.

Over 55,000 Christian Endeavour societies have now been enrolled.

Madagascar's recent Christian Endeavour convention enrolled 500 delegates.

A Christian Endeavour society has been organised in Tamokoo, Bulgaria.

About fifty French, English and Americans united with the Spanish Endeavourers at Biarritz in keeping Endeavour Day.

A vigorous petition is being circulated by the New York State Christian Endeavour in favour of a bill to prohibit prize-fighting.

One hundred and one new societies have been registered by the Secretary of the C.E. Union of Great Britain and Ireland within the last five weeks.

Dr. and Mrs. Clark sailed for Jamaica on March 8, expecting to reach Port Antonio on the 13th. Christian Endeavour meetings have been arranged in different parts of the island.

The local Christian Endeavour union idea has spread to South Africa. Local unions have been formed in Johannesburg, Pietermaritzburg, Cape Town, and King William's Town.

Professor W. W. White,

And his Bible-School.

OUR portrait this week outlines the features of a Christian teacher whom many, during recent weeks, have learned to esteem very highly for his work's sake. For more than two months thousands of Christian people gathered around him weekly, in large halls in various centres of the Metropolis, to study the Sacred Scriptures. To the sorrow of all, his health broke down and the School had been disbanded. Looking back, we are glad to know that God has blessed his Word by the mouth of his servant, giving it free course—convicting of sin those who were "without Christ," confirming in the faith many who were in doubt or perplexity, and equipping for more efficient service some who had put their hands to various forms of Gospel work.

Professor Wilbert W. White comes from America, being a native of Ohio. He enjoyed good educational advantages during youth, and was graduated from college at the age of eighteen. For two years subsequent to graduation he was employed as a teacher of mathematics and Latin in the preparatory department of his Alma Mater, and spent his spare hours in the study of theology under the direction of his pastor.

The next two years were devoted wholly to a regular theological course of study, after which Dr. White was married and settled as a pastor of a small country congregation near Chicago. After two years of experience in this line he was induced by Dr. W. R. Harper, now President of Chicago University, to take up graduate study in the Semitic languages and literatures at Yale, where Dr. Harper had already become known as a most successful teacher. Three years at Yale brought the Doctor's degree and election to a professorship in Xenia Theological Seminary. Five years were spent at this work.

Professor White was not content with this alone. Even before going to Yale he had recognised the importance of the study of the English Bible. While there he was further stimulated in this line. Every summer, while at Xenia, he was the leader of a large class of college students at the Lake Geneva (Wisconsin) Students' Conference. During the winter, even while engaged in technical language work with his theological classes, popular meetings of an evangelistic character were held in the Opera House on Sunday afternoons, and were largely attended. Various calls to speak in the interests of Bible study at conventions and conferences were responded to, and the attention of Mr. Moody was finally directed to Dr. White. A proposition was made and accepted, which took the professor to the Bible Institute, Chicago, with which he is still connected.

From work there he went on leave two years ago to meet an emergency call to relieve his brother, Mr. J. Campbell White, in work among English-speaking native college students in Calcutta. In addition to large contact with the Indian student world, Dr. White, while in the East, attended fourteen representative conventions of missionaries and Christian workers, and thus secured a broad view of missions and a new interest in the needy foreign fields.

As the end of the professor's visit to India drew near, there was a widely expressed desire that he should return to establish a Bible Institute in India. This desire was definitely formulated by a resolution of the Calcutta Missionary Conference last March, and accentuated by numerously signed petitions from various missionary societies. The request is understood to lie as a serious concern upon Dr. White's mind at the present time. He will probably be content to remain in the homelands only after being convinced that he can serve the foreign mission cause better there than by actual presence in "the regions beyond," for to the promotion of Bible study and foreign mission work his life has been devoted.

Did space permit, it would be most interesting to describe the series of remarkable providences by which Dr. White was led to undertake the London School for Bible Study. It is sufficient to say that, just before leaving us quite recently, he declared that he would never have ventured to assume the responsibility of such a campaign without the clearest evidence that it was God's will for him to do so. It is gratifying to know that the results amply justified this conviction; and we have reason to believe that even in the unexpected termination of the work God has given evidence that He has special interest and a large plan in the entire movement.

Manifestly Dr. White, though yet young—he is but six and thirty—is a man of many and varied experiences and attainments, and Christians on all hands are thanking God for the work He has enabled him to do in England. Dr. White belongs to no country nor to any sect. The world and the Church at large claim him. He has, under God, studied geography until for him there is no foreign land, and mankind until for him there is no foreigner.

We are glad to report that when Dr. White embarked for America on Mar. 11, he felt that there was no serious or permanent breakdown in his health. He received timely warning before his largest audience of the course, in the seventh week of meetings; and he has wisely followed the advice of several physicians and many friends, and will now take a thorough rest. It is hoped that something may grow out of the recent proposal of Mr. J. Herbert Tritton for the establishment in London of a permanent School for Bible Study under the direction of Professor White.

Scripture Gift Mission.

WE have frequently called attention to the work of the Scripture Gift Mission and Crystal Palace Bible Stand, a combination of institutions engaged in the dissemination of God's Word among the people. In various languages, at home and abroad, and among all classes of the community, the brightly-illustrated Gospel portions are circulated for the enlightenment of those who are in spiritual darkness, and the help of such as are making their way to Christian liberty and peace. As our readers have already been informed, the pictures accompanying these portions throw light on the text, being in every case true to Oriental life and scenery. The Epistles of Peter have proved very welcome of late to workers among Roman Catholics in Ireland and elsewhere.

A worker in France recently told of people eagerly seeking copies of the illustrated Gospels, the artistic covers of which are an irresistible attraction. From Rome comes an appeal for other Gospels beside that of Mark, which has been sent over hill and dale throughout the entire province. The various countries in which Spanish is spoken are an interesting field, and in them the Gospel seed is being sown by devoted labourers. Central and South America and islands of the West Indies are included in this sphere, and to assist the workers is an urgent present concern with the Mission. It is good news to hear that Gospels are penetrating Mexico at points where the name of Christ has never yet been uttered; also to learn that a man in South America, "hungering and thirsting after righteousness," walked a hundred miles to procure a copy of the book which tells of Christ Jesus the Lord!

This work deserves to go forward; and if the prayers of those who circulate its publications are answered, it will expand rapidly and in many directions. There is an urgent call for Matthew, Luke, and John in Italian, and John's Gospel in Spanish for circulation in South America and the Philippine Islands. In order that these may be issued at a penny each, large editions have to be printed, and friends desiring to devise liberal things on behalf of any particular field are advised to communicate with the secretary, Mr. W. Walters, 15, Strand, W.C. Another desideratum at present is the Epistle to the Ephesians in Arabic, for the comfort and edification of native converts in North Africa.

In the course of a recent conversation, Mr. Walters expressed himself specially anxious regarding the work of the Bible Stand at the forthcoming Paris Exhibition. Preparations for this, which will involve a large outlay in the provision of Scriptures, are in progress; and as the opportunity for circulating the Word in many languages is unique in various senses, it is hoped that many Christians will support the undertaking, and have a part in a testimony which God is sure to bless. Sending the Gospel to the Philippine Islands should touch the imagination as well as the heart; a people who have long dwelt in darkness are now ready to receive the light of Divine truth.

Bound for Klondike.—Captain Andrew Hamilton, writing from Agassiz, British Columbia, Canada, says:—"The kindness of some of your readers in sending money for the purchase of booklets was so blest to some of the miners going up to Klondike that I ask for more. There is just now a rush to Atlin, the hotels and boarding-houses filling with miners, who accept from the Christian workers something to read in the lonely hours after their mining work is done. Spurgeon's sermons were much sought after, and read with avidity. If subscriptions are sent to me, care of Mr. Charrington, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, London, E., they will be forwarded to a band of workers who visit the miners as they pass through Victoria, British Columbia, on their way to the gold mines."

Free Churchmen in Council.

ENTHUSIASTIC MEETINGS AT LIVERPOOL.

Tuesday.

LIVERPOOL rose to the occasion last week of entertaining the fourth Free Church Council. It was thought that last year, when the Council met at Bristol, the movement had reached the high-water mark, as far as enthusiasm is concerned. We have learned that the North can be as earnest as the West. This is all the more encouraging, for Liverpool is not a unity like Bristol, as the Welsh churches are affiliated with the North Wales Federation of Councils, and there is apt to be a divided interest owing to the trouble of the different languages.

To describe the meetings as intensely enthusiastic is only fair. It may be, as some of the daily papers suggest, that the Council is in a high state of elation because of the revival of interest in the appalling state of the Established Church. It is to this Federation of Free Churches that the eyes of most of the denominational laity are turned for help and guidance in the struggle on which we have entered.

The success of the Federation may contribute much as a stimulus everywhere. Not a single county in England is without its council. At the rate of a hundred a year they are being established, so that no less than 613 were represented at these meetings, combining some 8,000,000 members. This is something for which its members thank God and take courage.

The Council was met in the early stages of its life with the objection that politics, which had destroyed so many good schemes, would speedily destroy this one. On the contrary, it has been possible through these councils to get men to drop their party politics and combine in the interests of

MORALITY AND RELIGION

in a way undreamt of. To this advantage another equally important has been added. Country churches find the Council a real help; town and country have become as one; isolation has been largely abolished, and petty persecution is rapidly coming to an end under the Council's persistent protest. What no single community could do the combined churches are finding easy. Breadth has been given by the adoption of the parochial system of visitation. Each church has its own district to visit, and much labour is saved. In movements like Sunday Closing, purifying theatres and music halls, unearthing vice, and such like, the councils are showing their power. In one particular instance a whole block of buildings used for immoral purposes was cleared out under the determined action of the local council. Above all, to those who are the fact that the Federation has two evangelists of its own is a source of great delight, and definite results during the past year have been very many; the extraordinary sale of the Catechism and other publications of the Council is also a joy to the more thoughtful of Free Churchmen. There is not one element of depression in the past year to chill the fervour of the Council, the members of which are more than ever determined to carry to the end those great principles that have been their strength in the past.

PRAYING FOR CONVERSIONS,

A notable feature was the readiness with which the Mayor of Liverpool agreed to offer hospitality to the Council. Tuesday's reception was worthy of the great city on the Mersey, both in quality and cordiality. The only drawback was the limited accommodation. It was a fearful crush, for no one wished to be absent. The churches are too strong now to be ignored, even if the Mayor had wished to do so, which is far from the case. The reception was a hearty appreciation of the good the churches are doing, by one who is himself a staunch Free Churchman.

The meetings of the Council began by a reception in the Walker Art Gallery by the president (Mr. Thomas Snape, J.P.) of the Liverpool Council. No less than 2,500 invitations were sent out, in response to which the place was packed to inconvenience. The welcome to the delegates was given by Rev. J. H. Atkinson, the chairman of the reception committee. "We are proud that you have honoured us by coming to Liverpool," he told the delegates. "You have come to no mean city, either as regards population or prestige. You are more dependent on this city than any other in the kingdom, for it is the greatest granary in the nation. It is the birthplace too of one of the greatest men of this century, W. E. Gladstone," a statement which brought forth tremendous applause. "If you measure your welcome by the importance of the city, you may rest assured of its largeness, sincerity and heartiness. Liverpool has had in the past great men that have played no mean part in the

HISTORY OF THE NATION

and in the pulpits of the country. A town that could boast of a Raffles, a Falloon, a Charles Birrell, a Dr. M'Leod, a Hugh Stowell Brown need not be ashamed of its past; and the pulpits of Liverpool are filled with men to-day that will worthily carry on the noble work handed down to them."

The reply on behalf of the guests was entrusted to Rev. Dr. Mackennal, of Bowdon, the new President, who gracefully acknowledged indebtedness to the citizens of Liverpool. They had a magnificent site, and the people had put down buildings worthy thereof. It was however, that a city had glory, but by the honourable names, the names of piety, of energy, of godliness written in their midst. For these all loved Liverpool. The men who had, during the dark days of the past, fought for Free Church principles could never be forgotten by the Council. Their prospects are much brighter than formerly. They had now the ear of the nation. All who loved Christ were looking to the Free Churches with sympathy, even if not members of them themselves. The great question now was—What were they going to do with their opportunities? They were not assembled for the glory of the churches to which they belonged, but to take account of their responsibilities to help each other. The people of England do not exist for the purposes of the churches, but the churches for them; until England was won for Christ, until Christianity had penetrated and destroyed the slums of the city, had entered into the social and political life, had curbed the pride of the soldier and taught Englishmen not to glory, even although they had ships and men and money, but to glory rather in that evangelical mission for which they believed England had been called; until that had been done they would not be satisfied or rest content.

NOT BY BUILDINGS,

Tuesday morning was occupied chiefly by addresses from Dr. Clifford, the outgoing, and Dr. Mackennal, the incoming president, as noted in our last issue. Following these, Rev. C. H. Kelly spoke on the work in the explaining that Nonconformists had not now to fight for the right to instruct their own lads in the truths they believe in. The Wesleyans have 153 officiating chaplains, and the Presbyterians have a great army. The time had come, however, to extend their borders, and especially on Salisbury Plain, to provide services for the lads there who had been their scholars. The War Office and the Admiralty would not deny their petition if they went about it in a right manner. At first it might have to be done as in India, where, when only a few Wesleyans are located and many Presbyterians, the latter look after the former; and vice versa, This answers well. We must demand that the returns on the question of religion should be fairer. If a lad is asked, "church or chapel?" and he replies "chapel," he is put down as a Roman Catholic very often! To avoid this, he answers "church," although he has been brought up in our schools. Even if the lads get information on the matter from the recruiting sergeant they are not always directed aright. You can give a great deal of information without giving understanding.

ARMY AND NAVY,

Reports followed from Dr. Clifford and Rev. J. Beveridge on their respective visits to America and Norway.

There was a big rush to be back at Myrtle Street Chapel by two o'clock to hear Dr. Brown, of Bedford, and Dr. Forsyth, of Cambridge. The former was perfectly at home on his subject. Perhaps no one is better able than he to deal with

"MODERN SACERDOTALISM."

Up till 1833, he said, Churchmen looked on the Nonconformist as an enemy of the State. The one was established by law, the other was not, and therefore ought to be suppressed. After the Tracts for the Times, however, this was changed. John Henry Newman asked the question—a simple if a mischievous one—"If the Government cast you off, what claim would you have on the people?" If the idea of State glory would not then be of any service, the only thing to keep the people in a condition of subjection to the State Church, was by exalting the priest idea, and so there came the Apostolical Succession in all its glory. The Sacerdotalists persist in this groundless claim, although scientific historians, even in their own church, give judgment against them. There is no proof of any supernatural condition being granted to an official class, and no agreement as to the mode of transmission. In the light of ominous facts in the Church of England, which every day seem to grow more serious, the responsibilities of the Free Churches of England are great, and their duty urgent. They must stand for enlightened Scriptural religion. Their fathers were not afraid to fight, neither must they be afraid if they would retain their priceless heritage.

Dr. Forsyth's address was entirely along positive lines. He was most urgent on all good men within and without the Established Church speaking out, and not allowing judgment to pass on them by default. What we have to put before people to-day is the priesthood of believers. The Church is an instrument of service to God. It does not originate the salvation of men, but may be the medium through which God works. A noble earl has said lately that in the next hundred years you will see, unless there is a change in the Establishment, that the women will become Romanists and the men atheists. "Never," cried Dr. Forsyth, "if the Free Churches are true to their mission. Some of us would rather die than see that." A short time was allowed for discussion, but the papers so clearly defined the general feeling on the matter that none was possible.

SUNDAY CLOSING.

Perhaps the warmest reception yet accorded to any was given to the Rev. Charles Garrett, as he rose to move a resolution on the Sunday Closing question. There was a touch of pathos in his remark, "I was one of the first to take up this subject. I was black then, and expected the matter to be speedily settled. I am now white, and it is not settled yet. I pray you to help me in this matter, and so remove one of the greatest curses there is in our land, so that we may enter the twentieth century with a sober Sabbath. The grounds on which I base my appeal in this matter are many.

The Sabbath is the Lord's, and we have no more right to annul the fourth commandment than we have to annul the seventh or eighth. The Sabbath trade may be legal, but who has the power to make it legal? I want the public-houses closed for the sake of the publican. He needs time to think and repent and to seek forgiveness. Will you not save those 250,000 girls that have to work on the Sabbath—girls that are amongst the bonniest we have in the land, for the publican will only engage such? It is not fair to other shops to close them and allow this horrible traffic to open. It is wrong to the masters to have the drunken Monday that there is to-day. People talk of robbing the poor man of his beer. Mr. President, we do not hold a monopoly of hypocrites. The working-man of Liverpool does not want the public-houses open on Sundays. He wants them closed." Rev. U. R. Thomas then put in a plea for the children, and the resolution was heartily carried.

Following this session came the Mayor's reception in the Town Hall, and in the evening the Council sermon by Rev. J. B. Meharry.

Wednesday

found the Conference blessed with excellent weather and in splendid spirits for the stirring sermon of Rev. W. L. Watkinson, on the

NEED OF THE PURITAN

in all departments of the national life. Very forcibly he alluded to the tendencies of the age to pleasure and enjoyment. Religion did not exclude wealth and pleasure and fashion, but they could not realise them except through the ethical and spiritual elements of the Puritan. It was the special duty of Free Church ministers to emphasise those elements. If the world was to enjoy these variegated, manifold, magnificent, magical gifts of wealth and power and splendour, it would be only as they learned to be just and temperate and pure and magnanimous and self-sacrificing. If they were to realise the intellectual universe, they must have the Puritan condition of realising and retaining and enjoying the realm of culture. It was only on those conditions that they could have their houses full of pleasant things and of enjoying pleasant things. As Free Churchmen, they stood up for righteousness in trade, in government, in their dealings with aliens and savage tribes; and also, he said it with deep pain and reluctance, they felt themselves called upon to insist on righteousness in the ecclesiastical sphere. Those who had read the "Secret History of the Oxford Movement" and the Hooley bankruptcy proceedings would recognise that the morality in both cases was identical.

The memorial service on behalf of the late was begun by Dr. Monro Gibson moving a resolution expressing the feelings of the Council. We all mourn, he said, the absence of his genial face, his kindly manner, his sage counsel, and broad statesmanship. He paid a warm tribute to the rich mental and spiritual powers of the late president. The resolution was seconded by Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A. All stood, as the organ played the "Dead March." It was a most impressive service, and many were in tears.

DR. BERRY

It was not easy to turn the mind at once from this to the resolution moved by Rev. Dr. Randles on

THE CHURCH CRISIS.

On the great question of the remedy for existing troubles, Dr. Randles and Rev. C. F. Aked both spoke for Disestablishment pure and simple, and, as might be expected, the response of the audience was demonstrative. There was, however, a great difference in the tone of the two speakers, as well as in the nature of their arguments. The former, the cool-headed theologian, grounded his antagonism to the existing state of things on the iniquities of those who threaten to dominate the Establishment. The argument of the latter, the impassioned rhetorician, was based on the iniquities of the system itself—the alliance between State and Church. Proceeding from different standpoints, the speeches of both converged to the same conclusion.

Resolutions were also passed in regard to "Sacerdotalism in the day schools." Mr. Evan Spicer, who specially noted the work of the Ritualists in Brighton, said there were 8,000 villages in England where Free Churchmen had hardly a voice in educational matters, which were entirely in the hands of the clergy, who taught the Mass and the Confessional. Such things were being taught not only in the national schools but in the training colleges, industrial and other schools, and they were working it with the support of the State. Were their Free Church children to be left to the tender mercies of Jesuits in the Church of England? ("No, no!")

Rev. C. H. Kelly alluded especially to the training given to teachers. In the Midlands, he said, before anyone could enter the only profession open to the children of the poor, the teaching profession, they had to leave the church of their fathers, become confirmed, and enter another church. He quoted from a Church Catechism for children, pointing out that their Free Church children were taught from it. The catechism spoke of dissent as a sin, and dissenters as heretics, who were not excommunicated because the law of the land over-rode the more wholesome law of the Church. Amid excitement he exclaimed, "This abominable state of things must be ended."

IN THE VILLAGES.

Next came Rev. Chas. Williams with a plea for the provision of a resident minister, or evangelist, in every rural district. There were thousands of villages throughout the country of very small population, and in these places religious life was very weak, and the Free Churches were languishing. He could not for a moment depreciate the valuable work done by lay preachers—(hear, hear)—but without a resident minister Nonconformity declined. They ought to guard against the scandal of overlapping; it was a disgrace in a village of 500 people to see two or three or four separate congregations. If they could distribute their forces better they would soon see an improvement. They did not want evangelists merely to fight, to assail the Church of England, or to help the Liberal party; their object was a higher one. He urged them to help in the work of supplying the villages with evangelists. An interesting discussion followed.

THE WORK OF EVANGELISM

as described by the energetic secretary, Rev. Thos. Law, was full and encouraging. Some of the figures appear in the opening paragraph of this report, but we were particularly interested in his assurance that from the beginning of the Federation movement it had been urged that the first work of the councils was spiritual. This has been more clearly emphasised as the work has grown; during the last year it has been more fully realised than in any previous year. Indeed, it was not, he said, too much to say that during recent months a mighty wave of spiritual revival had been sweeping over the Free Churches of England in connection with the Council movement. United mission services had been held in nearly every centre of the land and in many rural districts. The demand for the services of Gipsy Smith and Mr. W. R. Lane, who were giving the whole of their time to the National Council for this work, had been so great that it had been utterly impossible to meet it. A great many other missioners had been giving nearly all their time to this spiritual service, and still there was a call for others.

The experiment of house-to-house visitation which was first made in Yorkshire in 1892, constituted an epoch and a turning-point in the history of modern English Nonconformity. It was the origin of the Free Church parochial system. The Midlands and other parts of England followed in a magnificent way. Already many councils had adopted the plans with the best results. One church in a large town visited over 2,000 houses with a band of seventy-five men and women, each of whom visited twenty-five houses weekly. The effect was seen in overflowing congregations and great blessing to all the churches of the neighbourhood.

Following up this subject of Evangelism, brief addresses were contributed by Gipsy Smith and Rev. A. J. Palmer, after which Rev. F. W. Bourne moved the important resolution:—"That the Council adopts the recommendation of the committee to make preparations for a simultaneous mission throughout England and Wales as early in 1901 as is locally convenient, and urges upon our federations and our local councils to arrange for as frequent opportunities as possible for united waiting upon God, both by setting apart for the purpose a portion of time at the stated meetings, and also by the appointment of quiet days, and by public gatherings where these can be hopefully convened."

After a reception of secretaries, at the invitation of Mr. W. P. Hartley, J.P., the evening was occupied by a public in Great George Street Chapel, which was crowded. Mr. Wm. Crosfield, who presided, referred to the question of the "open door," but not in a political sense. This phrase came very early into the history of foreign missions, and the gates had been widely opened to them. Commencing with the history of foreign missionary work during the past century, Mr. Crosfield said that it was a favourite thing with him to look back upon one period of the last 100 years, when in 1858 doors were opened for this work all over the world. That was the year when European influence forced its way in China, and when missionary enterprise spread in India and Africa. They were assembled as members of the Free Churches, and there should be rivalry between them wherever the open door presented itself—not, however, in the field, but only to get there.

MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION

Dr. Wenyon spoke on missionary work in China, and remarked that after twenty years of missionary work he fully agreed with the expressions of the chairman as to rivalry before reaching a field of work, but not afterwards. The danger of political movements in the Far East was the rivalry between the Great Powers to possess territory, and the same might be said to have applied in the area in which their mission enterprise lay.

Rev. J. C. Gibson, of Swatow, and Mrs. Wakefield also spoke, the latter taking Africa as her field. She alluded to the slave trade, and remarked that it was heart-breaking when the missionaries found that their efforts were not backed up by the home Government. The missionaries stood between the Arab and the slave, appealing to the one and reasoning with the other.

Thursday.

The sermon which preceded the business of the day was preached by Rev. Arnold Thomas, of Bristol. The first item on the subsequent agenda had reference to the on which Dr. McEwan proposed the following resolution:—"That this Council, which has associated with it about 600 local councils, and represents about eleven millions of Evangelical Nonconformists of England, expresses its great satisfaction that at the invitation of the Czar of Russia a conference of European Powers is about to be held to consider the question of armaments, with a view to stopping their growth; and recommends the various councils throughout the country by petition and resolution to urge Lord Salisbury to throw the influence of this country on the side of whatever will make for international peace."

PEACE PROPOSALS,

Then came a paper read by Dr. Davison (Wesleyan College, Handsworth), dealing with the vexed question of

MODERN APOLOGETICS

in their relation to Biblical criticism. Premising that the ordeals through which the Bible and the Church had passed in bygone days had not all tended to their detriment, but often to their benefit, he maintained that there need not be the slightest fear of the free play of reason from all sides. The Christian apologist is not set to fight all and sundry and treat as foes all who ask searching questions, nor to wave a flag bearing the motto, "My country, right or wrong." Neither, on the other hand, was he to be like a frightened officer on board what seemed a heavily-laden vessel, giving orders to throw overboard all the articles of faith that might be objected to, as so many "concessions" to the threatening and dangerous waves. It is his business to inquire into whatever was put forward as new light on old problems, any new truth which might come in addition to the old, or to supplement the deficiencies of the old, or even to take the place of the old. Only, when inquiring as to "truth" let him be very sure that it was truth; he must be keen to distinguish between demonstrated conclusions and crude hypotheses. He must know when to meet with a smile, the extravagances of the "cocksure" critic. In fact, there is required so much knowledge, and what is rarer, so much judgment, as to make any wise man hesitate to take up the rôle. Perfect freedom for Biblical criticism to do its work; careful examination of the principles on which it proceeded; a cordial welcome to all sober and reverent inquiry; a resolute opposition to the anti-supernaturalism which with many critics formed a tacit premise; a readiness to relinquish even time-honoured traditions on due cause shown; but a careful scrutiny of critical theories which in our age were so rife, some of them disappearing almost as rapidly as they arose, and even those which were "mature" being hardly a generation old—these seemed to him to be the principles which should obtain in modern apologetics in relation to the Bible. But the Church has

A HIGHER DUTY THAN THIS.

The true apologist is a vindicator of the faith. He must not always, nor chiefly, be found in a defensive attitude replying to objections and jealously watching criticism. The stronghold is best defended not by miscellaneous excursions against small bodies of besiegers, but by concentrating energy and rallying round the flag. We should lay the chief stress upon the Bible as a spiritual guide, and make Christ the centre of the whole. What is wanted, so far as the Bible is concerned, is deeply spiritual and earnestly evangelical teachers who absorb all that is of value in current methods, showing how admirably it ministers to those high ends for which revelation was given, and for which "men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Ghost."

A paper prepared by Dr. Bruce (Glasgow) on "Modern Apologetics in the Sphere of Natural Theology" was read by Dr. Brook (Bristol). Sundry aspects of atheism, agnosticism and theism were treated in a careful and wisely discriminating manner.

A practical side of Christian life was taken up by Mr. Percy Bunting in the question, "What can the Free Churches do

FOR SOCIAL PURITY?"

"No compromise with sin; no slur upon virtue," was the keynote of his contention, which he amplified in his treatment of such phases of the subject as early marriages, physical morality, rescue work, public laws and their enforcement, the Continental "white-slave" traffic. He strongly urged "the doctrine of the equal standard," as regards the respective guilt of men and women, that sin in men should be marked socially, and that confession and restitution should be conditions of reinstatement. He pleaded for a more extended adaptation among the churches of the "girls' guild" principle, pointing out that there is probably no church in which good women could not be found whose motherly hearts qualified them for this simple work, and who were already accustomed to sympathetic friendship with their younger sisters. The guild would itself be a registry. Its members should not be confined, of course, to members of the congregation, for it should befriend young women everywhere.

Not less important and interesting was the comprehensive survey of Mr. A. T. Davies on "The Relation of Municipal Action and Morals." He instanced cases in which the churches had forced the hand of local authorities to remove incitements to vice and drink. The pity is that so few know what power the public has in these respects. It is not so much new laws, as the firm enforcement of existing ones, that is needed. "By many it is considered more to lower a rate than to raise a community!" (Another neat phrase used by a subsequent speaker was "Some councillors fear the next election more than the Last Judgment.") The morals of a town depend largely on its Watch Committee. If citizens were careless about the composition of their Watch Committee, the police would be apathetic or impotent. The men engaged in the liquor trade had been quick to see this, and a seat on a Watch Committee had a distinct monetary value to them. In Wigan the head-constable admitted that his hands were tied by the brewers on the Watch Committee. Birmingham was regarded as the most outstanding example of successful municipal government. On the Birmingham Town Council there was not and had not been for a dozen years a single brewer, liquor seller, or person directly concerned with the drink trade. Well directed municipal action was but the applied science of religion. The State had constructed the machinery, but it remains for the people to make it work.

The following resolutions were also enthusiastically passed:—

(a) The Council re-affirms emphatically its former protest against any revival in India or elsewhere of any system similar in object or tendency to the Contagious Diseases Act, and strongly urges the local councils and churches to make efficient preparation for strenuous action whenever the moment may come for bringing united pressure to bear upon the Legislature in reference to the regulation, and therefore sanction and encouragement of a degrading vice.

(b) The National Council hails with especial pleasure the arrangements made by the general committee for the Free Church celebration of the 300th anniversary of the birth of Oliver Cromwell, on or about Tuesday, April 25, and earnestly urges all the councils throughout the kingdom to avail themselves of this unique opportunity to express the debt of the Free Churches to the great Protector for his clear recognition of our fundamental principles, for his splendid embodiment of them in his life and character, and also for his courageous and conscientious application of them to the life of the nation in his work as a statesman and ruler.

The afternoon was occupied with the consideration of private, family, and public worship, the respective phases being dealt with by Revs. Geo. Hanson, Dr. Maclaren, and Dr. John Hunter.

A vast mass meeting at night filled Hengler's Circus to hear soul-stirring addresses from Alderman Snape (who presided), Dr. Lunn, Albert Spicer, Esq., Rev. Silas Hocking, which unfortunately we cannot afford space to report. But they made a fitting and brilliant conclusion to what is generally accepted to be by far the best congress the Council has yet held, whose influence there seems no room to doubt will during the next few months be felt through the length and breadth of the land.

Betting in Racecourse Enclosures.—The National Anti-Gambling League have been advised by Mr. A. R. Jelf, Q.C., and other counsel that the decision just announced cannot claim authority in any future case unless the same facts could be proved as those admitted without proof in the Kempton Park case. The league is expected to take immediate action, in all probability by another prosecution, when the admitted facts and the authority of the Kempton case will be challenged, and the decision of the special Divisional Court in Hawke v. Dunn will be relied on.

Royal National Lifeboat Institution.—The annual general meeting of the governors and friends of this institution was held on the 18th inst., at St. Martin's Town Hall. The Earl of Derby, who presided, said the great work of the institution had been carried out during the past year with continued activity and success. After dealing with the details of progress set forth in the report, his lordship appealed for continued assistance and help. It was not enough to do good work; but the institution felt that they must try to do it, if possible, better. But an increased permanent income was necessary. The Hon. W. F. D. Smith, Sir Lewis McIver, and others spoke. The secretary is Mr. C. Dibdin, 14, John Street, Adelphi.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 2.

"The raising of Lazarus."—John xi. 32-45.

Golden Text.—"And needed not that any should testify of man; for He knew what was in man."—John xi. 25.

Lesson Connection.

SOME time has elapsed since the incident in our last lesson. Our Lord has finished his Galilean ministry, which lasted about a year and nine months. He is now in the last three months of his work. The story of the interval between vv. 21 and 22 of chap. x. is found in Luke's Gospel, chap. ix. 51 to xiii. 35. Our Lord had retired to Peræa, on account of the animosity of the Jews; thence He returned to Jerusalem for the Feast of Dedication (John x. 22), and then went back beyond Jordan (chap. x. 40). People flocked to Him there.

Lesson Surroundings.

Point out on the map the positions of Bethabara and Bethany. Refer to John i. 28. Describe the two towns and their relative positions. Bethany is now called El-Azariah or Lazariah, after Lazarus. The family whom Jesus loved lived there. The Saviour had no home of his own, but he often stayed with friends (see Luke x. 38-42). Picture the happy home, the sickness of the brother, the first thought to send for Jesus, the disappointment, Christ's reason for the delay. Bring the whole story in all its details up to where our lesson takes it up. Ask for other cases of the dead being raised to life, both in Old and New Testament. Only three recorded as done by Christ (Luke vii. 11-15, Mark v. 35-42).

Explanatory.

John xi. 32. Martha and Mary both greet Jesus with the same words, evidently just what they had so often said to one another during those sad four days. Every time Mary is mentioned, she is at the feet of Jesus; here, and in Luke x. 39, and John xii. 3. Enlarge upon the beautiful traits in her character, humility, teachableness, &c.

Verse 33. The word translated "groaned," implies a feeling of anger or indignation mixed with grief. Christ saw all this trouble arising from sin, for "the wages of sin is death." He would think of all the woe in the world caused by the great enemy. "Surely He bore our griefs and carried our sorrows."

Verse 35. "Shed silent tears" of sympathy. A different word from that in verses 31, 33, which means wailing for the dead, according to Eastern custom. Christ's perfect humanity is here demonstrated.

Verse 36. The word for love here used means a passionate, strong love, not the same as in v. 5, which is ordinary friendship.

Verse 37. Describe Eastern tombs, like rooms in rocks, with shelves round; a stone for a door, some rolled in a groove and were rolled back for entrance; others lay against the opening, very heavy to move. All the hillsides in Palestine are covered with such caves for tombs.

Verse 39. No coffins were used, but the body wound up in linen cloths with sweet spices. In hot climates decomposition is rapid.

Verses 41, 42. The Lord's confidence in prayer—in his Father. He gives thanks as if for an accomplished fact. Do we know this?

Verses 43, 44. Christ's words and their echo. It is just as easy for the Giver of all life to put life into a body the second time as the first.

Verse 45. In this way God was glorified. There can be no doubt about the veracity of this miracle, when so many enemies of Christ witnessed it and testified about it.

Practical Lessons.

1. The place of blessing is at the feet of Jesus.
2. We often say "If only this or that had happened"; let us remember "it is for the glory of God," and trust Him.
3. It is not wrong to weep for departed friends.
4. The question in verse 37? How much do we believe Jesus can do?
5. "Only believe." Be it unto thee according to thy faith."
6. If we would have Jesus to help in the time of trouble, we must make Him our friend beforehand.
7. Jesus knows just the best time to come; never doubt Him if He delays.

Easter Lessons from The Golden Text.

Christ's raising the dead and Himself rising from the tomb proves his power to raise all the dead at the last day, (1. Cor. xv.). Christ's resurrection is the sure foundation of all our hope and joy.

Home Missions.

Young Women in London.

THAT the work of the Y.W.C.A. has as many enthusiastic supporters as ever was evinced by the large gathering at the annual meeting in Exeter Hall on March 15. A shadow was thrown over the proceedings by the announcement of the death on the previous day of Mr. W. T. Paton, who for many years has been an ardent friend and supporter of Y.W.C.A. work. Many references were made to him during the evening. As various speakers remarked, his was indeed a life which lived out the Gospel of love. They felt it hard to realise that we should never again have his genial, bright presence amongst us. We have lost one who was a mighty power for good, because he walked so near his Master, Jesus Christ. Long will his loving sympathy and help be missed, and nowhere more so than in the Y.W.C.A. We hope soon to give his portrait with sketch of his life.

Lord Kinnaird took the chair, and, in presenting the Report, said that year by year the work of the Association grows in numbers and in power. There are now in London forty-nine institutes and homes, and seventy-seven other branches: a total of 126 centres, with over 14,000 members and associates. The twenty-seven London homes accommodate nearly 400 boarders, of whom 100 are provided for at "Welbeck" and "Ames House," near to Oxford Circus. The event of chief importance during the past year was the opening of the New Morley Hall and Gymnasium at the rear of the headquarter's premises in George-st.

The total cost of this building was £4,700, and the whole was met by Mr. Howard Morley in memory of his father, Mr. Samuel Morley. Several of the institutes are provided with a gymnasium, and there are educational classes held, also for dressmaking, basket-making, swimming, &c. The Chairman made an appreciative reference to Prof. White's School of Bible Study, the arrangements for which had been made by the Y.W.C.A. conjointly with the Y.M.C.A. and the Student Volunteer Movement.

Brief reports from several departments were also presented. The total abstinence work was referred to by Mr. J. Keeble. Out of the total membership, 4,858 are pledged abstainers, but there ought to be double that number. Every member should strive to realise her responsibility on this question. How are we helping to bear one another's burdens unless we do something to stem the iniquity and the sin which come from strong drink? A new effort was described by Mr. H. J. Wilson. It is estimated that there are 7,000 persons in the United Kingdom who have become blind through inflammation of the eyes in infancy. We need to instruct the poor and so prevent this. He urged members to visit blind girls, and get them to attend the meetings. Let them also remember Henry Fawcett's words to those who could see: "Do not patronise us, treat us without any reference to our affliction, and above all things help to make us independent."

ON BEHALF OF THE BLIND

Foreign Y.W.C.A. work had a very capable and eloquent advocate in Miss Reynolds. There are now branches of the Association in many parts of the world. She gave interesting details of the work in Madagascar, in China and in Hungary. The branches all have the same interests, the same methods, and the same spirit as those at home, and all the members are followers of the same Christ.

The holiday home and finance report was briefly submitted by Mr. W. Joynson-Hicks. The convalescent, sick aid and holiday fund has assisted 341 girls and women, and many have greatly benefited from a short rest at "Peace Cottage."

The two chief speakers for the evening were Rev. F. S. Webster and Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor. The latter at short notice took the place of Professor White, who is now on his way to America.

Mr. Webster said that he had had the opportunity for many years of closely watching the work of the Y.W.C.A. in connection with his church in Birmingham. It was a very successful branch, and its success was due: (1) to the hearty union and co-operation between the Church and the Society; (2) to the downright spirituality of the work. The Association kept before it the fact that its main work is not to teach or to entertain young women, but to win souls for Christ. People argued that it was out of place thus to bring religion in; but we could not admit for one moment that Jesus Christ spoils a feast, or is in any sense a kill-joy. Instead of our lives being cramped and fettered and spoiled by being Christians, and blessed more than tongue can tell. Addressing himself specially to the young women present, the speaker said that before they could be "whole-hearted, true-hearted and loyal," they had to be broken-hearted for sin. In these days we take our sins too lightly. The greater our sense of sin, the greater will be our love to Him who freely forgives.

THEY BECOME ENRICHED

Rev. G. H. Macgregor took as his subject, "The Mastery of Life." In the case of most of those whom he addressed, life was before them with its infinite possibilities. What were they going to do with it? The question is often asked, "Do circumstances make men, or do men make circumstances?" Christians can give but one answer. The New Testament tells us that one of the most wonderful things that Christ does for those who trust Him is to make them free from self and the power of circumstance. Paul makes the bold assertion, "All things are yours;" therefore life is ours.

Five circumstances were noted by the speaker which go largely and to colour life, over all of which we have absolutely no control—race, residence, social position, family history, and early environment. But we are not to leave Christ out of the reckoning. We mock a man if we call him free, unless we bring some outside power to aid him. We cannot save ourselves any more than we can lift ourselves up from the ground. The only hope for young men and young women becoming masters of life is in Jesus Christ: He alone can make us free. This He does by regenerating us. By our new birth in Christ we are given a new race, a new country, a new family history, a new environment. We have new aspirations, new desires, new affections. Wherever we live we are citizens of Heaven. We are no longer children of peer or peasant, but sons of the living God. Some of us are tempted to think that it is impossible to lead a pure, strong, true Christian life with our peculiar surroundings.

TO MAKE UP CHARACTER

BUT GOD IS NEARER

to us than the things which trouble us so much. Hedged about by the power of God, we shall not be driven by life's forces; but we shall stand strong, and be helpers of others, and more than conquerors, through Him who loved us.

In referring to the finances of the Association, Lord Kinnaird had the gratifying statement to make that the expenditure for the past year was more than balanced by the income, to the extent of about £90; but unhappily there was a considerable deficit in the finances of preceding years, leaving a debt of about £2,500. Through the strenuous efforts of Miss Habershon (co-finance secretary with the late Mr. Paton) a number of friends have generously contributed towards this amount; but a balance of about £1,400 remained.

At a subsequent stage a strenuous appeal for financial help was made by Mr. Joynson-Hicks. He pathetically mourned the loss of Mr. W. T. Paton, who on former occasions had been so helpful in pleading the cause of the Association in this department.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle.

THE meeting held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday, 14th inst., in the interest of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Rebuilding Fund, was marked by conspicuous enthusiasm. Many leading members of the Free Churches testified, by their presence and support, to the general sympathy felt for Rev. Thos. Spurgeon and the Tabernacle friends in the task which they have undertaken.

Sir George Williams, who presided, said that he could well remember the beginning of Mr. Spurgeon's work, before the Tabernacle was built, and once heard him in the immense hall in the Surrey Gardens. He had always thought of him as bestowed upon the people. They now had an opportunity of helping on the work Mr. Spurgeon began. When the fire occurred they doubtless resolved that when the suitable time came they would do something to manifest their sympathy and help in the restoration of the building. He hoped they would now do their very best to help forward so true and great a power in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Metropolitan Tabernacle work had proved itself to be.

A WONDERFUL GIFT OF GOD

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon expressed his warm thanks for the kindly spirit of sympathy and practical help, and made a statement as to the present need. They had raised by God's blessing and his people's generosity the sum of £14,500, and needed about £8,000 more.

Dr. Newman Hall followed with some fervent references to the many admirable characteristics of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, remarking how freely he had been wont to give to his brother ministers for the various works in which they were interested. No one could measure the wonderful results of the work which had been done in the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Let them feel that the work of rebuilding was the business of all. The truths so dear to them would be faithfully preached there. They believed not in the priest, but in the pastor; not in the altar, but in the communion table; not in the false pardon given in the confessional, but the true pardon of the Cross of Christ.

Rev. John Bond said he regarded the Metropolitan Tabernacle as the memorial of a mighty ministry. C. H. Spurgeon was a preacher of the Gospel not ordained of men, or by men, but of the Holy Ghost, by God himself. In his earlier years he was maligned and lampooned, but he triumphed over it all. In that Tabernacle the son was proclaiming the same everlasting Gospel as that in which his father delighted.

Rev. Archibald Brown took as a sort of text the initial letters of the words Metropolitan Tabernacle, and said that they might stand for the two words "memory," "treasury,": what an inspiring memory what a

TREASURY OF BLESSING

they had had in C. H. Spurgeon! Then, the letters "M. T." might stand for "magnificent testimonial," which the Tabernacle was when it was built; a magnificent testimonial and also a mount of testimony. He rejoiced that the building was to be erected on the same ground, that so much of the old walls were standing, and, above all, that Mr. Tom (another "M.T.") was the preacher. "Mr. Spurgeon is not dead to me," added the speaker, "he is living to my thoughts, living to my heart. He lives in his sermons, he lives in his influence, and he lives in his sons."

After some remarks by Mr. T. A. Denny, the collection was taken, and the remainder of the evening was taken up with an exhibition of views relating to the Tabernacle, and explanations by Rev. T. Spurgeon.

The Glasgow Y.W.C.A. held its annual social evening for Highland young women on March 17 in the hall, 80, Bath Street. All the proceedings were conducted in Gaelic, addresses being given, solos sung, and limelight views described. Mrs. W. M. Oatts presided, and various friends took part. This has proved a helpful meeting to Highland girls, and is looked forward to with much interest.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

"Fill the Waterpots with Water."

WHAT a simple thing to do, and what a mighty result followed! These words were the request of Jesus to the servants of the household at the time of the marriage feast in Cana of Galilee. Many guests had come to the wedding, the wine had run short, Mary had confided in Jesus the need of the host, and said to the servant, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." Then it was that Jesus bade the servants "fill the waterpots with water."

These large stone jars stood at the entrance of the house, in the shade of the porch at the open court-yard, chiefly for the use of the inmates, and for the strangers coming in order to wash their feet after removing their sandals. For people usually left their sandals at the door and entered the house with bare feet. Here the custom is to remove our hats but keep on our shoes on going into a house or place of worship; in the East people retain their turbans, but take off their sandals or shoes. The water from these jars was used also for ceremonial ablutions; that is, washing hands before partaking of food.

Among the servants or slaves of the household it was usually someone's appointed work to fill these large stone jars with fresh cool water from the well. And we may suppose that they were regularly replenished morning, noon, and evening, or whenever it was necessary.

Directly the word was spoken, the order was complied with, by whom we are not told, but it would seem that the command of Jesus was readily and cheerfully obeyed, and that the servants quickly filled the waterpots to the brim.

It was a very little thing Jesus asked of them; but they did it without hesitation or grumbling, and the result was the first of those mighty works which Jesus did in Galilee.

They did not know the reason or purpose of the service Jesus asked of them; they were in ignorance of the end and issue of the work they did. They were like those who work in the darkness—they could not see the worth or meaning of their duty. To them it was just an ordinary common piece of toil Jesus demanded, that had no glory and honour about it; but they did it because He told them, and the reward came. How often in our homes does Jesus say to boys and girls to-day, "Fill the water-pots with water." It does not seem a great thing for Him to ask. We want to know why we should do this. It is common work that anyone could do. It does not take the wise or learned to do this for Christ. It is often only some little trifle that the Master asks, but his request is the open door of opportunity that leads to greater things we know not how.

Mark the result. The servants put the first stroke, then Jesus added the naughts; and behold the end—their efforts are multiplied ten thousand fold. The water is transformed into the juice of the grape. The ruler of the feast says to the bridegroom, "Thou hast kept the good wine until now." The simple work is beatified, the water transformed into wine, the best kept till last because that is God's way; it is always better on before—"The best is always yet to be." This was the beginning of the mighty signs which Jesus did. In this work "He manifested his glory." Where there is loving obedience and willingness to do whatsoever He saith, when all are ready to do anything for Him, then He will manifest Himself and his glory shall be seen. By this means disciples shall the more believe on Jesus.

So may we, young and old, help or hinder his wonderful works, as we are willing or unwilling to "fill the water-pots with water" and do the menial service in his name and for his dear sake.

J. Johnson.

Sale.

(374)

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 168).

(Matt. v., vi., and vii.)

1. Give (a) The eight classes of people whom Jesus says are blessed. (b) What promise is made to each?
2. Write out the verses about giving alms.
3. What does Jesus say (a) About laying up treasures for ourselves? (b) About treating our enemies?
4. Write out the verses about judging each other.
5. To what two things does Jesus liken his disciples?
6. What does He say about (a) Serving two masters? (b) The strait and broad ways?

(Children under ten do Nos. 1 and 3, those under thirteen do any four.)

ANSWERS TO BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 167).

1. Ruth i. 8. Naomi to Orpah and Ruth.
2. ,, i. 16. Ruth to Naomi.
3. ,, i. 20. Naomi to the people.
4. ,, ii. 2. Ruth to Naomi.
5. ,, ii. 8. Boaz to Ruth.
6. ,, ii. 15. Boaz to his young men.
7. Wife of Elimelech. Mahlon and Chilion i. 2.
8. Daughter-in-law of Naomi. Mahlon iv. 10.
9. Kinsman of Naomi's husband. Ruth iv. 13.

No. 167.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Wm. A. and Dora Aldwinckle, Zeldah Albert*, Arnold Akers*, Mary and Henry Allsop, George Arthur, Gladys Axtens, Violet Ashworth*.

B—Molly and Peggy Blower, Rose Butler*, Emily Bridgewater*, May and Gordon* Bligh, Herbert Braddon*, Ella Berryman.

C—Anna Chauvet, Lois Craven*, Mabel Clay, Augusta Clark, Daisy and Jack Clarke, Arthur* and Winnie* Cox, Eleanor Chance, Henry Cheney, Cicely and Millicent Craven, Ida* and Mabel* Cole, Kathleen Code*, Mabel* and Isabel* Candlin, Ethel Colgrave, Dorothy Cooper.

D—Polognia Daws*, William and Philip Doll, Ralph Daintree, Zephyr, Downes*, Violet Dodsworth, Margaret Duke, Stanley Drew, Willie Davies, Violet, Kitty and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Constance, Hilda and Elizabeth Drayson, Dorothy Duke, Phyllis Duncan, Dorothy Daintree.

E—Miriam and —Ecroyd.

F—May FitzGerald, Wm. and Temperance Foskett, Hyacinth Fitz-Simons.

G—E. Mabel Golding*, Kathleen* and Irene Gough, Clarice and Bertie Gale, Daisy, Ethel*, Mary*, and Alfred Greenacre, Nellie Glegg, W. Gordon Greenwood, David Gardiner, Douglas Gray.

H—Mary* and Eric Hill, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewar, Ruth Hinder, Frances Harding, Nellie Hatchett, Jennie Holmes.

J—Betty Jacobs*, Agnes Jones.

K—Maurice Kalinsky, Max, Stanley, and Eva* Kalb.

L—Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Blanche Lindup*, Sidney, Edward and May Law, Beatrice, Ethel and Edith Lay, Arthur Lamb, Nellie and Edith Lockhart.

M—Nellie May, Arthur Morice, May Mills*, Margie Marston, Arabella Mainwaring-Onslow, Edith Marnham, Ethel and Mildred Morgan, Daisy and Winifred Martin, Reginald Measor, W. C. Mallinson, Florence Mitchell.

N—May Newall, J. W. and H. Neligan, Valerie and Eleanor Noel, Maude and Amy Nottage.

O—George O'Beirne.

P—Katie* and Leonard Picknell, Myrtle Perry, Leo Pibel, Ruth Pledger*, Hattie Peters, Lillie Petter*, Kathleen* and E. M.* Pasley, Daisy Pym, Kathleen Pincott, Gladys and Ethel Palmer, Willie Petter.

R—Kate Rosenbloom*, C. Alice Reid, Sydney and Olive Robertson, Nora Read.

S—Esther Simmons, Solomon Stockfish, Alan and Mary Symon, Douglas Stevens, Philip Southam, Herbert Stuart, Maudie, Janet, Sydney and Arthur Speed, Douglas and Kathleen Shepherd, Marjory Smart, Gladys Stockman, Betty Stocks, Ida Shakel, Flora Simmons*, Joseph Stephens, Marjorie and Cicely* Sherbrooke, Kathleen Scorer.

T—Florence and Eileen* Tomlinson, Peveril, H. W.*, Edwin and Percent Turnbull.

V—Phyllis Vigers.

W—Madge Wilson, Edith* and Florence Wallis, Edward Wheeler, Emily Warton*, Ella Williamson*, Cecile, Noel and Phillis Wright, Edith Whiting, Amy and Charles Wingrave, Arthur and George Wright, Greta Watson*, Edith Wheeler.

No. 166.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Dora, Ralph and Wm. Alkwinckle, Arnold Akers, Enderby Anderson.

B—Florence Blackman, James* and Edith Barker, Henriette Bardot*, Ernestine Buhl*, Lucienne Brabandes*, Janet and Elizabeth Black, Teresa, Frank and Avory Blackie, Ethel Barclay, Charlie* and Maggie* Banks, Gordon and S. V. Boxer, J. Corbet*, Leonard and Lindsay Browne, Albert Baker, Ernest Bond, Charles Brown*, Evelyn* and Dorothy Barrett, Daisy Bowman, Ashley Bowker*, Ethel* and John* Benger, D. Billings, Eva Browne, Massy* and Allen Baker, Hannah Bridgman, Mary Beck, Dorothy Berry, George Brown, Godfrey and Gladys Bates, R. Bulteel, Ruth Braithwaite.

C—G. Brereton and Kathleen Code, Augusta Clark, Dora* and Edith* Corrie, Mary* and Willie* Charles, Willie Christie, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, Richard Cornthwaite*, Edith Corrick, B. M. Cashford*, Janie Crawford, Dorothy Clarke, Isabel* and Mabel Candlin, Maggie*, Jessie*, and Walter* Carter, Daisy Clarke, Dorothy Charles, Joan Clarke* Millicent and Cicely Craven, Dorothy Cooper.

D—Marie Denizot*, Vera Dickinson, Mai and Ethel Davidson, Harold Davis*, Polognia Daws*, Wm. Dilly*, Cecil Darley, Dorothy* and Marjory* Dyke, Albert Davis, Constance Devenish-Meares, Blossom Davis*.

E—Helen Eardley-Wilmot, Muriel Edwards*.

F—Hyacinth Fitz-Simons, Louise Filhol, Joanne Faucon*, Eva, Maggie, Bessie, Kate and Mabel Fletcher, Lawrence and Richard Farmer, Agnes*, Maggie*, Netta* and Lewis Fullarton, James Freegard, Marian*, Ernest and W. Arthur Findlay, F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Mary and Bessie Freeman.

G—Margaret, Stuart, Dorothy, Jack, Edith, Helen and Walter Gray, Harry Gribble, Mary*, Alfred, Ethel and Daisy Greenacre, Dorothy* and Nancy* Grove, J. Garrod*, M. Greenleaf*, Alfred and Frank Gibbs, Agnes Grierson*, Mary Gimson, Hilda Goldthorpe, Daisy George, Minnie* and Evelyn* Giddings, David Gardiner*, Thos. Groombridge.

H—Edith and Winnie Harrison, Theodora Hill, Dorothy and Elsie Hanson, Georgette Hoffman*, Helen and Harcourt Hunter, May Handasyde, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Ella Hake, Edith Holms, Bessie Hope*, Violet Holford, Margaret Hogg*, Freda Hunton, Mary Hall, Willie Hooper*, Dorothy Harris, Rose Hamilton*, Cyril Hills, Ethel Hutchings*, Ruth Harrison.

I—Ami Inglis.

J—Lizzie Johnstone, Sinclair Jackson*, Mary Johnston, Kate Johns*, Emily Jeynes.

K—Helen Knight, Jeanie Kyle*, Agnes Kay, Lily Kinvig, Ethe Kelsey, Dorothy*, Grace*, and Philippa* Kerr, Hélène Kœune.

L—Edith, Harry, and Eleanor Lowe, Alan Light, Nellie Lockhart, Arthur Lamb, Hannah Lovell*, Guinefred* and Elsie Leigh.

M—Eva Monti, Reginald Measor, Armie* and Elsie* Moule, Mabelle, Elsie and Winnie Mounstephen, J. H. Mather, Christina Marshall, Margaret and Dorothy Morris, Bessie and Charlotte Millar, Ian and Eliza MacGregor, Dora Muir,* Edith Marnham, Dora Marples, Ada Macnutt,* Edith Monet, John and Ella MacMurray, Lois*, and Olive Mewburn, B. and Harry Malaher, W. C. Mallinson*, Louis Maclachlan, A. G. Macnair, Nellie*, Daisy* and Annie* Mackenzie, A. R. Marlow*, Abraham Mack, Ethel* and Mildred Morgan, Hilda Medill*, Maggie Munro, Evelyn and Gwendoline Moir.

N—Cissy, John and Peter Nicholson, Amy and Maude Nottage, George Nash, Mary, Dorothy* and H. Nathan.

O—Florence* and Mattie Osmond, Maude Oakes, K* and Sidney Oliver, Muriel Oldfield.

P—Gladys* and Isabel Phipps, Winnie Page*, Lillie* and Willie Petter, Muriel Patten, Evelyn Pechey*, Geoffrey, Percy and Clarice Peach, Daisy, May and Vera Petrides, J. E. Pearce, Edith Purkiss.

R—C. Alice Reid, A. M. Roberts*, Dorothy and Evelyn Rashley, Marjory and Herbert Rainey, Elmina, Isabel and Jessie Roe, Willie Rogers, Willie Rigby*.

S—Bertha Stocker, Florrie Smith, Annette and Cecil Stirling, Marjorie Sherbrooke, Violet Salvesen, Vera Stapylton, Madeline Smith, Janet, Arthur and Sydney Speed, Lilian Sargeant, May Short*, W. Stangoe*, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Ronald Studd, Bessie Scantlebury, Violet* and Evelyn* Shaw, Nannie St arrock, Gwendoline*, Gladys, Eric and Undine Shaw, Marjery Smart, Nellie Sery*, Dollie Salt*, Joseph Stevens.

T—Frank Thompson, Olive Tritton*, E. Thorne, Janet and John Thomson, Herbert and Frank Tomkins, Alice Truelove*, W. S. Toller, Louie* and Nannie* Tibbits, Harry Thompson*, Marjory Tracey.

U—Lilian* and Queenie* Upton.

V—Gertrude Vellacott*, Kenneth Vining.

W—Edward and Edith Wheeler, Charles and Amy Wingrave, Ethel* and W. H. Williamson, Greta Watson*, Myra Webb, Edith Whiting*, Arthur and Violet Walker, Principle Wilson*, Thomas Waddell*, Leonard Wall, Charles and Winnie Williams, Louisa Walker*, Edith and Ruby Wilkins.

Y—Annie Yeo*.

FOREIGN LIST.

Correct answers received from:—

No. 157—A. Theodora Guinness (Tasmania). No. 159—Cuckoo and Maria Lister, Ruth Sprigg (South Africa). No. 160—W. B. Henderson, Daisy McArthur*, J. Garrett* (South Africa). No. 161—Dora May (Jamaica). No. 162—Rotha, Lottie, and Ivan St. George, W. B. Henderson, Eliza and Jean Scott (Canada). No. 165—Nettie* Kate*, Ina* and Willie*, Thomson (Bulgaria).

Personal.

Miss Perks, of the Soldiers' Home, acknowledges with much pleasure the receipt of the pincushions sent by "two little nieces;" also the Secretary of the Homes of Hope sends "grateful thanks for the booklets;" also Mrs. Wilkes, of the Poplar Homes.

Mary Gimson, Helene Kœune, Lawrie Farmer.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers." (Mary) Many thanks for your interesting letter.

Eva and Lillie Petter.—A Concordance is not allowed in searching.

Janet Speed.—Arthur may please himself about altering his division now, but he must enter the competition in the second division.

Annie Moule.—I am sorry you were unable to find the text. It was made up of the initial letters of the given texts.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Tolmers St. Mary, near Hertford, March 25-31; Holy Trinity School, Tunbridge Wells, April 5. Mr. Hewlett, Kettering, April 8-24. Rev. R. Callender, Holy Trinity Marylebone, April 5; Bedford, April 9; Tulse Hill, April 15-26. Mr. J. M. Wigner, Collingham, Notts, to March 25. Mr. E. Collier, Wandsworth Road Railway Mission, to March 23; Upper Norwood, March 24. Scripture Union Anniversary Meetings, at Exeter Hall, Strand, Thursday, March 23, at 3 and 6.30. Chairmen, Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., at 3; Mr. Chas. J. Procter (of Liverpool) at 6.30.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending April 1.

Sun., Mar.	26	Luke xxii. 24-38	Thurs., Mar.	30	Luke xxiii. 13-26
Mon., ,,	27	,, xxii. 39-53	Fri., ,,	31	,, xxiii. 27-43
Tues., ,,	28	,, xxii. 54-71	Sat., April	1	,, xxiii. 44-56
Wed., ,,	29	,, xxiii. 1-12

Missionary Loan Exhibition.

ON the closing days of this exhibition in Glasgow great crowds thronged the various courts and filled the great hall over and over again. Among the speakers were Lord Kinnaird, Lord Overtoun, and Dr. Glover, of Bristol. As the close drew near a growing interest was manifested in the occasions on which missionaries were put "in the witness-box." All comers were invited to question them at will on any points connected with their work. The opportunities were fully taken advantage of, and the hours thus spent declared to be among the most interesting of all. The questions put showed the practical nature of the interest taken in mission work.

The limelight lantern was probably never before used so extensively for missionary purposes in Scotland. Dr. Harry Guinness held his audiences interested by his clever lectures on work in Equatorial Africa, Peru, and Bolivia, illustrated by beautiful views. Excellent pictures shown from other quarters of the globe were also fully appreciated; but the most popular lecturer in this department was undoubtedly Mr. Frank Wilson, of the Mission to the Deep Sea Fishermen, whose animated pictures were a constant topic of conversation.

Another interesting feature of the proceedings was the parade of persons in the costumes of different countries, which took place on the platform each day at the opening of the afternoon and evening meetings.

All within the circle of helpers—and they were a large company—are filled with thanksgiving for the profitable and pleasant fellowship which abounded through every part of the work. Missionaries found personal friends and sympathisers increasing in number on every hand. Friends at home used well the opportunity to make their interest more definite and their support more encouraging.

T. C. M.

"Regions Beyond" Missionary Union.

THE steady growth of the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union has been observed with gladness by all who watch the progress of world-wide evangelisation. The organisation has not only come to the help of those missionary enterprises that have their home and centre in Harley College, Bow, but it has done something to excite more general interest in Gospel work in the foreign field, and to show larger societies how to combine small efforts so as to make them serviceable in aiding far-reaching undertakings for the cause of Christ.

The Union has been specially concerned in the evangelisation of Central Africa and South America—lands which will, it is hoped, soon cease to be associated with the epithets "dark" and "neglected." And a deeply interesting story of progress and persistent endeavour was told at meetings held on Monday last in Exeter Hall in token of the anniversary of the Union. The afternoon gathering, in the Lower Hall, was made up of a body of devoted helpers, a goodly number too; the evening gathering, in the Large Hall, was more popular in character, Dr. Harry Guinness describing his tour in Peru with lime-light views.

In the afternoon the chair was occupied by the Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh, a well-known friend of earnest Gospel work at home and abroad. In some opening words he referred to the loss sustained by the death of Mrs. Guinness, whose life was so useful, and whose works, written and otherwise, follow her. This led him also to express his great indebtedness to the writings of whose prophetical works have been a gift of God to the universal Church. More especially did Mr. Bligh delight to declare himself in sympathy with this view to-day when the ecclesiastical Rabshakehs are standing in the highways of the Zion of many of God's people, using language which makes it certain that they are seeking to bring England back to the darkness which prevailed in pre-Reformation times. Coming to the work of the Congo-Balolo Mission, it gave him joy to learn by the volumes of Regions Beyond that God has given blessing on the exertions put forth.

DR. GRATTAN GUINNESS,

Dr. Harry Guinness followed with a résumé of the work during the past year. Alluding to the labours of his lamented mother, especially in connection with the Congo-Balolo Mission, he divulged the fact that it was through the liberality of Mr. T. A. Denny and Mr. J. E. Mathieson that the Mission came into being. In all, twenty-two missionaries had fallen on the field, but there have never been wanting workers to succeed them. During recent years there has been a great improvement in and now life is becoming quite enjoyable. Moreover, in regions where Stanley fought battles with the natives, and just escaped being eaten, there are small Christian communities, and pioneer work is in progress in still remoter districts. Dr. Guinness told of remarkable openings on the Juapa river, with facilities to found stations on the Lomami. An urgent present need is a worthy mission boat. It is proposed to procure a steamship in memory of Mrs. Guinness, and to be named "Livingstone." The railway inland having been built, it will be comparatively easy to carry the material up country. The ship will cost £3,900, but it is essential to the proper carrying on of the work. The Horse-Shoe Bend of the Congo is as big as the entire German empire, and the thirty-six workers of the Mission are alone on the field.

THE HEALTH OF THE MISSIONARIES,

Brief addresses were delivered by outgoing missionaries—ladies first. Of Miss Logie, now going forth for the second time, the medical officer of the Mission had reported that she was in better health now than when she first went to Africa—the climate seemed to have done her good! Miss Amery goes with Miss Logie, and both of them asked for prayer that the Holy Spirit may be given, so that the work may be fruitful in the richest degree.

TWO COLOURED FRIENDS

from Jamaica are also going forth. Mr. Philip Clarke trusted that many other negroes would be helped back to Africa to preach the Gospel. Mr. Thomas Sawyer declared his devotion in terms of peculiar warmth. Before leaving Jamaica a young woman asked him why he could not remain in his native island and preach the Gospel. His reply was, "My child, if I were to marry a wife to-day, I would leave her to-morrow to go and preach the Gospel in Africa." Needless to say, the sentiment caused some merriment. It evidently showed that Mr. Sawyer's heart was in Africa. A subsequent speaker remarked that he would advise the missionary to marry the lady and take her the same day—for there is much work for women to do in Africa.

Mr. W. Sinclair, now returning to his sphere at Bongandanga, told of journeys of exploration, which showed that there are immense populations still unreached by the Gospel. Mr. Arthur Bowen, also returning, hopes to enlarge his acquaintance with the language, in order that may be translated into the Lomongo dialect. Already many of the people are reading diligently.

THE REMAINDER OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

Mr. T. A. Denny followed with a few hearty words. He rejoiced to hear that special exertions are being made to give the Scriptures to the people. The last speaker was Rev. Henry Richards, for twenty years missionary at Banza Manteka on the Lower Congo. He gave an account of a wonderful work of grace at his station—a real Pentecost on the Congo. For seven long years he laboured without seeing any definite fruit. From 1886 to 1889 about 400 were baptized, and many more gave up the superstitions and their idols. The two years which followed were a time of testing, and when the sleeping sickness broke out some of the converts went back, but a goodly number cleaved unto the Lord. The need for teaching then appeared; if converts are not to go back, they must be taught. After a season of trial the work was re-organised on stricter principles, and discipline was enforced. Ever since then there has been a stream of blessing, and altogether more than 1,500 have been baptized. There are now 1,200 standing and serving the Lord. The line is sharply drawn between Christians and heathen, and there are about thirty schools, all taught by Christians. There are in all fifty preachers and teachers—some of the former men of great power in the work—conducting self-supporting pioneer operations.

The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. James Inskip, of Bristol. Dr. Guinness's story of travel in South America disclosed the fact that Roman Catholic opposition to the gospel is very severe in that region. Rev. Henry Richards delivered a charge to the outgoing missionaries.

Bramblebury Hall, Wandsworth. — This hall has been opened for unsectarian Christian work. The initial services were largely attended. Helpful and vigorous addresses were given by Messrs. Alfred Ellis, Ernest Matthews, Ned Wright and others. The subsequent gatherings also gave great encouragement. The hall is situated near a large new district, and the plan of campaign includes aggressive Gospel effort, Bible study, children's meetings, &c.

Christian Instruction Society and Deaconess Mission.—At the annual tea to Deaconesses last week in Bishopsgate Chapel, Rev. Thos. Greer presiding, workers from Rotherhithe and Paddington gave cheering reports. Rev. Andrew Mearns spoke in high terms of his experience of the two deaconesses working in connection with the London Congregational Union, and expressed the earnest hope that the number of such workers may be vastly increased at no far distant time. At the present moment thirty-two deaconesses are labouring in various parts of "greater London," and the sole limitation to numbers is the one vexed question of funds. Many urgent applications have recently been received from churches sorely needing just the help a devoted deaconess can give, and for every £10 of additional income one such application can be favourably considered. Information will be gladly furnished by the secretary, Miss Neuman, 35, Memorial Hall.

Temperance Notes.

The March issue of The Abstainers' Advocate contains a portrait and excellent literary sketch of the useful career of Mr. John Hilton of the U. K. Alliance.

. . . . . .

Votes have recently been taken by plebiscite as to Sunday-closing in the constituencies of West Ham and Plymouth, resulting in both cases in large majorities in favour of this reform.

. . . . . .

According to the Wine and Spirit Gazette, the fund which is being raised by the Central Board of Metropolitan Defence Societies in order to secure seats for publicans in the House of Commons, amounts to £20,000.

. . . . . .

A largely-attended conference and public meeting was held in Manchester on Monday in furtherance of the closing of public-houses on Sunday. The speeches were strong and weighty, and different sections of the Church were represented.

. . . . . .

On the solicitation of the officers, the Secretary of the American Navy has prohibited the sale of beer on the warships of the United States fleet. The new order aims principally at the protection of apprentices from acquiring drinking habits.

. . . . . .

A handbook, explanatory of the provisions of recent Inebriate Acts as applied to duly certified habitual drunkards, is issued by the C.E.T. Society, 4, the Sanctuary, Westminster, price 1s. The compiler is Mr. R. F. Griffiths, barrister.

. . . . . .

Mrs. Tomkinson, of Willington Hall, Cheshire, addressing a meeting in Gourock, said, with regard to the new Inebriates' Act, that it might prove beneficial, but a lesson might be taken from Canada, where if the members of a family, with one outsider, certified to a person being continually intoxicated, licence-holders were forbidden to supply him with liquor.

. . . . . .

At a Temperance Conference last week in Dundee a speaker strongly denounced the holding of shares in whisky companies by ministers or church members. It is contrary to the law of kindness, he declared, to promote a traffic which causes so much misery. On the economic side it was stated that out of every pound expended in whisky only fourpence or sixpence goes to the workman.

. . . . . .

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has written to the secretary of the prohibition party that, in the judgment of the Canadian Government, the expression of public opinion recorded at the polls in favour of prohibition last September did not represent such a proportion of the electorate as to justify the introduction by the Government of a prohibitory measure. The temperance people are greatly dissatisfied with the Government's answer.

. . . . . .

Considerable correspondence lately appeared in a London daily paper, calling attention to the indignities, temptations, vulgar treatment, long hours, and unnecessary restrictions that are at once unjust and degrading, imposed upon London barmaids. No new Licensing Act will be complete, says the report of the London United Temperance Council, except it prohibit the employment of females in connection with the serving of intoxicating liquors.

. . . . . .

In connection with the Executive Committee of the National British Women's Temperance Association's meeting at Aberystwyth, special gatherings were also held in surrounding towns and addressed by members of the committee; special services were given in a large number of churches on the Sunday. At a mass meeting, held in the Pavilion, Mrs. Pearsall Smith presided, and Lady Henry Somerset and the Hon. Mrs. Russell gave addresses. There was also speaking and singing in Welsh. At the conclusion of the meeting Lady Henry Somerset took about 150 pledges.

Dublin Visiting Mission. — This useful organisation, in connection with the Society for Irish Church Missions, has many departments of labour, including house-to-house visitation, church services, gospel meetings, controversial classes, distribution of tracts, the training of teachers, and Sunday and day schools, supplemented by seven homes for destitute children. The work has been much blessed during the past year, many fairs and markets have been visited, and many Romanists have been reached. In Dublin a staff of sixteen visitors has been supported by the Ladies' Association, and much good work has been done. The hon. treasurer and secretary is Mrs. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam Street, Dublin.

Evangelistic.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Southport.

THIS evangelist has conducted a sixteen days' mission in the Temperance Institute, Southport. The meetings throughout have been characterised by deep earnestness and solemnity, and an unusually large number of testimonies to having accepted Christ have been the result. Large numbers of Christians also have testified to receiving blessing. There have been many striking answers to prayer. The afternoon Bible readings for Christians were especially helpful. On several occasions the Spirit of God seemed to fall on the audiences with wonderful power.

The closing meetings were held in the Hoghton Street Baptist Church, which was lent for the day, and it was especially delightful to see clergymen and ministers of different churches on the platform, taking part in the service.

The mission was arranged by the conveners of the monthly meetings for the deepening of spiritual life. Evangelistic services will now be held every week in the institute, and holiness meetings once a month. E. G.

Mr. Philip Hurditch is preaching on Sunday evenings this month at Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, with many tokens of Divine blessing.

A fifteen days' mission has been held in the Mission Room, Wisborough Green, by Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society. The faithful preaching of the Gospel has been greatly blessed.

Mr. Wycliffe Pascoe, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded an eighteen days' united mission in connection with the Camelford Free Church Council. It has been a heart-searching and life-stirring time, with many professed decisions for Christ.

Miss M. Haddon has held a week of Gospel services at Trinity Church, Bishop Auckland. The meetings were well attended, every church in the town being represented. Several professed decision for Christ, and much spiritual benefit has come through the services on the church itself.

A week of mission services was lately held in Oakham, under the auspices of the Rutland Free Church Council. Night after night the Agricultural Hall was crowded to hear the addresses of Mr. W. R. Lane. On the closing Sunday evening no building in the town was large enough to hold the audience. The Baptist church was crowded and the schoolroom behind the church, and Mr. Lane had to stand in a gallery between the two in order to be heard by both audiences at once. No such mission has ever been held in the district before.

In connection with the Southend Evangelistic Mission, a series of Gospel services has been conducted in the Union Hall by Pastor T. L. Johnson, the coloured evangelist. Signal blessing has from the first rested on the labours of God's honoured servant, and many souls have been gathered in to Christ's fold. A spirit of earnest prayer was poured out on the workers, who gathered in large numbers at the prayer meetings; while the Gospel services were attended by hundreds, many having to be turned away for want of room on the Sunday night.

The past fortnight's mission by Mr. L. Weaver, at Earlham Hall, Dalston, has been a fruitful and blessed time, both for the saved and unsaved. Night by night large numbers have come, while on Sundays seating room could not be found for the crowds that attended. But the greater satisfaction was found in the power of the Gospel. Many hands were raised after each service for prayer or in token of acceptance of Christ, while personal dealing revealed much encouragement to the workers. Effective service was rendered during the mission by the song of the blind evangelists, Mr. and Mrs. Baker.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. Monro Collings.—Till Mar. 26, Isleworth; during April, Haling Road Hall, Croydon.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Till Mar. 28, North Shields; 29, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 30, Gateshead; Apl. 5, lecture at the Metropolitan Tabernacle; 9, Queen's Park Congregational Church, Manchester; 15-24, Bristol.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Till Mar. 27, Farnham; Apl. 1-10, West Hartlepool; 15-24, Woodford.

Gipsy Smith.—Till Mar. 27, West Hartlepool; Apl. 1-10, Walsall; 15-24, Swindon; 29-May 8, Bristol.

Mr. Geo. Clarke.—Till Mar. 26, Southampton; Apl. 2-17, Finchley.

Mr. E. P. Telford.—Mar. 26-Apl. 3, Stoke Newington; 9-20, Gainsboro'; Apl. 23-May 4, Leeds.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Apl. 2-17, Sunderland; May 7-22 Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Mar., Barking.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till Mar. 31, Dundee.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—Till Mar. 30, Edinboro' Castle and Hastings; Apl. 2, Bromley; 9-20, Canning Town.

Mr John Burnham.—Till Mar. 29, C.M. Chapel, Blaengarw.

Mr. William Grove.—Apl. 8-24, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Mar. 26, Messrs. Loveridge and Owen; Thursdays, Mr. Rickman. Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, at 7, Mr. W. T. Munn; Thursdays at 8, Mr. A. C. Burley. Conference of Christian Workers at Kilburn Hall, High Road, Kilburn, Easter Monday, Apl. 3, at 4 and 6.30 p.m., addresses by Rev. N. Vanstone and others; tea at 5.30.

Mr. Jas. Sprunt.—Apl. 2, Reading; 3, Kilburn; Sundays, 9, 16, 23, and Wednesdays in April, Willesden Hall, N.W.; Thursdays, Union Hall, Carlisle Street, N.W.

Mr. Newton Jones.—Till Mar. 27, Wisbeach; Apl. 1-6, Stone (Staffs.); 8-17, Netherton (Free Church Council); 22-27, Greenhithe, 29-30, Ealing.

Mr. J. Elliot.—Mar. 26, Gospel Hall, Victoria Road, Dartmouth.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh.—Mar. 29, Mayes Hall, Wood Green.

Rev. F. C. Spurr (Missioner of the Baptist Union).—Apl. 29-May 4, Onslow Baptist Church, Fulham.

Evangelisation Society.—The following missions (with others) will be in progress on Sunday next:—Mile End (Great Assembly Hall), T. W. Canning; Ipswich, J. Whiting; Wineham, J. Brown; Carshalton, H. Bray; Landford, F. W. Pascoe; Coton, K. Lambert; Trenewan, S. Vivian; Woolwich, C. Noakes; Brill, J. Harris; Box Hill, C. B. Joliffe; Canning Town, J. Shields; Clayton West, C. F. Goode; Walworth, G. Pell; Great Wakering, R. Williams; Sherfield, J. H. Cooke; Cratfield, A. E. Knight; Newport (Salop), J. B. Rochfort; Chard, J. Lovell; Abertillery, A. Clark; Dorking, R. M. Holman; Southall, S. Bryant; Westerdale, H. Young; Glasgow, C. G. Roger; Falkirk, D. M. Bayne; Barrhead, R. Hill; Glasgow, C. Galletty; Spennymoor, H. Laughland; Glasgow, J. W. Gallotty; Glasgow, J. W. Moodie.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on an eight days' mission, to be held in the District Mission Hall, Kentish Town, conducted by W. Jameson Moys.

For blessing on the open-air work of Stratford Mizpah Band, which commences on Good Friday.

For blessing on a week's mission, to be conducted in Avenue Theatre, Sunderland, by Mr. A. Klein, commencing March 26.

For a series of services by Mr. William Forbes at Horsley-on-Tyne, to begin on the 25th.

Popular Services.

ONE of the most patent facts to the observant eye is the willingness of the people to attend any religious service that caters for them, and at which they are made welcome. Nowhere is this more apparent than in the theatres and halls used on Sundays by the committee for special religious services in such buildings, associated with the London City Mission. At the drawing-room meeting recently held at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Smith, Ashfield, Crouch End, the secretary, Rev. T. C. Udall, supported by friends and sympathisers, gave an interesting account of the work during the forty-four years it has been in operation.

Rev. F. T. Snow, vicar of St. Peter's, Islington, bore most encouraging testimony to the results in his own parish, where lived some of the roughest characters whom the Gospel had won. Mr. Ehrlich, one of the L.C.M.'s oldest and most trusted agents, also spoke of the meetings at the Pavilion Theatre, Whitechapel, other centres of blessing being also represented.

Reference was made to a large colony of working men resident at Edmonton, where there is much need for aggressive work to augment the agencies already diffusing the light in that needy district. The committee need increased support if their endeavours are to be duly sustained.

Work in Cuba.—Rev. Alfred de Barritt, of the Congregational Church, Marshfield's Hills, Mass., recently visited Cuba, and in view of the lamentable state of the island decided to commence Christian work in Havana. The distress is keen; there are thousands of penniless widows with families, and many children are quite naked. The soldiers have no chaplain in Havana. A church has been founded, and is prospering. Mr. de Barritt asks for clothes for the naked, sewing machines, that the hundreds of poor widows may support their families, Spanish books and Testaments for the converts and others, and English books and papers for the soldiers. Address, Union Church, 25, Calle Suarez, Havana, Cuba.

Obituary.

MR. MURRAY SHIPLEY.

Mr. Murray Shipley, an esteemed member of the Society of Friends, died on January 20 last. He was especially well known as the founder and president of the Children's Home in the city of Cincinnati. He was born in 1830, and had a godly training. After his conversion he sought out a needy neighbourhood, and with others established a Sabbath School in the south-west part of the city, from which grew several useful institutions. The organisation of a Children's Aid Society was the beginning of what became practically his life-work. The Aid Society grew into the Children's Home. He assisted in starting the first foreign missionary work of American Friends, the mission to Mexico. In this service he visited Mexico, enduring discomfort and privation while travelling in the interest of the work there.

MRS. WYNDHAM E. BEWES.

By the death of Mrs. Wyndham E. Bewes, which took place at her residence, 67, Ladbroke Grove, W., the cause of evangelical religion has lost one of its most devoted workers. The widow of the late Col. Wyndham E. Bewes, and the third daughter of the late Mr. G. W. Soltau, of Little Efford, Plymouth, she was a woman of remarkable gifts. She had a strong and vigorous mind, a sound and sober judgment, a remarkable insight into character, and a keen sense of humour. All this was combined with a large and loving heart, as the quite unusual generousness of her hospitality and the wideness of her charities bore ample witness.

She was for many years a member of and an earnest worker in Trinity Church, Notting Hill, where her removal leaves a blank which it will be hard to fill. But her sympathies overleaped the barriers of denomination, and wherever true work for God was being done she gave her sympathy and help. In the work of missions she was specially interested.

REV. DR. A. B. GROSART.

By the passing away of Rev. Alexander Balloch Grosart, D.D., LL.D., a familiar figure had been removed from literary circles. Born at Stirling sixty-two years ago, the lamented scholar was educated at Edinburgh, and entered the Presbyterian ministry. His first charge was at Kinross, and from there he removed to Liverpool. After two years by the Mersey he became minister of St. George's, Blackburn, where for twenty-five years he discharged all the duties of his office with exemplary industry and success. The esteem in which he was held by his colleagues is shown by his election as Moderator of the Presbyterian Synod meeting at Manchester. Whilst a popular preacher and hardworking pastor, Dr. Grosart was best known for his literary labours.

A mere list of the books which bear Dr. Grosart's name as author or editor would fill columns of our paper. His early writings were theological, ranging from tracts and leaflets to elaborate treatises. In his earlier studies Dr. Grosart was a diligent reader of Puritan literature, and this led him to the task of editing the works of Richard Sibbes and Thomas Brooks. He wrote several memoirs for Nichol's "Puritan Commentaries," and contributed others to the "Dictionary of National Biography" and the "Encyclopædia Britannica." Dr. Grosart edited several series which are much sought after by littérateurs; he collected the poems of Thomas Fuller and the prose writings of Wm. Wordsworth, and himself wrote choice verse, having a truly spiritual tone.

About six years ago Dr. Grosart left Blackburn and settled at Dublin, where, with other literary engagements, he was preparing for the completion of his great edition of Spenser. He received the degree of D.D. from Glasgow and that of LL.D. from Edinburgh. He was also a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He earned warm admiration for his persistent industry. Those who have seen him at work in the British Museum or in the large Manchester libraries will not readily forget the swiftness as well as the sureness of his operations.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

GOOD Friday and Easter Sunday remind us that the Cross and the empty tomb of Christ are the two cardinal symbols of saving religion. The New Testament never separates the Passion and the Resurrection; they are the gold and silver sides of the shield of faith. A correspondent writing to us on the subject draws attention to the fact that many of our preachers tend to lay undue stress on the Cross, as though it were the complete and sufficient symbol of Christianity, and suggests that both in sermons, and in the pictures which adorn the walls of many evangelical believers, it occupies much the same place as it does in the insignia of Ritualism and Roman Catholicism. The full Gospel is expressed in St. Paul's words, "For to this end Christ both died and rose and revived, that He might be Lord both of the dead and of the living" (Rom. xiv. 9); and again, "Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification" (Rom. iv. 25).

The hope of believers is not in a Dead Christ, but in the Living One. He who died is the same also as He that rose again, and who now liveth to make intercession for us in the heavenly places. Only in the light streaming from the empty tomb is the Cross seen in its true perspective; the "obedience unto death" has no significance apart from the conquest of the last enemy by Him who "liveth, and was dead, and, behold, is alive for evermore." Because He died, we are "dead to sin;" because He rose again we are able to walk "in newness of life." The Cross stands for the releasing power by which the bondage of past sin is broken; the Resurrection stands for the "lively hope to which we are begotten" of victory over sin in the present and the future. Those who would enter into the life of peace must accept the sacrifice for sin offered by the crying Saviour: If they would enter into joy and strength, they must abide in the ever living Lord, who dieth no more.

The opinion is frequently expressed that London is "getting better," that vice is weaker than it was fifty years ago, and that people who are sinful in London now are much more conscious that they are sinful, and much more anxious to hide their sin, than they used to be. It may be conceded that open vice has declined, and that is so much to the good; but there is a wide gap between a desire to observe a certain outward decorum and a sense of being sinful. Were the latter condition the real one, why are persons of all denominations deploring the falling-off in attendance on the means of grace? Souls under a sense of sin generally have a hunger to know what they must do to be saved, and are glad to go where the people of God congregate. We can hardly adopt this rosy view of London.

Among the many disastrous results of the Sunday Daily Telegraph and Sunday Daily Mail will be the extra pressure laid on the conscientious newsvendors, who hitherto have been able to refuse to circulate Sunday papers among their customers. Many of the smaller tradesmen will be put to a tremendous strain to continue this protest. For the weekly Sunday papers are published out of relation to the dailies, and form a class apart. But these Sunday editions will be the "daily" continued on the seventh day, and many customers of the daily issue will naturally have their Sunday edition from the same vendors. There is only one way in which Christian people can lodge an effective protest against this fresh invasion of the Lord's Day. It is for those who now take these particular papers to refuse to do so any longer if the present project is persevered in. That would soon put an end to it. In the contrary event, every leading daily, in simple self-defence, will soon be obliged to bring out a Sunday edition, and this will go far to complete the secularisation of the day of rest and peace.

As an offset to the discouraging symptoms of a lowered public tone in the matter of Sabbath rest and sanctity, we welcome the gleam of brightness which comes from the following fact that has reached us:—

> The Highway Committee of the London County Council have determined to recommend to the Council the immediate adoption of one day's rest in seven without diminution of weekly wage for all the employés on the Council's tramway system south of the Thames.

We most earnestly hope that the Council itself will endorse and adopt this recommendation. By doing so, it will set an example which all railway, tramway, and omnibus companies may perhaps be constrained to follow. If it be contended that in a city like London certain means of locomotion on the first day of the week appear necessary, the workers ought certainly to have in some form the seventh day interval of rest, which divine appointment and human experience alike require. Even then it is a great calamity for Sabbath workers to be deprived of the religious opportunities and privileges that belong specially to that day.

The latest and worst type of mammon worship is seen in the increasing sacredness of the interest of the dividend monger as compared with the sacredness of human life. Two important humanitarian bills have just been thrown out of Parliament for this reason. The attempt to raise the "flash-point" of the explosive oils, so much used by the poor, from 73deg. to 100deg. was defeated in the interests of an American monopoly; and Mr. Ritchie's bill to lessen the fatal and other accidents among railway employés by the introduction of automatic couplings has been abandoned. Are we to assume that our legislators think men of less value than property, and that the lives of our hard-working poor are of little account in comparison with the "gains of capital"? The blighting effects of the love of money on the humanitarian instincts are terrible. A new social conscience is clearly one of the imperative needs of the time.

It would seem that the Prison Commissioners have really become anxious about the highest welfare of prisoners. A circular lately issued by these officials allows mission services to be conducted, and sometimes addresses of a religious character, within the prison precincts. The question will now be to secure the services of the most sympathetic missioners for the purpose. Irrespective of ecclesiastical relations, any suitable minister should be invited to tell the inmates of the forgiving love of God in Christ. The time seems peculiarly fitted for appealing to the heart and conscience while prisoners are alone, separated from evil companions, with opportunities for serious thought. Judiciously conducted, such missions should reap a rich harvest of souls.

The present movement towards better relations with the Russian Government should not be allowed to blind us to the persecuting tendencies still manifested by it towards its most pious and progressive citizens. In the Daily News of the 24th inst. there is an instructive account of the continued emigration of the Dukhobortsi to Canada in an interview with a Russian subject who is superintending the movement. It is a remarkable instance of the futility of persecution as a means of stamping out a genuine revival of simple evangelical religion. These poor and despised people in their passionate protest against militarism are suffering the loss of all things in the name of Christ, and the permission granted them to emigrate is the result of the despair of the authorities to deal with them in any other way. One earnest enthusiast thus contrasted the present peace movement in Europe with the attitude of his fellow-religionists on the question:—

> We welcome everything that tends for peace. The difference between your crusade and ours is this. You want as much peace as you can get without loss of property. We say we shall hold fast to peace whether it means loss of property, or loss of liberty, or loss of home, friends, or native land.

Apart altogether from purely political and administrative issues, no friend of independent and self-respecting nationalities can withhold his sympathy from the people of Finland at this crisis in their history. The fact that they have always been a loyal and law-abiding section of the Russian empire lends an added pathos and poignancy to their distress at the needless curtailment of their prescriptive national privileges. We have discovered no valid excuse on the part of the Imperial authorities for this autocratic plan of Russifying a high-minded people; and we fear the scheme is only part of the repressive movement which has persecuted the Stundists and the Dukhobortsi. Probably the young Czar is little more in this matter than an unwilling instrument of his chief advisers; but we shall not be greatly surprised if the unhappy step he has taken alienates from him some of the sympathy felt for his proposed Peace Conference.

The demonstrations held throughout the country and culminating in the great meeting last week in Queen's Hall, in support of the National Peace Conference, should certainly have some weight with the members of the Conference when they meet. There is reason for hopefulness because of the deep religious element in the whole movement. It has been more than a series of demonstrations. We believe that much prayer has been offered to God already and will yet be offered, that something practical may result.

Rudyard Kipling, in describing a certain American Sunday, informs his readers that all that day he listened to people who said that the mere fact of spiking down strips of iron to wood and getting a steam and iron thing to run along them was progress, that the telephone was progress, and the network of wires overhead was progress. They repeated their statements again and again. We hear similar things said in Great Britain; and, according to one of the most distinguished Frenchmen, the world's millennium will be ushered in by the discoveries of science! It is strange to dream of "progress" and the millennium while envy, hatred, and all uncharitableness are so rife. The race has, in this century alone, done well in certain lines of material advancement; but true progress involves the heart, the conscience, and the conduct.

Some interesting, if humiliating, instances of the abject mental slavery which lies at the root of Romanism have recently been provided. The American Roman Catholic Archbishops have hastened to assure the Pope of their agreement with his condemnation of the movement recently referred to in these columns as "Americanism," though they had previously advocated it. A French priest who had translated the "Life of Father Hecker" from English into French has withdrawn his book from circulation in a letter to the Pope subscribed thus:

Humbly prostrating myself at the feet of his Holiness, I pray him to condescend in his paternal goodness, to accord the Apostolic benediction.

Two authors of books recently placed on the "Index" have submitted, and condemned their own works! This mental tergiversation is profoundly immoral, and cuts at the root of all intellectual honesty. It is no wonder that all fruitful thinking, all independence of judgment, all individual initiative, tend to die out in Romish countries. Such a state of things finally kills self-respect in spiritual things.

Meanwhile, in our own land, ecclesiastical lawlessness forms a striking contrast to the servility of Roman Catholics. At the annual meeting of the East London Church Fund the Bishop of Stepney, according to the report in The Times, said it was for the bishop to decide what should be allowed in the diocese in the matter of ritual. When the bishop reported that he had given an order to a church, and that it was not obeyed, any grant made by this society would at once be stopped, and that, it seemed to him, was all the guarantee any reasonable man could possibly require of them. They were perfectly loyal to the bishop of the diocese, and would stand by him right through this business.

At this, Mr. G. W. E. Russell, understanding the bishop to say that clergymen in the East End who disregarded the Episcopal admonition would find his grant withdrawn, invited any clergymen as were under such discipline to come to the West End, where there were individuals who would see that they should not suffer because they obeyed what they believed to be the Church's law. This brought up the bishop again, who said that his remarks were addressed, not to any clergyman, but to certain persons who had written to say that, unless those who managed the Fund stopped the Ritualists, they did not mean to continue their subscriptions.

This curious explanation throws an instructive light on the bishop's plea for time and patience in dealing with lawlessness in the Church. It is clear, as the Church Times says:—

The English Church has inherited Establishment as a sacred historical trust, and the real "crisis" has certainly not yet arrived in which she is compelled to choose between the retention of her outward temporal quantities and her inward spiritual qualities.

What the bishops are afraid to do will, however, soon have to be done by the nation.

(394)

The Church Times is very angry with the C.M.S. authorities, which in view of its approaching centenary has invited honoured representatives of other churches, including Dr. Marshall Lang, Count Bernstorff, Pastor Monod, Sir Henry Fowler, and Rev. F. B. Meyer to speak at its meetings. The Bishops of Manchester and Worcester, who have promised to preside, are told that if they persist in taking part they will forfeit their claim to be obeyed when they urge loyalty upon their clergy. The plea that the above speakers are allied to the C.M.S. by the bond of a common Protestantism is scouted, as the Church Times recognises neither the name of Protestant nor any such tie. It concludes this acrimonious attack on Christian brotherhood by the following self-righteous plea:

One thing, at all events, is clear, and that is that the High Churchman alone is consistent and loyal to the Church. He keeps clear of Protestants and Jesuits alike, knowing that they are virtually in alliance against true Catholic principles.

A correspondent draws attention to the undoubted stress laid (often unconsciously) on the administration of the Lord's Supper by a "duly appointed minister," and pertinently asks whether anyone who is a true Christian is not equally qualified to do so. There is some peril of a latent form of sacerdotalism creeping into the thoughts and habits of even Nonconformist churches in this way. In view of this, it would be a wise step in such communions to entrust an occasional administration of the ordinance into "lay" hands, and so make a public protest against a subtle danger. According to the Romish doctrine, even a woman who rightly administers baptism may do so. How much more is it permissible and proper that any true member of Christ's body may lead others in commemorating his dying love to the world?

It is interesting to note in this connection that Dr. Lunn at the Free Church Congress in Liverpool suggested the following resolution for the next Wesleyan Conference:—

That this conference views with alarm the increasing hold of sacerdotal views upon the Established Church, and affirms its belief that no special sacerdotal functions are conferred in ordination. In order to make this clear to our people, the president of the conference and the chairmen of districts are authorised to sanction the administration of the Lord's Supper by specially-appointed lay preachers in cases of urgent necessity.

But the question may well be asked, Why should there be any special appointment of lay preachers for this function? Does not this savour of the leaven of sacerdotalism against which the suggestion itself is levelled?

In Defence of the Sabbath.

SIR,—Our God-given Day of Rest is continually assailed, and of late assaults have been more determined and more successful. There are at least eleven societies in England and Scotland working to resist these aggressions, and they are assisted by scores of auxiliaries. Each society is doing useful work, but it is acting by itself, leading here to overlapping and there to neglect. May I do through your columns what I cannot otherwise effect? I long to see the various societies acting in concert, and I want to say this to all their committees and secretaries:

We need to summon a national conference to consider our position, to concert action, and to impress the foe. There should be also a quarterly conference of secretaries, and a convener, who could summon a meeting in any emergency.

Unless brotherly and concerted action can be arranged, we waste our strength and shall become the laughing-stock of the enemies of the Sabbath.

There never was a time when such concerted action was more imperatively demanded.

I speak not as an outsider. Of the eleven societies, I was secretary to three during twenty-five years, and am still vice-president of two and active on the committee of three.

I rejoice in all the good done, and hunger to see more effectual efforts, both of defence and aggression.

We are engaged in a work which is of God; we have with us the Lord of the Sabbath, and we should be doing the work in the very best way.—I am, &c., John Gritton, D.D.

131, Richmond Road, Hackney, N.E.

Reform in Theological Colleges.

PRESIDENT HARPER has made proposals that are of special interest to the religious world, since they involve a complete recasting of methods of theological training. At the winter convocation of the University of Chicago, he said:—

The environment in which theological training had its origin has utterly changed, while the thing itself stands almost unchanged in a hundred years. There is great unrest in the minds not only of practical men, but as well of those who view the matter from the point of view of scholarship, with respect to the present character of the theological seminaries of this country. . . . .

The old and artificial distinction between Old Testament exegesis and New Testament exegesis, ecclesiastical history and dogmatics, is one which cannot be maintained. The Old Testament student takes up no problem that does not require of him the use of the New Testament; and the New Testament student can not deal intelligently with a single subject who has not considered that subject in all its details from the Old Testament point of view.

One-third to one-half of the time of the theological student is wasted in this vain effort to accommodate himself to the requirements of the so-called departments, involving artificial distinctions which exhaust his patience and his time.

The Standard, the leading Baptist paper of Chicago, sums up the proposed changes in eleven articles. Most of these are technical, but the following are of interest:—

Let students select courses of instruction adapted to the work they desire to do.

Group courses of study especially adapted to those who desire to be pastors and administrators and general workers, in which the English Bible shall be made the principal subject, the secondary subjects to be psychology, pedagogy, and sociology.

Introduce to a larger extent than heretofore what may be called clinical work; for example, in Sunday school work with the Biblical and pedagogical departments, in visitation work with the sociological departments, in preaching and church administration with the department of homiletics.

Give a period in the training of each student during which he shall be under the direction of a pastor in active service.

It so happened that while President Harper was formulating these plans, Union Theological Seminary (Presbyterian) of New York was taking actual steps in the same direction by proposing a short course for lay workers, missionaries, &c. Inquiry of President Hall as to those plans elicited the following reply:

Our plan for evening classes is in process of development, and we hope to bring it upon a working basis at the beginning of the next academic year. We are unanimously of the opinion that courses of this kind, if rightly conducted, can enlarge the usefulness of the seminary by enabling it to serve the interests of lay workers of all sorts.

It will be interesting to follow Presidents Hall and Harper in the proposed reformation, and to see how far they will go to meet the needs of the case. It is worth noting that these changes were anticipated ten years ago by D. L. Moody, who gave practical expression to his convictions by founding the Bible Institute at Chicago. He realised that special training was needed by men who desired to become evangelists, city and home and foreign missionaries, and to fill other appointments where a knowledge of the Word of God and of men is of more value than an extensive scholastic training.—Record of Christian Work.

"Because I live."

By Rev. J. CULROSS, DD.

"Because I live ye shall live also."—(John xiv. 19.)

I DO not stay to justify the rendering of the original here. I am satisfied that it is the very sense of the original. It has been proposed to translate: "Yet a little while and the world seeth Me no more; but ye (my disciples) see Me because I live, and ye shall live." No grammatical objection lies against this rendering; but the sense is so poor and thin that I think it must be rejected.

Nor do I stay to exhibit how the words lie embedded in the context. I venture to take them by themselves as an independent utterance. They connect the life of Christian disciples with the life of Christ in the most absolute manner. It is not merely that his life is the type and pattern of theirs, but the very ground and security of it. There is no parallel to this in aught that is known among men. The fortunes of the child are bound up with those of the parent, but not as the life of the believing man with that of the Redeemer. The case stands by itself, peculiar and without a full analogy, "Because I live, ye shall live also."

The form of expression brings the Redeemer personally into view, and bids us think of Him as the living One. The thoughts and ideas of a good man will often survive him for ages, and produce results when he himself is forgotten. But it is not merely that the thoughts and ideas of Jesus continue to live:

HE LIVES HIMSELF.

He says not "I shall live," but, with calm sublimity, "I live," and that with death just at hand. He is "the Prince of Life." The world, walking by sight, does not believe this; many even of those who profess to do so come short: He is merely One who lived long ago, and "finished" his work by dying on the Cross—a grand, dim figure in the fading past—not their Friend and Trust in the living present. But his life is going on through human history; there is much that is unknown and mysterious to us; but this is sure, this day and this hour He who died on dark Calvary liveth.

He lives blessedly. "The oil of gladness has been poured upon Him," and "He is made most blessed for ever." His blessedness has many springs. He draws it from the Father's love; from seeing of the travail of his soul; from the blessedness He dispenses and the purity He creates; and there lies before Him that great hour when He shall present his ransomed "faultless in the presence of his Father's glory with exceeding joy."

He lives royally. He "reigns in life." He "has power over all flesh." He is Head over all things. The far immense of worlds is placed under his rule. On this royal honour He entered forty days after his Resurrection. He led his disciples out from Jerusalem as far as Bethany, on the farther slope of the Mount of Olives, through the golden fields and past familiar groves, conversing with them by the way about the things of the Kingdom. Having reached the chosen spot, in the sweet sequestered upland above the village, He paused, and the disciples gather in a group around Him. Slowly He uplifts his hands and blesses them. Just in the attitude and act of blessing them with hands outspread, He was parted from them—rose upward from their midst toward the azure skies, slowly so that their eyes could follow Him, till, as they beheld, a cloud received Him out of their sight. The sea had been a pavement beneath his feet, and now the bright regions of the air open.

And Jehovah said to Him, "Sit Thou at my right hand;" and He passed through the bowing ranks of the heavenly courts and took his seat upon the throne, "angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto Him." That is the glory in which He entered, and in which He now lives—the glory of royalty.

Once more, He lives eternally. He is above the power of death for evermore. "Being raised from the dead, He dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him." This is the first thought to apprehend—that Jesus lives. We have never seen Him; we know not the direction of his dwelling-place; we cannot tell what He is like; we could not bear to look with these mortal eyes upon the skirts of his glory; but somewhere or other, in the "boundless worlds of light," "beyond the glittering, starry sky," He liveth, blessedly, royally, eternally.

(To be Concluded.)

Darkness and Dawn.

An Easter Study.

IT needs no vivid imagination to picture the gloom and unrelieved sadness of the evening of the Crucifixion to the women who had followed Jesus from Galilee, and done so much to lighten the hardships and privations of his Judæan ministry. On this day of horror they had stood at the very foot of the cross, bravely watching his dying agony, and hoping against hope that some miraculous intervention would bring deliverance even at the eleventh hour. They had heard the pathetic utterances of their beloved Master spoken out of the weird darkness; had pressed the hand of the heart-pierced mother as she was led away by the disciple who had been so solemnly invested with filial rights by her dying Son. Then on their tensely-strained hearing had come that loud voice, not of one dying of exhaustion, but of One who held his life in his own keeping, and had power to lay it down—the Great High Priest offering Himself as a Sacrifice for the sin of the world.

"It is finished!" In that supreme moment, how hope must have died in their hearts! But not love! It never faileth, and it nerved these tender, timid women to remain, hustled by the crowd in that time of savage excitement, bearing probably the bitter taunts of those who recognised them as disciples of the murdered Teacher, but caring only to watch that lifeless body and see what would be done to it.

And in truth they beheld a wonderful sight, which must have brought a thrill of comfort to their nearly breaking hearts. From the moment that the great Sacrifice was offered up with the commendatory prayer to God, it seemed as if Heaven itself had echoed the cry, "It is finished"—concerning any further insult to the Divine victim. From that moment no earthly hate was permitted with the slightest indignity, the only exception being the piercing of the side with the spear, which certified the death, and so guarded the great truth from sceptical doubt. It hung under the Imperial inscription, "This is the King of the Jews," and when nature with mighty convulsions attested its decease, the voice of a chief Roman official was heard proclaiming, "Truly, this was the Son of God!"

TO TOUCH THAT SACRED BODY

Soon afterwards one of the soldiers did indeed approach with brutal purpose, but it was only accomplished on the poor malefactors; over the central majestic figure there was the Divine mandate of protection: "A bone of Him shall not be broken," and the man passed on harmlessly. And as the women waited and the crowd dispersed, and they were left almost alone with their dead, hurrying footsteps caught their ear, and there appeared two men of distinction, "rich" and "honourable," followed by attendants bearing fine linen and spices, so costly and abundant that it has been computed that never was there so much used at the burial of any earthly monarch.

Joseph of Arimathea is named with honour by all the evangelists, Nicodemus only by St. John in his considerably later Gospel, by which time probably this somewhat timid but faithful ruler of the Jews had gone to meet, in the glory of the Father, the Rabbi whom he had first met, in the darkness of night, and then in the darkness of death. But so it was. The women, "beholding," saw with joy that sacred form taken from the cross, with reverential touch by the hands of friends, carefully wound in the fine linen with the raw, fragrant spices, and then carried to a new tomb undefiled by previous contact with death, and standing in a garden where flowers bloomed and birds sang a requiem to their Creator. And so another word of prophecy was fulfilled, and He was "with the rich in his death."

"No one has touched Him but to do Him honour since He died," we can fancy one of these little groups saying to the rest; and they would watch, with some gratified pride chastening their grief, as the Imperial signet was brought with due ceremony, and the tomb that contained most precious treasure. Then a Roman guard was marched on to the ground, and when the tomb was thus made "as secure as they could," all but the soldiers went away.

WAS SEALED, AS A CASKET

But with the return of the women to their own homes, or to a common meeting place, what a reaction would come! If they had reasoned, the logical conclusion that would have been forced upon them must have been that the Master who had been taken from their head that day was an impostor? For if He was hopelessly dead, what could be thought of his predictions and his promises? But, happily, love is seldom logical, and they were content to show that love in the small measure of opportunity that remained to them; never thinking—as, alas, so few of us do—that the truest proof of love is a trust that remains steadfast in spite of appearances.

It was a pathetic little group that, as soon as their Sabbath was past, stole out, while it was yet dark, to the sepulchre, their hands filled with practical evidence of their care, their hearts busy with anxious thoughts as to their success. "Who will roll us away the stone?" they timidly asked, and there was not a man amongst that apostolic band to answer the question and to act as escort. We know the issue. Weeping had endured for the night, but what joy came in the morning!—a joy far beyond our imagining, for we have never passed through such a horror of great darkness.

THE LESSON REMAINS.

All times of dismay and faith-testing, if like these women we "seek Jesus," shall surely have a resurrection dawn of deliverance. But let us not be "slow of heart to believe" the unfailing promise; nor let us, in the greater light that is ours to-day, go back to those early days and "seek the living among the dead." How many are still bringing spices to embalm a dead Christ, in the undue prominence which they bestow upon his Cross and Passion—in seasons such as this Easter-tide, seasons most important and helpful, but needing a true balance of Scriptural teaching to preserve them from erroneous extremes! And is there no need of a note of warning, too, concerning the sacramental service which He bids us observe, in perpetual memory of his precious death, that we be careful to recognise that it is only a remembrance, not a celebration? "He is not here, He is risen as He said," and He has shed, and is shedding, upon those who believe the renewing and sanctifying grace of the Holy Ghost, who is now given because Jesus is glorified.

In presence of every storm of difficulty let us seek his help. The power by which He raised Jesus Christ from the dead is still his, and it will not fail us. M. C. F.

Percy Park, Tynemouth.

The Stepney Creche.—The little report of this time-honoured institution which Mr. Hilton has issued possesses a special interest, as being the last we suppose that will emanate from him. The steps taken in transference of the work of the crèche to Dr. Barnardo's care are detailed, and an earnest plea made for continued generous support under the changed circumstances of management. That plea we very cordially endorse.

Letters from America.

A DETECTIVE'S STORY.

LET me add to my last, that many of Dr. Chapman's remarks, original or quoted, were well worthy of record. For example, he quoted Rev. Andrew Murray to this effect: "Ask, and ye shall receive the gift; seek, and ye shall find the Giver; knock, and the door shall be opened for fellowship with Him." The following was also from his well-timed address on prayer: "There is no such thing as power with God, until we know how to pray; nor can there be continuous power until we have learned to live in prayer."

We were only able to attend one after-meeting, but it was a remarkable one. Mr. Todd Hall, a detective officer of Baltimore, gave a thrilling account of his antecedents. He said that Mr. Moody was holding meetings in that city in 1879. In pursuance of a culprit, he entered the building, little thinking what awaited him there. The man wanted was in the meeting. The door-keeper was a converted saloon-keeper. "I told him," continued the speaker, "whom I wanted. He advised me to stay at the meeting which would not last more than half an hour longer. A gentleman led me to a seat in front of the platform, where I found myself surrounded by a lot of gamblers and the like—some of the toughest people in Baltimore. When Mr. Moody had preached, to my astonishment many of those fellows put up their hands for prayer, myself among them. Jesus with cords of love seemed to draw me from my chair. I heard one say, 'Thank God,' and I saw that they had spotted me. I said to myself, 'Now, old man, stand your ground.' I did not know what was coming, but I gave myself up to God, and He has carried me along for twenty years.

"I returned to the City Hall and told them, 'Boys, I have been to hear Moody, and I have taken Christ for my Saviour.' I went home and told my wife; and the dear little woman threw her arms round my neck and said, 'If you are going that way and for long years we lived together, rejoicing over souls brought into the kingdom by our means.

I AM GOING WITH YOU,'

"I have had the joy of leading some of the worst sinners to Christ. The summer before last, a woman who had kept a bad house for thirty-eight years was mightily convicted and wondrously converted; and the roughest characters, among them many women whom she had sought to lead from their evil ways, came to her funeral and glorified God in her."

Mr. Hall's visit to his chief when on his death-bed, and the way in which he led him to Christ, was an instance of the wisdom God gives to those who addict themselves to the ministry of winning souls. Many other details were given by which the meeting was greatly moved and many decided for Christ that night. Such evangelistic visits as that of Dr. Chapman to Washington are eminently calculated to promote revival, and to add to the Church such as are being saved.

A MISSIONARY SCHOOL.

The following is an account of the school referred to in my second letter in connection with which Mr. Wharton's very fruitful services in Wilmington were held. It is written by Mr. G. A. Woodward, the principal of the school:—

You wish me to give you a sketch of the missionary school in this city. This mission began at the close of the Civil War. It has for its special object the education and uplifting of the youth of the coloured race. Its influence has been far-reaching, sending out Christian teachers to the surrounding country, and being of incalculable benefit to the public educational system of this part of the State, beginning as it did a third of a century ago, when there was no school system nor teachers for the newly-emancipated race.

During all these years the school and the church planted by its side have stood for a pure Christianity, striving to be as "a light on a hill." While being supported largely by the Congregational Churches of the North, the work of the school is undenominational. The teachers belong to different evangelical denominations, and the pupils are of many denominations. The school is only one of many schools and colleges established in this South land by the association.

The present enrolment of the school is about 300, with ten instructors, including the special teachers of music and sewing. The course of study extends over a period of twelve years, beginning with the lowest primary. It is intended to fit the pupils for teaching, or for the various occupations of life so far as book-knowledge goes, or for entrance to the colleges. The Bible is a daily text-book in the school.

Needlework and some fancy work is the only industry taught. We are very desirous of starting other industries, such as cookery, house-keeping, nursing, &c., for the girls, and agriculture and the trades for the boys. Lack of the necessary funds has kept us from doing more in this direction; and we are only waiting for some philanthropic persons to come to our aid, that we may do more for a needy but rising people. They are worthy and they need help.

I have been here fifteen years in the work, and have had ample time to note results. I have seen go out from our institution scores of teachers and many who have become ministers of the Gospel, doctors, lawyers, architects, &c., a noble array of young coloured men and women, who are a credit to our school and an honour to their race.

R. Cope Morgan.

District Visiting.

VISITATION work is not easy; many prefer direct mission work. It is not showy, exhilarating, or inspiring, and when done thoroughly it is exhausting. Nothing takes so much out of us as the constant effort to adapt our minds to a number of different persons and to try and view things with their eyes.

At the outset the visitor must keep clearly before her one main object, viz., to bring souls to the feet of Christ. This presupposes that she herself knows in her life the joy of Christ. But something more than being a Christian is needed if the visits are to have much result. We have all known the most earnest, well-meaning persons, who yet do much harm by want of wisdom, and forgetfulness of those small courtesies of life which in themselves are an influence.

DO NOT ATTEMPT TOO MUCH.

Personality is a large factor in all work. Your face, manner, tone, dress and bearing will go far to commend your message, or the reverse. If you visit for the whole of a hot July afternoon in a dirty, foul-smelling court, and are tired out after the first four or five houses, the rest of your visits will be of little use. The same applies if you go to people when you are depressed or out of sorts, for you cannot then give your best, and thus you dishonour your Master and your message. I knew an earnest mission-worker who toiled all day among the sinful and sorrowful, and then at night went to her home so tired and overwrought that, to use her words, she "snapped everyone up." The angel of the slum was, to her own people, sadly human!

PRAY SILENTLY AT EACH DOOR.

All sorts of unexpected calls on our wisdom and judgment may be made by those we visit. How shall we gain power to direct rightly a life unless we first claim that wisdom which He has promised to supply? It may not be best to pray always with those visited. To pray with someone without permission may be not only unwise, but impertinent. On the other hand, the wise visitor will be ready to do so, and will try for it, for nothing draws two souls together like united prayer.

The same applies to talk on religious subjects. To force the conversation to a religious turn regularly at every visit gives the idea of professionalism. If there is evident disinclination to speak of higher things, be willing to wait, as God waits. Probably you will not visit a home long before trouble, joy, pain, or death enters it, and then serious words will be listened to as never before. Of course, at any time if there is the smallest opening given you to speak for God, seize it; it may be, a chance word or so will reveal a deep hunger for spiritual help hitherto hidden through shyness. It is a good plan to leave one main thought or verse for your friend to ponder over.

REFUSE TO HEAR GOSSIP.

If you sternly refuse to hear slander, you help the fire of malice to die, instead of adding fuel. If gossip is told you concerning yourself, imitate the worker who always silenced her informant by saying, "I'll go and ask them myself what they did say."

Study the courtesies of life. Treat the women in your district with the courtesy you would show to your own friends. Don't call too often, or at awkward hours. There is a wonderful power in the simple courtesies of life, in a kind word or smile. I once visited a rough, coarse, hard-featured woman with reference to a street fight. She was in a savage mood, scarcely letting me enter the room. After listening to her tirade in silence I happened to utter the commonplace, "I am so sorry; you have had a lot of trouble." With what result? The fire died out of the poor creature's eyes as she turned sharply round and said, "Don't talk kind to me, d'ye hear. I can't bear it; I shall cry. I'm tough enough if folks only let me be."

It is a good plan to let your district come and see you occasionally in your own home. Visits among your own friends are not all on one side, why should they be here? Would it be much trouble to set apart an hour a week to see any woman who cared to call on you? Often in a cottage, with little ones about, it is not possible to get quiet, uninterrupted talk, while in the privacy of your home you could easily, and so set up

A CLOSER BOND OF SISTERLY SYMPATHY.

The difficult matter of material relief must enter into the visitor's work, but it is impossible to lay down any hard or fast rule to suit all cases. A visitor must remember her aim, viz., to bring each soul nearer God, and so any gift of hers or refusal of same must be tested by the simple question: Am I helping or hindering thereby his or her true life? If material relief is given, it should always be in kind—by meat, grocery tickets, etc., and not in the form of money. Lending should be very exceptional, because as a rule the one to whom you have lent views you ever after with a certain disfavour, as under obligation to you, and your spiritual influence is weakened.

I close with the word, "Patience." The district visitor needs that above all. A thought sown to-day, a kindly Christ-like act to-morrow, a text whispered in blinding sorrow, here a suggestion, there a warning—all are elements in building up that precious fabric of the soul which is not the structure of a moment. Be as patient as God is with the unlovely, the untoward, the hard, coarse and ignorant. Underneath the rough exterior there beats a heart; there is still the potentiality of the true and the spiritual, and you must dig, and dig, till you reach that.

Isabel M. M. Young.

Easter Hymn.

Fear not ye who seek for Jesus;
Empty lies the silent tomb,
O'er the opened grave now shineth
Heaven's light to pierce the gloom;
Death, the Prince of Life, hath conquered,
Man's last foe hath heard its doom.

He is risen! Alleluia!
On the finished work He wrought
God Himself hath set his signet;
Christ the purchase-deed hath brought
From the courts of hell to heaven,
With his blood redemption bought.

He is risen! life immortal
Now, through Him is brought to light,
He is risen, as the first fruits
From the world still wrapt in night,
But at sunrise the rich harvest
Will be reaped in glory bright.

He is risen! Go, proclaim it,
Shadows soon will flee away;
Live as those who wait his coming,
As they watch for morning ray;
Till the sunlight of his presence
Brings the fairest Easter Day.

J. H. S.

Professor W. W. White.—Our portrait of Professor White in last week's number was from a photograph by Messrs. Russell and Sons, Baker Street, W.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 2. Deuteronomy viii.

"BEWARE lest thou forget!" Such is the keynote of this chapter. It is repeated in many forms. "Thou shalt remember" (v. 2); "Thou shalt consider" (v. 5); "Lest thou forget" (v. 14); "Thou shalt remember" (v. 18); "If thou shalt forget" (v. 19). The lessons of our past experiences of God's love and grace may be profitably conned and considered, because they assure us of his gracious purposes in all time to come. What He has done, He will do; what He has been, He will be. We know Him, whom once we simply trusted, and we are persuaded that He is able to keep all that we have committed to Him.

Let us thankfully remember on this day what lies before us. The great and terrible wilderness into which the sin of Adam brought us, with its power of the serpent and scorpion; the thirsty land of unsatisfied desire; the alienation and distrust of God. But to what have we not been brought? Already God hath given us a good land, which may be described in these grand old words:—"A land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths, springing forth in valleys and hills, a land of wheat and barley, of vines, figtrees, and pomegranates, a land of oil, olives and honey, in which there is no scarceness nor lack." In other words, according to his great mercy, God hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, unto an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. Let us join to bless his name: blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. May the God of Peace, who brought again from the dead the Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting Covenant, make you perfect.

MONDAY, April 3. Deuteronomy ix.

A review of past backslidings and sins, such as is given in this chapter, tallies only too well with thoughts that insist on making themselves heard from time to time within our own heart. It is quite true that we have no claim on God, and never have had any on account of our righteousness. We have provoked the Lord our God to wrath from the day of our conversion until now, and have often shown ourselves stiff-necked and rebellious. The fairest day we ever spent has been imperfect, the holiest act we ever did has needed cleansing, and if the light has been so dim, ah, who can tell the blackness of the night!

All God's dealings with us must therefore be in grace. By the grace of God we are what we are; and, indeed He has been exceeding abundant in its exercise. There is not one of all his redeemed family who is not a monument of the grace, the unmerited kindness, of God. Any knowledge of God, any experience of his lovingkindness, any service we have rendered in the world, any joys in our home, or success in our undertakings, any hope in the life beyond, are due to the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness towards us.

And we have an advocate with the Father. As Moses interceded for the people, so the Son of Man appears at the right hand of God. But He has no such task as Moses set himself to. Moses supposed that the whole burden of turning back the wrath of God lay on his shoulders, whereas we know that sin has been put away, and that God has reconciled the world unto Himself, not imputing their iniquities unto his people. He remembers Calvary, and looks not unto the stubbornness of his people, nor at their wickedness, nor at their sin, but on the face of his Anointed.

TUESDAY, April 4. Deuteronomy x.

Behold the greatness and tenderness of God! So great, that heaven and the heaven of heavens belong to him, the earth with all that therein is. He is God of gods and Lord of lords, the Great God, the Mighty and the Terrible. And yet He loves (v. 15), and with all the tender yearning of love seeks a response from us. "What doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God; to walk in all his ways, and to love Him with all thy heart and with all thy soul?"

It may seem as though love to one so great and exalted is impossible; but we must distinguish between love and the emotion of love. And we may truly love God without at first realising all the warm and blessed rush of emotion which breathes through the letters of a Rutherford or the hymns of a Havergal. Do things because they will please Him; avoid all that would cast a shadow on his heart of love; dwell on his attributes; imitate his dealings with the stranger, whom He loves in giving him food and raiment; make your boast in Him as your Praise and your God; and you will find a love growing up within you which will become the all-mastering emotion of your life. We may begin by loving God with the soul and strength before the heart tremulously responds.

Of that love there are two symptoms. First, we espouse the place of Levi to stand before the Lord, and to minister unto Him—like the Apostles, whom Jesus chose to be with Him, and that He might send them forth to preach. Secondly, we fear, and cleave to God. We fear to give Him pain by our least thought and word; we cleave to Him as Ruth to Naomi, when Orpah's figure receded through the mountain pass.

WEDNESDAY, April 5. Deuteronomy xi.

What a contrast between Egypt and Canaan! In the former, the water had to be raised by the foot. And in the East one frequently sees a number of barefooted natives causing the great roller to revolve, which draws the water from the well beneath. But in the latter, water poured from the hillsides, and rose in spontaneous fountains in the valleys. And so long as Israel obeyed, there would be no scarcity in the rain supply. Contrast the promise of vv. 14 and 15 with the threatening of v. 17.

We cannot forget what Jesus said to the woman by the well-head, exhausted by years of coming thither to draw: "The water that I shall give, shall be in him, springing up to everlasting life." What a contrast between the stagnation of some rock-hewn cistern and the perennial up-rush of the fountain, as though to reach the clouds out of which it was born! But this is his chosen symbol of his life in our hearts.

We may well ask ourselves whether we are living in that land of promise where ease succeeds to strain, and peace to unrest, and the life of reception to that of production. It is a land which is under the immediate care of God, "which the Lord thy God careth for;" and upon which his eyes constantly rest.

The sole condition for us, as for Israel, is obedience. We must lay up his words in our heart and soul, must teach them to our children, must diligently keep and treasure them. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them," said our Lord, "is he that loveth Me: and he that loveth Me shall be loved of my Father, and we will come and make our abode with him." We are not saved by our obedience; but if we do not obey, we shall miss the best that God has prepared for us.

THURSDAY, April 6. Deuteronomy xii.

How insistent the great lawgiver was that there should be unity in the national life and worship! The burnt offerings and sacrifices, the tithes and heave-offerings must all be brought to the central meeting-place at the appointed times, and partaken of with joy. So that in after days the Psalmist could sing "Thither the tribes go up, the tribes of the Lord."

That unity of life with the command of God and the common life of the people was associated with great joy. "Ye shall rejoice in all that ye put your hand unto" (v. 7); "Ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God, ye and your sons and daughters, your menservants and your maidservants" (v. 12); "and thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God" (v. 18). We are reminded of our Lord's words, "If the eye be single, the whole body shall be full of light." Unity always brings joy.

There is a sense in which we are always meeting with the tribes of God in the Lord's house. Whenever we realise the meaning of the Holy Catholic Church, the mystical body of Christ; whenever we rise above our sectarian differences in united prayer and praise; whenever we can pray for all those who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, we approach the great central meeting-place, where all God's saints are one. And what joy there is when we enter into these lofty and blessed conceptions of the communion of saints! True religion is indeed a blessed and happy thing. The bells ring out—"Thou shalt rejoice, thou shalt rejoice!" Nor is our joy confined to ourselves or our immediate circle: it overflows to the Levite and stranger, and blesses the very cattle and animals which are so affected by our moods. "Wherefore, again I say unto you, rejoice!"

FRIDAY, April 7. Deuteronomy xiii.

The extermination of plague is a capital point just now in India; but the extermination of all sources of temptation was not less energetically pursued in Israel. The prophet, the friend, who was dear as the soul, or the city, that endeavoured to turn Israel aside from its loyalty and devotion to God, might have no mercy shown. There was no room for that liberality of view which is so much in vogue in the present day, and which looks favourably on the greatest divergencies of belief if only those who propagate them are sincere.

For ourselves the lesson is clear enough. We are to dissociate ourselves from all companionships, however dear, which exercise a deleterious influence on our character, drawing us aside from God. In this age we are expressly told that we are not to gather up the thorns lest we gather up the wheat also. In other words, we are not to pursue those courses of inquisitorial persecution which some have advocated. But, within our own life, we are to withdraw ourselves from books, studies, people, associations that blight us.

Have you a friend, young soul, who is secretly enticing you? What though that friendship is dear as your own soul, you have no alternative: your course is clear; your eye must not pity, nor your hand spare. Considerations of what may befall him are not to withhold you from breaking loose from a connection which will land you in the outer darkness. Canst thou not act? Then tell God thou art willing that He should act for thee.

SATURDAY, April 8. Deuteronomy xiv.

We must not think that the prohibitions of this chapter, and of this book, were merely arbitrary. It is certain that they originated in great sanitary principles. The Creator knew that it would promote the health of his people if these articles of diet were prohibited; and therefore they were excluded from the category of legitimate food.

With us, too, a great many things that we would dearly love are forbidden. In our poor judgment, we suppose that they would greatly add to our pleasure and augment our strength; but, notwithstanding our prayers and tears, they are still withheld. Would they not be good food for us? we cry. Would they not nourish and cherish us? Would they not be good, if we received them with prayer and thanksgiving? Still God says, "Ye shall not eat!"

We are quite sure that, whatever is prohibited, God is love. Look at the indications of his love in this chapter: that about not seething the kid in its mother's milk; that permission to turn produce into money if the temple were too far away; that tender thought about the Levite, and the fatherless, and the widow. And for us, how much greater proofs of the love of God are furnished by the gift of Jesus and by his tender dealings with us!

Yes, God is love—love when He gives and when He withholds; when He opens the door into the garden, and when He keeps it closed; when He answers our prayer immediately, or keeps us waiting through long years. "My God, though Thou deprive me of the dearest and best, I will still trust Thine ineffable and changeless love."

Ceylon—and Home.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

LONG before Bishop Heber sang of "The spicy breezes" which "blow soft o'er Ceylon's isle," this favoured land has been the theme of poet and historian. The epithets bestowed on it recall those which the lover expends on the fair maiden of his choice. The Brahmin calls it Lauba, "the resplendent;" the Chinese, "the island of jewels;" the Greeks, "the land of hyacinth and ruby;" whilst the Buddhists describe it as "a pearldrop on the brow of India." It is the rooted conviction of the Mohammedan that Ceylon was the Garden of Eden; and the loftiest mountain in the island, raising its summit to the height of 7,353ft., is called Adam's Peak, from the tradition that Adam stopped here to take a farewell look of Paradise before crossing to India by the coral reef, known as Adam's Bridge.

The week spent in Colombo, at the hospitable home of Mr. John Ferguson, the editor of the Observer, and one of the oldest residents in Ceylon, formed a befitting climax to the interest and enjoyment of our tour. A thorough Scot by blood and early training; related by marriage with the great thinker, James Hinton; saturated with Cinghalese lore; an earnest Christian, who for nearly forty years has kept steadily to his Sunday school; and one of the few men who dare to conduct a daily paper on strictly Christian principles—here was an ideal host, and we shall ever cherish the memory of the loving care bestowed on us by his like-minded wife and himself. It was a memorable breakfast when, one morning, Rev. A. Connell, of Regent's Square, on his way through Colombo, which has been called the Clapham Junction of these parts, joined our party. It was hard to say which was the better

RACONTEUR OF HIGHLAND STORIES.

It is impossible to describe the beauty of Ceylon. As we approached it early on Friday morning, first Adam's Peak stood out in the dim haze, and as this cleared, in the swiftly advancing daylight, the long, low, sandy beach emerged, covered by dense groves of waving palms. It is said that from coast-line to highest mountain-top there is no spot of ground without its vegetation, rare, rich and tropical. If the natives erect a palisade of sticks around their holdings, in a few months they will root themselves and become covered with leaves.

We drove out one afternoon some five miles to a native chapel at Kotikawat, at which there was a baptism, and I was to give an address. The whole distance was traversed on good roads through a dense growth of vegetation. Bamboos, cocoanut and date palms, cinnamon shrubs, and breadfruit, rich and rare flowers, glimpses into the luxuriant and beautiful forest glades, met the eye everywhere. It was a memorable service, as before the crowded congregation seven professed their faith in Christ, and put his grave between them and their previous life.

On another occasion, time was snatched between the two services at Colombo for a visit to Cotta, for sixty years a station in connection with the C.M.S. For the last thirty years the work there has been under the care of Rev. R. T. and Mrs. Dowbiggin. Space prohibits the detailed description of our welcome and the incidents of that memorable day. The view from the house down the sloping hill-side to the wood-girt lake, the table covered at meal times with delicious native fruits, the clamber of the swarthy native up the cocoanut palm to fetch down a nut, with its draught of pure nectar, and a sheathed blossom, with its exquisite cream-coloured contents, the tales of native character and life, the flourishing schools for the boys and girls, the memorable service in the church, the snap-shots for the winter lantern entertainments at home, the gifts of tropical flowers—such were among the items that combined to paint a fresco which will not soon fade from

The natives are quick and intelligent, but they lack incentives to exertion; and the hot, steamy climate of the lowlands predisposes to indolence, and saps that masculine virility which wrestles with and conquers difficulty. An easy life is theirs. Nature anticipates their every want. Each family has a share in the palms, and jack fruit, and betel nut; the rice fields supply a further bread stuff; and there is abundant work for all who are willing to do it. Of late there has been an immense increase in the production of tea, and each year thousands of Tamils pour in from Southern India to meet the demands of the tea planters for coolies. Thus the prodigality of nature combines with the climate against the growth of the robuster characteristics; and the comb-crowned physiognomy of the Cinghalese low-lander strikes the traveller as effeminate.

The pressure of work in Colombo made us unable to visit Kandy, which lies in the interior, at a distance of four hours from Colombo by one of the most wonderful railways in the world, climbing an ascent of 1,600ft. above the sea level. It is described as the most charming little town in the world, situated in a valley surrounded by magnificent hills. It was the ancient capital of the island, and contains one of the oldest and most sacred of the Buddhist temples.

Our meetings were held in the early morning at the Ferguson Memorial Hall, where we had unusual opportunities of unfolding the deep things of the Christian life, to delightful audiences of missionaries, native pastors, and other Christians. In the evening we met in the hall of the Wesleyan College, which was specially suitable for the large Burgher population, and where we had

GREAT AUDIENCES NIGHT AFTER NIGHT.

We were impressed with the strength of Christian unity among the servants of God resident in Colombo, and they extended a cordial welcome to those who had come in from the surrounding neighbourhood. One felt strongly attracted to the entire circle of godly and earnest fellow workers. Sermons in various places of worship, an address to the great Boys' College at the request of Warden Buck, meetings with native pastors, an address at the annual meeting of Y.W.C.A., and a drawing-room gathering for the English residents, made a full programme.

But all the while the heart was beating quicker with the thought that every day was bringing us nearer to the start for the homeward voyage. At last the final morning came, with its three closing addresses, the first in the Memorial Hall; the second in the verandah of a mission bungalow by interpretation, to a group of native pastors; the third to a school of Cinghalese girls. A few last purchases, a peep into the Legislative Council, which happens to be in session, then the jetty with its farewells, the choppy water to the great steamer, the final adieus and prayer in the music saloon, where our friend, the secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. and Mrs. Bird, and Mr. Eddy, who has so kindly accompanied us during the tour, relieving us of all anxiety, commend us to God in prayer. Presently they have left the ship, and as the evening shadows gather darkly around Adam's Peak, and the lights on shore glimmer out, we weigh anchor and slowly glide forth on the great Indian Ocean, the fragrant breath of the warm tropical night is in our faces, the brilliant stars over head, and before us a run of seven days and nights till we sight land at Aden.

It is almost too good to be true that we are really on board for home. How often we have anticipated this moment, and longed for it! How often our nervous fears have conjured up possible accidents and contingencies which would have made it impossible! How often have we offered prayer, and exercised faith with respect to it! We long to see our church and friends, to plunge again into the thick of the battle, to devote ourselves to the new possibilities of the Missionary Union, to resume our ministry, utilising, as we hope, the added experience and information of these wonderful months.

We rapidly survey the thousands of miles we have traversed without danger or alarm; the love with which we have been everywhere welcomed, entertained, and speeded on our way; the homes we have visited, the friends we have made, the long and interesting talks we have had; the 130 meetings we have addressed, the missionary operations we have studied, the power and blessing which have accompanied the Word—and we gladly confess that not one good thing has failed of all that the Lord promised.

Glimpses of Romanism.

V.—The Papal Church a Political Conspiracy.

By Rev. ALEX. ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

IN my last paper I said that the Papal Church in Italy is recognised by the Government and people as a political conspiracy, and that, as such, special laws exist and special measures have been taken to hold it in check. One of these measures I mentioned, the New Penal Code, which threatens with "fine, imprisonment, and dismissal from office any minister of religion who, in the exercise of his profession, talks against the King or Constitution, or disturbs the peace of families;" and I gave some illustrations of its working. I now pass on to other restrictive measures.

THE PIOUS WORKS BILL.

This bill, which was passed almost unanimously by both houses of Legislature some eight years ago, deals with all the charity monies of the land. Italy is rich in charity funds. Every city, every town, almost every village has such inheritances; for people have been accustomed for centuries to leave money for the poor in order to save their own souls from purgatorial fires. The annual income arising from these accumulated funds amounts to some five millions sterling. All that money used to be in the hands of the Church as administrators.

And how did it administer it? Let me take the city of Venice as an example. In old guide-books (Baedeker's, before 1890) there will be found a statement to this effect: "One-third of the population of Venice are paupers." But there are really no poor-houses and no poor-rates. I used to be puzzled until I had occasion to go to the charity office about a case. The officials there said to me that they would allow the family I was interested in "five francs a month!" "Five francs a month!" I replied. "What will that do for a sick mother and five children?" "Oh, but remember," was the reply, "we have 20,000 people on our books in receipt of five francs a month." Gradually I found this to be the state of the case: that the Papal Church, in order to keep in touch with the people, and to obtain influence over them, put anybody and everybody on their books who would consent to receive this miserable pittance."

Now what obtained in Venice, obtained in every city and town in the kingdom. Indeed, I have heard of cases where the Church would give nothing, but waited till the poor people died of starvation, and then they would pay the money for masses for their souls! Besides which, there was said to be scandalous corruption. As the whole of Italy's charities were thus being used by the Papal Church for her own ends, and to the detriment of the country, the State stepped in, and by the Opere Pie Bill deprived the Church of its trust, and took it upon itself. The Pope raised the cry of spoliation, and appealed to Christendom to save him, but

HE APPEALED IN VAIN.

Italy's right to manage her own affairs no one dared to question.

The first result of the passing of the measure was to frighten some of the Church's administrators of the funds out of the country. They could not face the examination of their accounts. The Government now devotes these monies to real charity purposes, such as relieving those really poor, establishing hospitals, providing old age pensions, promoting public works in order to give employment in times of distress, &c. The funds are administered throughout the country by lay committees, half the members of which are chosen by the people and half by the Government, and if a priest is by chance elected to the membership of the board, the Government has the right to cancel his election.

There is nothing new in this measure. The old Republic of Venice found it necessary to exclude ecclesiastics from its charity boards, and so did the little mountain Republic of Cadare. The priest, it was found, did not exist who could refrain from sacrificing the interests of his country and countrymen to the advancement of the mundane interests of his unchristian Church.

THE MARRIAGE BILL.

Marriage is now a civil ordinance in Italy. Not only are civil marriages legal, but they are the only legal marriages. The Church cannot, dare not, perform the marriage ceremony. A religious marriage is illegal, the offspring of such a union are registered illegitimate, and they cannot inherit property. Besides which, I believe that the performing priest and the witnesses to the illegal union are liable to be punished by law. All marriages in Italy must be performed by the Syndic (Mayor) of the place in which the couple reside, or by his representative, and they must take place in the municipality. After the marriage the couple can go to the Church, and get, through the priest, its benediction if they like, but that counts for nothing in the sight of law, and many dispense with it.

Now, why was this law passed? In hostility to the Church? Not at all. It was in the interests of morality. It was found that the Papal Church would marry any couple, no matter who they were, or what their relationship, if only they paid sufficient money. It was all a matter of pounds, shillings, and pence. The Pope, who is above all moral law, and who recognises no moral distinctions, has the power to grant marriage dispensations within the forbidden degrees, and does grant such dispensations in Papal lands, though in Italy his power for mischief in this direction has been curtailed.

Another law which cripples the power of the Papal Church in Italy, is that it is illegal for it either to hold, or to inherit, real property. All the church-buildings in Italy belong to the State. The Papal Church does not own one stone of ecclesiastical property from one end of the country to another. Not only do the churches belong to the State, but all that they contain—all their furniture, in the shape of pictures, priests' robes, and altar plate.

NOTHING IS THE PROPERTY OF THE PAPAL CHURCH.

She is a lodger in furnished apartments, to be turned out at a moment's notice. Then the Papal Church cannot buy or inherit real property. If the Church, as a church, bought a building, her title to it would not be legal. If anyone leaves a piece of real property to the Church, the State allows usually a certain time for it to be turned into money, which the Church can take, and if this is not done, it is confiscated. It is impossible to alienate a stone of a building or an inch of soil in Italy to the Papal Church.

THE PAPAL GUARANTEES.

It may be claimed that the position of the Vatican, and of the Pope as resident there, form exceptions to this rule. The exception is more in appearance than in reality. The Vatican is the property of the State, and the Pope, like the Church, is a tenant at will. He, too, is only a lodger in the furnished apartments of the Government; only he has got nominally the status of a king there, and the Vatican is guaranteed to him by Act of Parliament. But Parliament that gave him his status and his lodging can deprive him of both. And never a year passes but the cry is raised, when the Papal Church does something outrageously disloyal (as when it sought to desecrate Victor Emmanuel's tomb, or fomented the riots of last May), "Cancel the Papal guarantees!"

Again, the State does not lend these churches really to the Papacy, but to the Italian people, only it happens that the Papal Church meantime is nominally at least the church of the country. If all the inhabitants of any parish became Protestant, they could claim the parish church of their place, and they would get it. Mount Orfano, on the Lake Maggiore, is a case in point. The inhabitants of the village, dissatisfied with their priest, became Protestant, and invited a neighbouring Protestant minister to preach to them in the parish church, and he went, and it was used afterwards for Protestant worship. All these laws and measures show how precarious the footing of the Papal Church is in Italy. How easy it would be to overthrow it if some crisis arose bringing the opportunity. How easily a reformation might be brought in if the Government chose to act as the English Government did in the days of King Henry VIII. The people, I believe, are ripe for reform, and the Government, too, would welcome it; they await the man and the day. In God's providence both will come, perhaps sooner than most of us think.

Protestant Outlook.

WRITING with respect to the recent decision of the Government in the House of Lords to furnish a return showing the number of churches in which confessional boxes are in use, an esteemed correspondent says:—

The more pronounced of the clergy, who have so truly been described as "anarchical," have for some time past already blazoned forth this feature of their services so that all who run may read. I have before me the list of Lenten services of a London church at which the Lord Bishop of Stepney held a confirmation on the 9th inst., and one of the attractions of these services is thereon advertised as follows:—

> Confessions will be heard on Shrove Tuesday—every day from 10 to 11 a.m. Saturdays after 3 p.m., and at other times by appointment.

This announcement is made on the same sheet as that advertising the confirmation on the 9th inst. by the Lord Bishop of Stepney. He must therefore be aware of it. What course did he adopt in regard thereto?

The Archbishop of Canterbury has appointed Mr. Justice Charles judge of the Court of Arches in succession to Lord Penzance. The judge is a High Churchman, willing, it is understood, to accept ecclesiastical jurisdiction from the Primates, which Lord Penzance was not.

On Saturday last the Archbishop of York performed a service of benediction over a village cross at Hovingham. On Sunday, in the church of St. Agnes, Kennington, "the benediction of the palms" was enacted. These things are indicative of the lengths to which superstition may go under episcopal sanction.

The Bishop of Peterborough, addressing a congregation at a confirmation service at Syston, near Leicester, referred to the controversies in the Church. He denied that the Prayer Book taught the doctrine of transubstantiation. Everything that set out the worship of the elements was forbidden, and the Bible did not say that the sacrament should be taken fasting. As to confession, though they might on occasions of conscientious difficulty go for advice to a learned and discreet minister, that must be the exception and not the rule. The Church knew nothing of the necessity of confession before communion.

The National Protestant Church Union, in a reply to the manifesto of the E.C.U., says:—

It is vain to imagine that the Church can enjoy the privilege of a State establishment without at the same time being subject to a certain degree of State control. Nor can the State, having conceded to the Church very great privileges, on the condition that certain doctrines were to be taught, and a particular form of Church government maintained, permit the clergy to contravene these doctrines and repudiate the contract with the State, by which alone they are secured in their offices and emoluments. This is really the question at issue. The plea virtually raised by the English Church Union, that the Royal supremacy has force only against foreign interference, is quite untenable.

The Church Association has issued a memorandum on the subject of the hearing of ritual disputes before the Archbishops. In the opinion of the Association, it would be wrong in principle and disastrous in point of expediency for Protestants to mix themselves up with such "sham litigation." Archbishop Temple is not sitting in any "court" known to the law. He is merely proposing to exercise an administrative discretion, which is and can have no value whatever, except in the particular parish affected, and as to which he will take the full responsibility of acting on his own individual impressions. Whether his discretion is wisely exercised, or is a mere pretext for conceding to the lawbreakers a sort of irregular dispensation from observance of the law, makes no difference as to the extra-judicial character of the proceedings.

The Bishop of Durham has addressed to all the incumbents in his diocese a circular in which he says:—

I have been requested by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to cause a return to be prepared, so far as relates to this diocese, showing the number of churches in England belonging to the Church of England in which confessional boxes have been put up. If there is a confessional box in your church, or in any one of your mission chapels, I must ask you to have the kindness to say—(1) When was it erected? and (2) by what authority?

In the House of Lords, on Thursday last, there was an important debate on the crisis in the Church. Among other utterances was the following, by the Bishop of London:—

The objection taken to confession as a system is taken quite properly. Anything like the introduction into the Church of England of the system of confession that has to be very carefully guarded against, but I think that that is entirely impossible, and that there is no need whatever for any really serious anxiety upon the point. It is impossible, for the simple reason that there is no means whatever of enforcing confession or of requiring confession as a necessity for the reception of the Holy Communion. That being so, it is obvious that confession must remain voluntary, and, while remaining voluntary, it is most necessary that those who can make their voices heard should on all occasions urge upon the clergy that they are not fulfilling their functions properly if they strive to use their influence to urge upon any, and particularly upon young people, the necessity, or even the desirability, of habitual confession. I have with all the influence I possess urged that point upon my clergy privately, and I continue to do so on all occasions on which I have an opportunity.

An African Sanatorium.

IN a communication to hand from Rev. Alfred Hall, of Port Elizabeth, he speaks in the most glowing terms of the curative properties of South African air, in the treatment of lung complaints. It appears that the town of Wakkerstroom is declared by many competent authorities to be unsurpassed as a health resort in South Africa. At this favoured spot, 6,000 feet above sea-level, Rev. T. R. Matthews, lately of Mundesley, Norfolk, is founding a convalescent home for consumptives. Mr. Matthews himself went to Africa in search of health, and having received there an evident prolongation of life and energy, he wishes to provide a like boon for others similarly afflicted.

We have not space for the eulogistic descriptions of this place sent by our correspondent, or the testimonies furnished respecting it, both by medical men and grateful patients. We gladly comply, however, with the request to make the fact widely known, and must leave those readers who are interested on their own account, or that of ailing friends, to procure detailed information respecting the new institution from Rev. T. R. Matthews, Wakkerstroom, South African Republic, or from Rev. F. T. Passmore, 26, Deanery Road, the Green, Stratford, London, E., the latter of whom, as well as the former, can testify to personal benefit received.

Qua Iboe Mission, West Africa.—The past year has been one of steady advance in this most encouraging work, which has now been in existence for some twelve years, in the Qua Iboe River district. A new station has been opened up river at the request of the natives, and a most hopeful work has been commenced. There are now three stations on the river, and there might be thirty, if the men and the means were forthcoming. Mr. A. L. McKeown, well known as secretary of the Londonderry Y.M.C.A., has been accepted for Qua Iboe, and hopes to sail in the autumn.

Missionary College, Madrid.

A REMARKABLE story of leading in a very difficult situation is told by Pastor Fritz Fliedner regarding the Missionary College of Madrid. No sooner had he determined to build the college than various obstacles appeared; but one by one these were removed or surmounted, and to-day the object of years of care and labour is a fully realised fact in the capital of Spain, and an institution of great promise in connection with Gospel work in the midst of Roman Catholic darkness and error.

The first trouble in connection with the undertaking was to get an architect. A capable Spaniard indignantly declined to have anything to do with a Protestant scheme. Mr. Fliedner waited for God's guidance, and at length, when in Alsatia, he was approached by a gentleman who expressed a desire to assist in the promotion of the college project, and in reply to a question announced himself an architect! The result was a set of plans which in due course were actualised in a truly handsome block of buildings. But it was not to be all plain sailing henceforth.

It was not until after a year's waiting that permission to build was secured. When a start was made, and Mr. Fliedner had to answer before the mayor regarding an architectural ornament which looked like a church steeple, and providing a clock and bell. Though not disclosing his own conviction as to the comparatively small importance of these things, Mr. Fliedner was ready with concessions, and consented to lower the tower and dispense with the bell. The plan having been altered, there was delay through the illness of the municipal architect; then there was a change of Ministry. Señor Cánovas, the Premier, was very kind to Mr. Fliedner, and assured him that he should have his school, but——the clock!

THE POLICE INTERFERED,

The clock having in turn been foregone, the work was resumed. Again, the police were on the scene, and to their bewilderment they learned that the Prime Minister had given permission to proceed. Then the Archbishop of Madrid and the Nuncio of the Pope, Monsignor Cretoni, appeared. They were furious at the prospect of a Protestant college in Madrid. They telegraphed to Rome, and the Cardinal-Secretary Rampolla wrote in the name of the Pope to Queen Christina, in the hope of hindering the project. When Monsignor Cretoni took her the letter, she sent him to the Prime Minister, who said in explanation, "You know, this for gathering orphan children. His home having become too small, he builds a new one. We cannot hinder that!" Cretoni's reply was: "I would not care for it in any other country; but here in Spain it is different, and the building looks so very ecclesiastical. "Oh, no," rejoined the President of the Ministry, "we have obliged him to take away the bell and the steeple, and even the clock." "But," continued the Nuncio, "there remains the Gothic window in the top of the front—there is that Gothic window."

MR. FLIEDNER HAS A PASSION

After further delay another interview was arranged with the Prime Minister, who in the kindest way urged the point which was being pressed by the Nuncio—really asking as a favour that the Gothic window might be taken away. This point having been conceded, Mr. Fliedner resolved to make the end of the building octagonal, instead of round "like the choir of a church." The Prime Minister then said: "You have yielded even more than you were obliged, and you shall not be hindered a single day."

"And so," adds Pastor Fliedner, "God had given us victory over the Pope and his Nuncio! More than that, having shown his gracious will so far, God made me courageous to go on at once. I had only collected £1,000 with which to begin, and now I was not to be allowed to stop in the midst of the work. When a child I had learned by heart the favourite Psalm of my sainted father, the 25th. But only now I knew why it was his favourite Psalm, when I prayed myself daily with his words, 'O my God, I trust in Thee; let me not be ashamed. Let not mine enemies triumph over me.' Accordingly, and I could go on building one month after another, and money was forthcoming. When I was last in England, I was telegraphed for to go to Germany for three days to attend a gathering there. Coming back to Madrid in the end of the autumn, the barrel of meal was nearly wasted, and it seemed as if the cruse of oil would fail. I wrote to a friend in Germany for help. He answered: 'I cannot dispose so quickly of my money, but I will still speak to some friends.' My heart fell when I read it; but I went on reading: 'I had just written this, when Dr. W—— entered, offering you a loan of £2,000.'

HE LET ME NOT BE ASHAMED,

"God had sent me to Germany to meet this unknown friend, so that this help should come forth in time. So I have been able to finish the house. We have entered into it, and are living in it with already thirty pupils, whom we are teaching; some of them students, others still in college. God has given us £5,500 in donations, £4,500 as a loan; He will give us also the £1,000 which we still need to pay. For we trust in his word: 'Yea, the Almighty shall be thy defence, and thou shalt have plenty, of silver. He will not be in rest until He has finished what He has begun."

Allahabad.—A correspondent writes to us telling of a largely-attended and impressive Christian endeavour convention held in this city during Rev. F. B. Meyer's recent visit. Evangelising services were held in connection with it, and carried on simultaneously in three centres of the city. Much interest was aroused among the natives. It was agreed by some of the pastors and missionaries to hold regular meetings for prayer and Bible study.

Morocco Missionaries.—In connection with Mr. Budgett Meakin's forthcoming series of exhaustive works on the Moorish Empire, it is suggested that workers in the Morocco mission field would be greatly helped could they obtain a set of these volumes for instruction and reference. Mr. Meakin has accordingly arranged special and greatly reduced terms of a guinea a set for society missionaries if ordered before going to press. The first of the series, entitled "The Moorish Empire," is to be issued during April. Communications should be addressed to the author, El Manár, 58, Parliament Hill, Hampstead, N.W.

Proposed Bible School.

A MEETING was held on Wednesday evening last week at Morley Hall, George Street, Hanover Square, W., to consider the desirability of establishing a School for Bible Study in London. Lord Kinnaird presided, and, in the course of a season of prayer, gratitude was expressed to God for the abundant blessing vouchsafed upon the meetings recently held by Professor White, of Chicago, and guidance was asked regarding further steps in the way of realising the proposal for a School on a larger and more continuous plan.

The subject was opened by Mr. J. Herbert Tritton with suggestions for a scheme extending over a period of five years. Letters which he had received were corroborated by the words of friends who followed in the discussion in regard to the remarkable freshness with which Professor White had invested Bible study in the minds of many who attended his lectures. The West End gatherings included many persons who had hitherto shown no interest in such matters, and the belief was expressed that a period of years would afford opportunity for several courses of study, topical and analytical, intellectual and devotional, for people of different ages as well as varied in taste and experience.

That Professor White would find a large sphere of usefulness if he should return to England, was the declared conviction of several speakers; but in some minds there was a belief that he was hoping shortly to resume work in India. Mr. Tritton's plan did not ignore this possibility, for it contemplated effort in the provinces as well as the Metropolis, and proceeded on lines consistent with periodical or occasional visits to India on the part of Dr. White, should the way be opened. Subsidiary schools or courses, under the care of coadjutors, would facilitate this. As to buildings, no difficulty was apprehended, seeing that such halls as Eccleston in the West End and Mildmay in the North cost the School nothing, and doubtless would be available again.

Among those who took part in the discussion were Colonels Morton and McGregor, Revs. H. Sharpe and George Hanson, and Messrs. T. A. Denny, Tissington Tatlow, J. H. Putterill, and W. H. Mills. Several ladies also contributed views and impressions. It was at length agreed that something in the line proposed was desirable; but the question was (1) whether a School should be established, leaving the question of direction for the moment; or (2) whether Dr. White should be approached at the very outset on the subject of starting such an institution. After a free exchange of thought it was deemed well to leave the issue for the present, Mr. Tritton undertaking in the meantime to send a loving message to Professor White, with the intimation that it would be a joy to see him again in England if the way should be made plain. It was thought that such a letter might assist Dr. White in deciding upon his future movements.

North American Indians.—The Medical Mission work amongst North American Indians in connection with Dynevor Indian Hospital, St. Peter's Reservation, Manitoba, continues to thrive. Miss Lockhart, who went out from England last year, is practically alone owing to the death of Dr. Rolston. The beds in the hospital are all filled, and the need of workers and funds is great. Communications may be addressed to the treasurer, Mr. W. Redford Mulock, Q.C., Winnipeg, Manitoba.

A London Tent Campaign.

SINCE my letter in your issue of December 8, in which I sought to set forth the "Golden Opportunity" presented to the evangelistic forces in London to reach the suburban population of this great city by means of tents worked on the lines of the Great American Tent, I have received numerous communications as to methods, &c., and I rejoice to find that there are so many hearts hungry for such a movement.

Now that the time is at hand when such work might be commenced, will you allow me again to call forth the prayerful sympathy of the Lord's people to such an effort.

THE NEED IS APPARENT EVERYWHERE; in every district of London there are thousands unreached by present methods. Who can look upon these without a yearning desire to tell them of the Saviour, and seek to win them for Him?

The suggestion is to have large tents, seating from 1,500 to 3,000 each, erected and worked in several districts. It may seem to some that such tents cannot be filled, but the experience of last summer demonstrates beyond doubt what has been often stated before—that people who live and move in crowds can be reached easier in large than in small places. Proof of this is seen in the enlarged display in connection with things of the world, such as theatres, public-houses, and business premises generally, so that with proper conditions the larger the enterprise the greater the success.

The question naturally arises, Who is going to preach and have the ability to hold these crowds day by day? My answer to this is, that when believers in any place unite their faith and enthusiasm, victory is sure. The matter of the human ability of the preacher does not count for much, for God still chooses the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty, that no flesh should glory in his presence. Capable evangelists, however, are available for such a work, and have it on their hearts to join hands in this special tent movement. As to suitable sites for the erection of such tents, there is no great difficulty to secure good positions where there is local interest in the work.

The amount required to carry through the above project should be no barrier, for every Christian heart touched by the finger of divine love would not only rejoice to see London in every part moved for God, but all to whom our Lord has entrusted this world's goods would esteem it a privilege to give willingly to such an effort.

What I desire to impress upon all your readers is (1) that the work can be done; (2) that the people when thus reached are soon interested and influenced by the Gospel; (3) that as soon a responsible committee is formed, arrangements to commence the work will begin at once. LEONARD WEAVER.

25, Park Avenue, Willesden Green, N.W.

London City Mission.—At the invitation of the Lord Mayor, a conversazione on behalf of the City Mission's operations in the central and east-end districts was recently held in the Mansion House. The Lord Mayor spoke very sympathetically of the society's work in Billingsgate and the Central markets, among the police and the public houses, &c. Mr. James Dunn, district secretary, and Mr. Crozier, missionary, voiced the work and claims of the mission, and Revs. W. H. Griffith Thomas and Dr. C. Moinet supported with able addresses.

THE LATE

Dr. J. A. Spurgeon.

THURSDAY morning last brought the sad news that the well known and widely esteemed brother of the late Pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle had died while on a railway journey. Travelling from the city to Croydon, he seems to have been taken ill and incapacitated from leaving the train at his destination; he was accordingly taken on to Preston Park, near Brighton, where a ticket collector found him lifeless in a sitting posture.

JAMES ARCHER SPURGEON was born at Braintree, Essex, in 1837, and was accordingly sixty-two years of age. His father, Rev. John Spurgeon, was at that time pastor of an Independent Church at Tollesbury, and it has been granted to him to survive both his ministerial sons. A man of exceptional ability and no ordinary attainments, "Mr. James," as he was styled for many years in Tabernacle circles, was long overshadowed by his more celebrated brother, with whom he was associated as co-pastor, as well as being of very great assistance in connection with his various educational and philanthropic undertakings. The two worked admirably together; their confidence was mutual, and their affection reciprocal. Wherein the qualities of the two men differed, the differences were not divisive but complementary. In the judgment of careful observers the administrative abilities of "Mr. James" were as needful as the bold origination and strong direction of "C. H. S." The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him seven years ago by Colgate University, New York, and that of LL.D. by Olivet College.

From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, Baker Street, W.C.

Both brothers early took their place in the Baptist ministry, and the younger went through the full curriculum of study at Regent's Park College. In due course he entered upon work at Southampton in succession to Dr. Alex. McLaren; and coming to London in 1862 he laboured for a while in Cornwall Road, Bayswater. At the opening of 1868 he was elected to serve as co-pastor at the Tabernacle, and in conjunction with his brother he spent many happy years, proving himself a useful man of business, and doing much to direct the affairs of the church, the college, and the orphanage. These duties and cares by no means absorbed his attention, however, so in 1869 he undertook a pastorate at Croydon. From an iron hall with twenty-nine members, the work grew to its present proportions; the West Croydon Chapel, with spacious school and lecture rooms, being one of the most important centres of spiritual activity in the district. The thirty years of labour has been attended by the Divine blessing in a rich degree; and it is a pleasure to record that the fellowship is made up of busy workers who have covered the district with Christian agencies.

As a preacher, Dr. Spurgeon had good parts. His sermons afforded evidence of diligent study and varied attainment, and compared very favourably with those of many men devoted more exclusively to the ministry of the Word. Preaching without MS. or pulpit notes, his style was fluent and his language felicitous, abounding with choice and original metaphors and similes. He had the making of an orator, though he did not seem to have cultivated oratory as an art. Dr. Spurgeon was decidedly evangelical in his preaching, and always in earnest when enforcing the claims of the Gospel or enlarging upon its wondrous provision. On one occasion, in the days of "C. H. S.," he was accosted by an Irishman who was in doubt as to which of the pastors he had been listening to, and he addressed to him the question, "Sure, and are you your brother?" The question may excite a smile, but it was an unwitting tribute to the excellence of the discourse.

On Sunday morning last, preaching in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon bore a loving tribute to the memory of his uncle. The pulpit was draped in black, in token of the esteem in which the lamented pastor was held. "Mr. Tom" spoke of the service rendered by his uncle to the Stockwell Orphanage, of which he was the able president, also of his honourable connection with the College, the Colportage Association, and the Conference. The sympathy of the audience was bespoken for the bereaved family, and for the veteran father, now nearly eighty-nine years of age, and bereaved of both sons. Despite his latest grief the aged disciple is still able to bless the name of the Lord.

As is well-known, Dr. Spurgeon was not officially connected with the Metropolitan Tabernacle during recent years. He was still, however, a vice-president of the Pastors' College Evangelical Association, and president and treasurer of the Stockwell Orphanage. In April last he was elected vice-president of the Baptist Union, and was looking forward to succeeding to the presidency at the meeting to take place in London three weeks hence. Dr. Spurgeon was much interested in gardening and technical arts. He has left a widow (daughter of the late Mr. James Withers, of Reading) and two children, a son and a daughter. He had for some time been in uncertain health, and his medical attendant, Dr. C. W. Philpot, had no hesitation in attributing his death to natural causes, thus dispensing with the necessity of a coroner's inquest.

The remains were interred on Tuesday at Croydon, where Dr. Spurgeon's mother lies buried.

Dublin Y.M.C.A.—The annual meeting was held in the gymnasium of the association in Sackville Street, under the presidency of Mr. W. Fry, jun., J.P. The association has upon its roll 290 members, 180 associates, and 198 honorary subscribers. In celebration of its jubilee it is entertaining the British Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s from June 13-16 of the present year.

A Lambeth Mission.—The indefatigable workers at the Wesleyan Lambeth Central Mission have issued a graphically written account of their work. Stamford-street Chapel, in an area between the Waterloo and Blackfriars bridges, noted for immorality and ungodliness, has been renovated and made a mission centre; and Vauxhall, in the midst of a dense population of working men, has been turned into a mission hall, and is rejoicing in new life and possibilities. The treasurer of the mission has generously borne the expense of a sister of the people. Many new branches of work have been successfully started. Funds are greatly needed. The superintendent is Rev. J. Surman Cooke, Lambeth Chapel, S.E.

Gospel Effort in Peru.

A MONTH was recently spent in Gospel work at Tambo de Mora and Chincha Alta by Mr. Stark, who had as a companion a young man who has sometimes helped him in Callao. Those who had met Mr. Stark when he visited these places the previous year accorded him a warm welcome, and the good seed then sown had in many cases borne fruit, even to the extent of several candidates for baptism. We give some gleanings from Mr. Stark's diary:—

On reaching Chincha we were fortunate in getting a small room, where we arranged our books and beds. In that little sanctuary we had many to listen to our Gospel hymns, and others who joined in the singing, and some who came to read the Scriptures and pray with us.

Early in the morning we were away on the busy plaza selling New Testaments and Gospels, and distributing tracts. Sometimes a crowd would gather round us, or wishing to buy Gospels. Later in the day we visited from door to door, street after street, leaving the incorruptible seed in many homes, and dealing with souls. In the evenings we saw inquirers in our little room or at their own homes, and had meetings at the house of the inspector of police, who was led into the light during my last visit, and now did all he could to help us. This means much in a place like Chincha, and we rejoice that he and his wife had grace to bear such testimony. On a table in his front room a large family Bible lies open continually for the benefit of any visitors who may drop in.

CLAMOURING FOR TRACTS

This inspector is one of a large family, over thirty members in all, who, when together, form a small congregation. It is interesting to note that his life has had a good influence over the others, and he is much respected in Chincha. One brother used to ride in a long distance from the Campina for the evening meetings. He is an intelligent, well-educated young man, and has a good grasp of the Gospel. An old mother of seventy years, and older grandmother of ninety, would sit and listen for hours to the simple reading and expounding of the Gospel or the singing of hymns.

It was noticeable how many who were impressed recognised the necessity for a reform in their moral life if they would embrace the religion which we taught. They evidently saw that, while a vicious life might not prevent one from passing as a good Romanist, it would be entirely incompatible with a profession of the Gospel we preached. Among others who saw things in this light was the sacristan, who helps the cura at mass, rings the bell, carries the censer, throws holy water on the dead, &c. Last year I gave him a tract, and this year he came regularly to our meetings, and bought a New Testament and hymn-book.

"Tears come to my eyes sometimes as I read the Gospels," he said. Formerly he used to wake up in the morning cursing and swearing, but now it was singing a hymn. Once he was consumed with but now a desire for the Water of Life had taken its place.

A THIRST FOR STRONG DRINK,

Opposition, indifference, drunkenness, and other evils were not wanting. From the pulpit of the large church we were cursed and excommunicated in the presence of a large audience. The priest prohibited the purchase of our books, and set himself to gather the books already distributed and have them burnt.

The callous indifference to spiritual things of the large Italian element is very marked, and many of these people have no more faith in the Pope of Rome than in a hyena. Chincha is a wine centre, and drunkenness is very prevalent. A bottle of wine may be had for 2½d. The paganising and materialising influences of Romanism have opened the door for spiritualism, though madness has been the end of several mediums. Here we have seen more of demonism than in any other place in Peru.

Barcelona Cottage Hospital.

TWENTY years ago next autumn the first steps were taken at Barcelona to provide a place of refuge in sickness for Protestants. Since then the Lord has led us on, so that now Protestant patients from all nations and denominations are nursed with the tenderest care by a qualified nurse, an earnest Christian, in a well-appointed cottage hospital, which is our freehold property. Patients from England, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, and Norway were received, besides Spanish Protestants. Several of the former on leaving expressed their gratitude that they had not only found healing of their bodies, but peace of soul through faith in Christ.

But all the patients together last year paid only £2 16s. towards the expenses, whereas the expenditure of the hospital was over £400. This shows the poverty of the people, which is extreme at present—no work, no bread, and therefore much sickness. I trust many Christian friends in England and America will come to the aid of these poor Protestant brethren; help is much needed, as there has been a serious falling off in the receipts from England last year.

A piece of ground has been added to the hospital property on which to build the much-needed home for the aged as soon as Christian friends will supply us with the necessary funds. About £600 will be needed, and the present time would be very favourable for this work as the rate of exchange is very high and work is scarce. Such a home has become an absolute necessity; it is a shame that our aged brethren are obliged to enter the Roman Catholic almshouses when no longer able to work. There they are forced to abjure their Protestant faith. Let friends in England and America show them that Christian love knows no nationalities, but that we feel their sufferings as members of the same body of Christ. ANNA VON MIELECKA.

Ridgemead, Englefield Green, Surrey.

Training for Eurasian Christians.

THERE is a universal consensus of opinion that the only hope for a wide-spread system of evangelisation in a foreign or heathen land lies in the large co-operation of native Christian workers. Applying this statement to the case of India, with its three-hundred million inhabitants, Mrs. Longhurst Ward, Madras, writes:—

"Since arriving in England last May I have been using opportunities to bring this great need before the Christian public, and have been so much encouraged by practical sympathy that on my return to South India next October I hope to start an undenominational training home for Anglo-Indian and Eurasian Christian workers, from whose numbers the missionary societies may be able to obtain helpers.

"It is estimated that to purchase, furnish, and fit up a house so as to accommodate eighteen or twenty candidates, as well as to support it for the first two years, the sum of £3,000 will be required. After that time it is hoped the home will become self-supporting. It will give me much pleasure to supply further information to any who may be interested." Mrs. Ward's permanent address in this country is Foreign Missions Club, Highbury New Park, London, N. Among the trustees of her proposed fund are well-known Christian men in Madras and in this country.

Among the Maoris.

IN a letter from Rawei, the Maori evangelist who visited this country in 1896-7, he says:—"We are now established in our homeland, and in future will devote our lives to the work of proclaiming to the Maoris the Gospel of Jesus. I have obtained a block of land in the centre of a native settlement, while within 30 miles or so are at least a dozen other villages, so that the opportunities for working for God are abundant. We are anxious to be able to take into our mission home a number of female native children to train for Christian life and usefulness. We have expended all our funds on land, house, furniture, &c., and will need to receive £50 yearly to enable us to carry out the work. I intend, meantime, to visit the various Maori villages around our district and conduct services."

The modest and economic character of the scheme, combined with the disinterestedness and devotion of our friend, will, I trust, ensure a practical response on the part of many readers. JAS. L. STANLEY.

11, Woodstock Avenue, Redland, Bristol.

Rescue Work in India.

WE have frequently had occasion, in the course of our work for the Chakla women of Indian cantonments, to give promise to interested friends who have listened to our addresses that, if ever a way opened for them to help forward the work of the rescue of pitiful cases, we would let them know.

The time is now fully ripe for us to redeem that promise. There exists at the present time in India a considerable work for the rescue of women who have been made to serve, in hard and cruel bondage, the base purposes of a degraded soldiery. Several women are wholly devoted to the task of planning and carrying forward this work, and among them warm personal friends of our own, whom we can heartily recommend for their piety and practical experience. At the present moment money is needed to pay for a large home which is being erected on land has been donated for the purpose, where rescued cases can be restored to health and fitted practically to undertake a self-supporting, respectable life. In addition to this especial demand, regular yearly subscribers are needed to maintain the current expenses of the work. Money sent for this purpose should be designated, "For Cantonment Rescue Work."

ELIZABETH ANDREW.
KATHARINE BUSHNELL.

I am The Resurrection.

St. John xi. 25.
An Acrostic Poem for Eastertide.

"I am the Resurrection,"
A ll hail, O golden truth,
M elodious love-song ringing,
T o gladden age or youth.
H e is our life, our glory,
E ternal is the song,
R ejoicings on rejoicings,
E cstatic notes prolong.
S oul, thou wast born to worship,
U nite in praise and sing,
R esound the triumph welcome,
R abboni, Saviour, King.
E arth rings with Easter voices,
C hrist now has risen again,
T ell out the joyful tidings,
I mmanuel doth reign.
O 'er valley, plain, and mountain,
N e'er cease love's Easter strain."

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

Home Missions.

"Yes, into the Light!"

IN addition to its more public operations in St. James' Hall and other well-known centres, the West London Mission carries on in unostentatious fashion a remarkable number of beneficent undertakings among one of the most difficult districts of London.

The plague spots of West London unite the horrors of British and Continental slumdom. Immigrants from Belleville and the natives of Soho outvie each other in moral and physical filthiness, especially in the pestilential area adjacent to Piccadilly. Anarchist and thief, gutter beggar and professional bully, jostle each other in the one-roomed haunts of the failures and misérables of our city life. To this part of the great metropolis the Johnsonian description still applies: "The common sewer of Paris and of Rome." In dens, or showy with garish but fusty splendour, where poverty munches its crust or wickedness gloats over its ill-gotten gains, the Mission maintains an excellent work.

BARE OF THE COMMONEST FURNITURE,

Among its most interesting branches the medical organisation is conspicuous. From the busy headquarters in Greek-street a band of nurses, under the best medical supervision, systematically visits and takes charge of the sick and suffering, irrespective of age or creed.

At the dispensary, a model of cleanliness and good order, cases are regularly interviewed; but the largest, as it is the saddest, of the medical institutions is the home for the dying poor. Oh, the pathos of these hushed rooms! Fitted, by loving hands, with every comfort, bright with delicately tinted muslins and hangings, with graceful bamboo screens and apple green vases filled with spring flowers, they are beautiful indeed. The wan faces of the patients gleam painfully against the spotless bed coverings. Yet there is everywhere an atmosphere of rest. The good Sisters, who devote their lives to the work, pass to and fro with a smile and a kindly word. In yonder far corner lies a poor shrivelled something which one takes for a girl. Alas! she is a woman, in the death grip of consumption. There is a wistful look in her eyes that would pierce the leaden skies, as the soft-voiced lady reads of the land which had "no need of the sun to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." Yea, poor consumptive, a little more waiting shall bring thee thither! Within but the last week they have carried out six coffins.

But the Mission's work in preparing people for a triumphant finish lies chiefly in fitting them for a good life. Temperance and thrift societies, a servants' registry, a rescue home, a labour exchange, a legal bureau, a crêche, and many other useful organisations and institutions are maintained; but in the true spirit of Christ-like desire to do real good, the social operations are ever utilised for spiritual ends. There are thirty society classes in connection with the Mission, and the evangelistic work of the visiting staff is a most valuable piece of aggressive Christian effort. One of the halls was formerly a notorious centre of anarchism and blatant atheism. A helpful function is known as a kind of reception to workhouse inmates on their "day out." A sister (who is now, by the way, a Guardian of the Poor) was struck by the unhappy condition of these poor old creatures. They wandered the streets or haunted public houses, and ultimately returned to the workhouse in a state of intoxication. In a word, a holiday was to a great extent an orgie, for many frequenters of drink shops deemed it a huge joke to make an aged man or woman drunk. Now, the old people are welcomed to a frugal meal, followed by a homely meeting, and the workhouse-masters testify to a remarkable improvement in discipline and spirit. "Tell the sister," gasped a dying inmate, struggling with bronchitis, "them work'us teas led me into the light. Yes, into the light." Then he fell back, and they drew the screen round his bed.

THE WORKHOUSE TEA,

Another outcome is the Old Age Pension Fund, whereby numbers of the aged poor are enabled to remain outside the workhouse. Of the humanity and success of the scheme there can be no manner of doubt to one who inquires into the instances in which industrious people, with an innate horror of "the house," eke out their own little earnings with a grant from the pension fund, and dwell, in satisfaction, actually in a garret, but metaphorically under their own vine and fig tree.

The briefest sketch of this cheery, hope-bringing Mission would be incomplete without a reference to the Guild of Brave Poor Things, a society formed for mutual cheer and help by those who are handicapped in the struggle for existence. Men, women and children, sufferers from spinal complaints, some of weak intellect, others partially paralysed, meet regularly for social meetings and religious services. It is a touching scene, indeed, when the assembly of "Poor Things" pipes, with tremulous notes, its "anthem" song:—

CRIPPLED, BLIND, DEAF,

They climbed the steep ascent of heaven,
Through peril, toil and pain:
O God, to us may grace be given
To follow in their train.

To describe in detail the many ramifications of the mission a bulky volume would be needed. But there is the work; let those who are interested in the salvation of the outcast and in self-sacrificing toil see it for themselves, and take hope and inspiration therefrom.

The devoted workers are many, but their methods are economical; nevertheless, the expense of maintaining so huge and resultful an undertaking is necessarily great. Communications may be addressed to Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, 8, Taviton-st., Gordon-sq., W.C.

The National Refuges.

THESE places of refuge for the homeless and destitute are deservedly popular. The large Exeter Hall was well filled for the annual meeting last week, which as usual was a very interesting function. Most interesting of all perhaps were the performances of the children themselves, in song or in musical drill. Judging from the physical appearance of the boys and girls, they are as well cared for and as liberally trained as their more fortunate fellows who enjoy the privileges of parental love and oversight. It is a splendid testimony to the worth of any institution that it has received, fed, clothed, and educated close on —the greater number of them boys—who must otherwise have been thrown on the cold charity of an unfeeling world. This is what these refuges have been enabled to do since their inception, through the generous help of the Christian public.

FIFTEEN THOUSAND CHILDREN

In his brief secretarial statement, Mr. Bristow Wallen was able to report that arrangements had been made for securing a more complete technical training for such boys as show special aptitude for special trades, thus fitting them better for advancement in life As our readers doubtless remember, the training ships Arethusa and Chichester provide an outlet for a good proportion of the lads, who are drafted either into the navy or the merchant service. There are two schools for girls, who are initiated into the requirements of domestic service while their more scholastic training is in progress. As to finance, Mr. Wallen was obliged to report a growing deficiency, amounting to over £7,500. A special appeal lately issued to the subscribers has produced £2,200, so that there is still ample scope for the liberal co-operation of the many friends of these homes, in order to put them on a proper financial basis.

The President of the homes, Lord Jersey, was of course chairman of the meeting, and he very warmly pleaded their cause in his short address from the chair. He made sympathetic allusion to the death of Lord Herschell, who was vice-president of the institution, and to the loss that his unexpected decease must entail on that and many similar efforts. Most excellent speeches were also made by Bishop Barry and Rev. George Hanson. The Bishop dwelt on the sad social problems of our time, and the impossibility of solving them effectually without such voluntary agencies as this. To help these institutions is not only a social duty and a labour of love, but an essential part of our devotion to God. Mr. Hanson, after describing the varied ramifications of the work, commended it highly as a practical exhibition of real Christianity, and declared that it ought to be, and must be, well supported by gifts of Christian people.

Not the least impressive item in the engagements of the afternoon was the limelight display of views illustrative of different phases of the work carried on.

Orphans at Brixton.

THE Brixton Orphanage has for many years past found special favour in the eyes of the City magnates; and it is now almost a settled item in the engagements of the Lord Mayor for the time being that he should give the éclat of his official presence to its annual meeting in Brixton Hall. This year Lord Mayor Moore was prevented by the very wintry weather from presiding at the anniversary of last week. He sent a contribution, however, and the City Sheriffs were in their wonted places, one of them, Alderman Alliston, taking the chair. The back part of the platform was gay with bright-looking lasses from the orphanage, whose sweet song is always an attractive feature of these reunions.

The leading spirit of the orphanage since its commencement twenty-three years ago has been Mrs. Montague, who is backed up and helped in many practical ways by a host of kind friends. One of these, Mr. Greenwood, as in bygone years, gave a summary of the year's work, and advocated its claims. One fact reported was the unusually large amount received from legacies, which enabled the year's accounts to carry forward a balance of nearly £300. It was stated that this would be almost all expended in a necessary overhauling of the drainage. There are 300 girls in the institution in Barrington-road, and a glance at those present in the meeting was sufficient to indicate how well they are cared for. Almost all the supervision of the orphanage is done by voluntary helpers, so that it is in very deed a labour of love.

The speeches of the sheriffs and of the local pastors (who always come up in strong force) were of the heartiest possible kind, and of course nobody could refrain from praising such a good work, carried on year by year with such devotion and goodwill. There was a generous collection, and everyone was delighted at the little ceremony of presenting watches to five of the "old girls" who had kept their first situations for six consecutive years. Evidently Mrs. Montague's girls make efficient and contented servants—a somewhat rare commodity in these days.

Needy Children.—Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Kirlew issue the annual report of their work among children. The year's work commenced with nine children dependent on the funds, and six others have since been received. The superintendents are in constant correspondence with some sixty former inmates. "Our hearts are cheered from time to time," says Mr. Kirlew, "by news of and from these dear fellows, whom we regard as sons in the Gospel. During the year two have left college for the pulpit, and a third has become a home missionary in the very city wherein he was rescued." Communications may be addressed to Taxal Mount, Higher Broughton, Manchester.

Gospel Hall, Sunninghill.—The iron building which has been long in use for Gospel work at Sunninghill is now too small, and is scarcely weather proof. Ground has been secured in a fine position, with a view to the erection of better premises. Owing to the local prevalence of Romanism, the friends who conduct the work find difficulty in obtaining the necessary finances. Address, Mr. John Searle, Bagshot Road, Sunninghill, Berks.

Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.

THE combined annual meeting of the Prison Mission and the Princess Mary Village Homes was held at the Conference Hall, Clapham Road, last Thursday afternoon, Sir Mark Stewart, M.P., in the chair. There was a large attendance. Mrs. Meredith unfortunately was unable to be present, as also was Lord Rookwood, one of the advertised speakers and a tried friend of the work.

The Chairman said that since last year things had gone on satisfactorily in connection with both institutions. As many as 20,000 letters had been sent during the year to persons in prison, that being an increase of 2,000 over the previous year. These letters were welcomed, and had done good. Writing a letter to a person unknown to the writer sometimes touched the person to whom it was written in a manner that was quite surprising. What was wanted was to make these people feel that someone was interested in them. Such an institution as this is not only a benefit to those in prison, but a benefit to the whole nation. The work at the Princess Mary's Home was also going on in a very satisfactory manner. The chairman hoped that those who had assisted the institutions in the past would continue to do so.

Encouraging words were subsequently addressed to the meeting by Rev. E. G. Parr, Rev. A. W. Baldwin, and others. During the meeting birthday presents from the workers, the girls, and the laundry women were handed to Mrs. Meredith's sister to be conveyed to Mrs. Meredith, it being that lady's seventy-sixth birthday. Visitors were invited to inspect the laundry and the work that had been executed by the women.

Work for Soldiers.

DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers are aware that, after six years' retirement, I felt it right to resume the hon. superintendence of this institute with its Southampton branch for troopship work. Thanks, under God, to my good helpers, all is now in a satisfactory condition again, with the exception of our large hall, which still remains almost unused.

I feel the time has come to reopen this for regular Gospel meetings. A suitable helper is about to join us for this department of work—Mr. R. J. Masters, known to so many as the publisher of the "Victoria" series of Gospel booklets and cards, and earlier still as a sergeant-instructor in the Guards.

The hall will reopen after Easter with a fortnight of special services by Mr. William Grove. I ask the prayers and the support of Christians, and will give all information by letter to anyone desiring it.

Yours cordially and obliged,
Sarah Robinson.

Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

Liverpool Strangers' Rest

THERE was a good attendance at the annual meeting of the Liverpool Strangers' Rest, 24, Park Lane. Mr. C. J. Proctor presided.

The twenty-second annual report, read by the hon. treasurer, Mr. T. A. Leigh, reviewed the work performed by the society, the results being of a very satisfactory character. The balance sheet showed that the year had ended with a deficit of nearly £20. Since closing the accounts, however, they had been much cheered by a contribution of £50 from Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., in memory of his son, the late Mr. Gordon Smith. Mr. Smith had also kindly offered to put up a building in the vicinity of the Sailor's Home, in connection with the Seamen's Friend Society, whose committee had approached the Strangers' Rest with a view to adopting part of the building to suit the latter's requirements. They would, therefore, probably have to leave the present premises, which they had occupied for twenty-two years, and carry on their work side by side with the Seamen's Friend Society.

During the evening the proposal to amalgamate these two organisations was discussed. Those in connection with the Strangers' Rest, however, urged the wisdom of further considering the matter, and the meeting finally decided to leave the proposal in the hands of Messrs. T. A. Leigh and Heber Radcliffe and the ladies' committee, to act as they thought best. The proposed new building is to be called the Gordon Smith Memorial Institute, and the idea is to make it thoroughly adaptable to both societies. The building, which Mr. Smith has promised to erect, would cost £5,000.

Amongst speakers who eulogised the encouraging work of the Strangers' Rest, were Messrs. T. A. Leigh, Heber Radcliffe, and Canon Harrison.

Scottish Notes.

LORD OVERTOUN'S Bible Class in Dumbarton has had another successful year. At the recent annual meeting the number of members on the roll was reported to be 454.

At a recent meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society there was strongly urged the formation of a Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society for Glasgow, such as exists in each of the English cities.

Occasion has been taken of the diamond jubilee of the ministry of Dr. Thomas Smith, late of India and of the Free Church College, Edinbugh, to present him with an address of congratulation and esteem for his work's sake.

The Earl of Moray presided, at Edinburgh, over the annual meeting of the Aged Christian's Friend Society of Scotland. He reported that there were now eight cottages occupied by bénéficiaires in addition to the large number of pensioners, and that more would be built as funds came in.

The number of persons who entered the missionary Loan Exhibition, Glasgow, was over 75,000, and the total income was £1,220 2s. As the independent expenses fund had met all demands (about £1,200), this sum fell to be divided, one-half to the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A. (for Southern Section Building Fund), and the remainder among the forty-four missionary organisations which had co-operated in the scheme.

As the outcome of a wide-spread desire for the permanent conservation and guidance of the enthusiasm aroused in connection with the Exhibition, it was resolved to form a Missionary Prayer Union on a broad basis. The conveners and secretaries of the various sections were appointed as a committee to arrange details. Testimony was borne that missionary interest had been awakened to an extent which had not existed in the city for many years.

The staff of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, is usually dispersed all over the city in the evenings, and on Sabbaths helping all kinds of home mission work; but last week all forces were combined in a mission in the Christian Institute under the leadership of the principal, Mr. John Anderson. This has been a means of much blessing, though the severity of the cold prevented the gathering of great crowds in the open air.

Personalia.

Rev. W. Crosbie, of Nottingham, having retired from active pastoral work, has been invited to meet a number of friends in that city on Thursday, April 6, for a service of thanksgiving and dedication. He has been a pastor for forty-three years, and is now over seventy, but hopes still to serve his generation in various ways.

A correspondent of the Scotsman, in writing from Madeira, says: "The Funchalese clergy some time ago commenced a prosecution against Rev. Drummond Paterson, minister of the Scottish church here, for the alleged offence of propagating heresy against the religion of the State. Objections were taken to the procedure, and these objections were referred to the High Court at Lisbon. Information has been received that the Lisbon Court has upheld the objections, and that the prosecution is now at an end."

Mr. Moody's labours in Colorado are to leave permanent results in the form of a school for boys like that in Northfield, Mass. The site for a building in Denver has been bought, and the institution incorporated with the names of a number of well-known New England men, of whom Mr. Moody is at the head. His continued and deepening interest in men behind prison bars is evidenced by the fact that since he left Northfield last October he has taken occasion to preach in every gaol and penitentiary he could in his visits to different towns and cities in the West.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 9.

"The Anointing at Bethany."—John xii. 1-11.

Golden Text.—Mark xiv. 8.

Lesson Connection.

AFTER the raising of Lazarus, the Sanhedrim were so alarmed at the growing popularity of Jesus that they consulted how best to get rid of Him. Jesus withdrew to Ephraim to wait until the right time for his great sacrifice had come. This town was about thirteen miles north of Jerusalem. The history of the three months spent in this neighbourhood is found in Luke xvii. 11 to xix. 28. (Get the scholars to glance through these chapters, and give the principal incidents.) When the last Passover drew near, our Lord made a detour through Perræa and arrived at Bethany. With what grateful joy would He be welcomed by the family that loved Him!

Explanatory.

Read in connection the parallel accounts found in Matt. xxvi. 1-13 and Mark xiv. 3-9, and let the scholars point out any additional facts in them. Also distinguish from the other anointing in Luke vii. 36-50.

Verse 1. This was on the Friday evening just one week before the Crucifixion. Jesus knew all that He must go through in this week (Matt. xvi. 21, xxvi. 1).

Verse 2. After the Sabbath was over, a supper in honour of Christ and Lazarus. Martha again serves, with new joy in her service; Mary is at his feet with deeper love and gratitude. (Picture this scene.)

Verse 3. The family were not poor, as is shown by their owning a tomb, and the costliness of this perfume, value about £50. Mary consecrated the most precious thing to her Lord and Master. Some only give Him what they can conveniently spare. What am I doing? "Spikenard," pure and liquid scent: something like otto of roses, in the making of which it takes 400,000 roses to produce 1oz. This was extracted from a plant closely allied to valerian.

Verses 4-6. Judas Iscariot, the hypocrite among the disciples (John xiii. 29). Plausible argument often based on selfish motives. "Bag" is better translated box, "cash-box." Judas was a dishonest treasurer, covetousness being his besetting sin. It grew upon him until at last he not only stole the money given for Jesus, but sold his Lord for forty pieces of silver. "Beware of covetousness" (Luke xii. 15, 1 Tim. iii. 3, Heb. xiii. 5).

Verses 7-8. Jesus always knew the character of Judas, yet patiently bore with him, occasionally giving a sharp rebuke, as here. Two reasons given for the acceptability of Mary's action? It was the custom to use the most expensive spices in the burial of the dead; why should they complain at it being used for the beloved living? The costliness, the amount of real sacrifice, constitutes the real value of the gift (Mark xii. 42-44). Dwell on Christ's words in Mark xiv. 7-9. The fragrance of Mary's act has never failed. Giving to the poor counts for nothing unless it springs from love to Christ. Why do we give?

Verses 9-11. Two results. The common people crowded to see both Jesus and Lazarus, and many more believed. The chief priests and rulers were roused to more determined opposition. The effects of the Gospel: it either hardens or softens, like the sun; or it is like the two poles of a magnet, attracting or repelling; also rain, decomposing dead leaves, invigorating living ones.

Character Studies.

Jesus Christ.—The Resurrection and the Life, on his way to death.
Lazarus.—The trophy of Christ's power.
Martha.—The busy worker, in the activity of love.
Mary.—The one who did all she could for Christ.
Judas.—The hypocrite, covetous and a thief.
The Common People.—Believing in Jesus as Messiah.
The Chief Priests.—Increasing in hardness of heart.

Practical Lessons.

1. Jesus values expressions of affection. Fear not to show your love.

2. Give your very best to Jesus; nothing can be too good for Him.

3. Loving service is the sweetest perfume we can give to our friends.

4. The measure of our gifts is not their costliness, but the freeness and self-sacrifice and love which prompt them.

5. Let us take care and not judge things from a wrong standard.

6. Do not wait till our friends are dead before we give them our wreaths and our praises.

7. Are we softening or hardening under the loving message of the Gospel?

8. Aim so to live day by day that we may win the commendation of the "Golden Text."

Nellie.

By the Author of "His Boy."

(all rights reserved.)

VI.—OTHER GIRLS.

THUS prayer was answered again, and Nellie's outfit paid for at last. That day saw her out of the poor little room into a house with every comfort, which proved to her a home in the truest sense.

I visited her as often as possible. As far as I know, Nellie never at any time lost the assurance of her salvation, nor had any doubt that she had been taken into the fold. The first thing she tried to do for her new-found Saviour was to get others to know Him, and so she gave me the names of four girls she had known, asking me to go after them and tell them about Jesus. She thought that they would be more easily won than she had been, as she had heard two of them say some time before that if they could get a chance to do right they would give up their wayward life.

So I went to these girls and told them I wanted so much to tell them of Jesus. I found two of them stayed in a poor little room together, and I asked them if they would let me come to their lodging along with the other two girls and start a little meeting. What kind of meeting would it be? they asked, and I said just a little meeting where I would tell them of Jesus. But they thought that did not suit them. Then I asked if they would let me begin to have a little sewing-meeting with them. I would provide the material, and we would sew something, and when it was finished it would be their own.

We started then with these four. At the end of some months our sewing meeting numbered eight, and I had the promise that I should get speaking to them one night in the month about Jesus. When the meeting got a little bigger so that three nights in the month we had a talk about Jesus, and one night a sewing-meeting. As this arrangement was made at their own request, it was evident that they were beginning to realise the importance of knowing the truth as it is in Jesus. By and by a few of them were led to trust in the Saviour.

THE PROGRAMME WAS REVERSED,

Nellie's love for these girls, and kindness to them, may be best seen in the life of one named Maggie, who went home to Jesus. She was the first of the four girls to decide. After a year or so she had an illness lasting a few months, and Nellie spent what spare time she had with her. I am sure she had always rejoiced in the share she had had in winning her for the Lord.

I waited with Maggie through the last night she spent on earth. Another girl was in the room with us—the one who shared Maggie's lodging; but towards morning this girl fell asleep, and Maggie and I, as far as she could, spoke of Jesus. About the last thing she said to me was, "What time is it?" and when I told her it was four o'clock, she replied, "Then it will be nearly two hours till the morning bell rings." I asked her if she was wearying for the bell ringing. She replied that she thought she would never hear it again, for when six o'clock would come she would be with Christ. I do not remember her saying more, but when the bell did ring, Maggie had gone from us a quarter of an hour before. So she was the first of that little band to see the King.

VII. NELLIE'S "ALABASTER BOX."

For four years Nellie stayed in Glasgow in the same situation to which she went at first, and her mistress told me different times that she made a good servant. There were three maids in this house, and I know that they loved Nellie, and were very kind to her.

Every Christmas she used to remember me by sending some little present, which I was always pleased to have. At the end of four years I remember her coming to me one day and telling me that her mistress was going to remove to another city, and she wanted to know if I could get her another place in Glasgow, or if she should go with the family. I advised her to go, as she had been so happy in this home already; but she thought, if she went there, perhaps she would never see me again. However, after some talk, in which I tried to show her the advantages of going with the mistress who had been such a friend to her, she decided to go. I remember parting from her at Buchanan Street station, with the promise that if ever I could I would go and see her.

When she had been away about a year, it came on to Christmas. I was rather disappointed on Christmas morning to find no card or other remembrance from Nellie, as she had always remembered me at this season. The week between Christmas and New Year went past without bringing any word from her; but on New Year's morning I got a letter with five one-pound notes enclosed. In the letter—which was a printed one, as Nellie never learned to write anything but big printed letters—she told me that for the last to make up the five pounds to send on to me to clothe another girl as she had been clothed. She hoped I would have one ready, and that I had just been praying for the money she was sending. She did not know who would be the happiest about it, she said, but she thought it would make four happy—herself in sending it, me in getting it, the lassie that was to be clothed, and the Saviour who knew all about it. And I am sure she was right, for each one rejoiced in the gift. I was able to tell her that we did need this money, and had been asking for it just when it came. And so, you see, not only her time and work, but her money was given to the friend she loved above all others. It was a generous gift, wasn't it? Surely the Saviour could say she had "done what she could," as she gave all she had.

TWO YEARS SHE HAD BEEN SAVING

I occasionally wrote Nellie, and any reply I had from her was just always a little printed note. Last Christmas I received a card from her with no letter enclosed, but only her name printed in big letters on the back. I had often wished to see her, as it was now four and a half years since she had left Glasgow. After the New Year holidays were over, we thought how nice it would be to have Nellie with us in our home for a few weeks' holidays; and so, about the middle of January, I wrote inviting her. I also wrote her mistress saying how glad we should be to have Nellie if she saw her way to spare her. We welcomed the letter which came telling us that she was to get this holiday, and that we might expect her early in February.

We made many plans as to how we could best arrange to make it a real happy time for her. Different friends, who had heard of her often, were invited to come and see her. We never experienced more joy at the thought of anyone coming, and we wearied for the day which was to bring her. There were three servants in the home, and so Nellie was to be spared for three weeks. She had got on well as a servant, as may be guessed from the fact that her wages had been £19 for the last year or two.

We expected her to arrive on Thursday, and on the Tuesday I wrote her a note just repeating what I had said before, of how glad we were at the thought of her coming, and I finished up the letter by sending her a text which had been on my mind for a day or two, "They go from strength to strength" (Psalm lxxxiv. 7). I expected no reply to this letter, but to see Nellie herself two days later.

(To be Concluded.)

North Africa.—Four years ago we arrived in Sousse, Tunisia, pioneers and strangers. Without effort on our part poor neighbours began to come for help. Then others followed, and so from town to village the influence spread. Over 17,000 visits have been paid to us by these Mohammedans. If Christians could look in and see a crowd of seventy to a hundred men and woman, in perfect silence, listening with earnest attention to the Gospel message proclaimed in all its fulness, they would be surprised to hear that the pressing difficulty of the work is to pay for the medicines and to provide "wordless books" (the only form of Gospel tract nine out of ten can understand), and not to secure the attention of the people. Mr. E. H. Glenny, 21, Linton Road, Barking, will be glad to hear from those who would like to take a practical share in witnessing for Christ in North Africa.

T. G. Churcher.

Children's Scripture Union.

FOR the last twenty years the Children's Scripture Union has pursued its God-appointed work. As its name implies, the organisation concentrates its efforts specially on behalf of young people. It carries on its operations not only at home, but in various foreign lands, including more especially India and Japan. The total issue of cards of membership in English for England and the colonies has reached annually 590,000, while about 100,000 are sent out in about thirty foreign languages.

The anniversary meetings took place on Thursday, March 23, in Exeter Hall. Rev. E. A. Stuart (president) occupied the chair in the afternoon, when there was a large attendance of members and secretaries from London and the provinces. Rev. R. Callender (assistant secretary) having given an interesting and encouraging account of the work in Japan, the Chairman delivered an address, in the course of which he remarked that one found increasingly throughout our land that the secretaries of the Union were forming a little oasis in the desert, surrounded as they were by a great deal of false teaching. Rev. R. C. Joynt followed with a deeply-inspiring address on the Bible's witness to itself. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge urged upon his hearers the necessity of unreservedness and enthusiasm in service for the Master. Rev. F. S. Webster took for his subject "Looking unto Jesus," and enlarged upon it, especially from the point of view of our Lord's second coming.

Mr. Charles J. Procter, of Liverpool, presided at the evening meeting. Mr. T. S. Hutchinson (travelling secretary) specially urged the need of bringing the work and influence of the Union to bear upon high-class schools for girls. He mentioned an instance in which on the previous day a lady visited a school of the kind, and out of thirty-five young ladies there, no fewer than twenty went to confession.

Rev. H. B. Macartney (British and Foreign Bible Society) remarked that it was a very blessed thing to be a translator, or a reviser, or a printer, or a binder, or a packer, or a despatcher, or a circulator of the Bible, but with all that the Book might remain shut. Their work as a Scripture Union was more important still, because they opened the Book and indicated the precious parts that might help the soul. Other speakers included Messrs. R. L. Barclay, J. R. Naylor, E. Wright, and A. E. W. Gwyn.

Young Canadian Emigrants.

ONE of the first emigration parties for the year for Canada left Euston last Thursday morning. The party consisted of 166 boys and lads trained in "Dr. Barnardo's Homes," and carefully selected as likely to prove successful in the Dominion. The emigrants have situations found for them, and they are regularly visited, supervised, and corresponded with until they attain years of discretion. The bigger lads are principally placed out on the Industrial Farm at Russell, Manitoba, extending to ten thousand acres, which belongs to and is being developed by the institutions.

The boys who sailed last week had been on the average about two years in the homes. Sixty-two of them were complete orphans, and as showing their original poverty seventy of their number had at one time or other earned their living on and by the streets. All the boys have been certified healthy and strong, and have passed the inspection of the Canadian Government Emigration Agent, and none have been included who are not of honest, decent, and industrious habits. The party sailed from Liverpool by the Dominion liner Scotsman, under the personal care of Mr. Owen.

Japanese Sailors.—Fresh contingents of these naval seamen from the far East continue to visit our shores. Miss McLean, of the Japanese Christian Institute, Dock Road, Tilbury Dock, Essex, would welcome further supplies of "book" bags to distribute to these sojourners in our midst.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Three Winter Feasts.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

WE had thought the winter was over, had we not? But the severe weather of the last week or two has told a different story, so that the following little talk will not be quite "out of date":—

"Now, Mr. Luff, put on your boots and go out with my husband; the fresh air will blow all the cobwebs out of your brains." So said the farmer's wife. It was Monday morning, sharp and snowy; and being a little weary after the services of Sunday, I obeyed.

As soon as we appeared, the fowls, living in a house in the fields, came running to meet us, reminding my friend that it was feeding time. Going back into the house he returned with what they wanted. How they crowded round us and seemed to love us!

Reaching their domain, the maize was scattered, and it was amusing to see how they picked it up. But we had to go further to see after some lambs. Did the fowls follow us? Not one. It was the food they loved, not the farmer. I thought of boys and girls who come to Sunday school and seem so fond of teacher till the treat is over, and then—the class is empty. Some of old followed Jesus for the loaves and fishes. Let us not be like them.

Passing on, we came to a large field where the cattle were trying to eat the snow. Poor things, they did not understand the grass being invisible green.

"Suppose we shall have to feed them to-day for the first time," said my friend.

So some trusses of nice hay were brought and thrown down. They saw it. It was for them. But they did not understand. Just like us. The cold world cannot satisfy our hunger. Jesus brings us the real food; we see it—we know it is for us, yet try to eat the snows of earthly joy. The prodigal did so (Luke xv. 16).

"Come! come! come!" said Mr. Farmer, and one wise bullock responded. At the first mouthful he tossed his head as if to say, "This is good." Then he looked at his companions, as if he pitied their slowness. Jesus says, Come! come! come!

"Come unto me" (Matt. xi. 28).
"Come ye to the waters" (Isa. lv. 1).
"Come now and let us reason" (Isa. i. 18).
"Come and see" (John i. 39).
"Come, for all things are now ready" (Luke xiv. 17).
"Come, ye children" (Ps. xxxiv. 11).

Are you like the one wise creature who came? As the others came not, we began throwing the hay about that they might see it, or smell it, and so be attracted. Thus teachers open out the blessings of salvation.

"They do not believe your Gospel," I said; and as my friend again shouted his "Come," I recollected a bugle call I had heard, which the soldier's interpreted thus:—

"I called him! I called him! He wouldn't come, he wouldn't come. I called him! I called him! he wouldn't come again."

At last, one of the furthest off started to come; then all followed, and we were soon surrounded. Oh, how glad they seemed when once they had tasted the good food! They fairly skipped and danced, and we should have had hard work to drive them away.

"Jesus is calling the children,
Calling to-day,
Hasten each one for the blessing;
Do not delay!
Jesus is calling the children,
Here, Lord, are we,
Safe in the good Shepherd's keeping Ever to be."

Happy are they who thus come when called.

Now for a third feast. I was taking the half-pennies at a children's dinner. The last boy had no money, and so I could not let him pass, for the rule was that every child must pay. Oh how disappointed he looked as I turned him away! A policeman was there, and pulling up his great coat, he dived into his trousers' pocket and brought up a halfpenny, which he gave to the lad. By law that constable must keep the little chap out; but by grace he qualified him to enter, and I could not stop him, for he had the one thing needful. It was the copper's copper, and yet it was his copper, for it was given to him. He did not earn it. He could not have claimed it; but received as a gift, it was his.

I have no right to go in to God's feast; but He gives me Jesus, and Jesus is all I need, and if I have Jesus, Heaven with Him I enter in.

I cannot earn the right, or claim it; but God gives it. Without it I shall be like the man who had not the wedding garment (Matt. xxii. 11-13). With it I shall be like the prodigal son arrayed in the best robe (Luke xv. 22).

OUR THIRTEENTH

Quarterly Prize Competition.

January to March.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following rules is STRICTLY OBSERVED, especially Nos. 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right eight times out of eleven.
2. Competitors will be divided into FOUR DIVISIONS:—
   I. Those under TEN years of age.
   II. Those over TEN and under THIRTEEN.
   III. Those over THIRTEEN and under FIFTEEN.
   IV. Those over FIFTEEN.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "PRIZE COMPETITION," and the NUMBER of the DIVISION to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom" as usual.
4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your DIVISION, your FULL NAME and ADDRESS, and your AGE last birthday.
5. NUMBER YOUR ANSWERS exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be SIGNED by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No CONCORDANCE and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. Competitors must not help each other.
8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Tuesday, April 11. The results will be announced on April 20.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, &c., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.
10. CHAPTER and VERSE must be given wherever possible.

Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and NO PAPERS can be re-examined after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do ALL the questions set for their division must do AS MANY AS THEY CAN, and will receive marks accordingly.

Prize Questions.

DIVISION I.

1. (In Genesis)—By whom and to whom were the following questions asked:—(a) "Am I my brother's keeper?" (b) "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" (c) "And I, whither shall I go?" (d) "Hast thou not reserved a blessing for me?"
2. Who said, "Speak Lord, for thy servant heareth?"
3. (a) Who was the father of the little girl Jesus raised to life? (b) How old was she? (c) What did Jesus say was to be given her?
4. In what words did Jesus welcome little children?

DIVISION II.

1. How old were—(a) Methuselah, (b) Noah, (c) Shem, (d) Jacob, when they died?
2. What do you know of (a) Chedorlaomer, (b) Hagar, (c) Eliezer of Damascus, (d) Melchisedek?
3. (a) Describe the dreams that Joseph interpreted. (b) Say by whom each was dreamed.
4. (a) What was it "the Lord came down to see?" (b) What was the result? (c) Why?

DIVISION III.

1. (a) Who "prayed that he might die?" (b) Why? (c) How was his prayer answered?
2. (a) What king prayed that he might live? (b) How was his prayer answered?
3. (a) Who "hid the prophets of the Lord?" (b) How many? (c) Why?
4. By whom, of whom, and why were the following questions asked:—(a) "Dost thou now govern Israel?" (b) "Hast thou found me, O mine enemy?" (c) "Is thine heart right?"
5. (a) Find (in the New Testament) the words, "Thy heart is not right in the sight of God." (b) Give the circumstances.
6. What happened at (a) Padan-aram, (b) Bethel, (c) Ur, (d) Ararat.
7. What lessons are taught by the following parables:—(a) The Good Samaritan, (b) The houses built on rock and sand? What lessons from (c) Birds (d) Flowers?

DIVISION IV.

1. (a) What was found in Josiah's reign? (b) Describe fully the result.
2. By what act is Jehoiakim best remembered?
3. Give lists (four) of the kings of Israel and of Judah who respectively did good and evil.
4. What caused the division of the kingdom? Give circumstances fully.
5. (a) Give five names of good men (not kings) who did wrong. (b) Explain the temptation of each. (c) Give three texts from New Testament upon temptation.
6. A man scolded by his wife and taunted by his friends—who was it? What lessons are we taught by his life?
7. (a) In whose tent was treasure hidden? (b) Why? (c) Describe the event and its result. (d) Who lay dead in another tent? (e) By whom and with what was he killed? (f) Who sat in the door of his tent?
8. What lessons may we draw from Nehemiah's life?
9. (a) Enumerate seven persons, or classes of persons, who described Jesus as the Son of God. (b) Find a verse in the Epistles to show that God the Father is glorified by the admission of the Divinity of Christ.

The following are eligible for Prize Competition:—

A—Zeldah Albert, Frances John, Henry and Mary Allsop, Gladys Allen, Enderby Anderson, William Aston, Violet Ashworth, Arnold Akers, Dora Aldwinckle.

B—Herbert Braddon, Elizabeth and Janet Black, Ella Berryman, Emily Bridgewater, Dorothy Barrett, Florence Blackman, Maggie and Charlie Banks, Edith and J. Barker, Susette and Mary Beck, Dorothy Berry, Phyllis Boyd, Eva, Leonard, and Lindsay Browne, Gordon Boxer, Ernestine Buhl, Gordon Bligh, Ernest Bond, Rose Butler, Lucienne Brabaudes, Ruth Braithwaite, Ashley Bowker, Albert Baker, Corbet Browne, Henriette Bardot.

C—Augusta Clark, Millicent, Lois and Cicely Craven, Lydia Cleary, John Colville, Ida Cole, Nellie Crawford, Mary Charles, Walter Carter, Daisy Clarke, Arthur and Winnie Cox, Dorothy Cooper, Richard Cornthwaite, Jack Clarke, Gladys Calvert, Kathleen Code, Ethel Colgrave, Janie Crawford, Willie Charles, Jessie and Mrggie Carter, Eleanor Chance, Joan Clarke.

D—Hilda, Elizabeth, Constance, and G. Drayson, Ivy, Violet, and Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Pelognia Daws, Ralph and Dorothy Daintree, Albert Davis, Willie Dilly, Constance Davenish-Meares, Violet Dodsworth, Marie Denizot.

E—Muriel and Miriam Ecroyd, Muriel Edwards.

F—Temperance and Wm. Foskett, Jeanne Fancon, Mary Freeman, Hyacinth FitzSimons, F. A. Figgis, Flossie and Agnes Fullarton, Charles Failletas, Louise Filhol, Maggie Fullarton, Bessie Freeman, Aileen Figgis.

G—E. Mabel Golding, Clarice and Bertie Gale, Alfred Greenacre, Kathleen and Irene Gough, Walter and Helen Gray, F. Gibbs, David Gardner, Aileen Gardner, G. Gibbs, Minnie and Evelyn Giddings, Harry Gribble, Nancy and Dorothy Grove.

H—Mary and Eric Hill, Willie Hooper, Dorothy Harris, Rose Hamilton, Florence and Francie Hoyte, Beatrice Hastings, Evelyn and Dorothy Hewer, Ethel Hutchings, May Handasyde, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Freda Hunton, Ruth Harrison, Theodora Hill, Bessie Hope, Ella Hake, Helen and Harcourt Hunter.

I—Ami Inglis, Isabel Inglis.

J—Betty Jacobs, Emily and Agnes Jones, Nellie Jelfs, Lizzie Johnstone, J. Sinclair Jackson, Kate Johns.

K—Maurice Kalinsky, Stanley and Eva Kalb, Isa Kay, Ethel Kelsey, Jessie Kyle, Ray Kelsey, Lily Kinvig.

L—Sidney, May, Edward, and Henry Law, Blanche Lindup, Nellie and Edith Lockhart, Elsie Leigh, Harry, Edith and Eleanor Lowe.

M—Leslie Mayes, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, Marie Meek, Mabel Morris, W. C. Mallinson, Chas. Macdonald, Daisy, Nellie, and Annie Mackenzie, John and Ella MacMurray, Ada Macnult, Reginald Measor, Margaret and Dorothy Morris, Winifred Martin, Margie Marston, May Mills, Annie Macnair, A. K. Marlow, Mildred Morgan, Abraham Mack, Ian McGregor, Hilda Medill, Annie Moule, J. Maconghy, Frank Medcalf.

N—Valerie Noel, Amy and Maude Nottage, Mary and Dorothy Nathan, Mary Neligan, John, Peter, and Cissy Nicholson.

O—Katie Oliver, Maude Oakes, Mattie Osmond, Eva Oakes, Florence Osmond.

P—Ethel and Kathleen Pasley, John Pearce, Mary Plumb, Muriel Patten, Winnie Page, Jessie Palmer, Hattie Peters, Willie Petter, Ruth Pledger, Kathleen Pincott, Gladys and Isabel Phipps, Myrtle Perry.

R—Kate Rosenbloom, Nora Read, C. Alice Reid, Marjorie Rainey, Willie Rigby, Herbert Rainey, Willie Rogers.

S—Margery Smart, Muriel and Rosetta Sherwin, Esther Simmons, Betty Stocks, Eric and Gladys Shaw, Evelyn and Vera Stapylton, D. D. and T. M. Stanier, Kathleen and Douglas Shepherd, Florrie Smith, Flora Simmons, Madeline Smith, Kathleen Scorer, Philip Southam, Solomon Stockfish, Gladys Stockman, Mary Symon, May Short, Joseph Stephens, Ivy Sherwin, Undine and Gwendoline Shaw, Cecil and Annette Stirling, Bessie Symes, Janet and Sydney Speed, Violet Salvesen, Ronald Studd, Lilian Sargeant, Bessie Scantlebury, W. Stangoe, Hilda Schaeffer.

T—Marjorie Tracey, Janet Themson, Alice Thompson, Herbert and Frank Tomkins, A. P. Derwent, and Edwin Turnbull, John Thomson, Florence and Eileen Tomlinson, Frank Thompson, Elsie Thorne.

V—Kenneth Vining.

W—Edith Wallis, Greta Watson, Edith and Edward Wheeler, Edith Whiting, Dorothy White, Cecile, Noel, and Phillis Wright, Leonard Wall, Louisa Walker, Robert Weddell, Ethel and Ella Williamson, Winnie and Chas. Williams, Madge Wilson, Pringle Wilson, Chas. Wingrave, Thomas Weddell, Madelina Woodford, Violet Walker.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

ANSWERS TO BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 168).

1. (a and b) The poor in spirit are promised the Kingdom of Heaven; the mourners shall be comforted; the meek shall inherit the earth; those that hunger and thirst after righteousness shall be filled; the merciful shall obtain mercy; the pure in heart shall see God; the peacemakers shall be the children of God, and those that are persecuted for righteousness' sake shall have the Kingdom of Heaven.
2. Matt. vi. 1-4.
3. (a) Matt. vi. 19-21; (b) Matt. v. 44.
4. Matt. vii. 1 and 2.
5. Salt and light.
6. (a) Matt. vi. 24; (b) Matt. vii. 13 and 14.

No. 168.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Violet Ashworth*, Henry Allsop, Wm., Ralph, Ernst and Dora Aldwinckle, Gladys Allan*, Frances Allsop.

B—Gertrude Bush, Rose Butler, Mabel Birney, Daisy, Gordon and May* Bligh, Rex and C. Bulteel, Herbert Braddon*, Ella Berryman, Emily Bridgewater.

C—Daisy and Jack Clarke, Lois Craven*, Kathleen* and G. Brereton Code, Winnie* and Arthur Cox, Augusta Clark, Kathleen Carey-Brenton*, Ethel Colgrave, Lydia Cleary, Bessie Cheale*, Mabel* and Isabel* Candlin, Mabel and Ida Cole.

D—Dorothy Daintree, Violet Dodsworth, Elizabeth, George, Hilda, and Constance Drayson, Margaret Duke, Ralph Daintree*, Albert Davis, Stanley Drew, Ivy*, Violet*, and Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Phyllis and Faith Duncan, Mordaunt and Philip Dell.

E—Miriam and Muriel Ecroyd.

F—Temperance and William Foskett, Hyacinth FitzSimons, May FitzGerald.

G—Bertie and Clarice* Gale, Nellie and Hilda Glegg, Mary Gover, Irene and Olive* Grandy, David Gardiner*, Denis and Mathleen Groom, Dorothy Green, E. Mabel Golding*, Stuart, Edith*, Margaret, Jack and Dorothy Gray, Alfred, Daisy*, Ethel and Mary* Greenacre.

H—Eric and Mary* Hill, Jennie Holmes*, Frances Harding Dorothy and Evelyn Hewer, Rex* and Nellie Hatchett, B. Hastings, Francie*, Stanley* and Florence* Hoyte, Dorothy Harris, Theodora Hill, Ruth Harrison, Rose Hamilton.

J—Grace and Dora Joyce, Agnes and Emily Jones, Nellie Jelfs*.

L—Arthur Lamb, Blanche Lindup*, Edward, S. Elisabeth, Henry and May Law, Nellie and Edith Lockhart, Bertie and Gertie* Lockington, Alan Light.

M—Dorothy and Elsie* McMullin, Reginald Measor, Ethel and Mildred Morgan, Mabel Morris*, May Mills, Grace, Arthur, and L. F. Morice, Leslie Mayes, Nellie May, Marie Meek, Lois Mewburn, Kitty Madeley.

N—Mary Neligan, Peter*, Cissy*, and John* Nicholson, Valerie Noel, George and Edith Nash.

O—George O'Beirne.

P—Mary Plumb*, Hattie* and Mildred* Peters, Ruth Pledger*, Kathleen* and Edith* Pasley, Kathleen Pincott, Walter Picknell Daisy Pym, Willie Petter, Myrtle Perry.

R—C. Alice Reid, Kathleen Remon, M. L. Richards, Phillis Ridde.

S—Douglas and Kathleen* Shepherd, Douglas Stevens*, Dorothy Stocks*, Ida Shakel*, Betty Stocks*, Gladys Stockman, Alan and Mary Symon, Marjery Smart, Joseph Stephens, Ethel, Bessie and Ada Snowball, Flora Simmons*, Kathleen Scorer*, Mildred*, Gertrude* and Constance* Scott, Amy Stileman, Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Phillis Southam.

T—Olive Tritton, H. and Wm. Toller, A. P., Herbert, E. L. and Derwent Turnbull, Herbert and Frank Tomkins, Frank* and Alice* Thompson.
V—Kenneth Vining.
W—Ella Williamson*, Dorothy Woodforde, Phillis, Cecile, and Noel Wright, Edith and Edward Wheeler, Edith and Gwendoline Wallis, Dorothy White, Madeline Woodford, Leonard* Wall, Greta Watson*, Evelyn Wood, Sydney Wisdom.

No. 167.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—J. H. Archer*, Irene Ashdown*, Minnie Alcock, William Aston, Enderby Anderson.
B—A. Bridges*, R. Bulteel, Edith Badham*, James Barker*, Lily and Gordon* Boxer, Albert Baker, Charlie Banks, Ashley Bowker*, Mary* and S.* Beck, Teresa, Frank and Lilian Blackie, Mary Bryant*, Louis Berthé, Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Buhl*, Henriette Bardot*, Edith Barker, John Benger, Maud and Sylvia Barrett, Rhoda and Ruth Braithwaite, Allen and Massy Baker, Annie Brisland.
C—B. M. Cashford*, Edith Corrick, Daisy Clarke, Guy and Oscar Cross, Jessie* and Walter* Carter, Richard Cornthwaite*, Herbert Clark, Gladys and Beryl Calvert, Willie and Mary Charles, Lydia Cleary, Marjorie Coleman, Alice Craig, Alice Cady, Janie and Nellie Crawford.
D—Gordon Duncan, Ethel and Mai Davidson, Cecil Darley, Muriel Davy*, Catherine Darke, Harold Davis, Dorothy and Marjory* Dyke, Albert Davis, Vera Dickinson, Blossom Davis*, William Dilly* Constance Devenish-Meares.
E—Maud Eddy, Muriel Edwards*.
F—Bessie, Kate, Maggie, Mabel and Eva Fletcher, Aileen and F A. Figgis, Maggie*, Agnes and Flossy* Fullarton, Janet Fawkes*, Jeanne Faucon*, Louise Filhol, Marian Freegard*, Charles Failletaz, Mary* and Bessie Freeman, Arthur*, Reginald and Ernest Findlay, Lawrence and Richard Farmer.
G—Ivan Garrod, M. Greenleaf, Olive Grandy*, E. Grieve, Dorothy Green, Hedley and Daisy George, Aileen Gardner, Agnes Grierson, Mary Gimson, Winnie, Nancy and Dorothy Grove, Thos. Groombridge, Helen Gray, Harry Gribble, Dorothy Garfit, Alfred Gibbs*, Mary Glass, Evelyn* and Minnie* Giddings.
H—Rose Hamilton, Theodora Hill*, Ruth Harrison, Elsie and Dorothy Hanson, Bessie Hope, Beatrice Hastings, Helen and Harcourt Hunter, Kathleen Hughes, Florence Hoyte*, Ella Hake, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Georgette Hoffmann, May and Sandy Handsayde, Violet Holford*, Ethel Hutchings*, Gladys and Netta Hussey.
I—Ami and Isabel Inglis, Mary Inglis.
J—Emily Jones, Lizzie Johnstone, J. Sinclair Jackson, Dora Jay*, Kathleen James, Nellie Jelfs*, Kate Johns*.
K—Jeanie Kyle, Hélène Keoune, Ray* and Ethel Kelsey*, Lily Kinvig, Philippa Kerr, Flossie Key*.
L—Harry, Norah and Edith Lowe, Alan Light, Millie Laidlaw, Elsie and Guinefred* Leigh.
M—J. and Barbara* Maconchy, Edith Monet, Kathleen McClure, Margaret Macphee, Daisie* and Tita Mackenzie, Bella* and Abraham* Mack, Ada Macnutt, John and Ella MacMurray, Mabel Morris, Arnold Maitland Dougall, Bruce Malaher, Ian and Eliza McGregor, Margaret* and Dorothy* Morris, Lillie Mallory, Winnie* and Mabelle Mountstephen, A. R. Marlow*, Valerie and Mary Maitland-Kirwan, Annie Moule*, Dugald and Kate McGilp, Frank Medcalf, Charlotte Millar*, Charles Macdonald*, Hilda Medill*, Nellie* Daisy* and Annie* Mackenzie, Evelyn* and Gwendoline* Moir, Christina Marshall, Annie Macnair, Maggie Munro, Louis Maclachlan.
N—Dorothy Northover, John and Peter Nicholson.
O—F. A. and Mattie Osmond, Katie Oliver*, Muriel Oldfield*, Olive Oxley, Eva Oakes.
P—Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Dorothy* and Muriel Patten, J. E. Pearce*, Clarice, Geoffray and Percy Peach, Evelyn Pechey*, Vera Petrides, Willie Palmer*.
R—Marjorie and Herbert Rainey, A. M. Roberts, Willie Rogers, Gussie and Marion Roach.
S—May Short*, Lilian Sargeant*, W. Stangos, Edward Short*, Charles Saunders*, Dorothy Stalker*, McLeod Staight, Evelyn* and Violet* Shaw, Rosetta and Muriel Sherwin, Agnes Shields*, Bessie Symes*, Hilda Schaeffer, Constance Scott*, Bessie Scantlebury*, Bertha Stocker, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Florrie Smith, Violet Salvesen, Madeline Smith*, Vera Stapylton*, Annette Stirling, Eric, Gladys, Gwendoline and Undine Shaw, Ronald Studd.
T—E. Thorne*, Olive Trench, Olive Tritton, Frank Thompson, Herbert and Frank Tomkins, Janet* and John Thomson*, Alice Truelove*, Nannie* and Louie Tibbits*, Herbert Toller, Marjorie Tracey.
V—Nellie Vickers, Gertrude Vellacott*, Kenneth Vining.
W—F. K. White, Ethel and W. H.* Williamson, Charles and Winnie Williams, Pringle Wilson*, Dorothy White, Leonard Wall, Robert and Thomas Weddell, Ruby Wilkins, Arthur and Violet Walker.
Y—Gladys Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

Correct answers received from:—

Nos. 149, 150, 151, 152—E. Selby-Little (China). No. 160—Elsie and Alice Henderson, Ruth Sprigg. No. 161—Elsie Henderson, Daisy McArthur. Louise Berthé. No. 162—Llewellyn and Queenie Dale. No. 163—Eliza and Jean Scott (Canada), Llewellyn Dale, Louis Berthé, Ivan, Rotha* and Lottie* St. George. No. 166—Kate*, Nettie and Ina Thomson (Bulgaria).

Personal.

Herbert Clark, Leonard Ling, Katie and Leonard Picknell.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers."

Jenie Kyle, Beatrice Lay.—Many thanks for your interesting letter.

Jennie Holmes, Rose Butler.—You may do the "Searcher" as long as you like, but you may not enter for the competition after 20.

Elizabeth Trayson.—There was one paper without a name. Perhaps it was Hilda's.

Evelyn Hewer.—It was a misprint, but has been indexed under your name. Thank you for your letter.

A. Mainwaring-Onslow, Violet Salvesen.—You had given wrong references to 1 and 5 of No. 166. You must put your age.

Mary Gimson.—You will find your name in the second list of No. 166 (March 23).

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Tolmers St. Mary, near Hertford, to March 31; Holy Trinity School, Tunbridge Wells, April 5. Mr. Hewlett, Kettering, April 8-24. Rev. R. Callender, Holy Trinity Marylebone, April 5; Bedford, April 9; Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill, April 15-26.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending April 8.

Sun., April	2	Luke	xxiv.	1-12	Thurs., April	6	Jer.	vii.	1-16
Mon., ,,	3	,,	xxiv.	13-24	Fri., ,,	7	,,	vii.	17-28
Tues., ,,	4	,,	xxiv.	25-35	Sat., ,,	8	,,	x.	1-13
Wed., ,,	5	,,	xxiv.	36-53

A Bill to license drinkers is before the Legislature of Michigan. If it becomes law, no public-house will be allowed to serve a customer who is not provided with a certificate, and the State will refuse any application if it considers the would-be drinker unable to observe moderation. The names and addresses of certificate holders will be published at the State's expense. Each certificate will cost about £1, and will be non-transferable.

About Books.

STORY OF THE WALDENSES.

The story of the Waldenses has peculiar charms, and to those who have read Church history it has its problems—antiquarian, geographical, and ecclesiastical. When Emmanuel Comba entered the field a new era dawned in the investigation of Waldensian origins and development; and the first volume (of four) of the new edition of his Histoire des Vaudois is as readable as a romance as well as deserving of every confidence as a discriminating and well-informed historical work. This volume is an introduction to the entire history, so remarkable and instructive in its light and shade. In a singularly thorough manner it deals with (1) the Cottian Alps, their characteristics and inhabitants; (2) legends relating to the origin of the Waldenses; and (3) the history of the beginnings of the Waldenses. There are over a score good illustrations and a useful map.

Dr. Comba does not find in the Waldenses—as some have contended—the direct successors and modern representatives of a community who received the Gospel from the mouths of the Apostles; nor does he identify them with the Cathari or Albigenses, as others have hastily done. There were doubtless communities that were Waldensian in principle before the name of Valdo the Reformer was imposed upon the people; and in the course of his studies, Dr. Comba examines with care the views and customs of sects and parties that broke away from Rome and her corruptions, especially such as flourished in the eleventh and twelfth centuries. Peter of Bruys and Henry of Cluny are admirably sketched, also what has come to be known as the Petrobrusian reform. In this reform Dr. Comba finds the forerunner of Waldensian dissent and testimony. With good reason the Jesuit Labbe described Peter de Bruys as "the father of heretics," almost all others appearing to walk in his steps! Dr. Comba expresses surprise that Peter has not been more generally recognised among the precursors of the Reformation, adding that his name should stand with those of Valdo, Wiclif, Huss and Savonarola for determined and bold opposition to the Roman Church. This volume concludes with a salutation to Peter as one of the earliest pioneers of reform in the Upper Alps—one who was in an important degree instrumental in preparing the environment in which the disciples of Valdo and the Albigensian fugitives from persecution were at length to find a safe retreat. (3¾fr. Paris: Lib. Fischbacher; Florence: Lib. Claudienne.)

The first volume of The New Penny Magazine is a budget of useful and interesting reading matter with hundreds of illustrations. (2s. 6d. Cassell & Co.)

The April issue of Footsteps of Truth opens with a good portrait of Professor W. W. White. The general contents of the number include, as usual, many useful hints and outlines for Christian workers.

Rev. J. Hunt Cooke has written a striking little book, Life of King Alfred the Great. This being the millenary of the good king's birth, the story should find many readers, and do something to invest the celebration with point and intelligence. (9d. Burrows & Co., 21 and 22, Furnival Street, E.C.)

The Quiver for April contains several articles of high interest. "The Centenary of the Church Missionary Society" is admirably illustrated and replete with helpful information; while "A Visit to Earlswood Asylum" is tenderly pathetic, and Mrs. Tynan's contribution is marked by all her accustomed vivacity.

Mr. James Van Sommer has bound in a volume sets of his very instructive pamphlets on Scripture Teaching and Christian Duty. The book is entitled Free Scripture Studies and Free Christian Service. (Paper, 2s., cloth 3s.) The pamphlets may be had in sixpenny packets for distribution. (The Author, Cuffnells, Wimbledon Common.)

The National Temperance Mirror is an old friend. Last year's volume, the eighteenth, well justifies the sub-title, "An Illustrated Magazine for the Home Circle." Here are many short stories and narratives, pieces for recitation, and instructive articles, which will prove of real service to workers in Bands of Hope. (2s. Ideal Publishing Co.)

A discussion of Darwinism, at once readable and racy, has been sent forth by E. W. Beaven with the title, Remnancy; or Evolution's Missing Link. (5s. A. H. Stockwell & Co.) In language mainly untechnical, and with the occasional help of verse, the author deals with many matters of religious importance and speculative interest.

Mr. H. O. Arnold-Forster has brought together many interesting stories of heroism, peril, and adventure in a well-illustrated book, In Danger's Hour; or, Stout Hearts and Stirring Deeds. (1s. 8d. Cassell & Co.) The pages are good reading for young and old, and constitute a book greatly to be preferred before works of imagination, which though no more thrilling in character, are often unrighteous in substance and evil in tendency.

A volume of addresses by Rev. Thomas Waugh will be prized by many who have heard that talented preacher and evangelist. Messages from the Master contains twelve rousing sermons and two lectures—one of the latter on "The Dearth of Conversions" and the other on "Is Life Worth Living?" If the written page is blessed as the spoken words undoubtedly were, Mr. Waugh will be satisfied and his readers will be benefited. A portrait of the preacher is a welcome embellishment. (C. H. Kelly.)

Mr. Robert Brown has addressed believers in many volumes, doctrinal and expository, practical and experimental. He has now issued a companion to his well-known book on "Foundation and Scripture Truths" with the title Expository Teachings, together with Further Divine Unfoldings. (6s. W. Wileman.) These are pages of solid instruction, largely in the words of Scripture. Mr. Brown writes very helpfully on a variety of themes, always from the point of view of one who appreciates the doctrines of grace.

The fifth volume of Our Daily Homily, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, contains a meditation, brief and pointed, on every chapter of the New Testament. In the preface the esteemed author speaks of the refreshment realised by himself when, amid the pressure of a busy life, he has turned to the Bible for a devout study of the successive chapters. Those who read the pages will share the blessing which comes from earnest study of the Sacred Volume, always in view of the soul's need and in the power of the Holy Spirit's illumination. (1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

Dr. Louis Albert Banks, of Brooklyn, has done much to help other preachers; but he has issued nothing more useful than Anecdotes and Morals (6s. Funk & Wagnalls). In this handsome volume he gives us between five and six hundred facts and incidents pointing lessons and morals. These practical items have been carefully selected from occurrences of the past few months, and they are so arranged that they illustrate important themes and indicate clear and helpful principles. All Christian workers will find this book suggestive. A combined alphabetical, topical, and cross-reference index makes the contents easily available.

The Scowcroft Critics, by John Ackworth. (3s. 6d. James Clarke & Co.) The only drawback we have experienced in our survey of these delightful pictures of Lancashire social and church life has been our ignorance of the rough northern dialect. Even with that qualification, we can honestly give our verdict that for refined humour, deep pathos, and realism of the best sort, Mr. Ackworth's sketches would be hard to beat. The chapters on "The Starting of Scowcroft Mile" and "Adam and the Stars" are gems of character sketching, and most impressive sermons to boot. We are sure that all who procure and peruse these chronicles will thank us for commending them.

In the pathetic story, entitled The Redemption of Frostown (1s. Sunday School Union), Rev. C. M. Sheldon, after graphically portraying the degraded condition of a city district chiefly populated by negroes, goes on to indicate, with a descriptive style characterised by vividness and directness, how much can be done to reclaim such a population and to purify society generally by the faithful labours of Christ's consecrated followers. The book, like most of Mr. Sheldon's productions, is evidently intended to awaken a deeper sense of moral responsibility among professed Christians, and, in view of its combined fervour and simplicity, can scarcely fail to achieve its end.

Children of all ages have followed "Alice in Wonderland" and elsewhere; and such will find much to entertain and interest them in The Life and Letters of Lewis Carroll (Rev. C. L. Dodgson), by Stuart Dodgson Collingwood. (7s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.) It is needless to speak of the remarkable parts of Lewis Carroll, his varied erudition, literary popularity, and personal peculiarities and charms. The book gives us a good idea of the man and his friends; and of the portraits of notabilities adorning the pages many were taken by Lewis Carroll himself. The bibliography at the end of the book, ranging over a period of thirty-eight years, and giving particulars of a large number of publications, affords a good idea of the remarkable versatility of the subject of this biography.

Evangelistic.

An American Revival.

WE are in the midst of a gracious revival here in Charleston, from whence I am writing. I think I have not held a single service since I arrived in the southern States in the fall, but souls have been saved. On my arrival in New York I preached the same day at Brooklyn, and then proceeded to Enfield, N.C., to hold meetings in a large industrial and normal school, and a number of the pupils trusted the Lord. They had been under spiritual instruction for some time, and just needed someone to go in and reap.

I then went to Washington City for the month of January, and held services at three different churches and at Howard University (Dr. Rankin, principal), and during the month many professed conversion. I then went to King's Mountain, N.C., a place I visited some three years ago, where the Plymouth Academy is under the directorship of a white lady principal and teachers, all of whom are devoted Christians and deeply interested in the spiritual welfare of the pupils. Here again God gave us to see a time of reaping. I also held every afternoon, for the young ladies and young men, a conversational Bible reading, attended by about eighty, many of whom will be teaching school this coming summer. All kinds of subjects were dealt with, the questions being asked at the time or handed in on slips of paper. The Bible to many of them was a new book full of interest.

After that I went to Wilmington, N.C., the scene of the late riots, and God wonderfully owned his word there, and conversions were reported. Here I was joined by Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Morgan, and also Mr. Wintle, of the Pontymoile Mission, Mon., who freely helped in the work then in progress. They afterwards left for Hillsboro', N.C., and commenced protracted meetings, and in a letter just to hand Mr. Wintle reports many anxious souls at the "mourners' seat" seeking Christ as their Saviour. Before they left a much larger number had come forward, of whom many definitely professed conversion. They have now gone to Raleigh, N.C., to hold services. They intend spending the winter touring through the southern States and holding services as they go. They have already the hearts and prayers and the godspeed of scores of white and coloured people who have learned to love them in this short time since they arrived.

I came to Charleston a week ago last Sunday, and from the very first a deep interest was manifest. The church in which I am nightly preaching is a good-sized one, and is packed at every service; even last night, although cold, it was full, and some professed conversion. The interest seems as deep as ever, and better still, is spreading all through Charleston.

Every night ministers of various denominations in sympathy with the work come to our help and join us heartily in dealing with the "mourners," so that other churches are getting the benefit of the revival. The pressing invitations I have already, reaching from Maine to Florida, make me regret I can but touch so few. Would that there were more labourers in this vast field. I go next to Savannah.

James Wharton.

Charleston, S.C., U.S.A., March 7.

Mr. R. Spragg lately closed a month's mission at Cumberland Hall, Bristol, and is now holding meetings at Windsor Hall, Cardiff.

Mr. J. J. Sims has had a good mission at Motherwell. He finds a genuine spirit of revival prevailing and many anxious ones. He is now conducting a mission at Dunbar.

During the past week Rev. John McNeill has been preaching the Gospel with all his accustomed force and impressiveness to large and growing congregations in and around Thurso.

Rev. H. Montgomery, of Belfast, has been conducting a mission in Finnieston Free Church, Glasgow. The meetings have been full of interest, with signs following the proclamation of the Gospel.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith has concluded a successful fortnight's mission at Horningsham. There have been good attendances all through, and several have professed to find blessing. He is now labouring at the sister church in Maiden Bradley, Wilts.

A brief gospel mission has been conducted by Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander in the Congregational Chapel, Sandon, Herts. A considerable number have professed to find Jesus as their Saviour. The whole neighbourhood has been aroused.

A three weeks' mission has been concluded at Cradley Heath, Staffordshire, by Mr. J. Brown of the Evangelisation Society. A large number of persons passed through the enquiry room, and many professed to find "peace and joy through believing. Christians have been refreshed and quickened.

Mr. Alexander Clark, of the Evangelisation Society, has had a nine days' mission at the Shaftesbury Hall, Nasmith Memorial Mission, Guildford. Evening by evening the people came together to hear the Word of God. Christians have been quickened and edified and lost ones have been found.

Brothers Weaver have concluded a fortnight's mission at the Baptist Church, Sevenoaks. All the services were well attended, and on Sunday evenings the chapel was crowded in every part. It was a season of great refreshing, and many professed to have surrendered themselves to Christ.

A remarkable religious movement is at present taking place in Beith, a town of 5,000 inhabitants in the West of Scotland. The work is in connection with the Evangelistic Association, and meetings are being held nightly. The number of professed conversions is without precedent in the history of the association, and consists mostly of young men and women.

Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a successful ten days' United Mission at Farnham in connection with the local Free Church Council. The numbers who attended the services increased night by night. Many have confessed themselves disciples of the Lord Jesus, and the Free Churches have received a decided quickening of spiritual life.

Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a ten days' mission at the Victoria Hall, New Brighton, with blessed results. From the very first meeting there were indications of the Master's presence. The young especially seem to have been deeply impressed. The afternoon Bible readings were a special feature, and the attendance increased as the mission proceeded. At the closing praise meeting numerous testimonies were given as to blessings received. Altogether we have cause to thank God for the clear way in which the Gospel message was presented. Thomas A. Leigh.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has been having a good work in London, Ontario. On a recent Sunday quite 1,700 young men assembled in the Grand Opera House, but hundreds were turned away for want even of standing room. Between 500 and 600 of them arose for prayers, and many publicly confessed Jesus as Saviour and Lord. Dr. Munhall was recently in Boston for eight weeks. He supplied the pulpit of the late Dr. A. J. Gordon, Clarendon Street Baptist Church, on Sundays. He is to supply the pulpit of Chicago Avenue Church, Mr. Moody's, during May, and will lecture daily during the week to students in the Bible Institute.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. Monro Collings.—During April, Haling Road Hall, Croydon.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Mar. 30, Gateshead; Apl. 1, 4, 6, and 7, Dorking; Apl. 5, lecture at the Metropolitan Tabernacle; 9, Queen's Park Congregational Church, Manchester; 15-24, Bristol; 29 May 8, Sunderland; 18-21, South Croydon.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Apl. 1-10, West Hartlepool; 15-24, Woodford.

Gipsy Smith.—Apl. 1-10, Walsall; 15-24, Swindon; 29-May 8, Bristol.

Mr. Geo. Clarke.—Apl. 2-17, Finchley.

Mr. E. P. Telford.—Till Apl. 6, Baptist Church, Bouverie Road, Church Street, Stoke Newington; 9-20, Gainsboro'; Apl. 23-May 4, Leeds.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Apl. 2-17, Sunderland; May 7-22 Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Mar., Barking.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till Mar. 31, Dundee.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—Apl. 2, Bromley; 9-20, Canning Town; 23, Stratford; 24, 25, Chester; 26, Bristol; 27, 28, North Wales; 30, Stratford Conference Hall; May 1-5, Dorking.

Mr John Burnham.—Apl. 4-14, Tredegar.

Mr. William Grove.—Apl. 8-24, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

Evangelistic Mission.—KilburnHall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday and Tuesday at 7, and Thursday at 8, Mr A. C. Burley. Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sunday at 7; Thursday at 8, Mr. P. H. Thompson. Conference of Christian Workers at Kilburn Hall, High Road, Kilburn, Easter Monday, Apl. 3, at 4 and 6.30 p.m., addresses by Rev. N. Vanstone and others; tea at 5.30.

Mr. Jas. Sprunt.—Apl. 2, Reading; 3, Kilburn; Sundays, 9, 16, 23, and Wednesdays in April, Willesden Hall, N.W.; Thursdays, Union Hall, Carlisle Street, N.W.

Mr. Newton Jones.—Apl. 1-6, Stone (Staffs.); 8-17, Netherton (Free Church Council); 22-27, Greenhithe, 29-30, Ealing.

Rev. F. C. Spurr (Missioner of the Baptist Union).—Apl. 9-17, West Green, Tottenham; Apl. 30-May 7, Onslow Chapel, Brompton, S.W., daily at 3.15 and 8.

Brothers Weaver.—Apl. 2-14, Dumbarton; 16-28, Hamilton; 30-May 2, Langholm.

Notices.

Applications for Tracts.—David Clarke, 21, Barnet Road, Nunhead Green, S.E.; H. Beale, 68, Gurney Road, Stratford, E.; Mr. D. Ruffy, 37, Totty Street, Roman Road, Old Ford, London, E.; Geo. Waight, Station Road, Earley, Reading; Mr. F. J. Skinner, care of Mr. T. Reid, Rose Vale, Hoddesdon, Herts; George Templeton, 11, Sheridan Street, Antrim Road, Belfast, Ireland; J. J. Parsons, Buddleford Farm, Teignmouth; Wm. Midwinter, Utile Dulci, Baker Street, Weston-super-Mare; Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cawley Road, South Hackney, N.E.; B. Brocklebank, 8, Broughton Road, Dalton-in-Furness, Lancashire; James Jackson, 23, North King Street, North Shields; John Johnston, 10, Middleton Road, Dalston, N.E.; Miss Kenny, Shorey Bank, Ormerod Road, Burnley; Mr. J. Williams, 7, Slater Street, Burnley; Mr. L. Bury, 16, Accrington Road, Burnley.

Communications Received with Thanks.—T.A.L. H.C. J.C.B. A.T. W.K. J.C. P.C. W.J.T. E.G.D. E.C.W. G.E. A.S.P. H.T. A.P. F.W. M.C. T.J. F.W.H. S.A.H. D.S. J.H. J.M.R.T. J.C. R.C. H.E. E.S. T.F.T. E.B. R.D. A.W.A. T.G.C. LORD P. A.W.J.C. C.A.S. B.H.M. J.R.C. S.R. N.R.R. M.L.R. J.H.S. Mrs. G.B. W.F.G. Mrs. M. M.B. A.B. R.J.H. H.E.L. W.S. H.A.J. W.R.S. T.H.W.P. J.H.M. W.P.H. H.P. H.M. R.C. W.M.U. C.P. G.M.B. J.R.M. M.E.M. R.L.S. B.B. G.L. J.S. G.W. T.L.C. C.S. M.A.D. S.T. C.H. L.A.L. J.W. A.M.E. E.J.B. G.B.B. C.R. T.S. W.F. H.J.G. J.E.G. W.A.P. A.G. R.C. V.E.S. A.H.W. M.H. A.H.E. T.P. V.J.C. J.C.

Workers Wanted.

Sir,—I should be glad to hear from any gentlemen who could spare one or two evenings in the week to visit Homes for Working Boys in different parts of London. There is much to be done in the way of amusement and instruction, and in showing a friendly sympathy with the boys; but I am particularly anxious to obtain the assistance of those who will also take an interest in the spiritual welfare of the boys.

I am also anxious to obtain workers for a Working Boys' Institute near Oxford Street. A lady or gentleman is wanted to take a Bible-class on Sunday afternoon. I should be glad to hear from any volunteer at the following address.—I am, &c.,

T. H. W. Pelham.

1, Whitehall Gardens, S.W.

Kensal Town Medical Mission.—Kensal Town is solely inhabited by a poor labouring class. The women are the bread winners as much as the men working from early morning till late at night in laundries. The mission conducts a dispensary where twice a week needy patients are seen by the doctor and supplied with medicine, an obstetrical branch, and a surgical department, besides a home of rest at Herne Bay. Old and new clothing, old linen, and hospital letters are asked for, and the help of a lady with some experience of district nursing is greatly needed. Hon. Secretary, Miss Emily C. Thompson, the Cottage, Gospel Mission, Kensal Road, W.

The London County Council and Licensed Houses.—A deputation arranged by the London United Temperance Council has waited on the Improvements Committee of the London County Council to protest against the suggested arrangement with Messrs. Meux and Co. for the leasing to them of the Pitt's Head public-house, Old Street. Mr. Crowle Smith, on behalf of the deputation, pointed out that the Council proposed to extinguish three licences in connection with public improvements. In view of the existence of upwards of eighty licensed houses within a quarter mile radius of Old Street, the local inhabitants and the signatories of nearly 500 memorials earnestly asked the committee to extinguish the Pitt's Head licence as well. The chairman thanked the deputation for the expression of their views, and the committee adjourned for a month. The Archbishop of Canterbury, writing on the subject, remarked:—"I am exceedingly sorry to learn that the London County Council, who have hitherto steadily supported the cause of temperance, should be now inclined to make a new departure and engage in the liquor trade themselves. To pass from steady but quiet resistance to actual encouragement is exceedingly disappointing to all those who have the highest interests of the people at heart."

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

DURING this month the earliest of the "May" meetings are held. Very pleasant and inspiring are these annual gatherings of the religious "clans;" they have often been times of spiritual jubilation, and seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Should not the meetings generally be anticipated by a very earnest spirit of private prayer? What hath God wrought during the century in home and foreign missions, in ragged and Sunday schools, in Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, in temperance and philanthropic movements? Prayer unions, Bible leagues, and Christian Endeavour societies are children of the latter decades of the century. Should not praise and thanksgiving distinguish this year's "May" meetings? Eternity alone will be able to disclose how largely God has blessed the faithful labours of the great company already fallen on sleep, as well as those yet remaining, who have been Christ's loyal co-workers in the wide vineyard of the world.

There is something peculiarly pathetic in the occurrence of accidents during the holidays; and among the most pathetic of recent tragedies is the wreck of the Stella, on the Casquet rocks, last Thursday on her way to the Channel Islands. The gloom of the story is lit up by abundant testimony to the discipline and self-forgetfulness of the captain and crew; and by signal instances of heroism among the passengers; but nothing can dispel the widespread sorrow caused by the event. The "perils of the sea" are still great enough to make even a brief voyage full of terrible possibilities. These occurrences are a perpetual reminder to all that "in the midst of life we are in death," and that those who neglect preparation for the end during health and strength are leaning on a perilous uncertainty, as well as neglecting an immediate and all-important duty.

It is in such supreme moments of impending death that the faith and hope of the Christian shine out as points of light amid surrounding darkness. How touching it is to read that on one boat that drifted about for fourteen hours before rescue came, a young lady calmed the fears of her fellow-sufferers by the singing of Mendelssohn's beautiful melody, "O rest in the Lord!" With what depth of meaning would the soothing words sound in their ears:

"Wait patiently for Him, and He shall give thee thy heart's desire. Commit thy way unto Him, and trust in Him."

Few of those who went down in the wreck will be more widely mourned than Rev. G. W. Clutterbuck, the Wesleyan ex-Indian missionary, who was on his way to undertake deputation work in Guernsey. It is related by some survivors that as the vessel sank Mr. Clutterbuck was on his knees praying earnestly, with many passengers around him. Such a sudden death, in his case at least, would only be a sudden entrance into the glory of the Master's immediate presence. The survivors who were hurriedly parted from loved ones, and the other sorrowing relatives of those who were drowned, may be assured of real and universal sympathy.

Watching the faces along the crowded streets and in the parks on a Bank Holiday does not create any deep impression of the happiness of the individuals who make up the population. There is little sense of joy and light-heartedness even among the children. The fact is, this generation seems beset with a greater sense of care than any of those that have gone by. Our literature mirrors a vague but vast unrest. The sea of life is clouded, and its waves break ceaselessly on a shore of anxiety and worry. We are an age of Marthas, and are "troubled about many things." There is need for a clear announcement of the "one thing needful." Many who follow the Master have not yet come into possession of this secret of inner calm and outer sunshine.

Whatever opinion be held as to the merits of In His Steps—and among equally devout persons wide divergence exists—the phenomenal sale of the book indicates one important fact—viz., that down deep in the hearts of the people there is a yearning desire for something better than their present daily life. Else why should tens of thousands of unconverted as well as Christian people of all ages and conditions be so eagerly reading it? Vague and indefinite as this longing in many cases may be, it indicates a widespread spirit of desire such as Christian workers have not detected for a score of years.

Now is the time, therefore, for Christians to seize so great an opportunity, and endeavour, in reliance upon the Holy Spirit, to deepen the impressions already made. A heart made tender is good soil to work upon. The book has at any rate set people thinking "on their ways." Never was it easier than just now to turn the course of conversation, even with a stranger, into spiritual channels. "Have you read In His Steps?" is a sufficient lead. The cry is going up from thousands of hearts, "O that I knew where I might find Him!" Let the Christian believer step in and point the seeker to the dying and risen Saviour.

It is very gratifying to find that the threatened publication of a Sunday edition of two week-day newspapers is eliciting a widespread protest, not only from the religious press and the pulpit, but from newsagents, journalists, and readers of newspapers generally. The offices of the Daily Mail and the Daily Telegraph are being inundated with letters from indignant readers, so much so that the proprietors of the former are showing signs of an apologetic temper. They confess that there are many solid objections to the innovation, and that their motive is simply the desire to meet competition on its own ground. This is a poor plea at the best, but it suggests a way in which the movement may yet be prevented. If the Christian public generally were to set its face against it, this good result would surely be secured. Meanwhile, the protest should be continued with all possible vigour. In a few days it will be too late.

If any encouragement is needed—and who, in these days of persistent attempts to desecrate the Lord's Day, can doubt it?—to those who would stem the movement of secularising the habits of the nation, it will be found in the successful attempt to stop Sunday horse-racing in Dublin. In 1894 a company was formed in that city for the purpose of holding race meetings in the vicinity, which almost always took place on Sunday. The result was the utter demoralisation of the neighbourhood on that day, and the serious disturbance of public worship. A citizens' committee was formed for the suppression of these races, and after a tough battle they succeeded (as we noted last week) in securing an injunction against the practice from the Vice-Chancellor. This signal victory shows what may be done by means of a reasonable and determined agitation. The wisdom and moderation with which it was carried to victory present a model for all who would make similar endeavours.

One of the needs of the times is a clearer realisation of the alternatives of faith and unbelief. There are multitudes who refuse to face these alternatives, and cling to a religion of the non-miraculous, an "ethical Christianity," and other illogical compromises between scepticism and faith. Peter's blunt confession, "To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life," is a straightforward statement of the fact that if we give up the full guidance and leadership of the Master there is no other guidance that is of the slightest value in spiritual matters. It is of the utmost importance that this should be emphasised by all religious teachers, especially in dealing with the young, who are peculiarly liable to be captivated by the glamour of thinkers who retain the mood and temper of faith long after they have given up the doctrines which alone can justify such an attitude. For in reality the alternatives are sharp and final. Either Jesus was the Christ of God, or He has no claim on the absolute trust and service of mankind.

When Mary Magdalene failed to recognise her risen Lord, it is significant that He carried conviction home to her by the simple and familiar utterance of her name—"Mary!" There are many who long for some great outward and spectacular proof of Christianity, and are continually pained because they do not receive one. But the divine comes to us along familiar ways; the supernatural enters our hearts through common doors. Christ can still reveal Himself to his people by the most simple means; what we need is that we should have eyes to recognise Him when He is near us, and ears sensitive to his voice. How to translate the ordinary facts and experiences of life into their divine equivalents—this is the secret of spiritual insight.

Can it be doubted that the sine quâ non of all really effective preaching is "heart-power?" And this must spring from spiritual sympathy. The preacher must feel with Christ in his yearning for the salvation of souls. He must also feel for men in the loss of all things which unbelief brings to pass. Does not much of the preaching of to-day lack the heart-power that produces, under God, conviction of sin and conversion to righteousness? Dr. Cuyler says:—

It seems to be the fashion in these days to cultivate a calm, quiet, and colloquial delivery; but the ghosts of Chalmers, Whitefield, Guthrie, Duff, Simpson, and Beecher rise up in indignant protest, and truly declare that the preacher of the glorious Gospel who stifles and strangles red-hot emotion sacrifices half his power. Pulpit coldness marks degeneracy. Brethren, in God's name I beseech you, fire up!

A correspondent writes:—

I have found the "Suggestive Study" by Lizzie J. A. Barnett, given in The Christian for March 2, very helpful. I am taking the "seven-fold promise" under its different sections week by week, in a very large mother's meeting numbering over 300. We have considered the two first—"Burdens" and "Bondage"—and are looking forward to taking up "Redemption" to-morrow. If one has a study suggested in this simple and concise way, it is easy to expand it by looking up other scriptures bearing upon it.

We are always pleased to hear from our readers of the help they derive from our pages, and commend to all engaged in preaching and teaching the plan adopted by our friend. Our "Day by Day" columns, among others, are full of material that can be profitably used and passed on.

The wave of prosperity which has been passing over the country is still unspent, and there is an increase in the revenue of over £1,700,000 beyond the receipts of the previous year. Unfortunately, the increase in army and navy expenditure has more than discounted this advance, and there is a prospect on a still rising income of a deficit during the coming year. We are sowing the wind, and if the Peace Congress fails in its ultimate purpose we shall reap the whirlwind. There are indeed strong political as well as humanitarian reasons for making every endeavour to promote the success of that conference; and if these are strong in this prosperous country, they are doubly so in other countries where taxation is a far greater drain on the national resources. It is a sad reflection on the value of material civilisation that as its resources increase so do its burdens. It is a great question whether all its wealth and its comforts have really added to the happiness of the race. "Things are in the saddle and ride mankind."

The question, "How is Sacerdotalism taught, and what are the causes of its spread?" has been discussed in The Times, and the answer given by Rev. Hastings Rashdall, preacher at Lincoln's Inn, is that it is neither in the public schools nor in the universities that Ritualists are made, but at the Church Theological Colleges. In these institutions the students are invited to resort to private confession, inculcated with extravagant High Church views, indirect pressure being brought to bear upon them to join in ideas and practices of Catholic origin; but no scientific training is given in theology proper, nor in the wider spiritual and intellectual culture which would serve as an antidote to narrow and exclusive tenets. And for this the bishops are to blame, for they are charged with the appointment of principals and professors in these colleges, and they almost invariably appoint men of narrower views than their own. Till this evil is tapped at its root, therefore, the supply of Ritualistic clergymen is not likely to cease.

I am certain that the first duty of all Protestants who believe that the Reformation was the greatest blessing which the providence of God ever bestowed on our nation is union—a union in which we are ready to sink the minor differences, political or ecclesiastical, which weak human nature loves to exaggerate, and in which we may combine the great powers of Bible-loving Christianity to meet a common danger. . . . Spiritual foes can only be conquered by consecrated persons and sanctified means.

It is in this way that Rev. H. E. Fox, of the Church Missionary Society, urges the union of the forces of Protestantism in opposition to the march of Sacerdotalism. And surely it is a lack of loyalty to Jesus Christ, the supreme Head of the one spiritual Church throughout all the world, which prevents the hearty co-operation taking immediate effect. The Lord Jesus must be "all and in all" before such unity can be operative.

Some misconceptions are hard to kill, and reappear under ever fresh forms. One of these is that conscientious believers in disestablishment have sinister purposes on the national funds which in that case would be freed for other uses. Mr. Bernard Shaw recently said that "the grievance of the Nonconformist is not that some of his money is spent on the Churchman's religion, but that none of the Churchman's money is spent on his." The struggle for disestablishment is sufficiently embittered to make such crude charges doubly unfortunate. We know no conscientious Nonconformist who would suggest that any but private and voluntary funds should go to the support of religion in any shape or form.

It should be remembered that the persistent ignominy which the High Church party are throwing upon the word Protestant—openly repudiated a week or two ago by the Church Times—is a direct contravention of the constitution of the country. In the Bill of Rights (I. William and Mary) England is spoken of as "this Protestant Kingdom," and "the Protestant religion" is referred to as the established form of faith. The Act of Union with Scotland says that the "true Protestant religion professed and established by law in the Church of England, and the doctrine, worship, discipline, and government thereof, should be effectively and unalterably secured."

And the Coronation Oath of every monarch since the Reformation contains this vow:—

"I will, to the utmost of my power, maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel, and the Protestant reformed religion established by law."

Whatever be the validity or otherwise of the Ritualist contention of the "Catholicity" of the Church, it is thus clearly a direct violation of the laws governing the relation of Church and State, and makes all claim to continued establishment by the Ritualists entirely illogical and untenable.

Seldom have we read more pertinent words than those contained in an article in the Boston Congregationalist on "The Art of Living Together." It treats mainly upon the cordial relations that should exist between pastors and churches if the work of God committed to them is to be spiritually and pre-eminently successful. Some churches we have known have been for years in a state of stagnation, if not declension, for want of mutual confidence between pastor and people. Pastors come and go and seem to accomplish nothing where this art of living together has never been learnt. On the other hand, where it has been learnt, says our contemporary:—

The pastors are not exceptionally brilliant preachers; nor are the churches composed of unusually good men and women. But they have accepted their mutual responsibilities. They have determined to see what is best in one another till they have come into the habit of doing it. This spirit cultivated would mean, in many cases, prosperity in the work of the Lord.

A Congregational minister in Canada has resorted to a method of reaching the young which might well be followed in this country. This is to send a personal letter to the growing youth of his congregation, asking them to meet him in his vestry, with a view to consider the importance of early decision for Jesus Christ. We are persuaded that there is too much collectivism and too little individualism in appeals that come from the pulpit to young people. They need the personal touch, the private appeal, the friendly grip of the hand, in order to bring home the universal truths of the Gospel to the heart and conscience. Many may be in just the spiritual condition in which a seasonable word, an interchange of confidence with their pastor, would overcome the hesitancy they feel, or solve the one remaining difficulty that bars their way into the Kingdom.

An exposure of the methods of the Council at Rome which considers suspected books, and places such as are heretical on the Index Expurgatorius, has just been made by the Italian publicist Signor Curci, formerly the editor of the Jesuit publication Civilta Cattolica. He says that the congregation generally never trouble their heads about the Index or its contents, the business being really left in the hands of the secretary, an Italian monk, who deliberates with a few other monks whenever any question arises concerning a suspected book. Signor Curci asserts that the persons who denounce certain works are far more often moved by personal considerations than by any love of orthodox truth; and goes so far as to affirm that anyone can, for a few francs, purchase the liberty to read any books that have been placed on the Index, or which may be placed there in future. And yet behind the judgment of a few ignorant and prejudiced priests are arrayed the full powers and terrors of the Vatican! It is on such a quaking morass as this that the Infallibility of the Pope is built.

The pitiable condition of chaos into which the large island of Samoa has fallen is a fresh and eloquent commentary on the failure of the system of international control over subject races. Every instance in which this system has been tried has ended disastrously. The civilised Powers seem incapable at present of acting together in the interests of the less developed peoples. "Commercial interests," the abundant delays of diplomacy, and the mutual suspicions of officials on the spot, are too complicated and too accentuated to permit the rights of the case a chance of being dispassionately considered; and the central Governments are too far from the seat of disturbance to be capable of taking prompt and calm views of the situation. It is humiliating to consider how far the most civilised international morality lags behind that attained among civilised individuals. It is another of the evil fruits of militarism, which is the greatest blight on modern progress.

Lead-Poisoning.—The unnecessary sacrifice of health and often of life in certain trades is one of the dark blots in many of our industries, and there are few more serious forms of this evil than in our potteries, where lead-poisoning is so frequent. The Home Office is at last moving in the direction of carrying out the recommendations of experts in regard to this matter. It appears that from 1895 to 1898 two-fifths of the women engaged in the lead processes, and one-seventh of the men have suffered from the above trouble. At the same time it has been shown that the use of "raw lead" is quite unnecessary in the glazing, and that a compound can be used which is quite efficient and harmless. The Home Secretary has now notified manufacturers that they must put an end to this shameful practice. It is to be hoped that this warning will be followed up by efficient oversight of those manufacturers who may try to evade it; and it would be well to forbid all women and children to take part in these dangerous trades.

"Because I live—"

II.

By Rev. J. CULROSS, D.D.

THE connecting link which unites the soul to Christ is faith. To get at a man's faith is to get at the deepest thing in him, the very foundations and ultimate supports of his being. Every man is, in his deepest and truest self, as he believes. Of course the faith in question is not a mere easy, unthinking Yes to a few theological propositions, which we dignify as "the truth as it is in Jesus," but the personal resting of the heart in the Redeemer, the trustful dependence of the being on his grace and almightiness. This faith, in germ, was present in the hearts of those to whom Christ was speaking, and must be present in our hearts, else these words of his have no application to us.

Just as the branches grow out of the vine as well as are fed by its sap, so all true life among men is but the outgrowth of "that eternal life which was with the Father and was manifested unto us."

Growing out of the life of Jesus, the life of believing men is the same with his in kind. It is life in the deepest, truest sense. It is life in law. There is no condemnation to those who have it. It is life spiritual, exhibiting itself in reverence, trust, love, joy, purity, and obedience. Everything great and blessed for this world and the next is comprised in this life which we have in Christ. It is above all that is merely "natural." It is above all that pertains merely to sense, and intellect, and human affection. It rises above even that which burns and throbs in angel breasts. We are made

"PARTAKERS OF THE DIVINE NATURE."

Our life is that of "sons of God," kindred, although so feeble and flickering, with that which now exists in the glorified humanity of the only-begotten of the Father. Exalted to heaven, He draws our hearts to the heavenly and eternal. I feel myself no longer a "child of dust," but a son of God.

As the life of the cornfield and forest depends on the beams of the sun—as the beauty of every flower, from the snowdrop to the latest born of the year, depends on his light, is but a receiving from the sun and a giving back to him again in colour and fragrance—in like manner our spiritual life depends on Christ. It is but his life flowing into our bosoms in virtue of our union with Him as our Head. The life that was placed in the first Adam for the race was lost in the Fall; the life that is in the last Adam is immortal and sure.

And it is in Him as life is in the vine root, which grows into living, fruitful branches. Because there is a living root there must be branches. And Christ, the living Root, must have his branches too, and the endlessness of his life is the security that ours shall be endless also. Hence a Christian man can say, For me to live is for Christ to live. It is as if Christ lived over again, or rather lived still, among men. His life is reproduced in the life of his disciples; the Christ-life pours through all the channels and works all the machinery of their being.

But I am met by the dark enigma of death. The wondrous machinery of life is arrested; God's glorious handiwork is reduced to ruins. Those great capacities, those hopes, those aspirations that rise above the stars, those thoughts that wander through eternity—a frost, an east wind, a little accident which no one could have foreseen, and over which no one could have had any control, cuts all short in one hour. But Christ's words hold good in the very presence of death, "Because I live, ye shall live also." This is which I select from many. Speaking to the Sadducees of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, thousands of years after their death, Jesus says, "They all live unto God." It is spoken of the patriarchs not as something peculiar to them, but holding good of them because they belonged to God when here; they are dead to us, but they all live unto God in the great, deep, blissful meaning of the word. For indeed, what men call dying is but the opening of the eternal gates, and the release of life from all that depressed and fettered and chained it down, that it may mount to its celestial source. They are not cut off from us, and we can love them the very same as when we could grasp their hands in joyous greeting and look into their answering eyes.

BROUGHT OUT IN ONE GLORIOUS PASSAGE,

But the words of Jesus bid us look further forward still—to the risen life of Jesus, in the world to come. What of our dear ones who sleep in Jesus? We remember all that they were to us, and all the love that grew up between us. They blessed our homes. To our memory their faces wear a deathless bloom; their head is crowned with amaranth. Their spiritual nature was just blossoming out into the promise of a divine beauty; vistas of illimitable progression were opening out before them; they breathed and thought and hoped as immortals. We who stood in the inner circle of love, and saw them in the unguarded hours when the hidden life is unconsciously revealed, knew how real it all was; we could look, as it were, into their souls. In that life we thought we saw a Divine guarantee of immortality. "God had wrought them," new-made them "for this self-same thing." Our heart protested against the thought that they could cease to be. To admit such a thought, we said, would be treason to love—would be to suppose life a lie, in which God is an accomplice. Suddenly, by a frost, a fever, a breath of poisoned air, or by an accident which no one could have foreseen, all was cut short, and the "fair companionship" was broken.

THROUGH CRYSTAL WINDOWS

Some of them passed more slowly from us. We saw them "wearing away;" we stepped out and in beside them—we in the dimness, to them the Unseen becoming luminous, and standing out in all its great proportions and solemn majesty. We marked the wasting form, the pallor of countenance, the eye so calm and clear, so purged of every earthly passion, looking into ours so lovingly, yet as if mighty realms already lay between us; we felt the last pressure of their hand and caught the faintly-whispered farewell, and then gazed upon the face of our dead in its awful stillness.

WHAT IS GOD'S PURPOSE FOR THEM?

It is not merely the immortality of their soul. Not as the heathen poet sang of one whom friends lamented—how he looked down, arrayed in white, from the unfamiliar threshold of the skies, and saw the clouds and stars beneath his feet. But "as Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." He is no mere "unit," in whom God has shown forth special grace. As Leader of his ransomed, his resurrection to undying life is promise, pledge, type of theirs. "Everyone in his own order; Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." Then is the word fulfilled, "Because I live, ye shall live also." He has been at Golgotha, and, in the central and dismallest gloom of death's domains, He has lighted up an everlasting splendour. "I too," He says, "have visited the grave, and ye who follow Me are secure. Ye shall one day come forth from your silent chambers to immortal and glorious life, your tears for ever wiped away—not a tint of your loveliness perished, but stainless as if sin had never touched you.

When I'm to die,
"Receive me," I'll cry,
For Jesus hath loved me, I cannot tell why.
But this I do find—
We two are so joined
He'll not be in glory and leave me behind.

The Marked Testament.

WORKERS in missions know well what marked Testaments are—copies of the Scriptures of the New Covenant in which a few texts are marked so that they may serve as finger posts to persons inquiring the way of salvation. For years it has been the laborious delight of devoted Christian ladies and others to mark Testaments in this way, and all the world over copies have been blessed to readers in an anxious condition of mind.

The process of marking has been slow and tedious, and quite reasonably a more effective method of securing the desired result was sought. Difficulties and disappointments have been numerous; but at length, through the energy of Mrs. Stephen Menzies, and under the auspices of an influential committee, an edition of the New Testament has been specially prepared to meet this particular need. It is entitled The Marked Testament, and issued by the Oxford Bible House (3d., 8d., and 1s. 4d. according to binding). The Authorised Version is the one used, and the markings have been reproduced in facsimile (red and black) by special setting and engraving. The type is large and clear, and altogether 200 verses are marked.

As already mentioned, the object is essentially practical—the passages thus emphasised will, under the Holy Spirit's teaching, help to make plain God's way of salvation through Christ. Very wisely the selection of texts to receive this treatment was submitted to a number of ministers connected with various denominations, who reported as follows:—"We are of opinion that the Marked Testament will be very helpful in mission work and to mission workers. Having examined the texts selected for marking, we consider that they are judiciously chosen for the purpose, and are not likely to give rise to controversy."

The committee under whose auspices this work has been brought to fruition is composed of about a score of laymen in England and Scotland, and as they are connected with the principal religious societies at home and abroad, there is no ground for suspicion regarding the general acceptability of the book for the end designed. We note that there is an evident call for the book in America, where a like edition of a hundred thousand copies is being issued by Mr. D. L. Moody, who calls a Marked Testament "a finger-post for seeking souls."

Mission to Night Cabmen in London.—The twenty-seventh annual report of this work, which is carried on in connection with the London City Mission, states that the number of licences issued last year, notwithstanding the motors, bicycles, and electric railways, reached a total of 13,623. The registered mortality of cabmen is very high, the death-rate being a little over 26 per 1,000. Many hair-breadth escapes are incurred during the year, added to which their old enemies, bronchitis, influenza, gout, rheumatics, consumption, often lay them low. One of the missionaries writes:—"The men have been most thankful for the underclothing sent by kind friends, and desiredme to thank them. The men often speak of the amount of labour in knitting so many articles for them." The men appreciate The Cottager, Animal World, British Workman, Herald of Mercy, and other papers. Communications may be addressed to Miss E. Hebert, Pembroke House, Oxford Road, Redhill.

Preaching by Practice.

By Rev. G. B. F. HALLOCK, D.D.

IT is wrong to affirm that Christianity is a life and not a doctrine; it is equally false to say that it is a doctrine and not a life. It is both. The revelation of the doctrine was to lead to the living of such a life as the doctrine requires; and so doing will ever be the doctrine's best defence. As some one has said, "If you want to defend Christianity, practise it; act, and let others do the talking." "In regard to scepticism," said Phillips Brooks, "the main method of meeting it must be not an argument, but a man."

The power of the Church to-day, as in the times of its greatest victories in the past, lies in the Christ-life of its members. A regenerated character and a blameless course of conduct are worth more than a whole circulating library of evidences as a demonstration of Christianity. A good life is an argument for Christianity sixty years long, not easily misunderstood, and absolutely unanswerable. There never was a day when it was more important for every follower of Christ to stand fast and to be true to his profession. There is no answer to infidelity like the life of Christ displayed by the living, loving Christian. "Ye are my witnesses." Nothing puts the madness of the infidel, and the folly of the unbelieving, more to shame and silence than the humble, quiet, consistent walk of some thorough-going, heavenly-minded, divinely-taught disciple. It is character that tells. There is a wonderful

POWER IN A CONSISTENT LIFE.

Multitudes of Christians to-day are called upon to thank God for the force of a living Bible. There have been many and many who would not read God's printed word, but to whom He sent a living Bible in the example of some devoted Christian they could not help reading.

The atheist who spent a few days with the saintly Fénelon said: "If I stay here much longer I shall become a Christian in spite of myself." Fénélon had used no word of controversy or solicitation. It was but the quiet, convincing argument of a holy life—a consistent walk and conversation.

"I tried to be a sceptic when I was a young man," said Cecil, "but my mother's life was too much for me."

A young minister, when about to be ordained to the work of the Gospel, stated publicly that at one period of his life he was almost an infidel. "But," said he, "there was one argument in favour of Christianity I could never refute—the consistent conduct of my father."

It was exactly this outshining piety, beautifying, elevating and transforming his character, that gave David Livingstone's example such a tremendous influence over Stanley. Stanley says that Livingstone did not attempt to convert him at all by preaching, or by exhortation, or by repeated and persistent arguments. Nothing of the kind. Livingstone only lived out in daily conduct the Divine truth which he taught to the simple-minded Africans. His daily prayers and self-control; his serene and undisturbed trust in Providence; his reverential and habitual reading of the Bible; his imitation, without any pretension whatever, of his Master's disposition—so gentle, so kindly, so forgiving, so full of unaffected pity for the suffering and love for the souls of all the erring—arrested and charmed Stanley's attention. "Here is a man," said Stanley, "who is manifestly sustained as well as guided by influences from heaven. The Holy Spirit dwells in him. God speaks through him. The heroism, the nobility, the pure and stainless enthusiasm at the root of his life come, beyond question, from Christ. There must, therefore, be a Christ; and it is worth while to have such a Helper and Redeemer as this Christ undoubtedly is, and as He here reveals Himself in this wonderful disciple."

A consistent life is a power anywhere and everywhere. The religion which keeps the speech pure and honest, the temper sweet and kindly, the actions considerate and unselfish: such a walk and conversation are a constant telling of the Gospel story. "My brethren," said an old African preacher, "a good example is

THE TALLEST KIND OF PREACHING."

"There is an energy of moral suasion in a good man's life," says Dr. Chalmers, "passing the highest efforts of the orator's genius. The seen beauty of holiness speaks more eloquently of God and duty than the tongue of men and angels." We all recognise the need to-day of more of this preaching by practice. The Christian life is one long stand in the witness-box; but if it is genuine and true it becomes nothing less than a life-long testimony in favour of Christ and his cause.

Rochester, N.Y.

Notes for Bible Critics.

A FEW years ago Herr Wilhelm published a Greek sepulchral inscription from Eubœa, which consisted of anathemas against any violator of the tomb, the terms of which are taken almost word for word from the book of Deuteronomy. It was supposed to be as old as the second century. Recently a similar archæological discovery has been made which is very interesting indeed.

As is generally known, the oldest manuscript of the Greek version of the Old Testament, or Septuagint, is the Codex Vaticanus, of the fourth century. The inscription just found may, however, perhaps be earlier. It consists of a small marble tablet unearthed at Lapithus, in Cyprus, and is inscribed with the Septuagint version of the 15th Psalm. Dr. Wachsmuth, who edited it in the "Rheinisches Museum," tells us it was cut certainly not later than the fourth century, and was probably utilised for public worship.

It is usually considered that many of the statements in the Martyrologies have been much exaggerated by the monkish chroniclers, from whose manuscript versions we have to obtain our records. In 1897 the Bollandist Fathers, in their splendid series of ancient Christian documents, printed what is known as the "Martyrdom of St. Dasius." In this history he was represented as being actually sacrificed because of his determined adherence to his religion, at as late a date as A.D. 303. His death, moreover, the chronicler tells us, was preceded by his being selected as king for the heathen festival, known as the "Feast of Chronos;" that, whilst being treated in mockery as monarch, he was tempted to commit gross sin upon the idea that he should "eat, drink, and be merry," because his time was short, and that he was finally immolated.

This was stated to have occurred in the Roman province of Mœsia on the Danube. It would seem difficult to believe that human sacrifice, even as part of a pagan cult, should have been permitted at so late an era; but a scholar in the French Philological Review shows that human sacrifice was a common termination to the "Saturnalia" and Chronos feasts in the East, and gives of the cruel character of this worship, proving that in late times it was prevalent; that the victim chosen was a prisoner; and that the permission of licence and debauchery to the temporary king, who was to be executed, was a part of the rites, or rather it may be said the orgies, observed. That these practices were prevalent in ancient Babylon at the Sacæa festival we know from Berosus, and many similar customs are cited in Mr. Fraser's work, "The Golden Bough."

MUCH CONFIRMATORY EVIDENCE

A discovery has recently been made of an ancient copy of part of the Samaritan Pentateuch, which may have important consequences for the history of the transmission of the Old Testament Scriptures. This manuscript, which is in the possession of Dr. Gaster, of London, and has been exhibited and described by him to the Society of Biblical Archæology, differs from all hitherto known in Europe, by being in the form of a roll or scroll, those previously edited being in the book or page form. It contains the final portions of Deuteronomy from chapter xxvii. to the end, but is imperfect, owing to the lower margin of the scroll, including portions of the text, having perished. It is well known to scholars that the family of manuscripts containing the Samaritan Pentateuch is of peculiar value, because more than 1,000 of the differences between it and the Hebrew text coincide with similar variations in the Septuagint, or pre-Christian Greek version of the Mosaic books, because many New Testament quotations, being from the Septuagint, naturally agree with the Samaritan.

SAMARITAN PENTATEUCHAL CODICES

A MATTER OF GREAT INTEREST

The Samaritan codices are also unique in never being written with the Massoretic vowel points, which have been used by Jewish scribes for about 1,500 years. This Jewish style of writing has led to a number of minor variations in the manuscripts, variations which of course do not appear in Samaritan ones, as the cause of them is absent in the latter. The Samaritan Pentateuch is also interesting, because it possesses passages absent from the Hebrew and Septuagint, these additions being, however, almost invariably duplicates of verses found in some other part of the books of Moses; therefore, they are not, strictly speaking, additions to the received text. There are a few divergences which appear to have been intentional changes of Samaritan scribes, such as the alteration of Mount Ebal into Mount Gerizim in Deuteronomy xxvii. 4, the very chapter commencing Dr. Gaster's text. The learned Gesenius, in a celebrated essay, very much minimised the value of the Samaritan Pentateuch, probably unduly so. This is not the place to discuss its merits, but all who devoutly desire to know, as far as possible, the very letter of the early Hebrew text of God's Word must unite in wishing that means may be found to publish in facsimile this literary relic, and thus add one more to the many ancient documents which, during this century, have been brought to light containing portions of the Holy Bible.

Joseph Offord,
Member of the Society of Biblical Archæology.

"Above Every Name."

(Phil. ii. 9.)

Write my words in water,
Write in sand my fame,
On my heart for ever
'Grave one sacred Name.

Pulse of every purpose
Let that sign remain,
Till in clouds of glory
Jesus comes again.

On my heart's high altar
'Graven it shall be,
Through the countless ages
Of eternity.

Lucy A. Bennett.

From White Hyacinths (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers).

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 9. Deuteronomy xv.

THE legislation of this book was a safeguard for the poor. Compare v. 4, "there shall be no poor with thee," and v. 11, "the poor shall never cease out of the land." At first it seems as if these statements were in direct conflict. The meaning, however, must be that the first establishes God's ideal, according to which there need have been no poor people, because the land would have been so full of plenty, as the reward for obedience; whilst the latter verse establishes the sorrowful inference that indolence, disobedience, and improvidence would always thwart God's purpose. If they had diligently hearkened to the voice of the Lord God (see v. 5), there would have been no poor; but, as a matter of fact, they did not diligently hearken, and therefore the poor never ceased.

As we pass, it is well to notice the tender phrase, used more than once, "thou shalt surely open thine hand unto him" (v. 8, 11); and compare these with v. 10, "the work to which thou puttest thine hand." It is the open hand which is the deft and successful one.

The poor man could not become a permanent serf apart from his deliberate choice, given after some years of the experience of his master and his ways. The bored ear is a memorable illustration of the deliberate yielding of our lives to the service of Christ. It may have been in the mind of the Apostle when he speaks about presenting our bodies as a living sacrifice to do the reasonable and holy will of God. The slave who works for what he can get abides not in the house for ever; but when he ceases to be a slave and becomes a friend, then he goes no more out. The inspiration of his service is love, the reward is his master's smile. Ask that you may be thus affixed to the cross of Christ.

MONDAY, April 10. Deuteronomy xvi.

There are several watchwords here, which embody great principles: "There shall be no leaven seen with thee;" and leaven stands for malice and wickedness, for (v. 4) the sins mentioned in 1. Cor. v. 11. "Christ, our Passover, is sacrificed for us; therefore let us keep the feast, not with leaven."

"Thou shalt give, according as the Lord thy God blesseth thee" (10). In too many instances men do not give in that proportion. When they are poor, they give much more proportionately than when riches increase.

"Thou shalt rejoice, with" . . . (v. 11). Our sad hours may well be kept to ourselves. Sir Walter Scott was always eager to hide a fit of depression, because "it was bad enough for one to bear it." But our glad hours should shed their light on as large a circle as possible, on the manservant and the maidservant, the fatherless and the widow, the Levite and the stranger.

"Thou shalt be altogether joyful" (15). But perhaps there may be a bad season next year, or fire may break out in the farms or homesteads, or there may be an invasion of the enemy; nevertheless, thou shalt be altogether joyful. Cast all your care upon God, and give free reins to joy. It will rest and relieve you, and fit you for more strenuous endeavour.

"That which is altogether just shalt thou follow" (20). The altogether joyful is founded on the altogether just. We must be just in our judgments of people, just in our dealings with them. It is, for instance, a shame when a Christian man, buying for his firm, allows his purchases to be influenced by the prospect of a liberal present to himself.

TUESDAY, April 11. Deuteronomy xvii.

As we read this book through, we become increasingly sure that the contention of the higher critics, who say that it was not written till late in the history of the chosen people, is wrong. We constantly encounter precepts which were obviously requisite and just in anticipation of their entrance of the promised land, but would have been impossible in the state of civilisation which was introduced by David, and especially by Solomon. There are several instances of this in the present chapter.

The key to the chapter is given in vv. 7 and 12: "Thou shalt put away evil from the midst of thee;" and is stated in another form in v. 20. This is always the Divine contention, to deliver us from evil, and take away those causes of stumbling and wandering which hinder our growth in grace of usefulness.

This excision was to be very drastic. "Thou shalt stone with stones." Ananias and Sapphira were stricken with death; the wicked man was put out of the church (1 Cor. v. 13). We are bidden to deal very severely even with the members of our body, cutting them off and plucking them out, if they cause us to offend. This drastic paragraph ill-suits the temper of this age, ever talking of comprehension and charity, and priding itself with its leniency towards those who betray sacred trusts. Moses would have measured short shrift to those who instil doubts of Scripture into the minds of the young, or who are leading back the Protestant Church to Rome (1-7).

This excision was to be God-directed. The priest who stood ministering was to indicate the Divine will. And it becomes us to ask wisdom of Christ, the great High Priest of our profession, not contending for a cause, but jealous for his honour (8-13).

There must be no return to Egypt, no reliance on chariots and horses, no multiplication of silver and gold, but a life guided by the word of God all the days (14-20).

WEDNESDAY, April 12. Deuteronomy xviii.

It is an extraordinary thing to meet in this chapter with the perfect harmony between priest and prophet. It begins with the priesthood, and passes naturally to the prophetic office. In practice, these two functions were perpetually at variance, the prophet witnessing against the priest; but in the perspective of anticipation there is no collision, because each blends with the other in the Divine Person of Christ.

See to it that your Priest always has his due. Out of everything in your possession, give a share to Christ, and remember that if you, like Him, are a priest unto God, God will see to your maintenance. If He has chosen you to minister to Him, He will become responsible. It is a blessed thing when God fills the human soul with a desire for the place which He chooses. Let such an one act out the promptings of God; let him minister in God's name; let him stand amid his brethren who are actuated by a similar passion—he shall surely have his portion to eat.

We are to be perfect with the Lord our God; that is, we are not knowingly to permit things which are an abomination unto the Lord. What is abominable in the ungodly is much more so in those that profess to be his children. God does not suffer us, that is, He does not permit us, so to do. If the question should arise, How are we to know God's way? (21) then take the difficult cause before the bar of Christ; He is like unto man; but He speaks the words of God, since He is God. Submit all difficulties to Him; let Him inquire of the Urim and Thummim stone; let his verdict be authoritative. He who is Priest may well be trusted to be Prophet, since He gave Himself for our sins, and now waits to illuminate the dark riddles of life by his heavenly knowledge.

THURSDAY, April 13. Deuteronomy xix.

The Mosaic legislation had to deal with a state of society in which the avengement of crime was largely left in the hands of the Goel, or nearest kinsman. It deals, therefore, with its elemental stage. But the principles which it enunciates are for all time and all the world. Take for instance that distinction in the earlier paragraph between homicide and murder, and that insistance in the latter paragraph on the testimony of more than one witness. Then, sandwiched between them, is the prohibition of removing the landmark, which was set up after the lot had been cast in the Divine Presence.

But Jesus is here. Here in the refuge-cities, here in his sheltering grace, here in interposing a strong rampart between the penitent sinner and the swift foot of the broken law. He is here also as our inheritance which the Lord God gives us to inherit. But He is specially here as the true and faithful witness, in strong contrast to the false witnesses of that and every age. How vividly these words recall his frequent controversies with the Jews, and his summoning into court the witnesses which should attest his Divine authority. The witness of his Father, of John the Baptist, of the works which God had given Him to do, and of the Mosaic law were successively quoted to abash the unbelief of the Jews, and that we might have strong assurance who have fled for refuge to his heart (John viii. 12, &c.).

FRIDAY, April 14. Deuteronomy xx.

These regulations about war are eminently interesting. They illustrate the perpetual principle of the Mosaic law, that when it was impossible to legislate on the high level of the Sermon on the Mount, owing to the hardness of the people's hearts, every endeavour was made to eliminate the grosser and crueller elements, that if the practice must be permitted, it might at least be purified as much as possible. We have already seen how these remarks are warranted by the laws of marriage and slavery. There is a fresh illustration in this chapter. If there must be war, there shall at least be as much humanity as practicable.

There are spiritual lessons here. Where temptation is near, the Priest is nearer. Listen to Him as He approaches and speaks, and as you enter the fight let not your heart faint, for the living Christ goes before you to fight against your enemies and save you (v. 4).

It is also noticeable that God cannot use in spiritual warfare the faint-hearted, or those whose affections are divided. We must be strong in faith, giving glory to God. We must be "whole-hearted, true-hearted, faithful and loyal." We must not entangle ourselves with the heavy baggage or the tenacious attachments which fetter soldiers' movements. No soldier on the march, says St. Paul, entangles himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who enrolled him to be a soldier (2 Tim. ii. 4, R.V.)

SATURDAY, April 15. Deuteronomy xxi.

The putting away evil from the midst—that is the key to this chapter (vv. 9, 21, 23). The idea being that God was in the midst of the collective life of Israel, and that nothing must be permitted inconsistent with his holy Presence. One cannot but feel the close contact of the pure and Holy Spirit of God as He breathes through these paragraphs. It reminds us of fire burning within a vase of fine porcelain. That description of the priests as chosen to minister to the Lord and to bless in his name; that death of the heifer in the mountain gorge, by the flowing brook, so significant of our Lord's lonely death; that cry for forgiveness on the ground of redemption—are all so full of the very spirit of the Gospel. One lingers over words that imply so much more than they say.

We are taught in the next paragraph (vv. 10-14) that it is well for man to pause before he obeys the instincts of his nature. There should be a parenthesis during which passion may be allowed to cool, that we may only act at the dictate of the Spirit-directed and controlled judgment.

What a comfort it must have been to many a despised wife that her child was acknowledged as the beginning of her husband's strength, and that the double portion was his! The use of that phrase throws explanatory light on Elisha's request (2 King's ii. 9). He only wanted to be treated as Elijah's son and heir. And how stringent was their treatment of the stubborn and rebellious son! The ruthlessness of this legislation was yet full of mercy, for all children throughout all Israel who heard of such a fate would be warned and arrested.

And as the chapter closes, our faith looks up to Thee, O Son of God, who wast hanged on the tree of the cross, beneath the curse that should have alighted on us, but which Thou hast put away for ever (Gal. iii. 13).

Nellie.

By the Author of "His Boy."

(all rights reserved.)

VIII.—"FREELY YE HAVE RECEIVED, FREELY GIVE."

ON the day she was expected, I had been watching for an hour or two at the window, thinking to get a sight of her as she crossed the square; but I saw no one that I knew till I heard the door bell ring, and, on opening the door, there was one of the young ladies of the house in which Nellie served. I knew her well, and before welcoming her I said:

"Now, what have you done with Nellie? Is she not with you?"

I thought at first that Nellie might be downstairs, and that between them they were playing a prank on me; but I soon saw by my visitor's face that she was not joking. She came in and told me that she had come instead of writing, and the news she brought was that Nellie had gone to her home in heaven the night before.

I could hardly take it in at first, it seemed so incredible. It was some time before I got all the story from her; but, as far as I can remember, what she told me was this:—

At the end of the previous week, Nellie had come to this young lady asking her what kind of bag she should buy to contain the things she would require when she came to us. She was told not to buy anything; that she could have one of their bags, as they had plenty of spare ones. So she had got the bag that day. She was in such glee over her trip. Different ones in the house could tell afterwards how many questions she asked about what she should take with her and what she should put on; she was continually speaking about it. But on the Monday she had turned suddenly ill, and a doctor was called. A blood-vessel had burst, and he did not think she could possibly recover; he thought she would only live for a day or two. She had been so well before that, scarcely ever been ill during the whole eight years she had been in that home, that it was rather

AN UNLOOKED-FOR OCCURRENCE.

From the first she herself thought that she was dying; and on Tuesday, when she asked her mistress if this was the case, and was informed that the doctor thought so, she told her mistress something which she had been keeping a secret. It was this:—

A poor girl in that city, whom many had tried to reclaim from a life of sin, had at last been won through Nellie. She had gone to her, pleaded with her, and doubtless prayed for her for the last two years. The girl had been won for Jesus some few months before this, and Nellie's secret was that she had got a lady to promise to take this girl into her home and train her for a servant, while she herself was getting her clothing ready, and it was to be finished the day she took ill. The secret was that she was paying for the clothing, and telling no one about it. On the previous week she had taken out of the bank £5 10s., which was the amount this outfit had cost, and she meant to have paid for it and seen the girl into this place before she came to Glasgow for her holiday. So she told her mistress where she would get the money, and asked her to pay it after she had gone, and to see the girl safe into her place, and perhaps visit her sometimes—all which her mistress promised to do.

She had had £15 10s. altogether in the bank, and she asked if one of the young ladies would take out the remaining ten pounds, and ask for "ten new notes." Then she requested that one of them would come and tell me of her, and bring me the ten pounds, which she said I was to use in buying something for myself or my home. She left her clothing and all the other things she had between two girls whose friend she had been.

About a dozen poor girls called to see her on her death-bed, showing how much they loved her. She was not able to speak much to them, but she repeated to each of them that Jesus loved them, that all she had ever told them about Him was true, and that

SHE WAS GOING TO HIM.

On the Tuesday night, she left one or two messages for me, her mistress promising that she would come in a week or so and give me them herself. Among other things she had said to her mistress on the Tuesday night that she was to give me this text: "They go from strength to strength; every one of them appeareth before God in Zion." God had been with her all the time, she said. It was quite true that she had gone from strength to strength, and that she was going to meet God, and it was all right, because she belonged to Jesus. On the Wednesday morning my letter arrived, in which I had quoted the same text. It was read over to her, and she was able to take in all that was said in it, and to answer:

"Isn't it strange that she should have thought on the same text as me, and she never knew I was ill or anything? Doesn't it look as if the Holy Spirit had whispered it to each of us, and told us to pass it on?"

She often spoke about heaven being very near; and her mistress told me she was sure she thought it nearer than many when they come to take leave of earth and earthly things. You see, she had her treasure there, not here, and of course the heart must be where the treasure is.

Just before she passed away, one of the friends standing at her bedside asked her the question, "Do you know me, Nellie?" to which she replied, "I know Jesus." At the time when her hold on earthly friends and things was fast loosening, it was evident that her grasp of the Saviour was firm and sure. It makes us glad to know that the Friend with whom she was to spend eternity, and who had been her Saviour and Friend for all these years, was the One whose presence was realised most.

IX.—AFTERMATH.

The following week, Nellie's mistress came to pay me a visit, and I had a long talk with her. She told me that, having had her so long, she had come to look upon her as one of the family, and had felt her loss almost as keenly as if she had been her own daughter. She said that during these latter years, Nellie's spare time had mostly been spent among poor girls, and that she had been the means of helping many of them. She could always tell them the story of her own life, and of how she was brought to Christ, and not a few girls had been brought to Jesus through her words and life.

The lady had a visit once from her own minister, and he had asked her if she had a servant called Nellie, as he had been told she served in her house. He said he had been greatly blessed through hearing her give her testimony, in which she urged on young people the importance of coming early to the Saviour, and also on those who were old, to come now, for even they would not be cast out. He had thought it as beautiful a testimony as he had ever listened to, and he was all the more pleased when her mistress was able to say what a good servant she made, and that she was real in all she did.

A lady in a good position, who heard of Nellie's death, owned to her mistress that she had been brought to Jesus through the girl, as she had listened to her once speaking at an after-meeting for about five minutes. This lady told Nellie's mistress that, when she came through to see me, she might ask if I had a girl whom I would like trained, and she would take her into her home and and Nellie's. This other lady stayed very near her, and if I could supply another girl, she would take one also, and they would be companions to each other in their evenings out. So we see still more fruit resulting, as it was from Nellie's life and death that these two girls were offered a place in a good home.

TRAIN HER FOR JESUS' SAKE

As the lady was to be away for a fortnight at Crieff, I told her I would try and have the girls ready on her return, so that they might travel with her and have company, as they had never been out of Glasgow. She promised to wait three weeks, so that there might be time to get the outfits ready. So we had a little time of prayer, and two girls were chosen whom we thought would do for servants, both of them having been Christians for about two years. They were very delighted about going; and, as they were "chums," both having shared a little room together for some time, it was an additional pleasure to them to think that they were not to be separated. The lady who was to take one of them sent word that she would try to be a friend as well as a mistress to the girl, and so I had no doubt that both of them would get on.

I often wondered in what way I could spend Nellie's ten pounds; but it was easily decided for me by these two girls going to homes, as the thought which filled my heart from the first was that the ten pounds would pay for their outfits. And so they owed all to her—both getting their places and the money to pay for their clothing. I am sure it would have made her glad to know that two more had been clothed through her, and had got into good homes. In the three weeks the outfits were ready, and I saw them off in the train. They travelled with the lady who had been for so long such a kind mistress to Nellie, and are now in happy homes, where, we trust, their lives will shine for Jesus as the life of Nellie did.

(Concluded.)

Nellie may be obtained in booklet form. (6d. net. Marshall Bros., Paternoster Row).

The Dayspring.

"O Lord, revive Thy work in the midst of the years."—Hab. iii. 2.

Hush! there are sounds that quiver thro' the silence
Of night's last watch, before the break of day,
Earth's strange, soft stir at "cock-crow" e'er the waking
When shadows flee away.

Hark! there are sounds that steal across the stillness
Of frost-bound plains, and tell of coming rain,
A spirit-whisper of the south wind breathing
"Revive Thy work again."

Yea, there are watchers on the lofty mountains
Who see afar the little cloud arise,
Herald of spring's abundant showers, transforming Wastes into paradise.

And we would join, in holy expectation,
The Lord's remembrancers at Zion's gate,
With empty vessels, held in hands uplifted,
The promised rain await.

Revive us Lord! oh, wilt Thou not revive us?
That Thine own people may rejoice in Thee,
And lands that lie in shadow of death's darkness
May Thy salvation see.

Revive us Lord, that e'er the Bridegroom cometh,
Thy sleeping Church may from her slumber wake,
May rise and trim the lamps so dimly burning,
Her couch of ease forsake.

Revive us Lord! Faith cries Thou wilt revive us.
If we the tithes into Thy storehouse bring,
The idols break, and our whole hearts surrender,
To make our David King.

Then shall the corn revive, the desert blossom,
The wilderness be glad, the woodlands ring,
The brooks be filled, and little hills rejoicing
With quickened life of spring.

Thou wilt revive Thy work. Let Alleluia,
Rise to our God from earth, and sea, and sky,
The Spirit-winds through winter's death have wakened
Life's dayspring from on high.

J. H. S.

The Association for Relief of Indigent Blind, having its offices at 50, Lower Sackville Street, Dublin, is a much-needed institution. The sad privation of the blind appeals to every heart, but only those who are brought into contact with the blind poor can realise how destitute their lot too universally is. The lending library is especially worthy of support, as it enables many to learn Divine truth from the sacred Scriptures. The hon. sec. is Mrs. William Perrin, to whom communications may be sent at the address given.

Thomas Cranmer
and the Theory of the Church.

By MARGARET A. ROLLESTON.

Of all the English Reformers, Cranmer, combining as he did considerable mental acuteness with great moral weakness, is perhaps the least attractive, but nevertheless a study of his life and writings is at this time specially interesting. By his compilation of the Book of Common Prayer, Cranmer left an enduring mark upon the Church to which he belonged, and it is probable that next to the Bible no book has had so great an influence over the lives of Englishmen. It has held up before our eyes the ideal of sobriety and piety; and the Englishman's healthy hatred of an hysterical religion may perhaps be attributed in part to the teaching of reverence and uprightness that the liturgy of his Church has, Sunday after Sunday, inculcated.

Historically, Cranmer was a person of considerable importance, but we cannot do more than refer to the main facts of his life. In the reign of Henry VIII. he supported the divorce of the king from Katherine of Aragon, and his conduct towards that unfortunate lady forms a sorry page in his history. He appears in a better light in his advocacy of the translation of the Scriptures into English, and in his championship of Thomas Cromwell when the latter was under the king's displeasure. "Cranmer's Bible," issued 1540, and so called from the preface which he had contributed to the work, is the memorial of his desire that all men should have a copy of the Scriptures in their possession. Just as "a smith, mason, or carpenter" must of necessity have tools, so should the Christian have the books of the Bible, which, he says, may be called "the instruments of our salvation," for from them we can learn what to believe and what to do.

His compilation of the Prayer Book in the reign of Edward VI. we have already referred to, and we should remember to his credit that he withstood the greedy courtiers who by their spoliation of Church property did much

TO DISCREDIT THE REFORMATION.

On the accession of Mary, Cranmer was thrown into prison, and was induced to renounce the Protestant Faith. But Mary bore him too deep a grudge for his conduct to her mother to allow him to escape, and he was condemned to be burnt. His degradation was to be completed by his reading in public his recantation, but when called upon to do so he received grace to witness to the truth.

Under the fear of death he had, he declared, "written many things untrue. And forasmuch as my hand offended in writing contrary to my heart, therefore my hand shall first be punished. For if I may come to the fire, it shall be first burned. And as for the Pope, I refuse him, as Christ's enemy and antichrist, with all his false doctrine." When tied to the stake he showed such patience and courage as to win even the admiration of a Romish spectator; and thus he, too, gained the honour of a martyr's crown.

Cranmer was a scholar with the scholar's virtue of unworldliness and the scholar's failing of a desire for a quiet life at any cost; and in studying his history we should keep this fact before us as well as the following principles which guided his life. The first of these was the supremacy of the Scriptures. In his early manhood he had gained for himself the title of "the Scripturist." "Christ," he used to say, "sendeth his hearers to the Scriptures and not to the Church."

Secondly, Cranmer was determined in his opposition to the Papacy, and this long before he abandoned the papal doctrine of Transubstantiation.

Thirdly, he held what in Stuart days was called the doctrine of passive obedience. On the accession of Mary he wrote to her: "It lieth not in me, but in your Grace only, to see the reformation of things that be amiss. To private subjects it appertaineth not to reform things, but quietly to suffer that they cannot amend." Cranmer had to learn that obedience to civil authority may clash with obedience to God; and the tragedy of his life lies in the conflict of these two principles. His doctrine of passive obedience brings us to his

THEORY OF THE CHURCH,

and as in the present Ritualist controversy it is important to understand what the Church is, it is interesting to read what Cranmer has written on this subject. The Church he defines to be Christ's "holy elected people."

Like Ridley, he distinguishes between the "open known church" and the true Church. The latter "is so unknown to the world that no man can discern it, but God alone." This true Church rests upon the foundation of God's holy Word, and therefore is "the pillar of the truth," and the test by which any body claiming to be the Church can be judged is by its fidelity to Scripture. The relation of the Church to Scripture is like that of a safe to the documents it preserves. "As the register keepeth all men's wills, and yet hath none authority to add, change, or take away anything, nor yet to expound the wills further than the very words of the will extend unto, . . . even so hath the Church no further power over Holy Scripture, which containeth the will and testament of God, but only to keep it and to see it observed and kept."

Such a test is a very different one from that of validity of orders. "The Word of God is light," and a devout and constant study of its sacred pages will be the true way to free men's souls from superstition and bondage now, at the close of the nineteenth century, as in the days of the sixteenth century Reformers.

Protestant Outlook.

In view of the next General Election, the Church Association has prepared a scheme which is now being worked by that department known as the National Protestant League. The plan is to enrol in each constituency 100 Parliamentary voters who undertake not to pledge themselves to vote for any candidate until after they have been called together to consider, in conjunction with the London Council of the League, how their united votes may be used in the Protestant interest. They are to canvass for other voters, and already as many as 300 or 500 voters have been enrolled in many constituencies. In the meantime the organisation will be used to influence present members of Parliament by pressing them to support such measures as the Church Discipline Bill, 1899, which has already been read a first time in the House of Commons, and is down for second reading for May 10 next.

In some churches in which confessions are heard, the announcements of "attendance" are made in singularly indefinite terms. At the end of the list of services at St. Matthew's, Westminster, notice is given that "the clergy will be in attendance at church" at stated hours, and in all five names are given in reference to as many as thirty-five attendances from Wednesday, March 29, to Easter Eve.

The Protestant vans that are travelling the country at the present time are doing an excellent work of instruction and religious stimulus. The "Bishop Hooper" has recently passed through the towns and villages of Oxfordshire. In some places the clergymen have done their best to hinder; but in others Protestant laymen have lent stables, barns, and workshops, while again in others public halls have been placed at the disposal of the evangelist, Mr. S. Bradfield.

Mr. Gedge has redrafted his motion, which has the first place in Parliament on Tuesday, April 11, in regard to the memorial of the English Church Union. The resolution deplores the prevalent lawlessness, and directs that "no member of the English Church Union shall be recommended by a Minister of the Crown for appointment to a bishopric, ecclesiastical office, or benefice until the Minister is convinced that he will obey the law as declared by the Courts which have jurisdiction in matters ecclesiastical."

Speaking at Colchester last week, Sir W. Brampton Gurdon, M.P., remarked that the growth of Romish practices in the Church of England has become a great political question. At the recent election in North Norfolk he found numbers of people who had never taken part in any election before, and some of whom had never voted, and they worked hard for him because they said they were staunch Protestants, and felt they must do something to stem the advance of Romanism in this country. He believed the great question at the next election would be that of Protestantism and Romanism.

At the annual meeting of the London Congregational Union last week the following resolution was carried unanimously:—

That this assembly of representative members of the Congregational Churches of London views with profound alarm the rapid growth of Romish teaching and practices in the Church of England, and desires to record its deliberate conviction that the only remedy for the crisis caused thereby is to be found in the complete separation of the Church from its connection with the State.

The annual meeting of the General Body of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of the three Denominations (Presbyterian, Congregational and Baptist) was held last week in the Memorial Hall. Rev. Dr. MacEwen, President of the Metropolitan Free Church Council, moved the following resolution:—

We call upon Parliament to take immediate steps to prevent the Romanising Bishops and other clergy from using their position, as State officials, for the propagation of doctrines and practices which are contrary both to their own formularies and to the whole spirit of the Protestant Reformation; and we renew our emphatic and oft-repeated protest against the connection existing between State and Church in this country, and reaffirm our conviction that the only radical cure for the present deplorable condition of the State Church is its complete disestablishment and disendowment.

The resolution, which was seconded by the Rev. Donald Matheson, was unanimously adopted.

The Reformation.

Shall we forget the Reformation dawn,
Or Luther, Wycliffe, Huss, and all who gained
Us purity in worship, and disdained
Rome's superstitions; who from darkness morn
Rais'd up and trampled down a system base?
No, never! Or each great and massive stroke
By martyrs and by Senate dealt, which broke
The foreign Papal yoke? Shall we efface
The memory of the Reformers good,
Who, with their Bibles in their hands, firm stood,
And from old England ignorance did chase?
No, never! Then, if Rome shall try to sever
Us from our faith, we will in answer place
Our hands upon the Book, and tell her:
NEVER! H. G. Langmore.

The Day of Rest.—Upwards of 200 sermons in defence of the Lord's Day will be preached under the auspices of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association in and around London on Sunday next, April 9, or on a subsequent Sunday.

THE LATE

Dr. W. Thomson Crabbe,

BIRMINGHAM.

READERS of The Christian are already aware of the serious loss religious and philanthropic workers in Birmingham have sustained in the death of Dr. Crabbe, senior superintendent of the Birmingham Medical Mission.

Dr. Crabbe was born in 1844 at Kirriemuir, now famous as the "Thrums" of Mr. Barrie. The pawkie Scotch humour which characterised him to the end was therefore quite natural. In this village also he was born again, while still a lad, in the revival of 1859-60. He never tired acknowledging how much he owed to the loving care and heart-yearnings of his mother. "Soon after birth," he says, "I was solemnly dedicated to the Lord and his service, and to be a missionary, if God willed it. She kept this fact before me, and incidents of missionary enterprise and biography. For years she and another of God's remembrancers met weekly in the vestry to plead for their children's conversion, and one other mother joined the two. In 1859, the revival year, each of these three families received a rich blessing, and I was among those who passed from darkness to light." Then, also, he began his life-long service by assisting in the conduct of the boys' prayer meeting.

In 1860 he entered into his medical studies in Edinburgh, and evinced great aptitude in professional acquirements. Among the distinctions he won at college were the gold medal in Medical Jurisprudence, the silver medal in physiology, and the second prize in surgery. Much time in these years was devoted to mission work in association with that pioneer of medical missions, Dr. Burns Thomson, in the Cowgate. He was for two years precentor in the old Magdalene Chapel. Curses hurled at him from the altar attested the success of his labours among the Irish Catholics in the district.

Without any pressure from without, his mother's hopes and prayers were fulfilled. He had tasted the joy of service for the salvation of men, and the desire to consecrate himself to medical missionary enterprise was fanned into a flame. Turning from the inviting paths open to one with such a fine record, he committed himself decisively to the humbler, but yet more glorious labours of Christ's messenger to the perishing. He had a brief experience of practice in Broxburn and Lasswade. He found an opening for mission work in Aberdeen, where he laboured with many tokens of the divine blessing for eight years. A short period of service with Dr. Burns Thomson followed, and in 1876 he settled in Birmingham, where the greater part of his life-work awaited him.

An unpretentious start was made; but it was soon evident that larger accommodation must be provided, if the appeals for help were to be at all adequately met, and the ends of the mission efficiently served. The building of the comfortable premises in Floodgate Street in 1879 marked a new era in the life of the enterprise. Situated in the very heart of a most necessitous district, the doors were besieged from the first by a crowd presenting every element of pathos, and the waiting-room was filled with a needy and expectant throng. Into the sphere thus opened to him he threw the whole energy of his consecrated manhood; and for many years he never seemed to know fatigue. Of his tireless devotion to his beloved work some idea may be gathered from the fact that his Gospel addresses run in number to several thousands, while under his direction over 500,000 sets of medicine have been dispensed.

Many hard workers have some "hobby," apart from the main business of life, which affords them recreation in leisure hours. Dr. Parker has said that his "hobby" is preaching, Dr. Crabbe's "hobby" was the medical mission. When not in the midst of the work, his observation, his reading, his thought and prayer were all for it. His experiences at home and in foreign travel were all made to serve the main end of his life. This lent it a certain unity and completeness sometimes lacking in lives of great activity.

No one could spend a day in the mission without seeing how thoroughly sane and practical are the lines on which the work has all along been conducted. There is no condescending patronage of the poor and unfortunate. Every look, word and act are eloquent of true human sympathy. Genuine brotherly feeling, the absence of all affectation on the one hand, beget frank confidence and affection on the other. You are not five minutes in the room until you know that the doctor is the friend of every sufferer.

There was an air of happy hopefulness about Dr. Crabbe wherever he went. He was, indeed, a thorough-going optimist. In his optimism, however, there was nothing shallow or thoughtless. Few men, if any, knew so well the darker side of life in the slums of Birmingham. Daily contact with it for more than twenty years had familiarised him with its ever-varying aspects of squalor and degradation. But he had diagnosed the trouble at the root of all the ill, and knew that he possessed the one absolutely infallible remedy. To the application of this he went forward with an enthusiasm which no failure could damp, and an ardour no disappointment could chill. He did not seek to change outward conditions, or to correct evil habits in detail. He sought to implant a life principle in the heart, which, working outward, would itself make all things new. Many were the cases to which he could point in illustration of the fact that those who are thus won to the love of Christ are won to personal integrity, and at the same time to the cause of social purity.

From a Photograph by Mr. H. J. Whitlock, Birmingham.

How winsomely he could tell the old story of redeeming love, and how wisely he pressed the invitation of the Gospel! He seemed to know his audience through and through. With great skill he combined brightness and brevity, simplicity and fulness; and his marvellous felicity in apt and vivid illustration, adapted to the capacity of his hearers, lent wings to his words. In the privacy of the consulting room, where the opening of the heart seemed natural even to the most shy and retiring, by loving and tactful treatment he was enabled to reap much fruit from the wider sowing.

The mission soon became the centre of a network of organisations which, in their number and variety, are almost bewildering to an outsider. A feature peculiarly gratifying to the doctor was that these are almost exclusively manned by children of the mission—men and women who gladly acknowledged this as their spiritual birthplace, and had thus entered into a holy conspiracy with their friend and teacher to lure others to the Saviour.

The confidence of the poor found many touching expressions, as also the fine healthy spirit of independence which the doctor sought to foster among them. Out of their penury, by pinching and self-sacrifice hardly less than heroic, they have contributed annually, for some years now, not less than £100 for the support of the mission to which they owe so much.

In the midst of his absorbing work Dr. Crabbe found opportunity to render effective and valued service as an elder of the Presbyterian Church. When the new charge was opened at Nechells, recognising the splendid field presented by that thickly populated working-class district, he joined the minister in a crusade of fervent evangelism. Aiming at conversions, God blessed their efforts beyond all their hopes; and when a rapidly growing congregation demanded a home, the two were practically both architects and builders of the new church. Money was not plentiful, but neither he nor Rev. W. E. Holt, the pastor, was above taking a turn with hand-barrow or hod to assist the work. Thus encouraged, there was no lack of volunteers, each doing what he could. The structure rose as if by magic, and was completed at a comparatively trifling cost. In the development of congregational work, especially in the large and flourishing Sunday schools, Dr. Crabbe took the liveliest interest, while in the pulpit he was a frequent and ever welcome figure. In the Midland Presbytery, and on the committees of the church in London, he rendered conspicuous service. The evangelistic side of the church's efforts at home and abroad enlisted his enthusiastic support.

Assiduous labour and unremitting anxiety at last told upon his frame. In the autumn of 1896 he was sent off on a lengthened holiday, in the course of which he realised a long-cherished wish to see the lands consecrated by the Master's earthly life. Many friends felt this a fitting opportunity to testify to their love and esteem for the man and their appreciation of his work. A sum of £1,000 was speedily raised and presented to him. His joy in receiving this splendid tribute was as unselfish as his life. It enabled him, in ways known only to few, to gratify his generous desire to help and cheer fellow workers in the service of Christ.

It was a great satisfaction to him that one so gifted, so warmly sympathetic, and so evangelic in spirit as Dr. H. B. Wilson was found to serve as colleague. Their work together was a source of delight to both, and high hopes were entertained that, with division of responsibilities and lightening of labour, there might be many years of happy service before him. It was not to be. The weeks of illness that preceded his departure brought him many touching tokens of the deep affection in which he was held. Those that gave him sweetest joy came from the poor and the unfortunate. Very near his heart they and his chosen work were in his own affliction. Asked by what title he would like to be remembered by his friends, "Call me," he answered, "a medical missionary."

Heart-felt mourning filled many a home when the news spread that the beloved physician was no more, and perhaps never have the streets of Birmingham witnessed scenes of more universal sorrow than when his body was carried through them to the grave.

Dr. Crabbe married Miss Emilia Sandison, a lady of great personal charm, many accomplishments and sincere devotion, in whom he found a sympathetic and inspiring helpmeet. Mrs. Crabbe and three sons survive; the eldest of whom, Dr. J. S. Crabbe, has voluntarily shared in his father's work for two years, and is now assistant-surgeon to the mission.

American Prisoners.

A RECENT issue of The Ladies' Home Journal, published in Philadelphia, contained an article contributed by Mrs. Ballington Booth, descriptive of her visitation work among prisoners in Sing Sing, New York, and other places of detention for the criminal. We reproduce some extracts from Mrs. Booth's account, as well as two of the accompanying illustrations given by our contemporary:—

"The awfulness of prison life lies in the memories of the past; the dismal contrast between home and prison cell; the longing for loved ones whose hearts are aching away out of reach; the knowledge that the wretched companionship of misery must be theirs, in the weary round of prison toil from morning till night, for the long years ahead, which seem interminable. Above and beyond all this, prisoners have the bitter realisation of the brand that has fallen upon them never to be removed—'convicts'—that they are degraded before the public, and will be looked upon for ever as accursed. . . .

CONDEMNED.

"Never shall I forget one experience I had in the 'death cell' of one of our prisons. In response to a special plea that I would visit him, I entered the 'condemned cell' to talk with a man who had but one week to live. As I drew my chair up close to the bed on which he was seated he clasped my hand with a grasp that said as plainly as words: 'Help me!' He was a youth, slightly built, not much over twenty. He wanted me to help him to the Light that can even lighten the valley of the dread shadow he was so soon to tread, and to pray with him for the courage that the thought of the awful ordeal to come seemed to be sapping from him.

"I heard of his case from other lips; his wife had deserted him for the home of another man, taking with her their youngest child—a babe in arms. He followed her, and while stooping over the cradle to kiss his little one she taunted him to the point of exasperation, and in anger he turned and shot her. He told me of his bitter sorrow for the wrong that he had done, and spoke with the most loving anxiety concerning the little ones he must leave orphaned. It is no easy matter to speak wisely and helpfully to one in such a position, but it became easier to me, however, after I had reached his heart and could see that, though tears were coursing their way down his cheeks, the words I spoke were of some comfort. I am glad to add that the night before the day of execution a telegram brought him the glad news that the Governor had commuted his sentence to life imprisonment. . .

"As I stood on the platform of the prison chapel looking down upon the sea of faces—between nine hundred and a thousand of them—a new revelation of the great wide field they represented dawned upon my life. The mark of suffering, hopelessness, and despair could be seen deeply stamped on many of them; and as the awful extent of the need dawned on me, and the heartache seemed to surge up from them to my own soul, I broke down, and the picture became blurred and indistinct.

"Perhaps my tears meant more to my audience than my words that day, for many a man wept who had long been unused to weeping; and the chords of sympathy and confidence were struck between us, so that from that hour they accepted me into their lives, and I undertook my new mission as one direct from the God to whom the prisoner's cry has reached and been heard in all its bitterness. From that day little by little the work has grown and become organised and systematised. We commenced with chapel meetings and with correspondence, then came the need for interviews with those who wrote to us.

"As men took their stand for a new, right life it became necessary to have some kind of organisation, and we formed what is now known as the 'Volunteers' Prisoners' League.' In each prison the V.P.L. post has its own standard, and very proud they are of the pure white flag, with its blue star of hope, and the motto of our league that shows up plainly on the snowy field in crimson letters:

VISITING CONVICTS IN THE CELLS, SING SING.

'LOOK UP AND HOPE.'

"The work has spread from prison to prison until it has become firmly established in eight of our largest State prisons, and over 3,000 members have been enrolled in the league. I have had the warmest assurances from the wardens and chaplains of our prisons as to the beneficial effect on the prison population at large, as well as the wonderful change wrought in many individual lives. I look upon this work within the walls as the great preparation and inspiration for the future life these men must face on their discharge. Having learned self-mastery, having fought evil habits, and having exerted every effort to 'be good' amid the difficulties of prison life, they are far better equipped to carry out the good resolves they have been weaving round the long-looked-for future. By no means the smallest factor of this work is the fact that it is bringing hopefulness in where there was nothing but despair. Sometimes we are called upon to find parents for the son who has lost track of home and for years sent them no message; sometimes the relieving of a family on the point of eviction, having failed in the struggle to make ends meet after the bread-winners were gone; and at other times the reconciling of husband and wife who had been estranged. At Christmas time we have been able to send clothing and toys to many little ones, whose poor mothers could have provided for them no Christmas cheer, and whose fathers were facing the dreary gloom of a Christmas in prison. I am in correspondence with mothers, wives, sisters, and children of prisoners all over this country, and in some instances in foreign countries—even far-away Australia.

"The last, but perhaps the most important branch of work which we have set on foot is that which stretches out the helping hand and gives the needed shelter to prisoners after their discharge from State prison. One can gather no idea of the difficulties which beset their paths; or of the constant rebuffs, disappointments, and suspicions that meet and thwart them in their efforts to do right. Happy the man who has a loving mother to whose home he can turn for shelter, or a wife who has stood by him with devoted loyalty."

ADDRESSING CONVICTS IN PRISON CHAPEL, SING SING.

From the New Hebrides.

IN a recent letter, Rev. Oscar Michelsen explains the silence of recent months. After the death of Mrs. Michelsen he was compelled to take rest, and during a stay in New Zealand it was his privilege to do some translation work and address missionary and other meetings. He saw through the press a volume of daily texts in Tongoan and English, and upwards of twenty pages of new hymns in the languages of the islands. In New Zealand also Mr. Michelsen saw somewhat of the progress of his beloved daughters who are at school there. Under these sweetening influences he made a good recovery to health, but at length these had to yield to duty, and he returned to his lonely sphere.

Calling at Norfolk Island, a pleasant visit was paid to the mission institution there. At Tanna, messages were received to the effect that Gospel work is progressing satisfactorily; but a sad tale was told of natives having gone to Queensland to work under the Kanaka system. At Erromanga, an hour was passed at Dillon's Bay, where Williams, Harriss, and the Gordons were murdered; and at Vila two days were spent with Mr. and Mrs. Mackenzie. Workers from Nguna having been greeted, home was reached in due course.

Having resumed his labours on Tongoa, Mr. Michelsen decided to move about his district in some such way as when he began work in the early days of the mission. His usual Sabbath day's work is to conduct three services, walking from twelve to fourteen miles. He sends out some of his most spiritually-minded helpers to preach elsewhere. The week-days engage his attention in educational and industrial efforts, not to mention home cares and looking after mission orphans. The school is prospering, and eighty candidates for baptism were under instruction when the letter left the island. At a communion service in November last £18 was collected, showing that the people make substantial sacrifice for the sake of Christ and the Gospel. This is very encouraging to one who has himself undertaken no small risks for the sake of the work to which he has devoted his life. (See his book, CANNIBALS WON FOR CHRIST. Morgan & Scott).

Other Lands.

On Mule-Back in S. America.

In a recent letter, Senor Emilio Olsson wrote:—"Three months ago I left the river Paraguay to start on my overland journey, and have now reached Trinidad de Mojo in the province of Beni, Bolivia, a distance of nearly 1,000 miles from the river, and more than 2,500 from Buenos Ayres. This journey has been full of experiences of God's goodness and power. To reach many out-of-the-way places we have had to travel through forests and pampas roamed over by savage Indians and wild beasts. Several of the settlements passed through had been attacked by the Indians, and a number of people were killed.

"One morning a jaguar (South American tiger) came near our camp, but a shot frightened him away; at another time savage Indians were round the camp all night, but in the morning they went off quietly. In the swamps of Mojo I nearly lost my life, as my mule sank deeply in the mud. At Lavario our mules had to swim across the river, where also we shot an alligator. In these regions there are myriads of insects and mosquitoes which sting so that the face and hands become swollen for days, but we have suffered from nothing so much as the burning tropical sun. How often have we thanked God for even a little cloud which shaded us from its rays for a while, and relieved our aching heads!

"I earnestly hope that one result of this tour will be to stir up Christians in the home lands to pray more faithfully to the Lord of the harvest to send forth more labourers into his harvest.

VALUABLE INFORMATION

has been collected about the Indians and how to reach them. I know Indians who can act as interpreters for missionaries, and I shall be glad to advise any workers who feel called of God to labour in Bolivia. On this journey the Lord has given me a number of friends, without whose aid I could not have reached here, and these will help future missionaries. Several natives are now spreading the light among their own people by circulating the Scriptures.

"After leaving San Ignacio, we passed through many small villages, and in every place were able to dispose of Scriptures in Spanish, which some of the half-caste Indians can read. At the estancia named Los Tagivos I sold my last Bible. Three people wanted to buy it, all eager to possess 'el libro de Dios' (Book of God), and it pained me to have no more Bibles to give them. Only single Gospels are now left to distribute. I was kindly treated by the friars of the Guardya Indian Mission. One Lord's Day morning I saw several Indians flogged after Mass by order of the priest. It was an awful sight, and the poor creatures cried aloud for mercy. I pleaded to spare them, and at last they were set free. The priest told me that without confession and flogging he could not keep the Indians in order.

"Here in the Province of Beni the Indians are very much ill-treated, and, unknown to the civilised world, is carried on in connection with the rubber trade. As high a price as one thousand Bolivian dollars can be obtained for an able-bodied Indian. They are now hard to get, as a large number have died in the forests. I hope at a future date to write about the wild Bolivian Indian tribes, among whom the Romish priests have not been able to establish missions. I have learned a great deal about them, and trust that, when the facts are known, missionaries will not limit their principal operations to the coast.

A KIND OF SLAVERY

"To me personally it has been an inconceivable joy to carry the Gospel into the far interior, although at times in loneliness, trials and fears, away from friends, civilisation and home. There are yet many difficulties and dangers before I can reach the river Amazon, but He who said 'Lo, I am with you always,' will be my guide and protector."

Mr. Olsson visited London last week on his way to New York to attend the Spring Convention of the Christian and Missionary Alliance. He hopes to be with us again shortly, and to attend some of the May meetings. Letters for him may be addressed to the care of Mr H. S. Ridings, 31, Carson Road, Dulwich, S.E.

French Canadian Romanists.

The Sabrevois Mission is a Church of England organisation. It was founded in 1853 for the presentation of the pure Gospel to French Canadian Roman Catholics. By the blessing of God more than 3,000 converts—fourteen of whom are clergymen—have been trained in evangelical principles, and have become an influence for good among the 2,000,000 French-speaking Canadians.

When this work was inaugurated, there were no French Protestant churches and scarcely any converts in Canada. In the city of Montreal alone are found this day eleven such churches with more than 6,000 converts, while in the entire country are more than 50,000 converts with more than 200 churches.

In the last year of my ministry it was given me of God to lead sixty-four of my countrymen and former co-religionists to the feet of Jesus as their only Saviour and Advocate. I mention it only that God may be more greatly praised, and also that it may be seen what great opportunities are before us. Many, as never before, are asking for the Bread of Life. Shall they hunger and want while British Christians have plenty and to spare?

I have been sent by the Bishop of Montreal to ask £4,000 on behalf of the Sabrevois Mission, that it may be enabled to continue its work of moral uplifting and spiritual regeneration. To mention this need is only to ask for the crumbs that fall from the table of English Christians. I am longing to be back in Canada, and to be of greater use to my own people; yet I cannot return until the £4,000 has been raised.—Yours, &c., Henry E. Benoit.

3, Thanet Place, Temple Bar, W.C.

Figueras Evangelistic Mission.

The latest "Letter from Spain" states that the Medical Mission at Figueras is giving welcome relief to unfortunate soldiers returning from Cuba. All are suffering from fever, along with the effects of severe privation. Patients come in from all parts of the province. The workers speak to all of the Great Physician, and Gospels and tracts are taken from the dispensary into remote parts of the country.

The abjuration of the ex-priest, Rev. Antonio Forres, took place recently in the Capillia in Figueras, in the presence of at least a thousand persons. His words and bearing were calm and earnest; and with deep solemnity he cast aside his priest's robe and received a Bible from Pastor Lopez-Rodriguez in token of admission into membership of the Evangelical Church. The Word of God, which Rome denounces as a bad book, has done wonders for Don Antonio, who says many priests would gladly shake off the Papal yoke if a helping hand was near. The mission is sending copies of the abjuration to six thousand priests at a considerable cost.

An important event in the history of the town and province was the first Protestant marriage which was celebrated quite recently. The parties were the mission evangelist and a member of the Y.W.C.A., and the ceremony excited universal curiosity. The people are awaking to the fact that they are no longer dependent upon the offices of the priests.

The Capillia in Figueras seats 800 worshippers, and will hold a thousand in all. Address, Pastor Lopez-Rodriguez, Figueras, Gerona, Spain.

Prison Work in Japan.

Dear Sir,—I thank you sincerely for publishing an article concerning my work amongst released prisoners in your issue of June 8, 1898. Some of the benevolent readers of your paper immediately contributed to the work, and thus helped it forward.

The number of released prisoners who have come under my care during the past two years is 336. These persons have provided their own subsistence by diligently working at their several trades, and many of them have already obtained homes for themselves. Among this whole number only three out of every twenty have failed to be reformed.

I am well aware that the real success in this work has not been achieved by education nor by money, but by the prayerful efforts of those who, in the name of the Lord, are sanctioning and supporting it.

There are now in Tokyo, where I live, 135 ex-convicts, and in other parts of the empire 491, besides fifty-two who are now dwelling in my own house (the total number being 678), whom I have assisted and made my friends. With these I go and come and correspond, and together we praise the Lord and warm our love. When they were leaving prison, for such as had no one else upon whom to rely I became surety to the authorities. More than four-fifths of the 678 convicts had served two, three or even more terms of imprisonment in the penitentiaries. My happiness is exceeding great that the whole of these have repented and formed new friendships, and I praise God fervently.

The money to purchase the house in which I shelter these men, and also that for the monthly expenses, has been contributed by both Japanese and foreign friends of the cause; but help is still needed to lay a more firm foundation for the work.—Yours very truly.

Taneaki Hara.

8, Minami, Jimboricho, Kandak, Tokyo.

The Spezia Mission.

In a recent letter from Casa Alberto, Spezia, Rev. H. H. Pullen writes:—"Our schools carry on their vigorous work among the children. Many of them are crowded out. At one within the last few days we have had to extend our premises. A few days ago we had from two places pathetic pleas for schools to be opened. With aching hearts we had to refuse owing to lack of means. Then comes a plea for some sadly needy orphan cases (and to be an unshielded orphan girl in Italy is an awful thing), and anon eager requests for commencement of new meetings in dark and priest-ridden districts. Near two of our schools the priests are now erecting two huge new Roman Catholic churches, to be centres of movements which they hope may crush those parts of our work. What the darkness and sin are in this beautiful land, friends at home have little idea. An excellent cure for any apathy with regard to the Rome-ward march of events in England would be some bird's-eye views of the condition of things in this land where Roman Catholicism has held sway so long."

The Gospel in Mexico.

We have received from Mr. John Mercer, Harburg, Fallowfield, Manchester, some notes of the progress of the work of Mr. Harris at Orizaba, in Mexico, gathered from the letters of the missionary:—

"We are carrying on our printing work as vigorously as possible, but are not nearly able to meet the demand for literature. Of every tract we ought to print at least 50,000, and these could be all sent away by one single mail. Two American missionaries who visited us yesterday gave expression to their surprise at finding El Sembrador in every nook and corner of the land.

"Last Thursday we had our annual 'fiesta.' After tea we had pictures and hymns with the lantern, and then distribution of prizes for last year's Bible study, &c. About ninety were present in the evening, when the Word, I trust, reached many hearts. Last Lord's Day we had the joy of receiving another brother at the Lord's Table. He was converted about eighteen months ago, but we have known him for six years."

Letters from America.

A LOST BILL.—OUR MEETINGS WITH COLOURED PEOPLE IN THE SOUTH.

THE following appears in the News and Courier (Charleston, N.C.) of March 16:—

RISK THEIR LIVES FOR AMERICA.

BRITISH STATESMEN SUBJECT THEIR COUNTRYMEN TO THE DANGERS OF INFERIOR PETROLEUM RATHER THAN OFFEND THE UNITED STATES.

London, March 15.—In the House for Commons to-day Mr. Harold James Reckitt, Liberal member for the Brigg Division of Lincolnshire, moved the second reading of the bill raising the flash point of petroleum from seventy-three to one hundred. In so doing he said that it would not add appreciably to the cost, as a New York firm had offered to supply oil at 100 flash point at only half a cent. per gallon dearer than the present price.

Mr. Henry Kimber, Conservative member for Wandsworth, moved the rejection of the bill on the ground that it was "veiled protection at the expense of American oils," and Mr. Robert Grant Webster, Conservative member for the east division of St. Pancras, asked how the bill would be considered in the United States, adding, "We ought not to injure a nation which is at present becoming more and more friendly towards us.

The bill was rejected—244 to 159.

Mr. Kimber talks about "veiled protection." We note the veiled sarcasm of the newspaper heading.

If these two worthy members and the 242 who voted with them ever have much to do with the Americans, they will find that they regard with well-merited contempt the snobbishness of the argument that, though at the expense of our own people, "we ought not to injure a nation which is at present becoming more and more friendly to us." If we expect such sentimental folly to be reciprocated by our cousins on this side the Atlantic, we shall be undeceived at the first opportunity.

That Bill would be considered by all right-thinking people in the United States as a wise, humane, and necessary measure, to say nothing of the selfish barbarity of wantonly exposing our own poor, or even careless, people to the certainty of injury or death, in many cases, from the use of the dangerous oils at present sold to them.

AMONG THE COLOURED PEOPLE.

After leaving Wilmington we went to Hillsboro, N.C., at the urgent request of the two ladies in charge of the coloured school of the American Missionary Association, Miss Bechan from Canada, and Miss Curtis from N.Y. State. They had been by prayer and effort preparing the way for our visit, and we came to reap where they had diligently sown. I quote Miss Curtis's account:—

"On Sunday, February 26, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan and Mr. Wintle, of England, started revival services in this place for the coloured people. Much prayer had been offered for the work by friends in Northern States as well as in this town. There was good attendance throughout, but at first no movement by any to be saved.

"On Sunday night but one young man appeared touched; he raised his hand, thus expressing a desire to know Christ. On Wednesday afternoon a meeting was held at the school. At the close Mr. Wintle requested any who so wished, to remain. The highest class remained, and there was an entire breakdown. Many were sobbing loudly, and ten of them went forward at once. One little girl fairly ran to the front, and the others followed. Those who kept their seats were almost screaming. One of two girls kept repeating, 'They have all gone and left Carrie and me.' No one confessed that afternoon, but when the service began at night there were thirteen mourners. Five found peace, and at once went to work for Christ by bringing their companions forward.

"From that night the meetings continued to grow in interest and power, especially noticeable among the church members. Never before were the afternoon meetings so well attended. The school house was filled each afternoon, and the majority of the conversions took place there. The blessing spread and spread until those at their homes felt it and were drawn out, some of whom had not been in a religious meeting for many years. Many of these converts were mourning for three or four days, crying during the entire after-meeting and at their homes during the day.

"Two girls worked their bodies while kneeling as if in intense agony, and one of these shook hands with a friend near by, shouted 'Glory,' then rose with a scream, and jumped several times into the air.

"One little boy rose and went skipping about with joy. A young man came to the front, threw his arms around his mother's neck and knelt down, praying loudly, 'Lord, have mercy!' After some minutes he rose, his face radiant with joy, as he went about the church telling what God had done for him.

"The last song sung was a plantation song, 'Farewell, Mourner,' during which three confessed, the Christians keeping time to the music with their whole bodies.

"Not only have these meetings been the means of saving souls, but have drawn the people nearer together and nearer to God."

"Hillsboro, N.C., March 7, 1899."

The girl who "jumped" for several minutes was but one of several here and at other places who vociferously and physically expressed their joy at their new-found deliverance. It reminded us of the jumpers in Wales, of the shakers of America, the fishermen of Banffshire, and the prostrations which have frequently been a feature of powerful revivals. Primitive people and those who have not been cultured to control their emotions cannot but manifest them in ways which seem grotesque to others. But is there anything really more unreasonable in the demonstrations of those who, in the joy of their first love, shout and sing, jump and dance in their uncultivated way, than in the vociferous applause at a modern political meeting, or the wailing of the Irish peasantry when they bid their emigrating friends farewell?

R. Cope Morgan.

Charleston, S.C., Mar. 16, 1899.

Among the Jews in Paris.

IN the midst of the present unsettled state of the country, evangelistic work among the Jews is steadily carried on in our Mission Hall, 2, Rue du Roi de Sicile, Paris. The Sabbath school for Jewish children numbers about sixty, to whom the pure Gospel is taught; and when one hears them rehearse passages of Scripture out of the Old and New Testaments, and sing our beautiful Christian hymns, the words of the Psalmist are forcibly brought to memory, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast Thou ordained strength."

In the Bible-classes for Jewish women the cry is often heard, "Lord, I believe that Thou art the Christ, the true Messiah, sent of God." And in our meetings, too, a like testimony is given by many Jews. As a proof of their sincerity, they come regularly, and read attentively the New Testament.

Not long ago the Lord encouraged us in our work by the conversion of an educated Jewish gentleman of the Press, who through frequent meetings and conversations on the truth of Christ requested me to give him a regular course of religious instruction. He was an earnest and sincere inquirer, and gradually proved to be a true believer in the Lord. He was baptized at the British Embassy Church, Rue d'Aguesseau, on Sunday afternoon, March 5.

L. C. Mamlock,
London Jews Society.

119, Rue de Rome, Paris.

Tasmanian Notes.

WE are nearing the close of one of the most agreeable summers this colony has known for many years. Refreshing rains continued until after the close of the year, and very little trying heat has been experienced. The harvest is exceedingly plentiful. Farmers complain that the price of wheat is very low, but the poor people will be thankful to have a cheap loaf.

The summer season is not favourable to energetic Christian work, yet something has been done. The Launceston Free Church Council has been formed, and borne its testimony against the formation of another Gambling Agency which was recently proposed. Endeavour Societies and W.C.T. Unions have been equally united in their protest.

Mr W. H. Stephens, singing evangelist from Victoria, has been holding successful missions in various parts of the Colony. For some time he was assisted by Rev. M. Hart, who has recently removed to Ballarat, but the ministers of the town where the missions are now held usually do the preaching. From several places we hear reports of conversions. Mr. Stephens possesses a clear voice, and sings with great feeling.

At the Memorial Church, Launceston, Mrs. Harry Guinness recently received a hearty welcome from her former friends, whom she greatly interested by an account of the work in which she and her husband are engaged.

The missionary spirit still thrives. In connection with our Baptist churches the Prayer Union is making progress. Miss Arnold, a most devoted Indian missionary, is now visiting the churches; and there are demands for boxes and cards of membership.

Home Mission work is not being neglected. A new Baptist church was recently opened at Burnie, on the North-West Coast. There is every prospect of a good congregation being formed there in a few years.

As to myself, I am thankful to report continued progress. All traces of the old weakness have gone, and I am hoping soon to return.

Geo. Wainwright.

Lebanon Hospital for the Insane.

THE great undertaking of Mr. Theophilus Waldmeier has more than once been described and mentioned in our columns. We have told of his world-wide researches consecrated to the alleviation of the sufferings of the insane in Bible lands, also of his general plans now in course of development. Having raised about £4,500, Mr. Waldmeier returned to Syria, and in conjunction with the executive committee in Beyrout, bought a site with buildings capable of such alterations as will serve for an administrative block and nurses' home.

The needful alterations having been carried out, some of the nurses are engaged in studying the language. A Swiss doctor, a specialist in mental diseases, has kindly offered his services gratuitously. The asylum proper is to be on the cottage principle, and two pavilions, each for twenty patients, male and female, are in course of erection, and will be ready by the end of the summer. Money is in hand for these, the estimated cost being £1,000 for each pavilion.

This provision will only touch the fringe of the vast number of mentally diseased in Bible lands. It is hoped that six more cottages will be erected; but the committee have decided not to proceed until the money is forthcoming. Switzerland has, we are glad to say, promised £1,000 to erect another, to be called the "Swiss Cottage." The committee are now appealing for funds, annual subscriptions especially, as directly the hospital is opened the expenses will begin. Needless to say, the hospital will be a Christian institution; it is the first of its kind in the Bible lands. Further particulars may be had, also an illustrated report, from the secretary, Mr. Francis C. Brading, 35, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

Home Missions.

Irish Church Missions.

THE eminently spiritual and far-reaching Protestant efforts of the Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics may well claim special attention at a time when the falsities of Romanism are so strenuously paraded as high truth, and when "re-union" is advocated with such insistent zeal.

The Society, which has this year attained its jubilee, works in many ways, but each is characterised by earnestness and discernment. Its chief centre is in Dublin, where work is maintained at a mission church, five mission rooms, children's homes and schools—in which there is an average attendance of 800—and training homes for men and women workers. Great value is attached to intelligent training; each student is thoroughly informed of the doctrines and arguments of Rome, in order to meet the difficulties and queries of the Romanist temperately and with sympathy. Very satisfactory results have been seen from the several of which are held weekly, and are conducted in a spirit of sincere inquiry on the one hand and of kindly helpfulness on the other.

DISCUSSION CLASSES,

The classes are mustered by printed invitations, setting forth such subjects as "Purgatory," "Confession," "Transubstantiation," or "the Infallibility of the Pope," and the workers are greatly cheered by numbers of conversions. House-to-house visitation is systematically pursued by the readers, and, in spite of difficulties that may easily be imagined, the leavening influence is palpable.

An interesting branch of the work is the visitation of fairs and markets. The evangelists, travelling two by two, cover the ground from Belfast to Bantry, from Dublin to the far west of Connemara. Their modus operandi is well calculated to rivet attention. Arriving at the fair they take their stand in the market-place among the shrill-voiced vendors of all kinds of goods. A stock of attractive books is taken, and to the accompaniment of cornet or other instrument, a Gospel hymn is started. The peasantry crowd round and often listen eagerly. Then the Testaments are brought out, and thousands of copies are thus circulated year by year. Inquiries are sometimes made for the well-known "Glories of Mary." The pedlar-evangelist does not keep it, but can supply which consists of extracts from the New Testament. That suffices, for the people are so interested in their strange visitors, that the demand for religious literature is extensive, and sound evangelical teaching is thus spread throughout the district. Such work is, of course, better suited for the summer months, but the dark evenings of winter are happily utilised for magic lantern exhibitions.

"THE GLORIES OF JESUS,"

The attractiveness of a good lantern in the small towns and out-of-the-way places of Ireland may easily be imagined. It is a great event and the meetings are crowded. Even when priests forbid attendance, their flocks often avoid obeying the letter of the order by peering through the windows, which are left open for their benefit. The first meeting usually consists of a temperance story, care being taken to use plenty of slides showing texts and Gospel hymns. The second night a Scripture subject is given, the brazen serpent affording an admirable opportunity for a pointed appeal. The "Pilgrim's Progress" and the Philippian Gaoler are other attractive subjects, deep impressions being caused by the two texts, in succession, question and answer, "What must I do to be saved?" "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." In spite of priestly opposition, prejudice is broken down, and subsequent visitation by colporteurs adds to the effect. In some places a visit to a meeting held by an evangelist of the Society has been declared that is, one for which absolution must be obtained from the bishop, but the attendances increase notwithstanding.

A "RESERVED" SIN,—

A happy departure has been the moveable wooden hall, fashioned, according to the idea of the Irish Evangelisation Society, in sections, and easy to erect or take down. Comfortably accommodating three hundred people, and managed by capable evangelists, the hall has from the first been very popular. It is at present in Limerick, and in spite of denunciation and boycott by the priestly party, has drawn in many of the Romanists. A Limerick editor, threatened by a priest for inserting an advertisement of the hall, stood to his guns, and declared his intention to publish what notices he pleased.

The latest addition to the Society's operations is the Limerick Medical Mission, which, although opened little more than a year, has treated some thousands of cases. True, one woman was beaten by a priest for attending, and others have been deprived of their situations or ejected from their homes; but the more liberal-minded Romanists have protested, and the opposition is somewhat lessened. As demonstrating the permanent character of the Society's work, it may be mentioned that there are now working in the churches of England, Ireland, and the Colonies, who are themselves the fruit of the missions in the Western counties alone; while a very large number of converts have sought, by emigrating, better opportunity to exercise freedom of conscience.

SIXTY-TWO MINISTERS

It is cheering indeed to be able to sound this note of hope for the future of Protestantism in the Emerald Isle; but it should be borne in mind that the work requires not only reliable workers and skilful management, but liberal support. Communications may be addressed to the Secretaries, Irish Church Missions, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.

Old Ford Mission.

WE have more than once called attention to the good work of which the mission chapel in Old Ford Road is the home and centre. The building is spacious, with over a thousand sittings. In days gone by large congregations gathered for worship within its walls; but during recent years, with the outward movement of the population, the chapel is used very much as a mission hall for the evangelisation of the poor of the neighbourhood. All along, a faithful few have toiled with self-denying zeal, doing combat with the sin and indifference that abound.

The work is now in charge of Rev. Robert Browell, a minister whose labours in various provincial centres have been attended with much blessing. With his devoted wife and family, Mr. Browell has introduced an innovation into the administration of the work—he has gone to live in the very heart of the district, thereby touching the hearts and awakening a sympathetic response in the imagination of the people. Mr. Browell's neighbours are all of many of them match-box makers. The improvement effected in the work during recent months is simply wonderful, and those interested in the problem of reaching the masses of the East End have a striking example of what can be done by earnest, self-sacrificing effort. The congregations are more than doubled, and conversions have taken place every Sunday; and if the walls of the inquiry room could speak, they would tell of conflicts fought against infidelity, intemperance, and sins of every description that would read more like a chapter of romance than facts of everyday life.

THE LOW-WAGE-EARNING CLASS,

During the past six months the workers have had to listen to many heart-breaking stories of deep wanderings into sin. "Oh," said one, "my life has been black and steeped in sin; but if only I could have a chance of leading a good and honest life, I would, by God's grace, endeavour to do so." God be thanked, that one has had a chance given her, and to-day she is humbly walking in the path of duty and righteousness. A man who had not been in a place of worship for fourteen years was induced by the pastor to attend, and to-day he is a humble and earnest worker. The great need now is funds wherewith to relieve the starving poor, and especially the hungry little ones, some of whom know what it is to go to school without any food.

In scores of the homes visited, deep poverty is felt, and in many instances it is of that kind that tries to make the best of things and struggles nobly to earn an honest living. One case may be mentioned, viz., that of a widow, whose pale-faced little girl had the privilege of spending a fortnight in the country. Boots were wanted, and in order to provide them

THE MOTHER SOLD HER DRESS!

This was told on inquiring why she had not been to the services lately. Many children come to school with scarcely any boots to cover their little feet, and in numerous instances lacking sufficiency of food.

Through the kindly help of Messrs. Bryant and May, whose works are in the district, many of the starving poor have been fed. But much remains to be done. Particulars of ways in which specially welcome assistance can be rendered will be gladly sent by Mr. Browell whose address is 148, Parnell Road, Old Ford, E.

Mildmay Medical Missions.

THE annual report of these admirable medical institutions is a record of sound work and steady progress. The Mildmay Mission Hospital, situated in the heart of squalid and miserable Bethnal Green, has afforded timely relief to thousands of the very poor.

Many interesting statistics show what is being done for the bodily recovery of the sick, and a variety of recorded incidents demonstrate something of the blessing bestowed on the efforts made for the spiritual good of the patients in the helpful meetings and Bible classes.

The house surgeon of last year, Dr. Melville Keith, is now in charge of the Mission Hospital at Jaffa, Palestine, and the present resident, Dr. Fisher, will probably be sailing in a few months for Manchuria as a medical missionary to that land. To-day, in many parts of the world, there are missionary workers who formerly received part of their training at the hospital.

The Old Ford Mission also continues to flourish. Brief services are held, comprising some hymns, a Bible reading, and a pointed address, simple in character, with a view of drawing the poor patients to the Great Physician of souls. Then, while the doctor is busy in the consulting room, the deaconesses are occupied reading or singing or talking to the patients who are waiting, and one of the deaconesses is in the surgery doing the necessary dressings.

The Ossulston Convalescent Home, High Barnet, continues to be an inestimable boon to the hundreds of men, women, and children who are yearly admitted to its benefits. The admissions last year exceeded that of any previous one. Communications may be addressed to Colonel J. F. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

Miss Child's "Welcome Home" Mission.—Miss Child has issued in leaflet form a brief report of her good work among the sailors of various nationalities who enter the port of London. The new mission room at Canning Town has already proved very helpful. Through the temperance bar many have been led to give up intoxicants and attend the Gospel meetings, which, carried on nightly throughout the year, are greatly appreciated. The Book Bag Mission has continued its widespread usefulness in many countries and languages, and an additional undertaking has been the relief of the many poor in the vicinity of the mission by free meals, shelter, coals, and clothing. Communications may be addressed, Miss Child, "Sailors' Welcome Home," close to Canning Town Station, London, E.

Young Emigrants.

On May 4 we hope that our seventy-sixth party will set sail for the homes awaiting them in Canada, under the direction of Mr. Merry, sen., in the s.s. Laurentian. It is a cause for thanksgiving that needy children are well provided for by educational advantages in these days of continuation schools, homes, and reformatories.

Between the lines of the following official report from Ottawa, we read that our children are in great demand:—

J. J. Kelso, superintendent of neglected and dependent children, in his sixth annual report of the work of his department under the Children's Protection Act of Ontario, has the following deserved reference to Miss Macpherson's Boys' Home:

"About forty-seven children arrived at the home, Stratford, early in the summer, which was less than half the number received in former years. During one of my visits there were ten small boys awaiting homes, but on a subsequent visit this number was reduced to two. Many applications were received for children which it was impossible to fill. A notable feature in connection with the home is that the family ties are preserved as far as can be done. Children brought out to this country are encouraged to communicate with their parents and foster parents, and employers are requested to write for the children. This chain of correspondence has led in the past to many happy results. The fact that the child is able to look forward to a re-union on this side of the Atlantic with loved ones, is often the means of encouraging them in industrious and thrifty habits."

What a land of peace and plenty, with liberty of conscience to worship God and rear children in the fear of the Lord! We have found that a good living can be made in the North West by the industrious and abstemious; also, that England's beer-drinking masses are not wanted anywhere.

Two millions of acres are waiting the strong arms of the youth of Scotland and England. The sturdy Canadian farmers are a race worthy of their British ancestors; may they win the day yet for local option, and give a blow to the distilleries and breweries which tend to destroy the very vitals of their hopeful young empire. God bless dear Canada for its kindness to the thousands of children placed in the Dominion!

Annie Macpherson.

Mildmay Night School.

The night school for men is conspicuous among the many excellent undertakings maintained at Mildmay, and the report submitted by Colonel Morton at the twenty-ninth anniversary meeting, held on Wednesday last, in the Conference Hall, was full of encouragement. Subsequent to a conversazione in the lower hall, a large number of students and friends assembled for the presentation of prizes and certificates. Rev. J. Wilkinson engaged in prayer, and Mr. Maynard gave a brief review of the work, pointing out that all the teachers were Christian ladies, and that in each class, at each meeting, a portion of Scripture was read. While the steady progress in study had been very satisfactory, it was still more cheering to know that some of the men had been led to confess Christ. The classes had also imparted useful knowledge to those who were Sunday school teachers.

After Mrs. Barlow, wife of Prebendary Barlow, had gracefully distributed the various awards, Rev. Marcus Rainsford gave a forcible address. He congratulated the students on their enterprise and recognition of the competitive character of the times, and endeavouring to improve themselves, but, at the same time, insisted on the vast importance of spiritual considerations. It was well to train men to be able and shrewd; but a really good citizen was one who was not merely of good mental development, but who had learned to educate the heart in the highest sense, and to feed the soul with divine knowledge with many tersely put statements of truth and apt illustrations. Mr. Rainsford depicted the transformation that accompanies the realisation of God's personal love, and, after an appeal to the unconverted, concluded by adjuring those who had come to know the Saviour to proclaim the tidings of salvation to others.

Mary Wardell Convalescent Home.

This home for scarlet-fever patients, situate at Stanmore, receives those necessarily excluded from all ordinary convalescent homes, and owes its origin to the experience gained by a lady in work in connection with the Female Bible and Domestic Mission. By its airy rooms, well laid out grounds, and private omnibus for transit, the home affords opportunity for recovery under circumstances specially beneficial to the general health, and at the same time removes a dangerous element from the neighbourhood in which the patient's home is situated.

Though originally intended for the benefit of the working classes, the founder was led, at the earnest request of leading members of the medical profession, to provide accommodation in the home also for persons able to pay the cost of their maintenance. An effort is being made to raise £2,000 in order to clear off a debt, and provide for thorough cleaning and repairs, as well as replace property destroyed by a fire last year.

The hon. sec. is Miss Mary Wardell, Stanmore, Middlesex.

The Y.M.C.A.

This year's annual conference of Y.M.C.A. Secretaries will be held at Llandudno, June 17 to 24.

The Kennington Y.M.C.A. introduced 350 young men to lodgings in Christian homes during the year 1898.

The annual conference of the Edinburgh District Union was held in Edinburgh on March 25. Interesting reports were given as to the work and progress of the associations.

The Mountpottinger (Belfast) Association has held its annual conversazione, at which a report was presented showing that the past year had been one of the most successful in the history of the organisation.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken will begin a mission at the Central Y.M.C.A., Liverpool, on Saturday next, April 8, to continue until April 26. Addresses on the spiritual life will be given in the afternoon, and in the evening mass meetings for young men will be held. The largest hall in the centre of the city has been secured for noon meetings for business men.

The annual public meeting of the Bombay City Y.M.C.A. was presided over by Sir Andrew Wingate, K.C.I.E., the speakers including the Bishop of Bombay, and Mr. D. McConaughy, General Secretary of the Madras Association. The Bombay Y.M.C.A. has now a membership of 475, of whom eighty-eight are Indian Christians. Mr. Frank Anderson, who is working on behalf of the English Council among the students of the Bombay Presidency, is on his way home, where he will spend a few months in advocacy of the claims of the Council's foreign work.

The thirty-ninth report of the Bath Y.M.C.A., presented at the annual meeting on March 24, was a record of successful work in all four departments—spiritual, educational, social, and physical. The membership, exclusive of the large number who have joined the classes and clubs, stands at 529, an increase upon the twelve months of thirty-five; and the deficit of £140 last year, now stands at £65. The chair at the annual meeting was taken by Lord Aberdeen, who said he had been much impressed with the value of the Y.M.C.A. in Canada. Mr. Quinton Hogg also spoke, and pleaded for a manly exhibition of Christian character as well as for a sympathetic presentation of Christ to the world.

The annual public meeting of the Wakefield branch was held on Tuesday, March 21, in the large hall of the Mechanics' Institute. There was a crowded and enthusiastic gathering, preceded by a public tea, at which 260 were present. Mr. Alfred Haley was chairman. An excellent report was read by the general secretary (Mr. T. F. Tomes), showing that 130 new members had been gained during the year, while eighty-three had gone from the ranks, the total membership being now 430. The Association has sent out to the Zambesi one of its members, making the fourth in the mission-field. Lord Kinnaird gave a much-appreciated address, and Mr. H. French Ridley, a former secretary, returned on furlough after eight years with the C.I.M. in China, received a hearty welcome and also spoke.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 16.

"Jesus teaching humility."—John xiii. 1-17.

Golden Text.—John xiii. 15.

Introductory.

The last week of our Lord's life on earth occupies a very large portion of the four Gospels. John omits many of the incidents, because they are fully recorded by the other evangelists. These will be found in Matt. xxi. to xxvi., Mark xi. to xiv., Luke xix. to xxii. All four give the triumphant entry of our Lord into Jerusalem and the institution of the Lord's Supper, though John gives no detailed account of this, only speaks of certain lessons taught in connection therewith. John alone gives the story of the Greeks wishing to see Jesus, and his satisfaction thereat (John xii. 20-50). It is most important for the scholars to have a clear perception of all these events. Let them look through the chapters and narrate the events of each day. Note that Wednesday was spent in retirement at Bethany, whither Jesus repaired each night (Mark xi. 19, John xii. 36). On Thursday morning the two disciples go into Jerusalem to prepare the Passover, whither the rest follow with their Lord early in the evening.

Explanatory.

The disciples were under the delusion that Christ was about, in some miraculous way, to set up his kingdom on earth, and they had been disputing as to the positions of honour they should therein occupy. Their minds were so full of pride and expectation that not one of them would stoop to the menial service of washing the feet of the others; no one was prepared to take the lowest place, yet all but one were good men. Notice the gentleness of Christ's method of reproof.

Verse 1. The keynote to all the rest, Jesus knowing who he was and what the work he had come to accomplish, knowing the hearts of these poor, imperfect men (see vv. 3 and 11). "There is no love like the love of Jesus." He loves to the uttermost, to the very end. Are we resting in this mighty love? Are we disappointing it?

Verse 2. They had all sat down, and supper was being served. This mention of Judas teaches the personality of the devil. He is the same now as then, suggesting evil, putting temptations in our way; but we are not obliged to yield to him any more than Judas was. Temptations are education (James i. 2-4).

Verses 4, 5. Describe the posture at meals, the Eastern dress, the mode of washing by pouring the water over the feet; the pitcher and basin would be standing ready, provided as a necessity. This was a needed service; in this lies the force of the lesson Christ would teach.

Verse 7. We may adapt this answer of our Lord to many of his dealings with his children which perplex them now.

Verse 8. It was pride and not humility prompting Peter. The negative is in the strongest form. Our Lord's reply contains a spiritual truth, which should be clearly brought out. The necessity of cleansing, obedience, submission to Christ's will.

Verse 10. He that has been cleansed in the bath, only just needs his feet to be washed from the dust of earth. The bathing represents the new birth; the washing, the daily or hourly cleansing from the stains of sin contracted in our walk through life. One disciple was still unconverted; the feet washing availed him nothing.

Verse 13. Christ's acknowledgment of who He was. Matt. xxiii. 8-10. Luke vi. 46.

Verse 14. This may be applied with illustrations to the young people who think work beneath them.

Verses 15, 16. A representation to be imitated in spirit and principle, in humble service for others. No one can be too great to do the meanest service.

Verse 17. Point out the vital difference between knowing and doing. We all know; are we among those whom Jesus called happy?

Lesson Points.

Unlimited Love (v. 1).
A Personal Devil (v. 2).
Present Perplexity (v. 7).
Future Knowledge (v. 7).
Need of Cleansing (v. 8).
Divinity of Christ (v. 13).
A Holy Example (v. 15).
Dignity of Work (v. 16).

(Give the verses and let scholars point out the lessons.)

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Sermonette.

By Rev. GEORGE ELDER, M.A., Greenwich.

"A burning and a shining light."—John v. 35.

OF John the Baptist Jesus spoke these words of praise, but I shall not say much about John. Let me speak a little parable. Christ often spoke in parables, and though his parables are so beautiful that none can equal them, for "never man spake like this man," still, after his example, his servants too may use parables to set forth the truth.

One day a little lump of coal, dug out of the dark pit, lay on the surface. It looked around at this fair, bright world into which it had been brought, where are so many beautiful and useful things. And it began to wonder of what use it could be in such a world, till it grew rather discontented with itself and dejected. "Of what use am I, poor black thing that I am?" it said. "I can't gleam forth rays of beauty like my cousin the diamond. No man will take me to help to build his house with. I'm not fit for that. None will use me to make a highway. I'm not even fit for that. Neither, like the millstone, can I grind corn for men. I'm just useless, useless," and it grew very sad.

But, as it was thinking these things, a hand lifted it up and brought it into touch with fire. That was a glad day for it, for at once it felt that between fire and it there was sympathy. It had the capacity to receive fire and burn, and that could not be said of the other stones it had been casting an envious eye at. So the fire entered into it, and as it took fuller and fuller possession of it, it became "a burning and a shining light."

Shall I explain my parable? You, my child, are like that little lump of coal. You wonder of what use you can be in this world. You can't be a king, or a wise philosopher, or a writer of great books that all do read. Perhaps not; likely enough not. But, for all that, you may become "a burning and a shining light." John the Baptist said of Jesus, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." The Holy Ghost is that heavenly fire. And you, like the coal, dark enough in yourself, have the capacity to receive this fire. The little dog you play with, the horse that carries you, the stones and trees around you, have not that capacity. But you have. Only get this holy fire from Jesus, ask Him to baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and you will "burn," as Jesus made the hearts of two disciples one day "to burn within them by the way;" and "burning" you will shine, and so become "a burning and a shining light" in this dark world.

Some of you may wish to shine, but not to burn. There are some things in the world that shine without burning. I'll mention one, the will-of-the-wisp. Wise men call it "ignis fatuus," which means "foolish fire." It shines, but doesn't burn. It is but a false light, that only leads men astray. Remember that to be true you must burn as well as shine, like the little lump of coal. See to the burning, and the shining will soon follow. May you all receive of the holy fire from Jesus, and become "burning and shining lights." Then after you have shone in this world for a while you will shine in heaven, like the stars, for ever and ever.

Two Corean Children.

I have received from Miss Jeannie Perry, of Corea, a story about two little girls who live at the home she keeps in Corea for waifs and strays, and I think perhaps my young readers would like to hear it.

Do you know where Corea is? See if you can find it on the map, and then you will know just where these two little children live, for this is a true story and not a make-believe one. Their names are Yongie and Sungie. One day small-pox broke out in the houses near where these two children lived, and so they had to be vaccinated as a safeguard against catching it. They did not want to be vaccinated, because they were afraid it would hurt; but Miss Perry promised them a cent (½d.) each if they were good, and she was glad to be able to give them their money, because they did not cry and make a fuss.

WHAT DO YOU THINK THEY BOUGHT?

Well, Yongie spent her cent on a ring of bright metal with a tiny piece of coloured glass in the centre, and she was quite vain about it. Sungie bought some sweets with her halfpenny, and shared them with Yongie, and she felt happier than if she had spent it all on herself.

Yongie one day was very naughty, and Miss Perry had to speak to her seriously. "Is this the way you thank God, Yongie," she said, "for all the nice things He has given you? Don't you think the best way to thank Him is by trying to please Him?" But Yongie would not answer, and only hung her head and sulked. Presently Miss Perry said to her, "Do you love Jesus?" And after a long pause Yongie whispered "Yes." "Then you must try to please Him and do what He would like you to do." And Yongie is going to try harder than ever, and when she went to bed that night she asked God to forgive her and help her to be his loving little child.

The children in Corea don't sleep in beds like you do, but they have a padded rug for a bed, which they spread on a hot floor, with a fire underneath, and another padded rug to cover them over with.

ISN'T THAT A STRANGE BED?

Now there are numbers of little children in Corea who have no home and no friends; and if any of you would like to collect some money to help clothe and feed them, and to send people out to tell them about Jesus Christ, and will send it to me, I will see that Miss Perry receives it. If you would like to write to Miss Perry, I am sure she would be glad to hear from you, and will answer your letters. Her address is, Home of Destitute Children, Seoul, Corea.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 170).

A SCRIPTURE CLOCK.

Find the following passages, and say where they are to be found. All those not otherwise indicated are contained in the Gospel of Matthew.

1. "Could ye not watch . . . one hour?"
2. "All . . . about the space of two hours cried out." (Acts xv. to xx.)
3. "He went out about the third hour and saw others."
4. "His servant was healed in the self-same hour."
5. "Of that day and that hour knoweth no man."
6. "Again he went out about the sixth hour."
7. "Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him." (John.)
8. "Why stand we in jeopardy every hour?" (1 Cor. x. to xv.)
9. "There was darkness over the land to the ninth hour."
10. "It was about the tenth hour." (John.)
11. "About the eleventh hour he went out."
12. "Are there not twelve hours in the day? (John x. to xv.)

(Children under TEN do any four, those under THIRTEEN any seven.)

No. 168.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Zeldah Albert*, A. D. Adams, J. H. Archer*, William Aston, John Adams.

B—Teresa and Lilian Blackie, Albert Baker, James Barker, Corbet*, Lindsay* and Leonard Browne. Ethel Barclay*, Ernestine Buhl, Henriette Bardot*, Lucienne Brabandes, Maggie Banks*, Stanley and Gordon Boxer, Maud, Dorothy, Evelyn and Sylvia Barrett, Ralph Bourne, A. Bridges*, Charles and Eva Brown, Ethel Bonger, Florence Blackman, George Brown, Ethel Black, Louis Berthe, Godfrey and Gladys Bates, Ashley Bowker*, Susette* and Mary* Beck, Mary Bryant, Charlie Banks, Dorothy Berry, Allen Baker.

C—Daisy Clarke, Dorothy Charles, Richard Cornthwaite*, Eleanor Chance, Willie and Mary Charles, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, Guy and Oscar Cross, Willie Carter*, Millicent and Cicely Craven, Joan Clarke*, Dora Corrie*, Maggie Carter*, B. M. Cashford*, Edith Corrick, Alice Crang, Dorothy Clarke, Dorothy Cooper, Nellie and Janie Crawford, Alice Cady.

D—Harold Davis, Violet Davidson, Gordon Duncan Polognia Daws*, Marie Denisot*, Catherine and Agnes Darke, Jessie Donaldson, Dorothy* and Marjory* Dyke, Vera Dickinson, Constance Devenish-Meares, William Dilly*, J. E. Davey.

E—Helen Eardley-Wilmot, Maud Eddy, Muriel Edwards*.

F—Louise Filhol, Jeanne Faucon, Maggie, Kate, Mabel, Eva and Bessie Fletcher, Agnes, Netta, Flossie* and Maggie* Fullarton. Aileen and F. A. Figgis, Mary and Bessie Freeman, Marian and James Freegard*, W. A. and Reginald Findlay, G—Kathleen and Irene Gough, Norman Good, Mary Gimson, Helen and Walter Gray, Edith Grieve, Harry Gribble, Gordon Greenwood*, Nancy*, Dorothy* and Winnie Grove. M. Greenleaf, I. Garrod*, Aileen Gardner, L. Mace Glassmoor, Agnes Grierson*, Dorothy Garfit, Thos. Groombridge, Ernest and Daisy George, Evelyn* and Minnie* Giddings.

H—Freda Hinston, Cyril Hills, Harcourt and Helen Hunter, Charles Haig, Georgette Hoffmann, May and Sandy Handyside, Margaret Hogg*, Edith and Winifred Harvey, Ella Hake, Bessie Hope, Ruth Hinder, Mary and Freda Haines, Dorothy and Elsie Hanson, Violet Holford, Edith Holms, Ethel Hutchings*.

I—Isabel and Ami Inglis.

J—J. Sinclair Jackson*, Lizzie Johnstone.

K—Lily Kinvig, Philippa* and Dorothy* Kerr, Ray and Ethel Kelsey, Flossie Key, Agnes* and Isa Kay*, Hélène Kœuno, Jeanie Kyle.

L—Henry Laing, Alice Lemar, Grahame and Murray Lloyd. Elsie Leigh, Hannah Lovell, Eleanor Lowe.

M—Margaret Macphee, Olive Newburn, John MacMurray, Margie Marston, Christina Marshall, Gwendoline Moir*, Daisy Martin, Hilda Medill*, K. G. MacGilp*, Charlotte Millar, Louis Maclachlan, Nellie, Annie, and Daisy Mackenzie, Annie Moule*, Avie Mallory, Annie Macnair, Ada Macnutt*, B. and Harry Melsher, Dora Muir*, Dorothy and Margaret Morris*, Frank Medcalf, Mabelle Mounstephen, Barbara and J. Maconchy, Dorothy Morgan, Louisa Merritt, Eliza MacGregor, A. R. Marlow*, Daisy Mackenzie.

N—Amy and Maud Nottage.

O—Eva and Maud Oakes, Mattie and F. A.* Osmond, Olive Oxley, Sidney and Katie Oliver, Muriel Oldfield.

P—Winnie Page*, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Lillie* and Eva* Petter, Edith Purkiss, Daisy Phillips, Clarice Peach, May, Vera and Daisy Petrides, Joanna Pearman, Geoffrey Peach, Evelyn Pechey, Willie, Ada and Jessie Palmer, J. E. Pearce, Laura Percy.

R—Marjorie and Herbert Rainey, Willie Rigby, Willie Rogers, Dorothy and Evelyn Rashley, Elmina, Isabel and Jessie Roe, Gussie and Marion Roach, A. M. Roberts*.

S—Muriel, Ivy and Rosetta Sherwin, Bessie Symes*, D. D. and T. M. Stanier, Bwendoline, Undine, Llewellyn, Wilfred, Mervyn, Gladys and Eric Shaw, Violet Salvesen, Bertha Stocker, Annette and Cecil Stirling, Maudie, Sydney and Janet Speed, Ronald Studd, Evelyn* Shaw, Nannie Sturrock*, W. Stangoe, May Short, Lilian Sargeant, Charles Saunders*, Florrie Smith*, Bessie Scantlebury*, Herbert Stuart, Bob and Dollie Salt, Nellie Sery, Cicely and Marjorie Sherbrooke.

T—Alice Truelove, Harry Thompson*, E. Thorne*, Eileen* and Florence* Tomlinson, John Thompson*, Louie* and Nannie* Tibbits, Sarah Tyson, Marjorie Tracey.

U—Queenie Upton*.

V—May Vickers, Gertrude Vellacott*.

W—Ethel and W. H. Williamson, Frank* and Madge Wilson, Jack Woodhouse*, F. K. White, Pringle Wilson*, Ernest Wakeford, Chas. Wingrave, Violet and Arthur Walker, Ruby, and Edith Wilkins, Chas. and Winnie Williams.

Y—Annie Yeo*, Gladys Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 160—Cuckoo and Maria Lister (S. Africa). No. 161—Lancelot Mayes (U.S.A.), Ruth Sprigg* (S. Africa), Maria and Cuckoo Lister (S. Africa). No. 162—Elsie and W. B. Henderson, Daisy McArthur (S. Africa). No. 163—Dora May (Jamaica). No. 164—Ivan and Rotha St. George (Canada). No 165 Frank and Vera* Sjöström (U.S.A.). No. 167—Kate*, Nettie*, Ina*, and Willie Thomson, Olive van Millingen (Constantinople).

HONOURS LIST.

The following have been correct each week during the quarter:—

A—Violet Ashworth.
B—Herbert Braddon, Charlie Banks, Mary Beck.
C—Lydia Cleary, Walter Carter, Dorothy Cooper, Richard Cornthwaite, Winnie Cox.
D—Albert Davis, William Dilly.
E—Muriel Edwards.
F—Mary Freeman.
G—Bertie and Clarice Gale. Kathleen Gough, Helen Gray.
H—Eric Hill.
I—Ami Inglis.
J—Emily Jones.
M—Daisy, Nellie, and Annie Mackenzie, John MacMurray, Ada Macnutt, Reginald Measor, Margaret and Dorothy Morris.
N—Valerie Noel, Amy and Maude Nottage, Peter Nicholson.
P—Kathleen Pasley, John Pearce, Kathleen Pincott, Gladys and Isabel Phipps.
R—C. Alice Reid.
S—Muriel Sherwin, Betty Stocks, D. D. Stanier, Flora Simmons.
T—Marjorie Tracy.
W—Edith Wallis, Greta Watson, Edward Wheeler, Cecile Wright, Winnie and Charles Williams.

Personal.

Arthur Lamb, A. P. Turnbull, Dorothy Clarke.—I am very sorry you have been so unwell, but hope the bright weather that is coming will make you feel strong again.

Gladys Allan.—Your initial made no difference in the index You may not use any "help" outside a "reference Bible."

Kathleen Remon.—I am glad to welcome you as a new "Searcher." The new quarter begins with No. 170.

Henriette Bardot.—Please send Lucie's address.

Alan Symon.—A "star" cannot be given for work done in pencil.

Nellie Brown.—The "first list" contains the correct answers received up to 12 o'clock on Monday morning; the second, those received up till Thursday morning.

Herbert Toller.—Your reference to No. 3 of 166 was wrong. VI. instead of XII.

Ernest George.—You had omitted to put by whom and to whom questi on 6 was said.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Liverpool, May 7, 8; Bolton, May 9; Manchester, May 12; Sheffield, May 15; Bradford, May 16. Rev. B. Callender, Bedford, April 9; Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill, April 15-26. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Kettering, April 8-24.

Half-yearly Meetings.—Hope Hall, Liverpool, May 8 (4 and 7.30); Central Hall, off Deansgate, Bolton, May 9 (7-30); Strangeways Hall, Manchester, May 12 (3 and 6.30); Y.M.C.A. Hall, Sheffield, May 15 (7.30); Church Institute, Bradford, May 16 (7.30).

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending April 15.

Sun., April	9	Jer.	xvii.	5-14	Thurs., April	13	Jer. xxiii. 28-32
Mon., „	10	„	xvii.	19-27	Fri., „	14	„ xxiv. 1-10
Tues., „	11	„	xviii.	1-16	Sat., „	15	Psa. cxxi. 1-8
Wed., „	12	„	xxiii.	1-8

The Flower Mission of the Factory Helpers' Union seeks to bring some of this season's sweetness into the lives of these girls; thousands of fragrant bunches are distributed among them, either in the workrooms, where ladies visit them, or in the clubs and evening homes, opened especially for their benefit and recreation after the day's work is over. Will those who would like to help in this work kindly write to one of the secretaries, who will gladly send all necessary information? Miss L. E. Tritton, 68, Cromwell Road, S.W.; Miss E. M. Tritton, 36, Queen's Gate Gardens, S.W., are the secretaries.

A Dying Saint's Testimony.

In the deeply interesting biography* of Isaac Sharp, the passing away of that saint of God is strikingly outlined. A long life of great activity in the cause of missions, involving much travel all the world over, ended appropriately amid scenes of rest and peace, and with a truly gracious testimony.

"On the 10th of March (1897) there could no longer be any doubt as to the final issue of his illness; but that marvellous vitality which had so signally overcome the effects of hardship and suffering in the past still maintained a conflict in the grasp of death, and the lamp of life continued to flicker to the last. In the afternoon of that day, when the extremity of pain had subsided, the patient sufferer expressed his thankfulness for partial relief; and, addressing one who sat beside his bed, he said, 'I want to say that in my suffering I cast myself upon the Lord. I do not wish to undervalue the kind and unremitting attention I have received; but I wish it to be understood that relief came distinctly in answer to prayer. The means used were blessed . . .

"In the midst of accumulated suffering, his chief anxiety seemed to be lest his patience and resignation should not hold out. Once, during a night of peculiar unrest, he was heard to ejaculate hurriedly, 'Oh, come; come quickly!' But immediately after, in a loud, strong voice, he broke forth, 'Not my will, dear Lord, but thine be done?' In the morning, he remarked to the nurse in attendance that he had never expected to live through the night; but when she inquired, 'And how do you feel now, Mr. Sharp?' he replied, with a twinkle of his old mirthfulness, 'more like life than death.' Then, immediately raising his hands, he added reverently, 'As He wills!'

"In the afternoon of the 15th, he asked Nurse Blake 'Will my voice hold out through the night?' When she expressed a doubt, he intimated his belief that the end was near. . . . Addressing his nephew and niece, he continued: 'This is my death-bed testimony. I have a living sense that it is best to live in the love and power of God, that we may be complete in Him, in whom alone we can be complete. Blessed be his holy name! To me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. Death is swallowed up in victory.' After delivering an affectionate message for his aged and invalid sister-in-law, he resumed: 'May the true life be the blessed portion of us all, now and for evermore. Press on to the mark of the high-calling of God in Christ Jesus.'"

Six days afterwards the warrior's task was o'er, and a few days later devout men carried him to his burial at Ettington, in ground opposite the little Friends' meeting-house where his voice had so often been heard in prayer and exhortation. Testimony was borne to the grace of God, and the fragrance of the memory of the servant whose departure so many mourned.

Good Friday with Theatrical Employees.—Sir George and Lady Williams again invited the employees in London theatres to a social gathering at Shoreditch Town Hall on Good Friday afternoon. Some 700 persons engaged in twenty theatres and music halls were present. Tea and fruit were plentifully provided. A book was given to each person by the Religious Tract Society, and a bouquet from the Flower Mission. Sir Geo. Williams, in giving a hearty welcome, described life as a journey soon to terminate. Rev. W. N. Davis, rector of Spitalfields, spoke of the evil of sin and the growing neglect of public worship among large masses of the people. Rev. Dr. Gritton followed on "Individuality;" Rev. E. E. Cleal, Congregational minister of South Hackney, spoke on "The Love of God as manifested in Christ Jesus;" and Mr. T. C. Chadwick on "The Blessedness of Christian Living." Mr. H. Ehrlich, for thirty-three years manager of the Pavilion Theatre services, Whitechapel, and Mr. Goodenough, London City missionary to theatrical employees, also took part in the proceedings. The gathering was organised by the committee of Special Religious Services, 3, Bridewell Place.

* Isaac Sharp: An Apostle of the Nineteenth Century. By Frances Anne Budge. Introduction by Sir Joseph Pease, Bart., M.P. Portrait and illustrations. (4s. 6d. Headley Brothers.)

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

The annual meeting of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, or the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, was recently held in Queen's Hall, Langham Place. Lord Kinnaird occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance.

Mr. Birdwood, in the absence of the secretary (Rev. A. R. Cavalier), made a detailed statement, in which he outlined the history of the Society, and the progress that had been made in its work during the past ten or fifteen years. At the present time the Society has thirty-two stations, and employs ninety-six European missionaries and 310 assistants, Bible women, &c. Last year there were 6,551 pupils in the schools and zenanas, and the attendances at the hospitals numbered 60,000.

Lord Kinnaird delivered a brief address from the chair, alluding at the outset in sympathetic terms to the death of Mr. W. T. Paton, the late hon. finance secretary. He appealed earnestly for increased support for the work. They wanted continued help, in order not only to maintain their present operations, but to extend their labours as far as possible.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie, K.C.S.I., late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, said that while the Government of India was free from all connection with and support of idolatry, yet it was sometimes a little timid to proclaim itself thoroughly as a Christian Government. He spoke in terms of the highest praise of the native Christians, remarking that a more devoted, humble, pure-living set of men they could not have than the native Christians of India. After pointing out that India from a religious standpoint was at present in a very interesting and critical state, he said that the women of India were and must be the most potent factors in the future religious development of that country. It was impossible to overrate the strength of woman's influence in an Indian household. Hence they saw the importance of getting at the women, and there could not be a better means of attaining that end than through Zenana missions. If they could get hold of the young girls and the young mothers of this generation, they would have gone far to secure the young men of to-day, and their sons after them.

The Bishop-designate of Mombasa (Rev. W. G. Peel) spoke from personal experience of the Society's work in Western India, particularly in and around Bombay. Men missionaries could not reach the women, but that task was in the hands of their sisters in England, and it was their privilege to go to the Indian women, to win their confidence, to teach in their schools and in their homes, and to tell them of the love of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. In concluding, he made an urgent appeal for more help and for more labourers. It was the women who were maintaining household idolatry in India, and he appealed to them on their behalf. He appealed to the women of England to give themselves to the work of winning their sisters in India for Christ. To them came Christ's claim to pass on what they knew of Him to India's women.

The last speaker was Rev. F. B. Meyer, who gave an interesting account of his recent visit to India.

Saturday Afternoons for Working Girls.—May we ask friends living within easy reach of London for an invitation for a small or large party of girls to a country garden on a Bank Holiday or a Saturday afternoon? During the next three months thousands of business and factory girls would enjoy such a pleasant break in the monotonous toil of their lives. Will any one responding to this request communicate with Miss Butler, 13, Onslow Square, South Kensington, S.W. (Hon. Sec. of Holiday Department of the Young Women's Christian Association.)

E. R. Hope, President.
M. Bevan, Chairwoman of London Council.

School for Missionaries' Daughters.—An outbreak of infectious sore throat at the School for Missionaries' Daughters at Sevenoaks has necessitated an examination of the drainage of the house, and it is found imperatively necessary to make various radical changes, which must involve very heavy expense. It is proposed to raise a sum of £3,000 to enable the committee to meet the heavy expenditure of the sanitary alterations and to carry on the work efficiently. Any help will be received by Mr. W. Edwards, jun., treasurer, 14 Dalcham Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

The Victorian Bush.

A forward movement of great importance has been inaugurated in connection with the Victorian Sunday School Mission. A missionary of the Union has started out in a fine new van to do a special work in the outlying country districts of Victoria. Much has already been accomplished through the efforts of the Union or by private enterprise; and frequently such efforts have resulted in the formation of churches now holding regular services.

The Bush Missionary has a stock of books, pamphlets, and Bibles with him to enable him to act as colporteur. The van is constructed so as to act as bedroom, dining-room, and shop, all in one; and should occasion require, it may serve as a pulpit or platform for open-air addresses. The agent carries a lantern and good slides, by which means he can give useful and entertaining lectures. A gramaphone is part of his luggage, and will be a useful adjunct in his work amongst the young.

The agent appointed is Mr. F. W. Fry, who has been assistant secretary of the Victorian Sunday School Union and superintendent of the Children's Church. He has lived a good deal in the bush, and is intensely interested in children and specially qualified for the work.

D. M. L.

Irish Notes.

A "PROTESTANT THOUSAND" has been formed in Dublin, and the first public meeting under its auspices was held last week and largely attended by ministers and members of various Churches. The meeting was chiefly concerned in protesting against the establishment and endowment of a Roman Catholic university in Ireland.

Much regret is felt in Dublin and throughout Ireland that, owing to continued ill-health, Rev. J. S. Fletcher, D.D., rector of St. Barnabas', Dublin, has been obliged to resign that position. From the very first no one took a deeper interest in the Dublin Christian Convention than Dr. Fletcher, and no one was a warmer friend of Christian union and of every good work. He was ordained in 1857, and has been in his present post since 1872. Dr. Fletcher took a deep interest in Mr. Moody's visits, and has been an active member of the Evangelical Alliance Committee.

Much satisfaction is felt that the Vice-Chancellor has granted a perpetual injunction against the proprietors of the racecourse, Jones' Road, Drumcondra, Dublin, preventing them from carrying on in future Sunday racing in the neighbourhood, which had been turned into a sort of pandemonium by the crowds that attended every Lord's Day. A local committee took the matter up, and have gained their point. Now they intend to institute proceedings against the proprietors of two other race courses near Dublin, where similar scenes are enacted on Sundays, and it is earnestly hoped that in these cases also they will be successful.

Mrs. Stern, widow of the celebrated Missionary, Dr. Stern, has been addressing with excellent effect meetings in the South of Ireland on mission work among the Jews in Palestine; and Miss Gordon, of Strabane, has been appointed a Missionary to Damascus.

The Belfast Young Men's Christian Association continues to prosper. Its annual meeting was held on Thursday night, and it was reported that it has a membership of over 2,000, and its income last year was about £1,500. Amongst the speakers were Dr. Barnardo, of London, who said there was a work to be done among the waifs and strays of Belfast by anyone who had eyes and a heart to perceive it, and he intimated that such work would be soon commenced. Mr. A. B. Lloyd, a missionary from Uganda, also spoke, and gave a thrilling account of mission work in mid-Africa, saying that no other religion than that of Jesus Christ could meet the needs of Africa.

Boy Emigrants.—Mr. Fegan writes from the Boys' Home, 93, Southwark Street, S.E.:—"The time is very near for us to despatch our party of young emigrants for the Far West. I am glad to say that the depression from which farming interests in Canada suffered so heavily for several years has given place to much prosperity. In consequence, there is a great demand this season for boy-help. Prospects altogether are better than for many years past. The boys already sent out have proved their gratitude by sending over in voluntary gifts, out of their own earnings, more than £2,000 towards the support of their old Home. More than 100 of them have sent back the £10 expended on their emigration to 'help another poor fellow out.' We need at least £1,000 for this work within the next two or three weeks."

(439)

Evangelistic.

Countess Schimmelmann at Chicago.

GRATIFYING tidings are to hand as to the work of God in the hands of the Countess Schimmelmann at Chicago. The Countess has faithfully proclaimed the glad tidings of salvation through Christ alone, and redemption with his precious blood, alike to anarchist and law-abiding citizens. Among all classes of society there has been evidence of much blessing.

By far the greater number of conversions, however, have been seen among the working classes, and many who have been avowed atheists are now preaching Christ to their fellow workmen, among whom their testimony endorsed by their changed lives is exercising great power.

The Countess has met with a most hearty reception from the clergy and ministers. The Presbyterian churches and pulpits have been placed at her disposal—an unprecedented step—enabling her to reach many who would not otherwise have come under the sound of her telling proclamation of the simple Gospel. She has visited the State prison, and feels assured of her message that "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners" has had the Divine seal upon it in souls being saved.

Earnest prayer is desired that the Lord may continue to sustain his servant in her life's business for Him. J. McCall.

Rev. D. M. Cameron has concluded a series of Gospel meetings in the Free Church, Munlochy, Ross-shire. Simple and direct preaching especially secured the attention of the young.

Mr. Geo. Pell, of the Evangelisation Society has held a fifteen days' mission at the People's Mission Hall, Townsend Street, Walworth, with encouraging results. Much blessing has come also to the Christians.

Mr. E. P. Telford has concluded a twelve days' mission in the Rotherhithe Free Church, Lower Road, S.E., with the happiest results. His earnest faithful, manly appeals has led a large number into the light. Night after night the enquiry room was filled with those anxious about salvation.

Rev. J. T. Mateer, of London, has just concluded an interesting mission at the George Street Baptist Chapel, Ryde, Isle of Wight. It continued for twelve days. At the final meeting on the Sunday night some eight or ten rose for prayer, most of whom passed into the enquiry room afterwards. Rev. E. Bruce Pearson is the esteemed pastor of the church.

Dr. Barnes, of Folkestone, has concluded an evangelistic mission at Emmanuel Church, Tunbridge Wells. In spite of the snow and cold, considerable numbers attended. Addresses on the deepening of spiritual life were given to Christians on each afternoon, and also a meeting for children and one for men. At every meeting God set his seal on the Word preached, and many were dealt with at the after meetings.

Mr. William Hill, evangelist, has concluded a three weeks' evangelistic mission in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Calcutta. The meetings were a means of blessing to many souls. Over a hundred persons have publicly signified their surrender to Jesus Christ for salvation, while there has also been much blessing amongst believers through Bible readings on the spiritual life, which were given each morning during the first two weeks of the mission.

Rev. N. Hardingham Patrick (recently of Tangier and the North Africa Mission) concluded last week a successful ten days' mission in the Prospect Wesleyan Chapel, Bradford, of which his old Gibraltar friend, Rev. W. Terry Coppin is pastor. The services were well attended, both on the week days and Sabbaths (two). A large number of young men and women made definite choice of Christ, and much blessing has come to the church and congregation. Mr. Patrick, who for the present is living at the Hermitage, Redhill, Surrey, is open for special services.

More unsuitable weather for a mission could hardly be conceived than that which the friends at North Shields Baptist Church (Rev. C. Stanley) had last weeks. Mr. Henry Thorne, however, did not allow his ardour to be damped nor his faith weakened, and now that the mission is over every one is rejoicing over the great blessing that God has given. Many have professed spiritual decision, while saints have been revived and Christian work has been stimulated. From the Sabbath School, from the C. E. Society, and from the streets, young and old old have been led to the Saviour.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. Monro Collings.—During April, Haling Road Hall, Croydon.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Apl. 6, 7, Dorking; 9, Queen's Park Congregational Church, Manchester; 15-24, Bristol; 29-May 8, Sunderland; 13-21, South Croydon.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Till Apl. 10, West Hartlepool; 15-24, Woodford; 30-May 8, Windsor; 13-21, Sidcup.

Gipsy Smith.—Till Apl. 10, Walsall; 15-24, Swindon; 29-May 8, Bristol; 13-22, Marylebone.

Mr. Geo. Clarke.—Till Apl. 17, Finchley.

Mr. E. P. Telford.—Apl. 9-20, Gainsboro' Apl. 23-May 4, Leeds; 21-28, Bromley.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Till Apl. 17, Sunderland; May 7-22, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—Apl. 9-20, Canning Town; 23, Stratford; 24, 25, Chester; 26, Bristol; 27, 29, North Wales; 30, Stratford Conference Hall; May 1-5, Dorking.

Mr John Burnham.—Till Apl. 14, Tredegar.

Mr. William Grove.—Apl. 8-24, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

Evangelistic Mission.—KilburnHall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday and Tuesday at 7, and Thursday at 8, Mr A. C. Burley. Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sunday at 7, Thursday at 8, Mr. P. H. Thompson.

Mr. Jas. Sprunt.—Apl. 9, 16, 23, and Wednesdays in April, Willesden Hall, N.W.; Thursdays, Union Hall, Carlisle Street, N.W.; Apl. 30-May 14, Pulborough.

Mr. Newton Jones.—Apl. 8-17, Netherton (Free Church Council); 22-27, Greenhithe, 29-30, Ealing; May 7, 8, Chester; 14, 15, Huntingdon; 21, Oxford; 27-29, Bedford.

Rev. F. C. Spurr (Missioner of the Baptist Union).—Apl. 9-17, West Green, Tottenham; Apl. 30-May 7, Onslow Chapel, Brompton, S.W., daily at 3.15 and 8.

Brothers Weaver.—Till Apl. 14, Dumbarton; 16-28, Hamilton; 30-May 2, Langholm.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Apl., Park Hall, Barking.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till Apl. 23, Dundee; Apl. 30-May 12, Banchory.

Mr. John Elliott.—Apl. 9-16, Aller Bridge, North Devon.

Notices.

Communications Received with Thanks.—H.M. A.S. Mrs. F. F.J.C. J.M. G.M.T. A.B. W.S.M. J.B. R.B.W. A.P.H. G.W.L.B. A.McG. L.G.T. J.L.A. H.C.D. H.I. W.H. N.G. T.C.U. B.M. J.M. C.U. J.D. W.G.A. T.E. W.J.L. A.B.B. J.T.M. L.C. W.T.C. J.A.C. C.E.A. J.M.C. W.S.B. T.H. Mrs. S.W. W.S.T. J.S. J.C.G. J.M.L. S.S.U. W.L. E.F.E. Miss D. E.L.O. F.F. L.J.A.B. J.C.H. J.E.J. Miss L. O.C. T.D. G.P. H.E.G. E.A.B. E.F. L.B. J.V. R.K. G.T. C.H. F.C.S. J.McC.

Applications for Tracts.—John S. Williams, 3, Oaklands Park Avenue, Ilford, Essex; Mr. Spare, St. Breward, Bodmin, Cornwall; Mr. J. Sleeman, Delabole, R.S.O., Camelford, Cornwall; Mrs. Pengelly, Fore Street, Camelford, Cornwall; Mr. J. Kent, Trewithan, St. Teath, Cornwall; Mr. W. Rosevear, Trewithan, St. Teath, Cornwall; Miss L. Andrews (for public-house visitation), 7, Huguenot Road, Nunhead; Miss Lottie Rickers (for public-house visitation), 40, Wivenhoe Road, Nunhead; Miss Marley, 106, Blurton Road, Clapton Park, N.E.; George Fisher, Goods Guard, 5, Fowlds Street, Kilmarnock; Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cawley Road, London, N.E.

Lanarkshire Christian Union.—This Union, which for seventeen years has been carrying on aggressive work as an auxiliary to the work of the various churches, reports much blessing on the past year's efforts. In addition to conventions and monthly conference, many Gospel and open-air meetings were held with an estimated attendance exceeding 60,000. Tent work in the summer has been very encouraging, and many being reached in that way. The county is the largest and the most populous in Scotland, and many testimonies as to the value of the work of the Union have been received.

West Africa.—The Liverpool correspondent of the Daily Chronicle says:—"I have received from Sierra Leone a communication of an interesting but paisful character. My informant, whose advices are usually reliable, says that there is strong reason for believing that two white women—young girls, aged respectively sixteen and eighteen—are alive, or were until quite recently alive, and in the hands of the natives in the interior. These young girls are the daughters of an American missionary who was killed, together with his wife, when the Mendi uprising took place. The father was killed outright. The mother was first outraged, and then horribly tortured with barbed wire, and finally put to death. Their remains were afterwards discovered, but no traces of the girls were ever found, and rumours have more than once reached the authorities that they were not killed, but carried off. Every inquiry has been made, but so far without success.

Obituary.

REV. G. D. MACGREGOR.

THE death is announced of Rev. G. D. Macgregor, for more than thirty years minister of Paddington Chapel. For a year or more Mr. Macgregor had suffered from an internal malady, and many are to-day mourning his loss at the age of seventy-four. His home at Willesden Green has known much pain and sorrrow, for during several months past his wife has been laid by with cancer, daily expecting death.

Mr. Macgregor held charges in Scotland and provincial towns before coming to London. He did good work, and his church grew in numbers and influence. Some years ago Mr. Macgregor started a "Fraternal" meeting of ministers in north-west London; breakfasts were held regularly at the houses of the members, among whom were Drs. Horton, Newman Hall, and R. M. Thornton. His generosity was proverbial, though his gifts were made anonymously.

The sympathies of Mr. Macgregor were very wide. He was one of the founders, if not the principal founder, of the London Congregational Union, and served a term as its chairman. He was long a director of the London Missionary Society, and a member of the council of New College. He leaves seven children.

MISS MARY E. BARLOW.

An earnest Christian worker has recently passed away in the person of Miss Mary E. Barlow, of Carlisle. Born at Edinburgh in 1853, where her father was professor of comparative anatomy and physiology, she, with her brother, who survives her, shared the inestimable advantages of a cultured Christian home. It was doubtless from her father that Miss Barlow inherited her great love for animals; but after his early death, the mother carried on the work of developing the gifts of voice and pen which her daughter possessed. Shortly after their removal to Carlisle, Miss Barlow became an active worker for the Saviour. All her gifts were laid at her Master's feet. She was specially interested in temperance, purity, and anti-vivisection work.

Miss Barlow belonged by birth to the Society of Friends, but in later years she joined the Church of England, and her Bible Class for men was a source of great help and strength to many. Her influence spread far, and numbers have cause to bless God that they came under her care. Miss Barlow had that rare gift "a heart at leisure from itself, to soothe and sympathise." Failing health compelled her to relinquish her loved work bit by bit; but, though a sore trial, it was borne without a murmur, and her patient endurance of pain and weakness taught many a lesson to those who were privileged to be with her in her sick room until she was called in "to see the King in his beauty."

India and the Post.—A worker in India writes to us: "The introduction of the penny postage is a great boon to Christian workers in India. Our thanks are due to Mr. Henniker Heaton for his efforts in bringing the matter to a successful termination. I hope this concession will tend to draw closer the bonds of union between England and my native land, India, the greatest appanage of the British Crown, a country which, when redeemed and brought under the rule of King Emmanuel, will also prove one of the brightest jewels in his Crown."

Children in Paris.—Many children in Paris have infidel or careless parents, but they do not prevent their little ones from going to Miss de Broen's Sunday school, or to the children's meeting, held once a week. Many rough children who are at play in the streets are gathered in there. Last month a very happy party assembled in the Iron-room, when Miss de Broen gave prizes to the regular attendants. Will your readers pray for this work among the children? Miss de Broen needs funds to carry on her work, and also devoted workers. Gospel meetings, temperance meetings, night schools, &c., are held, as well as visits to the sick and needy.

M. L. Douglas.

3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris.

Letters to the Editor.

A Root of Much Evil.

DEAR SIR,—At the end of a long and active life two facts are deeply impressed on my mind, viz:—

(a) That Christ struck at the root sin of human nature when He said, "How can ye believe which receive glory one of another, and the glory that cometh from the only God ye seek not?" (John v. 44, R.V.). This sin adapts self to all our circumstances, and clings fearfully. With ministers of religion it develops into sacerdotalism, of which the Bible and the world's history, since the Bible was written, give painful evidence.

(b) That every real Christian, let his denomination be what it may, experiences the New birth and indwelling of the Holy Ghost; which entails that the service of God through Christ becomes his main object and the joy of his life, however secular his ordinary business may be. This is a simple test which every man can apply to himself.—Yours faithfully,

HENRY TOYNBEE.

12, Upper Westbourne Terrace, W.

Profession versus Practice.

MY DEAR SIR,— I feel we are under a great obligation to you for the plain and forcible appeals you make from time to time to the hearts of Christians. Let me tell you there is the utmost need. Speaking generally there is a tremendous divergence between the lips and the life, the profession and the practice. To hear people sing, or to talk, you might think they were perfectly ready to do whatsoever Jesus would have them do; and yet when you are seeking, as I am to-day, for ladies and gentlemen of leisure to come down into our crowded parishes in South London amongst the poor and the degraded and try to lift them up, they are not to be found. It is a great reflection upon our Christianity.

Of course, there are those whose duties or circumstances prevent, and against them I have nothing to say; I am concerned only with those of leisure and means who have no excuse whatever. When will Christians see their inconsistencies, and shake off the reproach which is lying at their doors? When will they recognise that if they would walk "in his steps," their talk must be that of a life spent in sacrifice and suffering for the sake of others? (1 Peter ii. 21). There is no other manner of life consistently possible. My Christian brother, my Christian sister, I beg you "roll away the stone;" ask "what would Jesus do?" and then go and do it. Your place is amongst the poor and the lost of God's sheep, and you can have any amount of work which will yield you a rich return in God's harvest. Some of us have obeyed the call, having left lovely parishes and surroundings to come into these crowded parts, and we tell you there is no luxury in the world to compare with the luxury of working amongst those very poor people and putting sunshine into their lives, and we say to you, "Come over and help us."—Yours, in the thick of the fight,

Southwark Park, S.E. J. WALLACE.

"Undenominationalism."

SIR,—Pastor Fuller Gooch has raised some interesting points in his letter on "Undenominationalism." He takes exception to Christians being named Wesleyans, &c. But is that not "Making a man an offender for a word?"

The terms Wesleyan, Baptist, &c., are in themselves useful. If I go to West Norwood and wish to attend Mr. Fuller Gooch's ministry, for whom or what shall I inquire? For Mr. Fuller Gooch's place? For the undenominational chapel? Such terms are open to the same objections as those he finds fault with. In fact, distinctive names as Evangelical, Primitive, and so on, give us at once a general understanding of the tone of spiritual life and the style of services in a place that we cannot have if the generic term, Christian, alone is used.

The term Undenominationalism has in very many cases become a positive snare. Mr. Gooch in his article uses it in a good sense—in the sense that we should not be aloof from other Christians in help, sympathy, and edification because we differ on one or more particular points. But we find the term applied to Christians who band together for Gospel work, and who in many cases, in eschewing points that would lead to mere controversy, eschew practically all Christian teaching. Surely now, if ever, we have through much tribulation to enter the kingdom of God, and we need all the strength and sympathy and help that can be received by strengthening one another's hands in God.

For any one section of Christians to refuse fellowship to those who do not hold similar views seems to us positively wrong. But it is difficult to see how this can be altered. "Each sect trains its ministers and its members to see truth from its own standpoint." What else can they do—unless, as they ought, to encourage the believers to mix with those of other communions? This indeed is very much needed. But how does Mr. Gooch teach? Does he not see truth from his own standpoint? He teaches prophetic doctrines of the futurist school. Would he allow any one to teach diametrically the opposite doctrines in the congregation?

It is well to look at the various denominations as simply various sections of the Church at large, and to forbear with one another in regard to disputable points, and, in seeking first the kingdom of God, seek one another's good to edification. JAMES STORMONTH.

Edinburgh, March 26.

Y.W.C.A. Home, Leamington.

THE twenty-fourth report of this institution has been issued by Miss Bagster, who has carried on the superintendence of the work since Miss G. M. Taylor, the founder, was obliged by ill-health to relinquish the active management of it.

Quietly and unobstrusively, but with constant tokens of the Lord's favour, the work has continued from its formation until now. Its first aim has ever been the spiritual welfare of the young women and girls coming under its influence. For some it has provided a home while out of situation, for others a holiday home, while many a young girl apprentice, who would otherwise have had to live in lodgings, has found during the first years of business life the safe shelter and motherly care needed at that time.

God has wonderfully fulfilled the desire of the founders, and this is seen by the numbers of women workers in his great field of labour who have commenced their Christian life at the Leamington Home. Some work as Bible women; some as matrons of similar institutions; some as helpers in "rescuing the perishing;" some as hospital nurses; at least three as missionaries to the heathen have been influenced there to take up such work; while many more are letting their light shine behind the counter or in home life.

The institution is partly self-supporting, and of late years has been made more so by the establishment under the same roof of a small "Nurses' Home," from which medical and surgical hospital-trained Christian nurses are sent out to private cases, profits going to the maintenance of the Home, to which they return to rest in the intervals of their work. But every year payments have to be made which the contributions of inmates cannot cover. The house is a very large one, with spacious rooms for the constant Bible classes and evangelistic meetings held there. Expenses therefore are heavy. No debt has ever rested on the institution, which is in a small way a standing proof of God's faithfulness in hearing prayer. Marvellous would the full record be, if written, of the ways and means by which help has come just as it was needed.

Central France.—It is a pleasure to note the re-appearance of Evangelical religion in parts of France from which it was stamped out by persecution and massacre in the sixteenth century. Pastor A. de Senger, of Lamastre, Ardèche, recently visited England to interest friends in his work. The council of the Free Evangelical Church have an opportunity at the present moment of buying a building which may serve the double purpose of chapel and manse. The church is not numerous, and its members are peasants and working people. These, however, have made great sacrifices to meet the need, but about £300 yet remains to be raised. Those who realise the great importance of entering the many open doors in France to-day are asked to remember Lamastre, and to pray that its temple may be a centre of light and liberty in the midst of a dark and sin-enthralled people.

About Books.

THE twelfth annual volume of The Christian Pictorial (4s. 6d. Alexander & Shepheard) forms a handsome book, replete, as the title suggests, with illustration. The letterpress includes representative contributions of many branches of religious literature, historical, exegetical, and evangelistic, and is throughout of a high character.

Inquiries often reach us regarding the Stundists, the persecutions to which they are subjected, and the progress which follows their testimony in the great Russian Empire. It is a pleasure to give in this column the answer which we accord to individual questioners. Current information concerning the Stundists in Russia, as well as the ill-used Baptists of Germany, is given in the Quarterly Reporter of the German Baptist Mission. (2d. Baptist Tract and Book Society.) The April issue of this little paper is interesting from beginning to end, and witnesses at once to the power of God's Word, and the praiseworthy devotion of men and women who are not allowed to know much of joy or peace outside the Gospel of Christ.

A specially attractive volume is the Fulness of God and Other Addresses, by Marcus Rainsford, B.A., late incumbent of Belgrave Chapel. (3s. 6d. Partridge.) The set addresses are twenty in number, and followed by two deeply interesting dialogues, one with Major Whittle and the other with Mr. D. L. Moody. There is a warm-hearted preface by Canon Christopher, of St. Aldate's, Oxford, whose concluding words we willingly echo:—"There are many children of God who are obliged to live where the exceeding riches of God's grace in his kindness towards us in Christ Jesus are not preached. What a welcome message of glad tidings to some of these would this volume be if lovingly sent by a Christian friend! To all who value the glorious Gospel of the grace of God, I commend this useful memorial of a tried and trusted servant of the Lord Jesus Christ."

"Marlborough's Edition" of THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, unabridged, with a hundred illustrations, is a marvellous pennyworth.

"HOW TO DEEPEN THE SPIRITUAL LIFE IN OUR CHURCHES." The author of the pamphlet recently reviewed in this column under the above title, is Rev. John Williams, of Pontypool.

Recent issues from the Stirling Tract Depot include RONALD MUIR'S TEMPTATION, a story for boys (6d.); and TARRY AND HIS CHUMS, a story of the Old Wynd Mission Church, Glasgow, with preface by Alexander Mackeith (1½d.).

A useful work of reference is WILLING'S PRESS GUIDE, now issued for the twenty-sixth year. This is a handy and up-to-date list of the newspapers of Great Britain and Ireland, also a selection of colonial and foreign journals. (1s. Office: 125, Strand.)

In THE HOLY SPIRIT AND FIRE BAPTISM Mr. Silas Henn expounds Matt. iii. 11, finding in the words a pledge of blessing and not a denunciation of judgment. The pages are thoughtful and worthy of attention. (4d. The Author, Himley Road, Dudley, Worcester.)

"HOME WORDS" PENNY MONTHLY STORIES is a series deserving of commendation. The first two issues are:—"The Golden Lock," by Rev. P. B. Power; and "Two Uncles," by Rev. T. S. Millington. These books are handy in form, and well printed and illustrated.

The South Africa General Mission's booklet series is marked by spirituality of topic and chaste style. The latest contains, "I'LL BE THERE," a missionary story, together with information as to the Mission's scope and present position. (1d. 14a Lingfield Road, Wimbledon.)

In the booklet entitled THE KINGDOM AND THE KING (Walford and Sons, Bletchingley), Mr. E. W. Walford sets forth in conversational form expectations as to the re-occupation of Palestine by the Jewish people and the establishment of Christ's Kingdom as "earth's golden age of universal peace, justice, and prosperity."

A DAILY TEXT BOOK, specially designed for the use of young persons, compiled by H. D., is on sale at Messrs. Brookes & Jepson's, Hastings (6d). The Scripture selections will lay a good foundation in doctrine and counsel for life and godliness. Each month a distinct subject is considered—January, "God;" June, "The Scriptures," and so forth.

STOCKWELL GEMS (2d. Wayre & Son, Lower Kennington Lane). Under this title a useful series of music sheets is edited by Rev. V. J. Charlesworth. Each number contains two or three good pieces, composed or selected for the Spurgeon Orphanage Choir. "Mother's Easy Chair" is touchingly pathetic; and other good poetic and musical combinations are "Sunday" and "After the Cross, the Crown."

One of the latest public utterances of the lamented Canon Bell has been issued in booklet form with the title, THE HOUSEHOLD OF GOD. The pages contain an address delivered in October last at the annual conference of the Evangelical Union for the Diocese of Carlisle, and deal with a sublime theme in the language of grace and truth. (2d. each, 2s. per dozen post free. J. Beaty & Sons, City Press, Carlisle.)

ON THE PERSONAL RETURN OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST. A full report has been published of the recent Advent conference held in Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood. It includes addresses dealing with various aspects of the Lord's Return, by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, Rev. J. J. Luce, Pastor Fuller Gooch, Rev. R. Middleton, and other well-known servants of Christ (1s.: post free, 1s. 2d.) from "Lansdowne," Park Road, West Dulwich, S.E.

A young man who had been a ringleader in folly, but on finding joy and peace in Christ gave up the dance and other worldly pleasures, asked his sister to pass on a message to others after his death. With sincere fidelity the sister discharges the obligation in a dainty booklet, A BROTHER'S MESSAGE TO YOUNG MEN, by M. I. F. (2½d. post free. Bristol: E. W. Buswell, Post Office, Redland; London: Digby Long & Co., 18, Bouverie Street, E.C.) The pages have a pathetic interest, and should be brought under the notice of those to whom the very serious and urgent message was sent.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop of London has instituted Rev. T. Lancaster to the new vicarage of Holy Trinity, Islington, and Rev. A. W. Oxford as incumbent of St. Philip's, Regent Street.

At the first meeting of the new council of the Free and Open Church Association, Lord Teynham was unanimously re-elected chairman. A grant of chairs was made to the new church of St. Peter, Shoeburyness.

The next session of the London Diocesan Conference will be held on April 18 and 19. Several important subjects are down for discussion, but the interest of the conference will centre in the resolution relating to the crisis in the Church.

So successful has been the work in the newly-formed parish of St. Catherine's, Burnley, that the rector has adopted a scheme for providing a parish room and mission building capable of holding 150 persons, not far from the church, at a cost of £1,050.

The resignation is announced of the Bishop of Brechin, the Primus of the Episcopal Church in Scotland (Dr. Jermyn) owing to ill-health. The Bishop is at present resident at Falmouth, where he has been for several weeks. The Scottish Guardian states that he has had a relapse, and that the present state of his health is such as to cause grave anxiety.

In connection with church extension work at Bristol, six eligible sites for churches or mission buildings have been secured, two by gift and four by purchase, while four more are under negotiation. Grants have been made for the building of three churches and five mission-rooms; and the permanent endowment of three curacies in populous parishes has been arranged, with two others to follow this year.

Congregational.

Dr. Guinness Rogers is to deal with Mr. Sheldon's "In His Steps" in two of his Merchants Lectures.

Rev. Henry King, owing to increasing infirmity, is about to resign the charge of Point-in-View, Exmouth, Charity, which he has held since September, 1889.

Rev. J. M. Gibbon has suffered a relapse. After being confined to his bed for a fortnight he caught a chill while sitting up in his bedroom, and has had to lay aside again.

Toller Church, Kettering, which has been renovated, has been reopened: Rev. T. Eynon Davies preached in the absence of Dr. Guinness Rogers through indisposition, and Revs. D. Stephens (pastor) and J. Thompson took part.

Mr. Samuel Maddock, of Hackney College, has been ordained to the pastorate at Thame. Principal Cave gave the charge to the pastor; Revs. Professor Bennett and F. Hastings took part. Rev. M. Lansdown delivered the charge to the church.

The annual meeting of Arundel Square Church, Barnsbury, has been held. The secretary's report gave an encouraging account of the church and its institutions. Special reference was made to the labours of Rev. J. Jameson, now missioner of the Yorkshire Congregational Union, and a hearty welcome accorded to his successor, Rev. C. Garnett, late of Manchester. Addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Learmont, J. B. Ellis, and others.

Circulars have been issued by Rev. W. J. Woods to the officers and members of the Congregational Churches of England and Wales, one explanatory of the recommendations of the committee of the union as to the proposed Twentieth Century Fund, as to which a resolution will be submitted to the assembly at the May meeting of the union, and a second addressed to the minister and senior deacon of each church, inviting the appointment by each church of a special officer to raise its proportion of the 500,000 guinea fund—one guinea for every member. The money may be contributed by weekly or other instalments.

Baptist.

Rev. H. B. Murray, of Canterbury Road Chapel, Kilburn, has accepted the pastorate of Gunnersbury, and will begin his ministry on the first Sunday in May.

Every member of the Spring Assembly of the Baptist Union will receive with his card of admission a certificate, which will secure for him a return ticket to London at a single fare and a quarter.

Rev. Bruce Etherington, of Regent's Park College, who had been accepted by the Baptist Missionary Society for service in India, has, with its consent, undertaken the temporary charge of the English Church at Colombo.

Rev. J. G. Greenhough, of Victoria Road, Leicester, has returned from Italy in materially improved health, after three months' leave of absence. The principal theme of his first discourse after his arrival was the evils of Vaticanism.

Methodist.

The growth of the New Connexion organisation at Normacot, Longton circuit, has necessitated the building of a substantial and enlarged church in place of the present iron structure.

On account of the proposed reduction of the British forces at Crete, the probability is that the Rev. Owen Spencer Watkins, now in the island as Wesleyan chaplain, will return to his duties at Malta shortly.

For the seventh year in succession the Primitive Methodists anticipate a marked increase in membership, more especially in the northern counties. The Sunderland and Newcastle district reports the largest increase which has been known in any district for many years.

Presbyterian.

It is expected that Rev. A. Connell will resume his ministry at Regent Square Church on April 23. He will thus be in time to give the Synod an account of his visit to China and India.

Principal Rainy says he would be pleased to see all the Presbyterian Churches of Scotland united, but that is at present impracticable. He believes the union of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches will lead the way to a more comprehensive union in the future.

Society of Friends.

At the close of a successful fortnight's mission in Jericho, Oxford, Wm. Hobson gave a lecture on the subject of "Ritualism: its Cause, and Cure," during which they was some opposition by representatives of a very high church close by. He traced the origin of ritualism to a "great company of the priests who became obedient to the faith" (Acts vi. 7), to the many thousands of Jews who believed, and "were all zealous of the law" (Acts xxi. 20), and to the possibility that "certain men came down from Judea teaching that ye must be circumcised after the manner of Moses" (Acts xv. 1). Jewish rites and customs were thus imported into the church, and when Constantine, the Roman emperor, set up and established her, heathenism gradually carried its customs also into the sacred enclosure, and heathen temples, heroes and rites were adopted. It is easy to see how the love of power and pre-eminence managed the assimilation and produced the compound labelled Christianity, with priests and rites having no New Testament sanction, and being a blend of Judaism and heathenism tinctured with Christianity. The cure alone is in reversion to the teachings of Christ himself as revealed in his inspired Word, and unfolded to the heart and to the Church by the Holy Ghost. "Back to Christ" is our truest wisdom, and "the Lamb and his followers" are certain of victory.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. Robert Simpson, a retired Congregational minister residing at Wood Green. In 1845, he entered on the pastorate at Gornal, Dudley. He was the author of two publications on "Ritualism" and "Modern Theology."—Rev. John Williams, pastor of Dwyrian Calvinistic Methodist Church, Anglesey, died on Thursday from influenza. He was educated at Bala College, and in 1873 was ordained pastor of Hermon Church, Bethesda. In 1880 he removed to Dwyran.—Rev. W. Murray, Congregationalist, died at Cambridge at the age of seventy-seven. He held the pastorate at Braughing and Puckeridge, Herts, from 1862 to 1876, and at Fairford from 1876 to 1880.—Mr. John Sanderson, J.P., of Sunderland, at the age of sixty-six. He was a generous donor to the Methodist New Connexion Church. He was widely known on Wearside as a shipowner, and old seamen and seamen's widows were his constant care.—Mrs. John Craig, a notable Baptist lady. With her husband she was largely instrumental in founding Baptist churches in Aberdeenshire, where most of her early days were spent.—At Bray, Rev. Jno. G. Clarke, senior Presbyterian minister at Athy.—At Whitney, Oxon, Rev. Wm. Newman, formerly of Kinsale, and late Rector Ringrove, of Cork, aged eighty-five years.—On Easter morn, Charlotte A. Hill, wife of Levi Hill, of Bristol, aged eighty-three years, much beloved.—On 9th ult., at Newport, Essex, Mary Carpenter, aged sixty-three (wife of the Rev. J. G. Carpenter, retired Congregational Minister), a devoted Christian, a warm supporter of the Gospel, and a succourer of many.

"MAY" MEETINGS.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.	Place of Meeting.	Chairman.
APRIL.
Tues. 11	11 a.m.	Church Missionary Society	m Exeter Hall	Bishop of Durham.
"	3 p.m.	" "	m "	Bishop of Wakefield.
"	7 p.m.	" "	m "	Bishop of Winchester.
Wed. 12	11 a.m.	" " (men only)	m "	Sir J. H. Kennaway.
"	11 a.m.	" "	m Queen's Hall	Bishop of Liverpool.
"	7 p.m.	" "	m Albert Hall	Sir J. H. Kennaway.
Thurs. 13	11 a.m.	" "	m Exeter Hall	Bishop of Exeter.
"	3 p.m.	" "	m "	Bishop of Manchester.
"	7 p.m.	" "	m "	Bishop of Worcester.
Fri. 14	11.15 a.m.	" "	m "	Preb. Barlow.
"	3.15 p.m.	" "	m "	Bishop of Carlisle.
"	7 p.m.	" "	m "	Bishop of Peterboro'.
Sat. 15	3.30 p.m.	" " (Young People)	m Albert Hall	Bp. of Sierra Leone.
Mon. 17	3.30 p.m.	Anglo Indian Evangelisation Society	m Exeter Hall	Lord Kinnaird.
Tues. 18	3.30 p.m.	Midnight Meeting Movement	m Exeter Hall	Sir Geo. Williams.
"	3.30 p.m.	Open-air Mission	m Exeter Hall, Lower	Mr. J. H. Tritton.
"	7.0 p.m.	" "	m " "	Sir H. Bemrose, M.P.
Wed. 19	7.30 p.m.	British and Foreign Bible Society	s Wesley's Chapel, City-road	Dr. W. T. Davison.
Thurs. 20	10 a.m.	Christian Police Association	c Exeter Hall	Mr. A. A. Head.
"	11 a.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	m Mission House, Furnival-street	Rev. J. H. Atkinson.
"	12.45 p.m.	Baptist Zenana Mission	m " "
"	2.45 p.m.	Reformatory and Refuge Union	m St. James's Hall	Lord Kinnaird
"	5.0 p.m.	Christian Police Association	m Exeter Hall	Col. E. H. Carlile.
"	6.30 p.m.	Baptist Building Fund	m Mission House, Furnival-street	Mr. W. Payne.
"	7.45 p.m.	Christian Police Association	m Exeter Hall	Col. E. H. Carlile.
Fri. 21	3.0 p.m.	Bible League	m Portman Rooms	Mr. J. H. Tritton.
"	3.0 p.m.	Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission	m Exeter Hall, Parlour	Rev. F. Paynter.
"	7.0 p.m.	C. of E. Sunday-school Institute	m Church House, Westminster	Bishop of Ballington.
"	7.0 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Soc. (Young People)	m Mission House, Furnival-street	Mr. F. J. Marrington.
Sun. 23	7.0 p.m.	National Temperance League	s Westminster Abbey	Archbp. of Canterbury.
Mon. 24	2.30 p.m.	Baptist Union (first session)	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. S. Vincent.
"	2.30 p.m.	Methodist Free Church Missions	c Lower Exeter Hall	Mr. J. Craske.
"	3.0 p.m.	Children's Fresh-air Mission	m Mansion House	The Lord Mayor.
"	3.0 p.m.	Church Temperance Society	m Lambeth Palace	Archbp. of Canterbury.
"	6.30 p.m.	Baptist Union (Century Fund)	m City Temple	Mr. H. Wood.
"	6.30 p.m.	Bible Translation Society	m Mission House, Furnival-street	Mr. R. Souttar, M.P.
"	6.30 p.m.	Methodist Free Church Missions	m Exeter Hall	Mr. R. Turner.
"	8.0 p.m.	Church Temperance Society (Juvenile)	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Bishop of Chichester.
Tues. 25	9.15 a.m.	Lord's Day Observance Society	b St. James's Restaurant	Mr. W. Cruddas, M.P.
"	10.30 a.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	m Mission House, Furnival-street	Mr. G. E. Foster.
"	3.30 p.m.	Baptist Union	m Bloomsbury Chapel
"	4.0 p.m.	Bishop of London's Fund	s St. Paul's Cathedral	Bishop of London.
"	5.30 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	so Holborn Restaurant	Mr. J. H. Tritton.
"	7.0 p.m.	" " "	m " " "	" " "
"	7.0 p.m.	Trinitarian Bible Society	m Exeter Hall	Mr. Jas. Mathieson.
"	8.0 p.m.	Church Temperance Society	m Exeter Hall	Archbp. of Canterbury.
Wed. 26	8.45 a.m.	Baptist Zenana Mission	b Holborn Restaurant	Mr. E. P. Collier.
"	12.0	Baptist Missionary Society	s Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. J. H. Jowett.
"	2.30 p.m.	Church Temperance Society	c St. Martin's Town Hall	Dr. Branthwaite.
"	3 p.m.	Protestant Alliance	c Queen's Hall	Lord Overtoun.
"	3 p.m.	Baptist Union	m Bloomsbury Chapel
"	3 p.m.	Missions to Seamen	m St. James's Hall	Sir T. F. Buxton.
"	3 p.m.	Asiatic Strangers' Home	m The Home, W. India Dock-road	Dr. E. R. Johnson.
"	3.30 p.m.	Colonial and Continental Church Soc.	s St. Martin's Church	Bp. of N. Queensland
"	4.0 p.m.	Wesleyan Missionary Society	s Wesley's Chapel, City-road	Rev. H. P. Hughes.
"	5.0 p.m.	Baptist Total Abstinence Association	m City Temple	Alderman White.
"	7.0 p.m.	" " " "	m " " "	" " "
"	7.30 p.m.	Wesleyan Missionary Society	s Wesley's Chapel, City Road	Rev. T. F. Hulme.
"	7.30 p.m.	Protestant Alliance	m Queen's Hall	Mr. T. A. Denny.
"	7.30 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Soc. (Young People)	s Regent's Park Church	Rev. J. T. Forbes.
"	8.0 p.m.	London Anti-Vivisection Society	m St. James's Hall	Mr. G. W. E. Russell.
Thurs. 27	10 a.m.	Baptist Union (fourth session)	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Dr. W. R. Nicoll.
"	11 a.m.	Church Temperance Society	c St. Martin's Town Hall	Mrs. Creighton.
"	3.0 p.m.	Wesleyan Miss. Soc. (Women's Aux.)	m Wesley's Chapel, City-road	Mrs. Barnsley.
"	3.0 p.m.	Christian Evidence Society	m Stafford Rooms
"	3.30 p.m.	Baptist Ministers' Prayer Union	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. F. B. Meyer.
"	6.0 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	m Exeter Hall	Mr. G. W. Palmer.
"	6.30 p.m.	Wesleyan Miss. Soc. (Women's Aux.)	m Wesley's Chapel, City-road	Mr. T. R. Friens.
Fri. 28	11 a.m.	Wesleyan Missionary Society	s Great Queen-street Chapel	Rev. Dr. H. McMillan
"	11.0 a.m.	Spanish and Portuguese Ch. Aid Socy.	s Holy Trinity Ch., Marylebone	Dean Farrar.
"	3.0 p.m.	South American Missionary Society	m Lower Exeter Hall	Sir F. L. McClintock.
"	4.0 p.m.	Bishop of London's Fund	c Sion College	Bishop of London.
"	7.0 p.m.	Sunday School Union	m 56, Old Bailey	Mr. F. F. Belsey.
"	7.0 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Soc. (Young People)	m Exeter Hall	Mr. W. Payne.
Sat. 29	9.0 a.m.	Wesleyan Missionary Society	b Lower Exeter Hall	Mr. T. H. Bainbridge
Sun. 30.	11.0 a.m.	Church Association	s N. Brixton Church	Rev. F. C. Ward.
MAY.
Mon. 1	7 p.m.	National Temperance League	m Exeter Hall	Archbp. of Canterbury
"	7 p.m.	Ragged School Union	m Queen's Hall	Mrqs. of Northampton
"	3 p.m.	Church Army	m 130, Edgware Road	Rev. W. Carlile.
"	5 p.m.	Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society	m Mansion House	The Lord Mayor.
Tues. 2	11 a.m.	Church Army	c 130, Edgware Road	Rev. W. Carlile.
Wed. 3	11 a.m.	" "	s Westminster Abbey	Bishop of Rochester.
"	3 p.m.	" "	m St. James's Hall	Bishop of Bristol.
"	7.30 p.m.	" "	m " "	Bishop of Salisbury.
"	9 a.m.	Colonial and Continental Church Society	b Cannon Street Hotel	Mr. C. H. Bousfield.
"	3 p.m.	" "	m Sion College	Mr. F. A. Bevan.
"	10 a.m.	Women's Total Abstinence Union	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Hon. Miss Portman.
"	11 a.m.	" " " "	c " "	Lady Eliz. Biddulph.
"	3 p.m.	" " " "	c " "	Mrs. Hawkes.
"	7 p.m.	" " " "	m " "	Miss M. E. Docwra.
Thurs. 4	7 p.m.	London Jews Society	s All Souls', Langham Place	Bishop of Coventry.
Fri. 5	3 p.m.	C. of E. Zenana Missionary Society	m Exeter Hall	Sir E. Elliot.
"	3.30 p.m.	Moravian Missions	m Lower Exeter Hall	Mr. T. A. Denny.
"	9 a.m.	London Jews Society	m " "	Rev. G. W. Dalton.
"	11 a.m.	" "	m Exeter Hall	Sir J. Kennaway.
Wed. 10	8.30 a.m.	United Kingdom Band of Hope Union	b Lower Exeter Hall	Mr. C. E. Tritton.
"	2.30 p.m.	" " "	c " "	Mr. C. J. Whitehead.
"	6 p.m.	" " "	m Exeter Hall	Sir Geo. Williams.
Thurs. 11	11.30 a.m.	Daily Prayer Union	s All Souls', Langham Place	Dean of Norwich.
"	11 a.m.	Moravian Missions	s St. Paul's, Onslow Square	Rev. J. H. Faithful.
Sat. 13	12 a.m.	Royal Society Prev. Cruelty to Animals	m Crystal Palace	H.R.H. Duke of York
Mon. 15	3.30 p.m.	Bible Lands Mission	m Parlour, Exeter Hall	Lord Kinnaird.
Tues. 16	10 a.m.	Primitive Methodist Mission	m City Temple	Mr. J. Peters.

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soiree

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

FOR many years the Rev. William Arthur's powerful treatise, "The People's Day," has been a standard work on the Sabbath question. It has hitherto not been published at less than a shilling, but, in view of the increasing tendency to secularise the Lord's Day, and the need which exists to counteract such an evil by every possible means, our publishers are issuing an edition at a penny. At this price it should find its way into the hands of thousands. Many will doubtless be glad to distribute it in workshops, factories, and in connection with missions, lectures, &c. Parcels of fifty copies and upwards can be obtained at special rates for that purpose on application to our publishers (see advertisement on p. 7).

Our sketch this week is one of very impressive interest, in the lessons it conveys, and we have accorded to it an exceptional meed of space. The particulars that have just been published of the provisions of Mr. Cadbury's will, throw his remarkable ministry into still brighter relief. In addition to a life entirely devoted to doing good, he has benefited many a Christian and philanthropic agency by the disposition of his wealth :—

The following charitable legacies become payable at the end of six years from Mr. Cadbury's death :—For the Temperance Institute, London, £10,000; the Friends' Foreign Mission Association, £5,000; the Birmingham General Hospital, £5,000; the Birmingham Eye Hospital, £5,000; the Birmingham Ear and Throat Hospital, £2,500; the Birmingham Orthopædic Hospital, £2,500; the Friends' Adult First Day School, Birmingham, £2,500; the Friends' Children's First Day School, Birmingham, £1,000; the Friends' Home Mission Association, £4,000; the Friends' Brumana Mission, Labanon, £2,000; the Friends' Woman's First Day School, £500. For fourteen years the income from a sum of £10,000 is to be applied for the purpose of carrying on the Gospel Temperance Mission, Birmingham. An amount is to be set apart, out of the residue of the estate, to produce a yearly income of £300 per annum to be paid to the trustees for the time being of the Moseley Road Friends' Hall and Institute.

Such men as Richard Cadbury are the very salt of the earth.

The political world has lost one of its noblest figures in the death of Mr. Tom Ellis, M.P. This young Welshman had attained a high position in public life at an early age, and seemed destined to a noble career of usefulness. He was one of the public men who remained true to his early religious faith in spite of the many temptations incident to his position. He retained his membership in the Calvinistic Methodist Church of Wales, and was a deacon to the day of his death. During his holidays he retained the charge of a large Bible-class of young people, which was a model of what such a class should be. His religious influence over "young Wales" was great and pure, and his own faith was simple and evangelical. The House of Commons has not too many men of this type, and his loss will be keenly and widely felt in political life.

Few who buy newspapers have perhaps realised that the newsagent can promote a love for good reading by refusing to keep and sell literature of a lower order. An agent testifies that while he cannot pretend to dictate what any customer shall buy, he feels compelled by conscience to sell only that which he believes to be good. And he finds he is beneficially influencing public taste. This is encouraging testimony, and shows that the more consistent Christians we can have in all stations of life, the more profoundly will life be affected in all directions.

Every week the tide of indignation rises higher against the audacious attempts to foist the Sunday newspaper upon the nation. Protests come from men of all classes and of widely different views, both on the Sabbath and on many other religious themes. The resistance to the new departure cannot fairly be sneered down as Sabbatarian bigotry. It comes from an honest wish to keep men from being reduced to mere worldly drudges, and from living only to make money. The cry of distress from some newsagents is painful and rousing. A tremendous weapon also is in the hands of Christians themselves. Let them refuse to buy or advertise in any daily paper that issues Sunday editions, and influence others to follow their example. A universal and sustained boycott could not fail to do good.

The tendency displayed in some Nonconformist churches to signalise Easter Sunday with displays of flowers and elaborate music is to be deprecated. It is a concession to the sensuous in worship that may safely be left as the monopoly of the Ritualists. Spiritual and doctrinal reference to the great fact of the Resurrection is one thing; but spectacular displays of any kind are out of keeping with the historical witness and higher aims of the Free Evangelical Churches. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." The simplest rites are the most helpful to spiritual exercises; directly they make an appeal to the senses they imperil the complete absorption of the soul in the things of the spirit.

At a conference of the Lancashire Association of Sunday School Unions, a delegate pointed out that the greatest problem of Sunday School teaching is not the higher training of teachers, but how to induce the average scholar to take an interest in what the average teacher could now teach him. The young people do not come to school full of theological questionings and "higher criticism" problems, but of the Saturday's football and cricket match, and of the week's sports. There is a melancholy amount of truth in this statement of the case. It is the bane of the rising generation that so few give religion a serious place in their thoughts at all. The first and foremost duty of teachers and preachers is to enchain attention, quicken interest, and give those under their care a sense of the supreme importance of the subject with which they are dealing. For this they need the anointing of the Spirit, the "power from on high," without which all preaching and teaching are utterly vain.

Not without reason have Christian workers watched with alarm the application of the Higher Criticism to Bible study and exposition. The consequent confusion, together with the results of archæological research pointing in the direction of the older views, has done much to steady reflecting minds, and there is every appearance that a surer method will soon assert itself in more responsible circles. An esteemed correspondent, deploring the popularity of critical theories in colleges and other unsuspected institutions, thinks the time has come for educated laymen to speak out. He is right; the onlooker as well as the operator may claim to have a voice in discussing the situation.

A new use for the Free Church Catechism has been discovered. The Liverpool School Board proposes to make it the basis of its future religious teaching. This is significant, especially in view of the fact that the Board has a majority of members belonging to the Established Church, and that the chairman is a clergyman. The proposal was made by the strongest Churchman, and is intended as a counterblast to sacerdotal machinations. There are other indications that the Catechism is doing a great deal to open the eyes of Anglicans to the basis of belief which they enjoy in common with Nonconformists. Creeds and catechisms in days gone by have too often divided fellow-Christians from one another. This latest-born of the creeds seems destined to bring fellow-Christians closer together. No catechism could fulfil a worthier and more useful function.

The city of Bristol has a philanthropic committee, drawn from all denominations, which is a model for other towns in the thoroughness and large-heartedness with which the needs of the deserving poor are met. By this means the danger of "overlapping" is avoided; all charitable work is done thoroughly and well, the claims of such institutions as are in need of special help are satisfied, and a truly catholic spirit of brotherhood is fostered among all Christian workers. There are considerably over 100 benevolent institutions in the city, and the sum annually given in various ways for the help of the poor is over £200,000. Great care is taken to dispense this money so that it shall reach deserving persons, instead of being lost in promoting thriftlessness and religious mendicancy. Such a business-like organisation of charitable funds is worthy of being emulated in every town and village of the country.

The fact brought to light recently in Parliament in discussing old age pensions, that one out of every two labourers in this country ends his days in the workhouse, is a sad commentary on our boasted prosperity as a nation. Last year there were 784,815 paupers in England, a large proportion of whom reach this state of destitution through no fault of their own. Over £20,000,000 were spent on Poor Law administration, being an average of £27 4s. for every pauper. Such a large outlay of funds suggests extravagance in the system, and provides an answer, as is well pointed out in The Christian Commonwealth, to the question where the funds are to come from for old age pensions for the deserving poor. When the question is approached from this standpoint, instead of being bandied about as one of the party watchwords of the hour, some way will easily be found for keeping the deserving and aged poor without the degrading associations of the Union. The Christian statesman who solves this problem will be a benefactor to the whole nation.

There is an important article in The Times of Tuesday with respect to a proposed training home for lady colonists in the North-West territory of Canada. The writer alludes very cogently to the social deterioration which comes into any community where the softening and refining influences of women are absent. A further element to be considered is the new opening which would thus be afforded for the energies of the many young women who find it difficult to choose useful life-occupations in the overcrowded avenues of the old country. Canada is, on various grounds, a very suitable place in which to initiate such an experiment, and its development will be watched with interest by all who believe in the God-given mission of the Anglo-Saxon race.

Public opinion should be greatly roused by the description of Bishop Tugwell of the enormous quantities of rum, gin, &c., being poured into British West Africa. Throughout a journey of a thousand miles he found that drinking saloons are on the increase, and that drunkenness is growing not only among heathens and Mohammedans, but among the better educated classes of Africans. A Lagos newspaper says:—

> The gin traffic is gradually yet surely sapping the energy and industry of the native, and making him less inclined to new wants and less capable of supplying such new wants; and in this wise British industries are being undermined and the demoralisation of the native wrought. Such a policy is suicidal in the extreme.

So it is, at home as well as abroad; neither can one help asking, What is the reflex influence of this destructive trade upon the nation that carries it on? The doings of our countrymen far away in Africa affect us here. The evil current comes across ocean and land like Marconi's wireless telegraph messages. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked;" for He knows all, and will judge men and nations according to their works both at home and abroad.

All the true friends of international concord will rejoice in the fact that the Vatican is not to be represented at the forthcoming Peace Conference at the Hague. Papal Rome, through its overweening ambition, has ever been a disturber of the world's peace, and there are no symptoms that its character is changing in this respect. A striking example is before us in the religious revolt which is now convulsing Austria, and leading large sections of the people to embrace the Protestant faith. The Romish clergy are endeavouring to enforce measures of active repression, but probably they will defeat their own designs by such methods. Those who are striving in central Europe to throw off the intolerable yoke of the Papacy deserve our heartiest sympathy and good will.

A writer in The Advance gives some valuable hints to members of congregations as to how they may help the minister to preach. Regular attendance, careful attention, earnest prayerfulness, just but kindly criticism, and co-operation in all religious work are the sum and substance of good listening. The first point is one on which the minister could say a good deal. The irregular attendance of many of the hearers greatly interferes with the continuity of his teaching. This is a great discouragement to ministers, especially in expository preaching, and it is a serious hindrance to sustained interest in worship and instruction on the part of their auditors. According to present habits it is impossible for most preachers to continue the consideration of a morning subject in the evening. A little careful attention to this matter would lead to a salutary reform, and make our religious services a greater means of grace.

Theologians have been fond of speaking of the Gospel as a "scheme" of salvation. In the New Testament such a mechanical term is never used. Men are not saved by "schemes," however elaborate and perfect they may be. St. Paul went to the heart of the matter when he said that the Gospel is "the wisdom of God and the power of God." He gloried in the Cross, because it opened up a divine store of help and practical motive-power. In the exposition of the truth, this fact should have foremost place and importance. What men need most is not enlightenment, but help in the battle against wrong-doing and sin. Faith is the appropriating faculty whereby the divine energy of grace is made operative in the soul; and that is why it is always made a condition of salvation. Without faith it is impossible to please God, because without it it is impossible for Him to give the needful grace.

The question "What is the true relation between creed and character?" would not cause so much perplexity if the former word were always used in the proper sense, i.e., not for the beliefs which a man professes to hold, but for those which he truly does hold. Creed is really character in solution, and character is creed in action. "Not they who say 'Lord, Lord' shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but they that do the will of my Father, who is in Heaven." A great preacher once said:—

> There are men who no more grasp the truth they seem to hold than a sparrow grasps the message passing through the electric wire on which it perches.

If this is so, it is not right to call such truth in any sense a part of their creed. It has no real place in their life, and the mere recital of its expression does not entitle them to claim it as their belief.

It is most important to bear in mind the difference between profession and creed in the above sense, because it is customary with many to discount the value of religious faith, because the life so many who claim to hold the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith is inconsistent and shallow. Those who excuse themselves from acknowledging the claims of Christ because many so-called Christians are far from what they ought to be, are playing with words instead of grappling with facts. Every Christian doctrine involves a practical Christian duty, and those who neglect the duty cannot truly hold the doctrine. Faith is belief which is willing to express itself in action. Faith without works in this sense is dead; it profiteth nothing; it is a tinkling cymbal.

British Museum.—The question of the Sunday opening of the reading-room has been raised by the will of the late Mr. Lean. That gentleman left £50,000 to the Museum, and though he did not make it a condition that the reading-room should be open on Sunday, he expressed a hope that that course would be adopted. The opening of the reading-room on Sunday would involve the employment of the whole or nearly the whole of the usual staff.

A Flower Mission Incident.

RETURNING from Sunday school one afternoon, during a summer stay at Hastings, as I was climbing a hill on which was our house, I noticed a poor girl carrying a very large parcel. At every few steps she paused and gasped for breath, and appeared to be in the last stage of consumption. I offered to carry her bundle up the hill, as she seemed to be suffering greatly. She burst into such violent weeping as to alarm me, and I persuaded her to rest on a shady seat near. As soon as she could speak she sobbed, "You are too good, nobody speaks kindly to me now."

By degrees she told me her story. A young country girl, she had come to London on her father's death, intending to help an aunt who kept a small shop, but who died just before her arrival. Her mother wrote, begging her to return home at once, but she foolishly allowed herself to be persuaded to take the situation of barmaid in a large public-house.

Her health soon failed, she was wretched in her evil surroundings, and even contemplated suicide, when, being sent on an errand by her master, she passed a hospital just as some ladies were entering, carrying baskets of flowers. One of them, noticing the girl's wistful gaze, with a few kind words offered her a bunch.

The card attached to the nosegay had on it two texts, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and "I will arise and go to my Father."

These words sank deep into the poor girl's heart. She resolved at once to return to her mother, but her master refused to let her leave before her month was up, and on her persisting in her request, turned her adrift without any of the wages due to her, saying that owing to ill-health she had never done a full pay's work.

Thus, penniless and friendless, she had not gone far on her homeward way before her strength failed and she was carried to a neighbouring workhouse, and for some weeks lay between life and death. After a time she rallied, and once more the longing to see her mother again took possession of her. She was within a few miles of her home when I met her that Sunday afternoon.

A home was found for her that night, and the next day a letter was sent, begging her mother to come at once. On her arrival the poor girl was too ill to be moved, and a kind boatman generously gave both mother and child shelter in his little hut.

I visited her constantly during my stay at Hastings, and the kind clergyman of St. Mary's (Rev. T. Vores) often went to see her. Contrary to all expectations, she lingered on for nearly two years. She was led by the teaching of the Holy Spirit to see her sinfulness, and for some time was almost overwhelmed with distress. One day, however, I was surprised to see a bright smile on the usually sad young face, and she eagerly exclaimed, "Oh, Miss, I see it now, and I'm so happy. Jesus did it all. He died for me; and all I have to do is just to believe it, and thank Him; showing my thankfulness, not with my lips only, but in my life. Oh, it seems too good! I have come now." And she drew from under her pillow the worn, dirty little card, with the words, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

When I began to write or paint texts for the Flower Mission, I always put my initials in the corner, that I might recognise them should they ever cross my path. Imagine, therefore, my joy and thankfulness when, on looking at the card, I found in the corner my own initials.

From that time all seemed changed. In spite of intense suffering, the girl never murmured or complained, and her sweet smile seemed to light up that little hut. Her great joy was in reading her Bible. Surely God had sent that poor girl to teach me that no effort for his sake shall lose its reward, and though we may not see the results, we know that He will give the blessing, even though it be after many days. H. W. E.

A Spiritual Springtime.

By Rev. W. S. BRUCE, D.D., Banff.

HOW thankful we are that winter is passing, and the bright springtime is coming! Every bulb seems to feel it. Every bird seems to know it.

A livelier emerald twinkles in the grass,
A deeper sapphire burns into the sea.

Life is triumphant over death, for Nature's annual revival has come round again.

A similar note of gladness comes to us from the world of commerce. Trade is reviving, wages are rising. Large profits are being made in trades where there has long been dulness. The market and the exchange are full of congratulations. How sweet the sound of the words to the merchant's ears, "A revival of trade has really come!"

And shall there be a springtime to Nature and to trade, and no springtime to the world of Grace? Shall we sweep through the semi-arctic winters of the one and be content to remain in the cold chill December of the other? Shall we not look for the unsealing of frost-bound hearts, for dew-like descents of the refreshing, invigorating Spirit? Should not every Christian be night and day praying that a divine revival may begin to flow down our streets, like the swollen Jordan after the latter rains of February, carrying away before it all accumulated slime and dirt, and bringing fertility to every haugh along its banks?

DOES NOT THE AGE NEED IT?

Faith is being honeycombed with doubt. The creed of many a church member is like some of the houses of our African missionaries, where every door-post and lintel is riddled by the white ants. A puff of the world's breath seems enough to knock it over. Subtly the contagion creeps along, like the fatal damp in the mine, suffocating the lungs and putting out the miner's light.

No less do we need a revived spiritual life to help us to face the perplexing problems of our time — social problems, labour problems, political problems of a new and delicate nature, the great moral and sociological problems of intemperance, impurity, the drift of the people city-wards; the environment of the children in the city, the growth of the genus arab and gamin, the rapid multiplication of the physically weak and unfit, their low morality and irreligion; an atmosphere whose icy breath blows over our hearts and our churches like a mistral off an alp in the Riviera; or a wind off an iceberg in the Atlantic which makes the steamer's passengers shiver in every limb.

To meet these problems and to solve them in a Christian spirit is no easy task. It is one that demands minds purified by faith, hearts and consciences disciplined by what St. Paul calls a "gymnastic unto godliness." The self-indulgent spirit must be cast out; the patronising manner must be abandoned. We cannot lecture men into the love of God. The moral leprosies of the slum and of the rural village alike need, for their removal,

LOVING HEARTS AND CONSECRATED LIVES.

All this brings us back to our deepest need, the Pentecostal gift of the crescent prime of the Church. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." What a languid religion needs is the Divine enduement, the filling of the Spirit. A deepened spiritual life would strengthen character and duplicate influence. If the fire burned within us the accent of decision and conviction would soon communicate itself. The scepticism which is at present in the air, just like the influenza, would soon give way, for nothing is so persuasive as earnestness. The lifeless orthodoxy of rigid dogmatists would thaw under the warmer atmosphere. All Christian life would advance, and all Christian work gain by such a renewing of the Holy Ghost.

New zeal would come into home mission work, and the Submerged Tenth would be brought to the surface and be rescued; and there would be into the frontier lands of crass heathenism. A revived Church would have fewer stay-at-home members. A wealth of love and prayer would provide both the men and the money required. The sacramental host would soon go forth and bring the world's wars to a close, and rescripts and peace conventions would not be needed.

FRESH EXTENSIONS OF GOD'S KINGDOM

And wheresoe'er their footsteps move,
This hope makes sweet the air;
And all the path is paved with love
And canopied with prayer.

It was Browning who, in Italy, so "longed to be in England, now that April's there." Who would not long to live over again in a grand awakening like '59? Life in such a season of grace is "life abundant." It is life lived at its highest power, and with the use of its loftiest functions. It is the life of Christ in us, having its legitimate use of all our organs of mind and body, of will and conscience. In these days of death and dulness, Lord revive us again that we may rejoice in Thee. Then shall every Christian life respond to its vocation and fulfil that grand formula, "It shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

It was Herbert Spencer who said, trying to define that subtle thing, life, "Perfect correspondence would be perfect life." We thankfully adopt the definition. What the Christian Church to-day needs above all her other wants is, on the part of her members, perfect correspondence with the will of God. But how many lives are weak and feckless just because they are not entirely in harmony with what God has been whispering to them of his will! He said, "Go," and they went not. He said, "Give," and they withheld the gift. He said, "Make up that quarrel," and they could not meet their brother and apologise for the wrong they had done him. And so their religious life is ebbing, and the ugly neap tide phenomena are but too apparent. Pray for that shall sweep along our shores, and fill up every estuary to the full; then you shall see every little pool joining its neighbour, and the mighty tide bringing about a true union of all hearts and efforts, as when the great spring tides fill the Solway, and all dividing barriers are obliterated in the full, overflowing, cleansing, baptizing waters.

A SPRING TIDE OF THE SPIRIT

Alas! in some churches paralysis has so crept over them that the very sensation of impotence itself is dead, and even the tradition of Pentecost has been forgotten. But let us each look at home. And let us join in the most earnest prayer that God's Spirit may come and stir the awful stagnation that afflicts ourselves, and give us to see an outburst of vigorous life in spring-like fulness. He has sent us keener anticipations and yearnings, and a deeper consciousness of our dire need of quickening. This is something to be thankful for. "If winter come, can spring be far behind?" Our extremity will be his opportunity if prayer and work go hand in hand. "Arise, Lord, plead thine own cause."

Tunis.—Writing lately, Mr. A. V. Liley says: "During March we have had many Arab visitors at the house as well as at the Bible depôt. Some days have brought a continual stream of callers, who have all had the truth put before them. The greater number of my visitors are students who have had some grounding in Mohammedan teaching, but when speaking to them one is impressed more and more with the fact that they know nothing of the character of God."

Out of Rome.—Through one motive or another, priests are constantly leaving the Roman Church in France. Those who leave before losing their faith in God, cannot but command earnest Christian sympathy. One such is M. Lesne, parish priest of Prémont and seminary professor. In his letter of resignation, sent to the Bishop of Soissons, he says that by coming out of Rome he broke all the most tender bonds and shed most bitter tears. He writes:—"I entered the way of sorrow, retaining a firm hope that the God of all truth and justice would not leave a sincere and loyal soul. To leave Catholicism was not to abandon God or the Saviour Christ. I sought the truth, and that God who awakened my conscience at length illumined my soul with a light of which I formerly knew nothing. I feel myself to have been born into another life; amidst severe trials and the tortures of anguish, God has not failed me."

'Twixt Prayer and Psalm.

By Rev. H. ELVET LEWIS, Harecourt Chapel.

"IS any among you afflicted? Let him pray. Is any merry? Let him sing psalms." So James (v. 13) finds room for the holy restraints of religion at life's extremes. Life may be brought low by affliction, but never too low for prayer to be still between it and the worst; life may be lifted high in the rapture of mirth, but never too high for its joy to be crowned by a psalm. Prayer at one end, a psalm at the other—that is God's method of keeping life safe.

It is a mistake to think that suffering in itself will make anyone better; but suffering, with prayer, always will. The pain, the regret, the sorrow with which all men must be acquainted—they are waters of Marah until the tree of prayer sweetens them, and then they revive and strengthen the soul.

And the mirth of life, how easily it runs waste—like a bright, singing river of the hills losing itself in drear reaches of sand—unless it is kept within the sacred bounds of a psalm. We can test the propriety of our mirth in this: Is it willing to end with a hymn?

These eager, vivid feelings—what are we to do with them? We may know what to do with our ordinary emotions, and how to follow the exercises of religion in ordinary experiences, but the test comes when life touches the depth of suffering or the height of gladness. One thing is certain, that

THE SIMPLEST RITUAL GOES FURTHEST.

There are narrow ways where grand liturgies cannot come, but a childlike artless prayer will still go on and prevail. The real prayer and the true song of praise are like Gideon's 300 Ironsides—they stay when many of the more pretentious offices of religion are useless. The prayer that does not leave us when suffering has entered the house is a true helpmate of the soul; the psalm that grows sweeter when joy is at the full will be most acceptable to God, because it is most like the music of Heaven.

But if we are to remain worshippers in great troubles and great joys, our worship must be the flowing of our lives toward God. If our worship, while we move in ordinary circumstances, is mere excitement, suffering will silence our prayer and mirth will untune our psalm. One is as dangerous as the other—pain without prayer, or happiness without a hymn. Prayer keeps the sufferer from losing God in the darkness, and the psalm keeps the glad-hearted from losing God in the bright light. If the life is then sorrow and mirth will make no difference. The river may pass through a narrow, gloomy chasm, or along the green sunlit valley, but it always flows toward the sea. And so, when our life is rightly directed toward God, whether we pray in sorrow or sing in joy, we are ever moving nearer to Him. Indeed, when life is so flowing Godward, the soul can do better still, and the words of James might be changed into a still more courageous key, "Is any among you afflicted? Let him sing psalms. Is any merry? Let him pray." When suffering rises into song, when joy humbles itself to pray, then is the victory complete, and life stands radiant, rightly placed between psalm and prayer. For on either side, it is God's mercy that touches life's extremes. Around our affliction, prayer; around our mirth, holy praise; and God around all.

EVER FLOWING TOWARD HEAVEN,

Indian Bacteriological Institute.—The hon. secretary of the Bombay Anti-Vivisection Society writes, on March 11, that the agitation against this proposed institute has brought good results. The Pioneer of Allahabad says there is little chance of the scheme (started by the Maharaja of Dohlpore in 1897), for founding a scientific bacteriological institute for India being carried out.

Vivisection.—All who wish to have some idea of the horrors that are perpetrated on defenceless animals by continental vivisectionists should read the letter of protest lately written by Miss Frances Power Cobbe, and published by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection. Copies of it may be had gratis from the office of the Union, 20, Triangle, Bristol. It ought to be scattered far and wide.

Fluffy's Bad 'Zample.

THERE was a pleasant family gathering round the breakfast table of Wilton Hall one fair June morning. The sun, glancing through the open windows, touched with brightness the costly table appointments, but rested with apparently special favour on the golden head of the little five-year-old girl who had rushed into the room exclaiming "Fazer, Dickey won't 'peak now!" She was standing at her father's knee with round, serious eyes looking up to him for a solution of her childish difficulty.

"What does she mean?" Mr. Harcourt asked, turning to his wife. "I think she is troubling about the birds," Mrs. Harcourt said. "You know Uncle Tom sent Muriel a canary some time ago—'Fluffy' she called it. It has never sung properly, and has given over altogether for the last few weeks. After trying everything else we could think of, altering its food and hanging it outside in the sunshine, we determined at last to bring the cage from the nursery into the morning-room and hang it beside Dickey, who is such a splendid little singer. But this experiment seems quite to have failed; and what is very remarkable, Dickey has been growing very quiet himself ever since Fluffy joined him. I have scarcely heard his voice at all the last day or two."

"He won't 'peak at all this morning," little Muriel said, mournfully. "Well, let us go and investigate the case," her father suggested, as they rose from the table; and he and Muriel led the way to the morning room.

If material surroundings could have made birds sing, that room would have been filled with melody, for through the open windows there came the fresh, flower-scented morning air and the sunshine was everywhere. But from the two gilded cages that hung side by side in the deep bay of one of the windows, no sound proceeded save the snapping of seed and a quiet chirp as the occupants hopped to and fro intent on breakfast. Mr. Harcourt talked to them, and whistled coaxingly; but beyond a knowing poise of their little heads on one side there was no response.

"It certainly is singular," he remarked to his wife; "there must be an epidemic of silence amongst birds." But little Muriel, shaking her head sagely at her father's long words, had her own eager explanation to offer. "I know what it is, fazer," she said confidentially, standing on tip-toe to reach his ear, "it's just Fluffy's bad 'zample."

So it was undoubtedly, for other similar cases have confirmed this bit of experience that whilst the most musical of companions will not rouse a dumb bird to sing, the dumb bird has power to reduce the other to silence. And it opens out as in a parable the question of influence, which is so much more powerful and operative than we often think. It does not always require an overt act of persuasion: example itself may be

A BLESSING OR A BANE.

How many bright young Christians whose lives were vocal with the new song that had been put into their mouths by the Divine Spirit are silent to-day because of the indirect influence of association with those for whom Christ and his service have no attraction!

Shall we look a little more closely into the subject—one fraught with eternal issues, and therefore all-important? We are met on every hand with mournful statistics concerning leakage from the Church. This being so, and there being in human nature the inevitable tendency of "reversion to type" in the spiritual as well as the physical sphere, unless the utmost heed be given to the conditions of growth, we cannot afford to neglect any suggestions even from an incident like this, which we do not wish to press, in its analogy, too closely. But we do see how the value of the birds to their owner hinged on this point of utterance. Beauty of form and plumage was of little avail when the voice was silent. So any influence that produced such a state of things was counted a disaster. And we know how He, to whom we belong, values testimony, "confession," a loyalty that makes us eloquent for Him, that is under the sweet constraint—

> My heart is full of Christ, and longs
> The glorious matter to declare,
> I cannot from his praise forbear!

We know something in social life of the joy of spontaneous giving out of the heart in communion, just as the bird gives out its heart in song. We have proved how reticence and undemonstrativeness act on family relationships like the nipping breath of an east wind, that can only bloom in a sunny atmosphere; whilst even in more conventional intercourse the kindly expression of sympathetic interest and the tactful word of appreciation have refreshed us as with a shower along the dusty road of life.

WITHERING THE FLOWERS OF AFFECTION

We who are Christians know, too, the sadness of interrupted communion between ourselves and the Father of our spirits. When from any cause this occurs, the Psalmist's prayer comes with a wail of anguish from our life, "Be not silent unto me, O God!" The Lord, with answering love, says to us, "Let Me hear thy voice;" and when we not only speak to Him in prayer, but speak of Him to others in the communion of saints, He hearkens, and the book of his remembrance registers the act.

So the whole question of Christian utterance, of the speech always with grace, is a very important one. May one or two hints concerning it be given here on "How to Draw the Line" in our habits and associations?—an increasingly difficult art in the present day, when it seems the fashion to between them that fear the Lord and them that fear Him not. But in cases of difficulty surely this is a useful test. "Has such a friendship, or amusement, or engagement been quickening to the vitality of my spiritual life, and made it easier for me to confess Christ?" For remember that this is what is expected from Christians by the world. A young fellow recently, after long struggles with fear of giving offence, ventured on some faithful words to a companion in the same office, and had this significant reply, "Well, I believe in your religion now; I never did so before!"

OBLITERATE ALL LINES OF DEMARCATION

Will not parents permit a loving word of counsel? These tender plants of grace are in your care to foster until the "planting-out" time comes; but how often plans for education are made that take into consideration benefit to mind and manners, and probably health, but ignore almost entirely the question of spiritual advantage! Continental "finish" may be very valuable in teaching familiarity with other tongues; but how often it closes the lips the Lord had opened to show forth his praise, and by the silent influence of Sabbath profanation and worldliness makes the home habits and restraints, and the blessed adjuncts to piety that prevailed there, become irksome! So let us all find a sermon in the silenced voice of a bird. M.C.F.

Percy Park, Tynemouth.

Christianity in Japan.—In a letter from one of my Japanese helpers—an evangelist labouring about fifty miles from Kobe—he says that some leading men in the place where he is working wrote to the head temple of their Buddhist sect in Kyoto, asking for able priests to visit the town, and for sermons in favour of expelling Christianity from the place. The astonishing reply was given that "Christianity is a civilised religion, and that efforts to expel it from the country are not to be made." This is a very sudden and surprising turn in affairs. Up to within very recently the head temple and all the Buddhist priests in the country have been most anxious to close the entire land to the religion that they call "foreign." It is evident that the Home Department of the Government has been saying something in view of pressure from somewhere, and in view of the coming into operation of the revised treaties in July of this year. Whatever the reason for the sudden change, I am indeed very glad, God surely "moves in mysterious ways his wonders to perform."

J. L. Atkinson.

Kobe, Japan, Feb. 24.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 23, 1899.

"Jesus the way, truth, and life."—John xiv. 1-14.

Golden Text.—John xiv. 6.

Introductory.

THE Passover Supper was over. The Lord's Supper had been instituted. Judas had retired into the dark to do his deed of darkness (ch. xiii. 30). Jesus had undeceived the disciples by plainly telling them of his betrayal and coming death, and also of their own unfaithfulness and Peter's denial. All this had crushed their spirits and sunk them in despondency and grief. Their loving Lord then tries to comfort them in the words of our lesson. John xiv. to xvii. are most precious chapters to all who love the Saviour, being his last addresses before going to the agony of Gethsemane on the night before the crucifixion.

Christ's Antidote for Sorrow.

Verse 1. Faith, perfect trust (Rom. viii. 28, 31, 32).

Verse 2. Heaven, a haven of rest (1 John iii. 2). "Home, sweet Home."

Verse 3. Christ's return to his loved ones. Coming to fetch us.

Verse 4. The way is cleared, the door is open (John x. 9).

Verse 7. Seeing Jesus now; through Him knowing the Father.

Verse 12. Promise of power to work.

Verse 13. Confidence in prayer.

Christ, the Way.

The only way to heaven, happiness, peace, and every temporal and spiritual blessing. The new and living way (Heb. x. 20). The narrow way (Matt. vii. 14). A separated way (2 Cor. vi. 17). The way of holiness (2 Cor. vii. 1). The way of pleasantness (Prov. iii. 17). A glorious presentation at the end of the way (Jude 24, Col. i. 22).

Christ, the Truth.

Truth personified. He teaches us the truth about God. In Him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge (Col. ii. 3). If Christ is absolute truth we must trust Him. He can make us true (John i. 17, viii. 45). If so, why do we not believe Him?

Christ, the Life.

He is the Author and Giver of all life. Life is the one thing men can never make. Beautiful images, but no life. Man forfeited his right to life by his disobedience (Gen. ii. 17). Christ bore the penalty due to sin, and to those who believe in Him He will restore the right to live for ever with God (1 John v. 11, Acts iii. 15, John iv. 10-14).

Explanatory.

Verse 1. Agitated, perplexed, tossed like the waves of the sea. Just as we might be when told that our best friend is about to die.

Verse 2. The comfort is in the "My." "Home—" elicit all that the word means to us. "Abiding places," resting places. Explain an Oriental Palace with abodes in it for all the sons of the king. Heaven is a real place, its atmosphere—security and love. Jesus is preparing a place to suit each one who is preparing for it.

Verse 3. "I come." From the time of his resurrection Christ has been and is always coming in various ways to his children. Explain ways of his coming (v. 23; Acts i. 11; Matt. xxviii. 20). To be with Christ is heaven. Heaven may begin on earth.

Verses 5, 8. Thomas and Philip. Mark their characteristics: Thomas full of doubts and despondency (chap. xi. 16, xx. 24, xxi. 2), Philip very matter of fact, somewhat impatient (chap. i, 44-47, vi. 7, xii. 20-22). Note also the value of asking questions when we do not understand.

Verse 7. The sense is, "If you had recognised Me, you would have known the Father." We can only know our heavenly Father through Jesus Christ. Get the scholars to give some of the characteristics of the Son of God (Heb. i. 2, 3).

Verse 10. "Believest though not?" a question for all and each; if not, why not? Jesus Christ was God manifested to us in a human body. The proof of Christ's divinity is in his "words" and "works." Get the scholars to give some of these proofs.

Verse 11. The loving Saviour's appeal to all. "Do believe me." We are bound to believe Him absolutely, or make Him a liar (1 John v. 10).

Verse 12. Results of faith (James ii. 14, 24). Why greater works? What greater works? Benefits of Christ's bodily absence?

Verse 13, 14. Privilege and power of prayer. Conditional promise of the answer. The one motive for asking must always be "That the Father may be glorified." What is our motive when we pray?

(The teacher should illustrate all these truths from daily life incidents or personal experience).

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 16. Deuteronomy xxii.

THERE was much tenderness as well as strictness and strength in the Mosaic Code. This book reminds us of the tender beauty of folded petals breaking out of closely-shut sheaths. It was only gradually that God could lead the people from their rugged manners into sympathy with his life of love. But these early books have many gentle touches in them, which point to softening influences.

The care for strayed cattle, the ready hand of help for those that had fallen by the way, the prohibition of ruthless destruction of bird life, the precaution against accident from an unprotected roof, the care for young girls—all these are anticipations of the love and grace of the Gospel. The God who speaks by the lips of his Son, and of Apostles and Evangelists, is speaking here, and would have spoken much more to the same purpose had the people been willing to hear and obey.

There are many cautions also in this chapter—that there should be no aping of man on the part of women: that there should be no mixture in our behaviour and action, but always a singleness and unity in all our life; that there should be perfect purity in the relations of men and women; that there should be justice in laying blame.

What a picture comes back to us of that far-away life, mostly pastoral, concerned with the processes of agriculture and cattle, dealing with the incidents of the farm, the fold, and the field! How different to our crowded city life! But the same principles of thought and care for others, of perfect courtesy and unfailing justice, may characterise us as those for whom these precepts were penned; and, best of all, we may love God with a love which will beget love for man and thought for woman, and mercifulness to cattle.

MONDAY, April 17. Deuteronomy xxiii.

There is always, in true religion, a close commingling of our duties to God and man. It is as impossible to say where the one ends and the other begins as to separate the summer from the autumn. So in this chapter, duties to God and man are closely intermingled. Our religion should gain in communion with God what we give out in thought and care of men.

Towards God there must be separation from all that is unnatural and unholy. We must abhor even the garment spotted with the flesh. We must be cleanly in our habits. We must not bring ill-gotten money into his holy service. We must be careful to yield to Him all that we have promised. And on his side He will walk in the midst of us, to deliver us and give up our enemies before our face. Only sin will make Him turn from us. Does not this suggest the lesson that full deliverance rests on complete consecration, and that those who would be perfectly kept must see to it that in spirit, soul and body they are utterly and completely yielded to God?

Towards man there is to be shelter for the slave; the proffer of money, without oppressive interest, to our brother who may require it; the regarding of another's property when you pass through vineyard or cornfield. Freely ye have received; ye can afford to give freely.

Now count over the blessings which thou as an obedient loving soul shalt enjoy. God loves thee, and will turn thy curses into blessings (5); God comes to deliver thee (14); God waits to bless thee in all that thou puttest thy hand unto (20). If only we knew our God, how strong, brave, and free-handed we should be! Perfect, as He is perfect; merciful, as He is merciful; forgiving, as He has forgiven. Always remembering that we are children of the Father who is in heaven, who makes his sun to shine on evil and good.

TUESDAY, April 18. Deuteronomy xxiv.

What tender, beautiful thoughtfulness pervades this chapter! For the new wife who requires her husband's loving cherishing; for the kidnapped slave; for the poor man's self-respect, on account of which his house might not be broken into; for the servant's wage, which must be paid at nightfall; for the bond-slave and foreigner, who were to receive just judgment; for the fatherless and widow, in the gleanings of the harvest and vintage. There was no class so needy or lowly as to be beneath the beneficent thought of this religious nation, which was to repeat on earth something of that Divine life which God was living in heaven.

What a shelter and protection the poor and oppressed have in God! The man whom the poor bless for his courteous thought, is remembered for righteousness in the day of trouble by the Most High (13); whilst the cry of the poor against his oppressor brings sin and condemnation with it, as it ascends into the ear of the Lord God of Sabaoth (15). The gift of beneficence to the poor will return in Divine blessing on the man that makes it (19). It would appear as though God especially espoused the cause of the poor, identifying Himself with them, and accepting as for Himself all the treatment meted out to them. It seems as though throughout this chapter we could hear the voice of Him, who for our sakes became poor, saying, "Inasmuch as ye do it to one of the least of these, my brethren, ye do it unto Me."

WEDNESDAY, April 19. Deuteronomy xxv.

What a picture is given here of a noble character in its several relations! It might be applied to the good Boaz, of an incident in whose life it strongly reminds us (compare v. 5-10 with Ruth iv.). Here is the portraiture of a good man, for whom some would even dare to die.

As a magistrate, or justice of the peace, he metes out even-handed justice, and will not allow even justly-deserved punishment to be unjustly exceeded.

As a brother, though he will not now conform to this ancient Jewish custom, which has passed out of operation, yet he will be careful of the interests of the widow and children of his dead brother. As their trustee and guardian he will serve them equally with his own.

As a man there will be no thought of iniquity permitted in his home.

As a merchant he will not have two weights, two samples, two standards; his word will be his bond, his bulk equal to sample.

As a religious man he will have no sympathy, and make no compromise, with those who are notorious in their ungodliness and sin. There may be the righteous vengeance which characterised Israel, and as it might a General Gordon towards the Dacoit, the Dervish, or the Arab man-stealer; but whether that be present or not, there will certainly be a decided attitude against all who are irreligious, worldly, and ungodly.

THURSDAY, April 20. Deuteronomy xxvi.

This chapter is full of beauty. One often opens it to read it again, and to take these words on one's lips as expressing one's deepest thoughts.

There are days in all lives when we seem to stand on the hill-top and review the way by which we have come. Oh, what a glad and rapturous moment is that in which we can say: "I was a Syrian ready to perish; for long years I suffered bondage and affliction, but the thought of the land of promise into which I was to come cheered and encouraged me amid all my privations and sorrows. It gleamed through the mists, it beckoned from afar; but now all my long patience is rewarded, my tears are dried, my sorrows ended, and I profess this day that I am come into the land which the Lord promised me. Not one good thing hath failed of all that the Lord promised, and I would gladly go through it all again to come to this radiant hour."

O afflicted soul! suffering under the hard bondage of cruelty, cry unto the Lord; He will hear your voice, even as He sees your affliction, and toil, and oppression; and He will bring you forth with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm. Only be sure that you do not forget to bring the produce of that glad hour of deliverance and set it down before the Lord thy God.

It is a pleasant thing to be bidden to rejoice. "Thou shalt rejoice in all the good which the Lord thy God hath given thee." God will do thee only good; so rejoice always, and let thy mirth flow over to the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and widow.

In such glad hours we are specially drawn into covenant relations with God. There is a renewal in our mutual avouchments, and a renewal in his promises that we shall be a name, a praise, and an honour, if only we obey his voice (16-19).

FRIDAY, April 21. Deuteronomy xxvii.

These huge and mighty cromlechs, reared in the Land of Promise, plastered and covered with the words of the law, must have seemed a little incongruous with the milk and honey around. But it was meet that they should stand there, because the beauty and fertility around them were contingent on faithful and loyal obedience to their ensculptured commands. Whilst these were obeyed, the land would yield her teeming increase; when their silent testimony to truth and righteousness was disregarded, barrenness and waste would sere the produce of the earth.

It is remarkable that Israel was bidden to rejoice beneath the shadow of those stones, on which the words of the law were written "very plainly." We should have been prepared to hear that they were solemnised, terrified, and filled with awe; we hardly expected that they would be bidden to rejoice. Yet why not? Is not obedience to righteousness and truth the very foundation of a happy life? Need we dread God's law when we are at peace with Him, through the obedience and bloodshedding of Jesus Christ? Ought we not to rejoice that righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne? Is not this the best security for our everlasting peace and salvation? If Jesus had not died for thee, thou mightest well tremble beneath the frowning law of a holy God; but He has satisfied its last demand, and made reconciliation. The law, therefore, that was against us, is on our side. God is just, and therefore the justifier of those who believe.

SATURDAY, April 22. Deuteronomy xxviii.

What a remarkable chapter! It is the epitome of what Israel might have been, contrasted with what she actually became. She might have been so blessed that the days of heaven might have appeared to have descended to earth. But through disobedience in successive generations the awful curses of this chapter have been wrung out in full measure.

Perhaps when we reach the presence of God we shall see a brief but exquisite chart of what we might have been. A silhouette, a forecast, a divine horoscope, as full of benediction and beatitude as the opening words of this chapter. And if our experience shall have resembled the dark and overcast experiences of which the latter verses speak, we shall have to trace it, not to the nature of God, but to the disobedience and sin of our own evil lives.

It has often seemed to me that this chapter is the anticipation of the Beatitudes, and unfolds to us the blessedness of the Christian life when we are fully consecrated, and have yielded all to the claims of God. Go over these golden words, lay claim to their spiritual counterparts, ask that they should be verified in your experience. And remember that God is bending over you, rejoicing to do you good; finding a supreme pleasure in giving you everything that can enrich your life, and flow through you to enrich others.

Glimpses of Romanism.

VI.—The Sacrament of Confession.

By Rev. ALEX. ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

THE Apostle Paul, in his Epistle to the Philippians, lays down a precept for thought, enumerating a list of subjects that we may legitimately think about. He says (chap. iv. 8): "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." This precept the Papal Church reverses, and in its sacrament of compulsory auricular confession virtually says: "Whatsoever things are not true, whatsoever things are dishonest, whatsoever things are unjust, impure, unlovely—if there be any vice, and if there be any blameworthiness in them, think of these things." And not only think of them, but speak of them to the priest in secret.

The natural, inevitable result follows—the confessor becomes an accomplice with the confessing one in sin. So much has this been felt by good priests (although there are few such in the Papal Church in Italy, for it invariably persecutes them out of its communion, or they forsake it), that they refuse to hear confessions. It is not every priest who can hear confessions; a special licence is required, and good priests either do not apply for the confessor's licence or refuse it when offered them.

Fra Paolo Sarpi, for example, would not undertake to hear confessions, though he was urged to do so by Cardinal Borromeo; and Count Campello, the leader of the Catholic Reform movement in Italy, never heard confessions during the many years that he was a priest in Rome and latterly a canon in St. Peter's. He saw too much of its EVIL EFFECTS ON CONFESSOR AND CONFESSED.

In regard to its influence on the confessing one, Count Campello has told me that he has seen ladies in St. Peter's indignant at the questions put to them, and so offended and ashamed that they have actually fainted in the confessional-box. But the corrupt priest held remorselessly on, repeating his immoral questions until he forced them to answer. And he has seen these same ladies, by reiterated subjection to the process, gradually debased.

Of course, by familiarising the mind with sin, and disposing the mind towards it, confession, with its accompanying absolution, prepares the way for its repeated committal. Those who take to confession have always plenty to confess. The very principle of confession is to clear off one set of sins that a fresh set may be undertaken. It has been compared to "a merchant's monthly clearance, leaving the room empty for another set of accommodation bills to be cleared out in turn when the next month is done." Salvation in sin, as I have said in a former paper, is the foundation-stone of the Papal system.

Sadder even than the effects of confession upon grown-up people are

ITS EFFECTS UPON THE YOUNG.

In their case it poisons the fountain of their life, it demoralises the very soul and centre of their being, so that they become incapable of even thinking rightly afterwards. Under the pretence of teaching them holiness, unholy things are instilled into their minds—even impurities that are beyond their immediate comprehension. Thus in the confessional all the natural freshness and innocence of the youthful heart and mind are destroyed, and, in a very emphatic sense, "every imagination of the thoughts of the heart" becomes "only evil continually."

Sometimes women and girls have strength of character to free themselves from the snares of confession. One lady told me that it was twenty-five years since she confessed, and that it was the priest's abominable questions that caused her to break it off. These questions she refused to answer, when he denounced her as a "disobedient daughter of the Church;" to which she replied, "No, it is you who are a wicked priest." He then refused her absolution. She asked, "Is that your last word to me?" He replied that it was. "Then," she said, "I have spoken my last word to you;" when she rose, never again to degrade herself by kneeling in a confessional box. The daughter of that same lady was questioned by her confessor as to her parents' life. She answered, "I have come to confess my own faults, not those of my parents." This led to a quarrel; when she, too, resolved never to confess again.

Confession, of course, serves other purposes than those to which I have referred. It is often USED FOR POLITICAL ENDS.

It was so in Venice, under Austria. During that unhappy domination, no one could hold a civil post who did not go to confession at least once a year, at Easter, and all were more or less forced to confess. If they did not, they fell under suspicion. Of these confessions registers were kept which were sent to the government at Vienna. Copies of these registers, I am told, were found in the sacristies of the churches when the Austrians were driven out of Venice by Manin in 1848-49. The secrecy of confession must ever be limited by the interests of the Church, and by those of despotic rulers who extend to the Church their protection. It has ever served for the demoralisation of women and the betrayal of men.

I was much amused by the way in which an Italian gentleman, who held a high post under Austria, and to whom I am indebted for the above facts in regard to the political uses made of confession, managed himself never to confess. He said he never would debase himself by going to confession, nor did any of his official colleagues. The priest to whom confession was made gave to the penitent a ticket which certified that he had confessed. There were thirty parishes in Venice, and hundreds of confessing priests. There was a class of men in Venice, for the most part clerks out of work and porters, who discharged ship cargoes, or assisted at the customs examination of goods, who took to the business of confession at Easter. They would go from parish to parish, and confess in every one of them, and get as many certificates. These they sold to those unwilling themselves to confess. My friend said to me, "I always bought my certificate of confession, and so did all self-respecting men in Venice."

Confession, happily, is now gradually disappearing from Italy. Few women of intelligence and self-respect ever go to it, and, I should think, no men. I never saw a man kneeling at the grated window of a confessional box. Boys in certain schools are still compelled to go once a year, but I have been told that it is only for them a piece of fun. Their teachers take care to discredit the whole Papal system, and to hold it up before the minds of the boys as a thing so monstrous, and so that they are ashamed to have anything to do with it. Their confession is only humbug, by means of which they fool the priest.

WORTHY ONLY OF CONTEMPT,

What an extraordinary thing that in England, respectable men, lay and clerical, should be found desirous of re-introducing into the land this engine of moral and political mischief; and that men should even be found amongst the highest in the land who dare publicly to justify the putting into the hands of the youth of the country confessional manuals, which in the estimation of all right-thinking men are corrupt and corrupting! One wonders if any such will ever go so far as the priests used to go in Italy, and tell the people that confession dates from the time of Christ, and before that, because Joseph was a carpenter that he might make confessional boxes!

One cannot but suppose that the explanation of this advocacy of the revival of confession in England, as of the whole Papal system, must be, in the case of many, simply sin. The origin of Popery, the essence of Popery, is sin, and as such it casts its glamour over weak minds and evil hearts. It is that "mystery of iniquity" which worketh "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved; and for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie."

Protestant Outlook.

WHAT estimate are we to form of the expressed desire of the bishops to put down lawlessness in their dioceses, when we hear that the Suffragan Bishop of Hull has held a confirmation service in Christ Church, Doncaster, where Roman practices are openly carried on in direct contravention of the prohibitions of the Archbishop of York in his recent Pastoral Letter? On the very same day the correspondent of The Record attended two masses, and found that the Roman Missal was being closely followed; while in the responses the people were directed to beseech the Virgin Mary for her prayers for them, both then and in the hour of their death. "Pastorals" and "encyclicals" are not worth the paper on which they are printed if they are not followed up by strenuous and determined action.

The vicar of Sledmere persists in the ceremonial use of incense notwithstanding the fact that the Archbishop of York forbade the practice in his pastoral.

Rev. W. Gardiner, vicar of St. James's, Devizes, has announced his secession from the English Church Union, of which he has been a member for over twenty years. He has lost confidence in the council of the organisation.

In a letter to the chairman of the West Middlesex branch of the English Church Union, Lord George Hamilton describes the utterances of Lord Halifax as amounting to nothing less than defiance of all constituted authority, whether emanating from Crown, Parliament, or the Bishops.

Speaking at Doncaster last week, Lord Halifax said the present agitation had excited an interest in Church matters, and had a beneficial effect upon Churchmen! He had been told that confessions had never been so numerous as at this Easter time, and during March 1,500 new members had joined the English Church Union.

At the Diocesan Conference at Norwich, last week, Bishop Sheepshanks remarked that one chief cause of the present trouble in the Church of England arises from the vagueness of the Ornaments Rubric, which was liable to different interpretations.

This consideration had led the bishops to consider the advisability of introducing a Bill framed upon the lines of Archbishop Benson's Bill of 1884. The crux would be the constitution of a proposed appellate court and the terms of appeal. The fault was not in the Ecclesiastical courts, but in existing dubiously uncertain law. The broad, clearly defined limit must be, that no ceremonial must be allowed which was inconsistent with the doctrines of the Reformed Church of England. Subject to this, there should be toleration and wise liberality.

The Bishop of Manchester, speaking at a diocesan meeting last week, declared himself a Protestant, as the Americans said, "to the centre of his backbone and spinal marrow."

But his was Anglican Protestantism; that was to say, a Protestantism which had wide sympathies and a large range of toleration. He utterly abominated lawlessness, whether it were the lawlessness of those who refused to submit to the decrees of properly constituted courts, or the lawlessness of those who refused to allow what was permitted by legally constituted courts. He did not believe, though, that either of those forms of lawlessness was going to prevail. God was to be found neither in the fire, nor in the wind, nor in the earthquake of controversy, but in the small, still voice which made itself heard in the sincere mind and the pious heart.

Mr. W. A. Limbrick writes that he lately attended St. Saviour's Church, St. Albans, in which he found an "altar" of marble, a "tabernacle" for the reservation of the sacrament, and other Romish ornaments, including hanging lamps and large crucifixes. The minister in charge recently gave a prayer and hymn book to a confirmation candidate. It is entitled:—(1) "Before the Altar," (2) "Common Prayer" (abbreviated), (3) "Hymns Ancient and Modern." By the "abbreviation" of the Prayer-book is meant the omission of morning and evening prayer, the Litany, and Articles of Religion, and much else; while in Part I., Habitual Confession, the doctrine of the localised real presence, &c., is urged with persistency and strength. As the appointment and control of the clergyman in charge is entirely in the hands of the Bishop, Mr. Limbrick regards this case as having an important relevancy at a time when Churchmen are being enjoined to "trust the Bishops."

Rev. E. F. Allworthy, writing from Belfast, say, that recent events have forcibly reminded him of the words of Rev. John Wesley in a sermon preached before the University of Oxford on Ephes. ii. 8. How applicable to this time of Romish revival! Wesley said:

At this time, more especially, will we speak, that "by grace are ye saved through faith;" because never was the maintaining this doctrine more seasonable than it is at this day. Nothing but this can effectually prevent the increase of the Romish delusion among us. It is endless to attack, one by one, all the errors of that church. But salvation by faith strikes at the root, and all fall at once where this is established. It was this doctrine, which our Church justly calls "the strong rock and foundation of the Christian religion," that first drove Popery out these kingdoms; and it is this alone can keep it out.

With reason our correspondent thanks God for such words, and adds: "A revival of this important doctrine—a coming forth of men like Luther, filled with this theme—would scatter to the winds the hollow mockery and miserable mummery prevalent in many churches to-day."

The Rock suggests that the laity should stop the supplies in order to check their "clergy's lawless invasion of their right to loyally conducted services." It fairly reasons that

No parishioner can reasonably complain of Romanising illegalities at his parish church if he continues to supply the means by which any are sustained and encouraged. No Churchman can logically lament the prevalence of Ritualism in his diocese if he contributes to a fund which fosters Ritualistic practices. Let each of us only ask himself, Can I, in the presence of God, and while rejoicing myself in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made me free, give of my means to those who are hindering the free progress of the Gospel, and binding the chains of superstition upon my brethren?

It was at St. Cuthbert's, Philbeach Gardens, that Mr. Kensit a year ago interrupted the foolish and idolatrous "Veneration of the Cross." Mr. Westall, the vicar, has yielded this year to the commands of his diocesan, and has not had this ceremony, but in his Parish Magazine he has thus explained matters:

The Bishop feels, and rightly feels, as do a very large number, that it is not for the good of the Church that a small section should get too far ahead of the main body of clergy and laity; in fact, should go on too fast. These days, when people are waking up from a long sleep, many are like the man who saw at first "men as trees walking," and naturally they are frightened. They want patient and gentle handling if they are to be brought to a condition which sees all clearly. There should always be an advanced guard leading the great body on, only not too far ahead, lest they get out of sight and get credited by the ignorant, the stupid, and designing with practices which they are not guilty of.

Here is another evidence of the crafty policy by which Ritualists are educating the nation for the return to Rome. They go as far as they can, in the hope and with the intention of proceeding further in due time. The Uhlans of the enemy are well in view, and there can be no doubt as to who and what will follow.

Three useful pamphlets are—Lawlessness in the Church of England (2d.), a speech delivered in the House of Commons on February 8 and 9 last by Mr. Samuel Smith; What Ritualists Teach, and What the Church of England Teaches, Concerning Absolution and Confession (2d.), by Rev. W. Preston, D.D., vicar of Raskelfe; and Some of the Main Causes of Alienation from the Church; or, Truth for the Present Distress (1d.), by Rev. H. C. Wisdom, B.A., Plumstead. (C. J. Thynne, 6, Great Queen-st., Lincoln's Inn, W.C.) Another timely publication is Ritualism Unveiled! a sermon preached at the Congregational Church, Guildford, in October, by Rev. Alex. Cowe, M.A. (1d. H. R. Allenson.)

THE ALARM.

"Sound an alarm."—(Joel ii. 1.)

Matrons, noble English matrons,
Lend, oh, lend a willing ear;
Listen while I warn of danger,
Danger swiftly drawing near.
'Tis a battle fought with priestcraft,
'Tis an earnest holy war;
God shall gain a mighty victory,
As He did in days of yore.

English matrons, bravely help us,
Great the danger, dread and dire;
Light, oh, light your burning torches,
Kindle now the beacon fire.
Let the hills and mountains answer
To the blaze of signal light;
Rouse the heart and soul of England,
Stir the land to earnest fight.

Could you bear to see your daughters
Led in secret back to Rome?
Would you let her deadly dogmas
Steal into your quiet home?
Do you wish to see them worship,
Bowing low before a shrine,
Praying to the Blessed Virgin,
Not to Jesus Christ divine?

Mothers, would you have your daughters,
In their gentle womanhood,
By the horrors of Confession,
Turned from what is pure and good?
Would you have them asked in secret,
Questions of the inner life,
Of the strivings, swayings, yearnings
Of the heart's most bitter strife?

Would you wish the Holy Bible
Closed and clasped by priestly hand;
Or replaced by monkish masses,
Which you cannot understand?
Christian women, raise your voices;
In your wisdom be ye wise,
Overthrow this vain delusion,
This dark heritage of lies.

Shall the work of our Reformers,
All they suffered, wrought, be vain?
Shall the sons of Christian England
Turn to error once again?
As you value truth, be faithful;
Turn ye back the crafty foe.
And with noble, earnest courage,
Fling ye back the answer, No!

S. Trevor Francis.

Canadian Emigrants.—Rev. R. and Mrs. Wallace, of the Marchmont Home, Belleville, Ontario, sail for Canada on Thursday, the 13th, in the s.s. Dominion. They are taking the usual party of boys and girls with them from Mr. Shaw's Home, Manchester; Mr. Galloway's, Ardrossan, Scotland; and the Royal Albert Orphanage, Worcester. They will be glad of the prayers of our readers for a safe voyage for their large family.

Broussa Orphanage. — The seventy-two Armenian orphans in Broussa Orphanage have come to us from the scene of the late troubles. Besides these seventy-two we have twenty-four other orphans. For the manifold needs of our inmates we look to the generosity of fellow Christians. Rev. W. A. Essery, 7, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C., will forward any donation for Broussa to us.

G. Baghdasarian, Pastor.

Historical Revivals.

The United Presbyterian Magazine for April has a fourth article of the series on Historical Revivals. It is from the pen of Rev. J. W. D. Carruthers, of Perth, and deals with "Jonathan Edwards and the New England Revival."

In conclusion, Mr. Carruthers mentions (but does not discuss) interesting reflections and questions that inevitably suggest themselves in connection with the story—about the affinities and associations of this revival with contemporary ones in England and Scotland; the light which it sheds upon the strength and the weakness of revivalism in general; the effect which it had in moulding the characters of those strong and stern New England men who fought and won in the War of Independence; its spiritual connection with and influence upon the later religious history of America, and especially with those great revival movements associated with such names as Finney and Moody.

Bible Study Lectures.

The course of lectures arranged for in the North of England by Rev. George Soltau, has now been completed. It is not possible, says a correspondent, to describe the interest which the lecturer has awakened. In the afternoons the Four Gospels were handled, being compared and contrasted. In the evening's course the lecturer dealt with the books of Genesis and Exodus, and the Epistles to the Romans and the Hebrews. It is quite impossible in a brief notice to give any adequate idea of the amount of intellectual as well as spiritual research, and the lines of thought, laid before the companies of students who daily gathered.

At Darlington on March 12, and at Middlesbrough on March 19, public meetings for men only were addressed by Mr. Soltau, and though the attendances were not large, they were made up of the class of non-church-goers whom it was wished to reach.

The formation of classes for Bible study by correspondence is proceeding in the different centres with a view of continuing the application of the methods explained to other books in the Bible. Series of questions and answers have been proposed which can be had on application to Mr. or Mrs. Soltau, 27, Pyrland Road, London, N. Fresh interest in foreign mission work has been created through the Bible study classes, as shown in the donating and guaranteeing of between £200 and £300 for such work.

Among the Military.

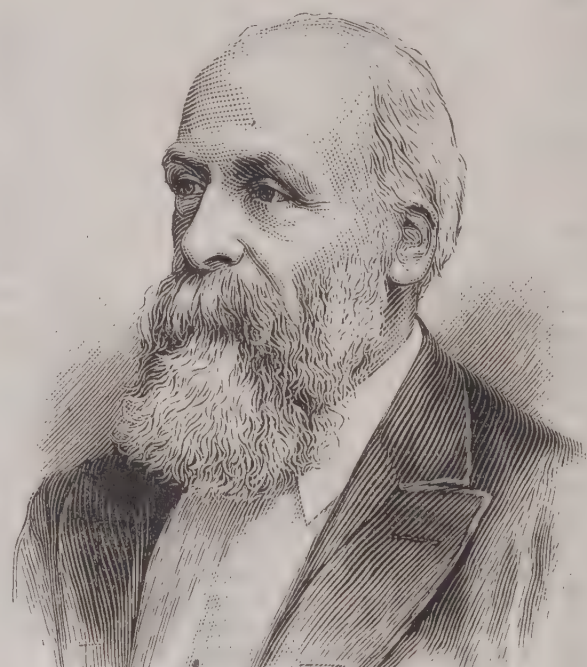
Anyone interested in the military would have been gratified on Good Friday last, when a party of soldiers paid a visit from Aldershot and Woking to Providence Chapel, Pirbright, Surrey, and spoke and sang for Jesus. It was really good to be there, and to listen to the dear fellows' testimonies as to the Lord's goodness to them in bringing them in wonderful ways to Himself. They also witnessed to grace given in the barrack room and among their unconverted comrades, even in the midst of opposition and persecution. Other meetings were held on Easter Sunday.

Pirbright is a rapidly growing place, the population being at present about 1,000. Military operations are carried on there very extensively from April till October; the Guards' camp is occupied very often with from 2,000 to 3,000 men. The Bisley National Rifle Association brings thousands of visitors and volunteers to the place in July. Large bodies of troops are constantly in the neighbourhood, including Life Guards, militia from Aldershot, and flying columns, so that at times there are 10,000 to 12,000 troops in the neighbourhood. A few years ago there were present one Sunday 18,000 men.

The friends at the chapel try to reach these men by visitation by tracts and by holding open-air services among them in the camps. Tracts and books, suitable for soldiers, would be most welcome. Any further information will be gladly given by Mr. R. Fifield (colporteur-in-charge), Pleasant Villa, Pirbright, Woking. F.

Irish Waifs.—Dr. Barnardo has taken a large house in Belfast, and intends to establish one of his branch homes for the waifs and strays of the city.

The Late Richard Cadbury.



ONE WHO LOVED HIS FELLOW MEN.

In our issue of March 30 we briefly recorded the death of Richard Cadbury, the senior partner of the world-famed firm of Cadbury Brothers, and the practical philanthropist who had made so valuable a personal contribution to the solution of the social problem. The life sketch, with which we now accompany a portrait of the Birmingham worthy who was borne to his grave last Saturday, amid affecting manifestations of the sincere sorrow of a great community, will gain in interest from the fact that its publication has been slightly delayed. In the interval between the receipt of the sad news from Jerusalem and the interment, with the simple rites of the Society of Friends, at Lodge Hill Cemetery, Selly Oak, some of the rarest and most eloquent tributes to the loving kindness of a generous, unworldly nature, that ever found their way into print, have given us real inspiration for the task that lies before us. Humble fellow-workers of the white-haired "Master" at Bourneville have praised his tender-hearted sympathy, his anxious solicitude, and his eminently practical care for their physical, moral, social, and spiritual well-being, with such fervent gratitude as speaks volumes for the sincerity of the affection which had been fostered by years of thoughtful benevolence. Confronted on every hand by concrete proofs of Richard Cadbury's regard for the comfort and happiness of his fellow-men, what wonder that even pens unaccustomed to the language of lofty eulogy found the fluency of a ready writer in sincere and artless admiration of the good works and the great heart of a prince of philanthropists whom they had been privileged to claim as friend and employer.

Very early in life Richard Cadbury displayed his interest in that Adult School Movement which was destined to become his peculiar work and pride. Among the original teachers at Severn Street, where this great movement had its unpretentious beginning, his zealous personal exertion for the improvement of the mental capacity and social condition of the industrial class in the city of Birmingham increased with the passing years. He celebrated the bi-centenary of the starting of the Severn Street school by the erection of an institute in the Moseley Road, to which the description "splendid" is not misapplied. When, efforts had been still further extended to other parts of what was then the workshop of the world, the Highgate school became Richard Cadbury's special charge. He was never half-hearted in anything that he undertook, and this was a work which irresistibly appealed to all his highest instincts. It satisfied his desire for the practical, the really useful. The good effect of adult school work was no mere matter of theory. Excellent results were observable by the most superficial spectator. Real, tangible good was being done by this wise movement, which went on its quiet way, seeking no public advertisement and rarely receiving much attention from the world at large.

Week in, week out, the superintendent of the Highgate Early Morning Adult School was intent upon the advancement of the highest interests of his men. Six o'clock on Sunday morning—whether it rained or whether it snowed—saw Richard Cadbury on his way from the pleasant Moseley (subsequently Moor Green) residence to the crowded working-class quarter in which the adult school was held. He invariably walked on Sundays, for the coachman's day of rest must be respected, though the Quaker capitalist found himself rather tired ere the evening chimes rang out on the Sabbath day. One bleak morning, when the snow was thick on the ground, and there was still a suggestion of a blizzard in the whirling snowflakes, the men had gathered at the school door, wondering whether "Mister Richard" would "turn up." As the clock struck the hour his foot was on the door-step, and his genial "Good morning" was addressed cheerily to the waiting and expectant group.

How great a part this adult school played in his life and thought had remarkable illustration in the way he planned and built for its future. But a little distance from the Mission Hall, Upper Highgate, is the Friends' Hall and Institute in the main Moseley Road. A large hall to seat 2,000 persons, a smaller hall to accommodate 400, forty class-rooms, in which from one hundred down to twenty-five adults can be comfortably seated; a basement fitted up as a gymnasium on a scale which has no parallel in the city; a children's first-day afternoon schoolroom; assembly and retiring rooms; baths, lavatories, and washing-rooms; a coffee-house and a flower garden—these are the main features of an exceedingly well-planned centre of educational, social, and spiritual work. Mr. Cadbury interested himself in every detail, securing that nothing short of the best possible material and the most modern arrangements should characterise the whole structure.

From a Photograph by Mr. E. B. Mowll, 174, Broad Street, Birmingham.

Linked with this truly noble scheme of a far-seeing and intelligent philanthropy was Richard Cadbury's characteristically practical and princely contribution to the solution of the problem of providing for old age. Even in the midst of that foreign travel, which had such an absorbing attraction for him, he had counted upon the great pleasure that awaited his return to Bournville—the completion of the new alms-houses in which some sixty of the deserving poor may pass

> An old age, serene and bright,
> And lovely as a Lapland night.

Free residence in pleasant, well-built rooms, with fire and light provided, and free medical attendance and medicine when required, are the material advantages which will be conferred on those fortunate inmates whose friends can guarantee them an income of (single persons) 5s., or (couples) 7s. 6d. per week. They may be of any religious persuasion, for Richard Cadbury's liberalities were never robbed of their grace and acceptability by the slightest manifestation of the sectarian spirit. They must be sixty years of age. The houses, thirty in all, are built about a pleasant open space, in the midst of which are sheltered seats, insuring sunshine, and a tempered, kindly airing to the inmates. And here again we have the considerate kindness of the benefactor displaying itself in manifold ways. Each house is self-contained, and has but one floor. The inmate is completely protected from draughts, both living-room and bedroom being snugness itself. A superintendent will be charged with the gentle enforcement of the sound and sensible regulations drawn up by the trustees; but the burden of these will not be onerous. There is a hall for meeting and social intercourse. They will be just beyond the busy world, and yet within hearing of the pleasant hum of honest labour. And so, in peaceful days, life's tale will be told, and the toiler have sweet rest at last. Richard Cadbury longed to see the actual entrance upon this blessed mission in which the dread of old age would at once be removed from sixty worthy lives. Vain though the regret may be, how much we could have wished that he should see the fruition of his generous thoughts and selfless ambition to be satisfied!

Do not let it be thought from what has already been said that the adult population and the aged exclusively enjoyed Richard Cadbury's consideration. Holding his riches in trust, and regarding life itself as a glorious opportunity of doing good, he acted as he lived—

> As ever in his great Taskmaster's eye.

The children had his constant care. To them he gave up his picturesque old home at Moseley Hall when he removed to Moor Green. In the Moseley Hall Convalescent Home to-day there are a number of children enjoying the care and kindness of efficient trained nurses, and the advantages of agreeable surroundings, and the comforts of life that make such strong appeal to the invalid. And but a short time since his great concern for the spiritual welfare of the children of Birmingham led him to present to every child above the third standard in the Board schools of the city and suburbs (above 25,000) a neatly bound, guilt-edged Bible. In a short dedicatory statement, he asked the children to read a portion of the Scriptures every day. Mr. Cadbury was the recipient of a large number of interesting letters from the scholars, in which, with expressions as sincere as they were often quaint and even amusing, they thanked him for the gift with which he had indicated his great personal interest in their individual welfare. It is stated that he was so pleased with the result that he arranged for two future presentations, at intervals of three years each. It is estimated that the institute and alms-houses schemes conjointly cost £80,000. The presentation of the Bibles claimed some £1,300. These figures are given only to show that the counsel of Ecclesiastes the Preacher had been taken and applied literally with that earnestness which was a marked trait of the simple Quaker's character: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." He became a magistrate, and displayed the keenest regard for the efficient performance of his duties as justice of the peace. There can be no doubt that the more intimate knowledge of the darker side of our social life which he gained while sitting on the bench, was specially sought by him as a necessary education for anyone anxious to arrive at the best means of helping the lapsed masses to rise "on stepping-stones of their dead selves to higher things." And his interest in the police was manifested by a gift of £1,000 to the new Police Institute, in course of erection.

Attention has here been more particularly paid to philanthropic work which Mr. Cadbury made peculiarly his own. The religious world well knows that there never was a deserving cause which appealed for his interest and support in vain. Again, he always appeared to bear in mind the proverb that "He gives twice who gives quickly" — and, may we add, generously. He established the Temperance Institute in Corporation Street, Birmingham, as a centre of social effort for the betterment of the people. He was thoroughly in sympathy with the Peace movement, and was president of the Birmingham Auxiliary. The Free Church Federation claimed him as a loyal friend, and as well as his brother, Mr. George Cadbury, a generous supporter of the National Free Church Council. As president of the Midland branch of the National Vigilance Association, and in a hundred other like capacities, he strove for social amelioration with all his might. One resolution—that of a political association — catalogued his good works in a felicitous sentence of its consolatory message to the bereaved family: "They record their admiration for the blameless simplicity of his character, and remember with gratitude his deep interest in all that affected the well-being and progress of the city; his concern for the poor and sick; his personal efforts to improve the lot of the labouring classes; his munificent gifts to public institutions, and his life-long devotion to the cause of the people. They respectfully tender to Mrs. Cadbury and family their heartfelt sympathy in their sudden and irreparable loss."

His large sense of citizenship led Mr. Cadbury to take a close personal interest in many movements which one scarcely associates with the public activities of ordinary members of the Society of Friends. He was president of a popular athletic club, and aided from his purse more than one organisation having for its aim the physical training and development of the youth of the city. But Richard Cadbury was essentially a broad-minded man, with a wide outlook on life. Personally he was the very soul of geniality, his nature overflowing with the milk of human kindness. Never, in this life, shall we know the sum of his generosities." He "did good by stealth, and blushed to find it fame." But he has left enduring monuments of a philanthropy that has taught politicians and statesmen—if they will but learn—how best the pressing problems of life and labour may be solved.

Evangelical Alliance.—The annual meeting of the Dublin Branch of the Evangelical Alliance was lately held in the Christian Union Buildings, Captain R. Wade Thompson presiding. Practical and encouraging addresses were delivered by Revs. J. W. R. Campbell, M.A., Geo. R. Wedgwood, Samuel Prenter, and others, in which the favourable opportunities now presenting themselves for preaching the Gospel in the open air in the fairs and markets of Ireland were thankfully referred to.

Upward Steps to the Higher Life.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

"TELL me something that will help me towards a higher Christian life." To this sincere inquirer (and there are many others who have the same desire) I would say—turn to the closing verse of the first chapter of John. In that verse Christ tells Nathanael that he would "see the heavens opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." The allusion here is very clear to Jacob's vision at Bethel. Jesus describes Himself as a sort of connecting ladder between heaven and earth. By his divine nature He reaches to the throne of the Godhead; by his human nature He reaches down to our weakness and guilt. His atonement for sin opens a way upward by which we can find pardon, peace, and power—by which we can climb from a lower into a higher and holier life. By Jesus Christ, and by Him alone, we can attain fellowship with God: and Jesus may become to us "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption."

You may say this is too theological in language, and rather savours of mysticism. You want it translated into the language of everyday life, and to know just how you can become a better, stronger, happier and more useful man or woman. It is a good symptom that you desire spiritual improvement; for self-satisfaction is always a curse. The mere desire, however, will not produce the change any more than my desire to get the view from the top of the East River bridge-tower will carry me up there, I must make the ascent, and by one step at a time.

Sin of some kind—or of many kinds—is the real trouble with you. Sin holds down and hinders advancement. Repentance is not a thing to be done at the outset of the Christian life, and then to be done with forever after. It is not a mere feeling bad; it is a doing better. Faith also is not the single act of accepting Christ at the time of conversation; it is continual clinging to Him, and the continual resting your whole weight on Him as you trust yourself to every step of stone in that bridge-tower. Your religious life began when you gained your first victory over sin; you gained it by Christ's help. Your grasp on the Saviour for help, for forgiveness, for strength to serve Him, was an act of—faith. When Bartimeus cast away his garment and arose and came to Jesus, he gave a good illustration of what you did when you first became a Christian, and what Jesus did for him is an illustration of what He did for you at the time of your conversion.

What you experienced at the outset of a Christian life must be repeated to a certain degree continually. You began with a decisive step—a step Christward. Now don't begin to dream about a prodigious jump or a sudden hoist into a higher life. I have heard some people pray for a sudden advance into holiness, which seemed to me very much as if my little grandson were to expect to read a whole chapter of the Bible fluently before he had learned to spell out syllables. No mere vague desire to be stronger and holier ever adds one cubit to your spiritual stature. A Christian character is built as my dear old church yonder was built—by laying one stone upon another. A mountain is ascended by setting one footstep after another up its steep face; if there be an occasional slip backward, then a new lesson of weakness is learned, just as you have been learning your own weakness and the need of a fresh grasp on Christ. Penitence and faith lay at the starting point with you; penitence and faith must accompany every upward step. You have not yet outgrown "God be merciful to me a sinner."

My friend, if you really long for a genuine growth in grace, in vigour, and in effective usefulness, then be done with vague aspiration, and lay hold of what the negro preacher called his "up-settin' sins." Put the knife to that bad habit before it becomes an ulcer. Take hold of that neglected duty and perform it. One step on the ladder was taken by my neighbour A— when he gave up his inordinate appetite for novels (some of them very poisonous) and determined to feed on solid food, and to go back to his Bible. Deacon B— pitched out of doors his Sunday morning newspaper; he found it was killing his Sabbath spirit. Brother C— has stopped putting his club in the place of his prayer-meeting. Brother D—, who said that after a hard week's week he needed a Sunday afternoon nap on his sofa, has become a different man since he enlisted for his Master in our Mission Chapel. Mrs. E—— was sorely tempted to buy that sealskin sacque, but she said, "No, no, not that luxury while that missionary is freezing for want of an overcoat out in Dakota."

And so I could go on through the whole alphabet of taking steps upward in obedience to the voice of conscience and to honour Christ. Don't be all the time feeling your pulse in order to grow better. Don't rely on attending meetings for the "promotion of holiness." The higher life is reached by steady climbing—making Christ your spiritual ladder—and by one step at a time.

> Heaven is not reached by a single bound;
> Christ is the ladder by which we rise
> From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies:
> And we mount to the summit round by round.

Cleave closely to the stairway; a single step to the one side or the other brings a fall. Nearly all the catastrophes in Alpine climbing result from wandering from the guides, or from venturing on forbidden ground. Jesus never promises his aid except in the path of obedience. Every redeemed soul is bound to strive for the highest, holiest, and most fruitful life that grace can impart. The angels of prayer will ascend, and the angels of blessings will descend upon that Divine ladder which links earth to heaven.

Scottish Notes.

MR. JOHN ROBERTSON has returned to Scotland after a year's evangelism in America. He will preach in the City Hall, Glasgow, each Lord's Day during this month.

The usual half-yearly Communion with unfermented wine was held in Queen Street Hall, Edinburgh, on the evening of Sabbath, April 9. The attendance was much larger than it has been on any former occasion. The earnest and eloquent words addressed to the communicants by Rev. Messrs. Arnot, U.P. Church, Blairgowrie; Abel, Dudhope Free Church, Dundee; and M. Corkindale, Eassie Parish Church, cannot fail to give an impetus to evangelical truth.

The Sabbath Free Breakfast Mission is carrying on a most successful work in Edinburgh among a class which is the despair of the Churches. During the past year over 46,000 men women and children attended the breakfasts, giving an average each Sunday of 887. The Gospel is preached and sung to the guests, many of whom it is safe to say would not hear it in any other way. In addition, there are lodging house meetings, mothers' meetings, and young women's classes.

The annual report of the Dundee Home Mission Union shows that it is now composed of fifty-six congregations and twelve non-congregational missions. To indicate the progress made during the last five years, it is noted that at the beginning of that period fourteen congregations had no recognised mission districts, and of these twelve were not carrying on any organised mission work. Eleven districts were more or less neglected, and in twenty-six there was overlapping. Now every congregation and mission has a well-defined district of work, and overlapping has practically ceased.

Wandsworth.—Open air Gospel work has been begun at the Howard Street Gospel Mission, Wandsworth Road. On Good Friday a conference was held at the hall on the Second Advent and the best ways of reaching the careless masses.

Cromwellian Tercentenary Celebration.—This celebration will take the form of a great Free Church demonstration on Thursday, April 27, in Huntingdon, Cromwell's native town, and the promoters are most anxious to have with them the leading Free Churchmen of this and the neighbouring counties. Dr. Monro Gibson will preach in Trinity Church at 11 a.m., and there will be an open-air demonstration in the afternoon, with a public meeting in Trinity Church in the evening, Rev. H. Price Hughes presiding.

Other Lands.

Letters from America.

IN NORTH AND SOUTH CAROLINA.—REV. D. MACRAE AND REV. SAM JONES.

WE went from Hillsboro' to Raleigh, the chief city of North Carolina, where we had similar meetings, with similar results to those at Hillsboro'. But the city-bred people are less pronounced in their demonstrations. It was noticeable that in Mr. Wharton's meetings and in our own the greater number of converts were quite young. It is sad that elder people, in the zenith of their lives, should make excuse; but from the point of view of the interests of the kingdom of God, one child is worth several adults, both negatively and positively. He has not so much to unlearn; he is more easily influenced by those things which are true, honest, lovely, and of good report, and he has much more time before him in which to serve God.

At Raleigh about a hundred persons confessed Christ as their Saviour. There, as everywhere, some of them seemed to come into a wealthy place in proportion as previously their distress had been painful to witness.

At Charleston we preached in Congregational, Baptist, American Methodist, Episcopal, and African Methodist churches. The last is ruled and managed entirely by coloured people. Its building was by far the largest of all, holding over 2,000, and when we visited it, at the close of a fortnight's "revival," 200 and 250 were still coming forward each night seeking relief from their pungent convictions of sin.

The greater number of the coloured people are connected with the Methodist and Baptist churches. Many will remember the Jubilee hymn—

> Methodist and Baptist have just gone along,
> To ring dem charming bells.

The unemotional ways of the Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and Episcopalians are, as a rule, less attractive to them than the fervour of the Methodists, and on the other hand the baptism of believers by immersion affords them an object-lesson in doctrine, and an illustration in practice which gives rise to a numerous Baptist denomination.

It is claimed by the three less numerous denominations that their people are more exemplary as well as more intelligent than the others. As to this I have not sufficient information to justify me in the expression of an opinion.

It is to be regretted that denominational distinction rules high in the United States, but at Washington the union meetings of Dr. Chapman, to which I previously referred, and those of the coloured people at Charleston, have shown that sectarian feeling declines as the Gospel of Salvation takes hold of the heart of Christians.

At Raleigh, in the State school, we were pleased to find that the Bible comes first in the course of daily study, and that Mr. Sankey's "Gospel Song Book" is used in the school. The teachers have classes, at the close of the day's lessons, for those who desire to attend for further Scripture study.

REV. SAM JONES ON THE LIQUOR QUESTION.

At Wilmington we met Rev. David Macrae, of Dundee, who is gathering information, I believe, for a book or articles on the Southern States. He gave a very instructive address at the Y.M.C.A. on a Sunday afternoon on "Christian Liberty." We next heard of him as being at Atlanta, where he had an interview with Rev. Sam Jones, the southern evangelistic preacher. The subjects of conversation were the Liquor Question and the Negro Problem. With regard to the former, Mr. Jones said:

"We are trying several experiments. In two States we have a dispensary law, and in two (Maine and Kansas) we have prohibition. In South Carolina the sovereign State runs the dispensary. I have fought simply and only for prohibition and the total extermination of the liquor traffic, and have contended that it is simply a question whether we would down liquor or liquor would down us; and the black flag has been raised on either side."

To Mr. Macrae's question, whether the experiment on prohibition had increased or dimininished the evil, Mr. Jones replied that wherever law has laid its hand on the liquor traffic it has crippled and hurt it. The dispensary hurts it; high licence hurts it; State prohibition hurts it. It flourishes best where it is turned loose. The violation of the liquor law in Atlanta not only forfeits the bond of the dealer, but it forfeits his licence as well, and makes it impossible for him to be re-licensed. In Kansas they enforce prohibition in the smaller towns; you can manage half a dozen rascals better than you can half a million. Anti-prohibitionists say that more liquor was sold in this town of Atlanta under prohibition than is sold now that we have saloons. I tell them, "You sell liquor now that you have saloons, and you say you sold more liquor when you had no saloons. If you only look at that lie you will never repeat it. Liquor is entrenched behind the politics of the country, but the very minute the preachers begin to take a stand against whisky, and we begin to exercise our influence on the politicians, they set up a howl 'Preachers in politics. You are mixing church and state.' I tell them 'We are mixing gentleman and dog; church and state is not in it.'"

Mr. Macrae smiled, and then he asked: "Do you not find that the value of a liquor law depends upon the active force of intelligent public conviction?—that unless the people have determined to have a law enforced it tends to become a dead letter?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Jones, "the active, aggressive sentiment of the community decides this question. In my county we have had prohibition for fourteen years, and just as we have weaned our people away from the saloons in politics, so much have our people grown away from the saloons in our town. It is to the indifference of the good people that our failure is due, and to the eternal and infernal activity of the politicians and the liquor gang."

I must leave the discussion of the race problem to my next letter. I am indebted for the information here given to the Atlanta Constitution.

R. Cope Morgan.

The Klondyke Region.

WRITING from Fort Selkirk, Upper Yukon River, last October, Mrs. Canham, of the C.M.S., says:—

"Everything is so changed since we left the country: it is no longer an Indian waste, but the home of the white man. Steamers are so numerous as to be no longer a curiosity, but still a source of excitement. All day long boats and scows are passing, bringing people and supplies to Dawson City, which is about 200 miles farther down the river. There are new routes opening up, and new companies springing into existence, and business of all kinds is transacted in this hitherto quaint locality.

"We were much pleased and thankful to find ourselves at home again, after all the fatigue of travelling. The Archdeacon has extra work now, having two English and two Indian services every Sunday. He holds one service at the barracks for the soldiers and any civilians that may wish to attend. The congregations are usually good; of course the Indians vary, for, as usual, they are constantly going and coming again. They were very pleased to have us back, and appreciate school very much. They are a little in awe of the soldiers, and are a little mystified as to what they are here for; but I am sure they have full confidence in us as their friends at all events."

Mr. L. A. Large, 1, Spencer Road, Southsea, who sends the foregoing communication, will gladly receive contributions of clothing, or money to purchase it, for the annual bale sent to Archdeacon and Mrs. Canham.

Russia and Finland.

WE make the following extracts from a letter which recently appeared in The Times:—

"A year has not passed since I gave a bright account of our union with Russia, characterised on her part by lofty statesmanship and due respect for our constitutional privileges; on our side by self-government similar to that enjoyed by Canada, with consequent peace, progress, and contentment. Now, in the course of a few months, the situation is grievously changed, and Finland is to-day threatened with the fate of Poland. Russia has all of a sudden changed her policy, violated our Constitution, and made every preparation to Russianise the country. And this, as every intelligent reader is aware, means the suppression of civil and religious liberty, the moral and political corruption of all the departments of State, the degradation of justice to a merchandise, the impoverishing of the people, the blight of knowledge and education, and the ushering in of gross ignorance, imprisonment, exile, curses, and damnation.

"No English reader can have an idea of the baneful, blighting influence of Muscovite rule. For these last ninety years our country has formed a part of the Russian Empire. We have seen with a shudder its cruel working close to us, and have praised Providence for the blessings of constitutional government which we ourselves, as an heritage from the union with Sweden, so long have enjoyed.

"And yet, though we have done nothing whatever to merit a harsh treatment, we are now suddenly menaced in our very national existence. According to the fundamental laws of Finland—solemnly confirmed by the present Emperor as well as his predecessors on their accession to the throne—the power of the monarch is limited by the Constitution, which, among other things, prescribes that no law touching life, liberty, property, taxes, religion, education, military service, or any form of local government can be enacted without the hearing of the Diet of Finland, and the sanction of all the four Chambers of which this legislative body is comprised. Nor can the fundamental laws themselves, according to constitutional rights, be superseded, altered, or completed except in the like manner. This has been the Magna Charta of Finland, and the secret of our progress in every field of enterprise.

"But, for 'reason of state,' so styled, Russia has now violated our Constitution, plunging the country into

A POLITICAL CRISIS OF THE GRAVEST CHARACTER.

The first step in this direction was taken as far back as July last year, when an Imperial decree was published summoning the Diet to an extra session for the purpose of passing a new Army Bill. The aim and object of this Bill is to Russianise the Finnish national militia, or rather destroy it, by sending the men to do military service in Russian regiments in Russia, where the Finlanders would be deprived of the protection of our laws and be morally and physically ruined. The Bill further stipulates an extension of the compulsory military service—so distasteful to the Finnish mind—from three to five years, besides thirteen years in the reserves. The number of men obliged to serve will be increased nearly fourfold, and Finland will have to pay an annual war subsidy to the Russian Exchequer of more than £700,000, besides paying our own military brigade. Remember that every one of these provisions is a gross outrage upon the law of the land and the sentiments of the people, that the Imperial summons plainly intimated that the Bill would receive Imperial sanction whether the Diet accepted it or not, and that every effort has been used, though entirely in vain, to coerce the legislative body into obedience, and you will understand hatred, and indignation this move of the Emperor Nicholas II. has called forth in the bosoms of the people.

THE FEELINGS OF HORROR,

"And the Army Bill was not the only one. Worse was to come. On February 15 last an Imperial Manifesto was published, together with a new fundamental law, whereby the Constitution of Finland was arbitrarily changed, the Emperor Nicholas II. decreeing that the most important legislative measures concerning Finland, which, by constitutional right, require the sanction of the Diet, henceforth are to be decided by the Russian Council of State, the Diet having only a consultative voice. Now this is a coup d'état if ever there was one, and this shameful deed will mark the wreckage of Western civilisation, Protestant faith and humanity, and the material devastation of Finland, and this we do not deserve.

"Several attempts have been made to put the matter in its true light before the Emperor, but all in vain. Representatives of the Finnish Government, the highest members of the bench, the four speakers of the Diet—all have been refused admission to his Majesty, and when the people itself took hand of the matter, when in a week 527,000 signatures were obtained to a loyal petition, and all the electoral wards of Finland elected 500 special deputies, who were to present this petition to the Emperor, even then Nicholas II. refused to hear our grievances, and the deputies were on March 18 ordered to leave St. Petersburg.

"The whole nation is subdued by grief. The churches and chapels are crowded, and special prayer meetings held. Many are thinking of emigration to Canada. Every other interest is put in the shade by the great political question of the day. May the Lord's people everywhere lift up holy hands to God without wrath and doubting, praying that He may guide us and the Tsar and his counsellors by his Spirit, and that we may be succoured in our time of national trial, and that good may yet come out of all this evil and sorrow!"

Schools in Lebanon.

IN a communication received from Ameen M. Saleeby, of Shweir, Lebanon, he describes the early educational work of the Lebanon Schools Society, founded by the help of some devout Scotchmen, and also the work of the Free Church of Scotland Foreign Mission Committee in helping these efforts. Our correspondent goes on to say:

Two churches have been founded, one at Shweir and the other at Kafarakab, a village two hours' walk from Shweir, and schools have been opened in the different villages around, which during these twenty-six years have been very successful. The Boys' High School at Shweir has been one of the chief factors in promoting the civilisation of this district during these twenty-six years. It has educated hundreds of young men, and produced many excellent teachers. The students who go from it to the collegiate department of the American College at Beirût maintain a high position in their classes. The influence that its students have had in spreading and promoting civilisation in Lebanon has been very marked. Many have been converted to the Protestant faith. It has also encouraged the study of the Bible.

The village schools, too, have had the same effect, though to a less degree, upon the rising generation. Since the inhabitants of Lebanon are for the most part intelligent, and show great readiness to learn, a great change in the habits of the people may now be perceived in places where the mission workers have visited and preached.

I am very sorry to say that the Lebanon Schools Society have determined to give up their educational work in Lebanon, because they are not able to sustain the expense of it any longer. This news fell upon the hearts of the people as a great blow, and it will be a great check to their advance in education and civilisation. The field of Shweir has been so blessed and so prosperous that it will be a great calamity to leave it and stop its progress just when it is doing most good. We hope this call for helping the people of Lebanon, and especially the small family of Protestants in this district, will meet in the United Kingdom with a favourable answer. The mission is conducted by Rev. Dr. Carslaw, Shweir, Lebanon, Syria; the secretary and treasurer of the Lebanon Schools is Mr. Andrew Scott, 2, York Chambers, Edinburgh.

American Coloured Prisoners.

By CHAS. COOK.

THE people of England will scarcely believe what I desire to state here concerning the sorrows and sufferings of the coloured prisoners in the Southern States of America. Things seem to be getting worse than ever. The Christian public of America know something about these things, and yet seem unable to bring about the reform so urgently needed.

The crying evil is known as the "Convict Lease System," by which the State leases to a private individual any number of convicts. The lessees have power to work the prisoners where and how they desire; and also to administer such punishment as they see fit; what is perhaps worse, they are permitted to sub-lease prisoners to others. Under this system there is no State supervision, and there are no State officials, and the abuses are easily imagined.

In many of the camps, women and boys and girls of tender years undergoing punishment for the first offence, work in ditches side by side with men hardened to crime, and all occupy the same quarters at night. The wretched prisoners are driven to the yards of the stockades, after a long and hard day's work, to find nothing to eat prepared, and no fire to dry their clothes when wet. Corn-bread and fat bacon may be given them, which they must cook as best they can on little fires on the ground, whilst chains manacle their limbs. In some instances over sixty men, women, and children sleep in rooms 18ft. square and 7ft. from floor to ceiling, without windows or adequate means of ventilation. Most of the camps have neither bunks nor mattresses, and the prisoners are obliged to SLEEP ON THE BARE GROUND.

But this is not the worst. All convicts are punished in the presence of each other. Women are whipped in the presence of men and boys. In Wilkes County, Georgia, an old coloured man was whipped so savagely a few months ago that he died. Exhausted from the loss of blood, he fell to the ground, saying, "Boss, is you going to kill me?" "Yes," answered the "white boss." The poor old man begged to be killed at once. After beating his victim again, the cruel man chained him to a tree; death came and released him.

The death-rate in some camps is very high; one out of every six prisoners dies from punishment and ill-treatment. In the old days of slavery, value was set upon the lives of the slaves; now apparently there is little or none. Even when sick no doctor is summoned, and as for religious or moral instruction, there is absolutely none.

This farming out of prisoners in the south is purely a money-making institution, yet it is supported by executives of States, and by the local and national law-makers. In a pamphlet, just published, it is stated that "some States reap an annual income of 250,000 dollars." This is after the lessees, sub-lessees and others have been satisfied; the same pamphlet gives the name of one lessee "who has cleared over 25,000 dollars per annum from convict labour."

Due advertisements are made "that on a certain day so many able-bodied convicts will be leased to the highest bidder desiring their labour." Prisoners are taken to a place in each State known as the stockade, and are sold from the public auction block just as slaves were before the Civil War. Great crowds of people are attracted to these degrading scenes to see human beings sold into bondage more horrible than the worst form of the old régime of slavery.

I am able to substantiate the above by the testimony of the well-known George Kennan, who said at Boston in 1889: "I suppose Americans would be incredulous if I should say to them that in some of our Southern States I have seen terrible sights. I have seen a string of twenty-five convicts—old bent men and young boys—almost bound together by iron chains, a heavy iron ring around the neck of each. I have seen many things which have convinced me of the evils of the system of leasing out convicts to cruel and unscrupulous employers, and I think that system should be abolished. I saw some pretty bad sights in Siberia, but I am serious when I declare that I have seen worse sights in the South, and in this there is abundant food for reflection for the moralists and reformers of this country."

I am hoping soon to leave England with the object of giving New Testaments to prisoners in European gaols, where they have never had them. This will hinder me from visiting America for the present, but I could wish that some one may arise to voice the wrongs of the coloured prisoners of America in the Southern States. I shall be glad of the fellowship and prayers of your readers on my present journey.

6, Frithville Gardens, W.

The Threshold of Tibet.

ALONG the western border of Szchuan there is a large tract of country, which, while nominally in that province, is in every vital respect Tibetan ground. From Tachienlu, the border town, three months from Shanghai, to Batang, almost due west, is seventeen days' road journey through a country that is new to mission work.

The country is held by the nominal suzerainty of China, but the Tibetans are masters of the situation. The mean level of the country is above 12,000ft, with many lofty passes and mountain ranges. The valleys are clothed with rich grass in much abundance, are scored with numerous rivers, and afford pasturage for immense herds of cattle, in which the Tibetan finds his wealth. A large proportion of the people live in tents, a nomadic life much like that of the Indians in America's great west. The few towns and villages are meagre in size and far separated.

The whole land is in the sway of the lamas, who have gathered everything, from politics to commerce and all profits from religion, into their powerful grasp. The farther west one goes the more pronounced is this control. At Tachienlu, West Gelok, Litang and Batang, all on the main road, are four centres of this influence, each having its lamascry, containing in all perhaps 5,500 lamas—an immense proportion of idle, celibate men, as compared with the scattered, ignorant people about them.

This powerful brotherhood is the great conservator of prejudice and ill-feeling towards all outsiders.

FOREIGNERS ARE SUSPECTED AND FEARED.

The way for the entrance of the Gospel is blocked at the threshold by the power and intolerance of the lamas. The Tibetans, as a people, impressed me with their religiousness. The lama cult has so stamped itself upon the people that the land is a vast temple, and all the people are given up to the claims of their creed, more or less, but in no case is the religious element lacking. At home, on the road, buying or selling, in ordinary conversation, or whatever else, the prayer cylinder, the sacred formula "om mani pah me hom" and the Rosary are all in evidence. With that mystic sentence a man will interlard his sentences, the children sing it; indeed, one is hardly free from its monotonous drawl. Allied to this is the lack of individuality. There is a common standard, and all conform—no personal initiative or identity. All are merged into a common type. The lack of variety is striking.

As a corollary to these, you have intolerance and suspicion of all who do not conform to the type. Priestly domination is fatal to freedom of conscience. Ignorance is at the root of all, and the lamas keep the door of knowledge shut tight.

Against these powerful forces the Christian worker must contend. The physical difficulties, such as distance, character of the country, and so on, the racial and social differences inherent in all work in foreign lands, but here, trebly emphasised—great as these are, they fade into relative insignificance beside the vaster obstacles implied in such a condition of mind and heart.

Against these forces thus arrayed the workers of the China Inland Mission have commenced work at Tachienlu, and are seeking to penetrate into "the regions beyond." In company with Mr. C. Polhill-Turner and the late Mr. W. Soutter, the writer was privileged to make the journey across the face of this country as far as Batang during the late autumn. While I returned to the ordinary work of a frontier station among the Chinese, they, with others, remained to begin the reduction of this stronghold of the foe.

And now we learn that away up on the plateau, at a little village named Rathi, Mr. Soutter has been called away "to be with the Lord." He sleeps in Jesus. With the work but just begun, and the road surveyed, his day is ended. Faithful in spirit, quiet in habit, and physically built to meet the strain of just such a life, he was recalled in the strength of his manhood. But the work remains. There is need of prayer and fellowship in sympathy for the men and women who in God's name are undertaking the evangelisation of this new field. As yet they only stand at the threshold of Tibet. W. M. Upcraft.

Yachon, viâ Chung King, Western China.

Work in South Africa.

On a Dutch farm in Weenen County, Natal, the Dutch a few years ago erected a monument in memory of the decisive battle which the early settlers gained on that spot over the Zulu hordes of Dingaan in 1838. Eight miles away lies our little mission station, called Bethany, in charge of a faithful and devoted brother from Holland, named Van Aken. He had won the confidence of the Dutch farmers in the country round about, and was a welcome guest and preacher in their homes. The Hatting family, who own the farm on which the monument stands, had given him permission to preach to their native tenants, had lent him the use of a large barn for Sunday services, and one of their number frequently interpreted for him into Zulu. A promising work had thus been begun.

In January, 1898, at his invitation, I went down to instal three native evangelists on three of our out-stations, and this one among the number. The people, to the number of over two hundred, met in the barn. After introducing Saul Masinde to be the resident Evangelist, I suggested that as Mrs. Hatting had given permission for the erection of a church, the time had arrived for commencing to build, and promised a first donation of £10 towards such a fund. The people present promised to assist, and so faithfully kept their promise that in a few months another monument graced the battlefield in the form of a church built of blue whinstone, and roofed with galvanised iron, capable of seating 250 natives.

Many and loud were the complaints of a number of Amakolwa (professing Christian natives) of various denominations, at the stringent rules of the missionary, who treated all partakers of beer, tobacco, hemp, and snuff, and all participants in heathen ceremonies alike, no matter what their profession might be, and who allowed none but those who manifested the fruits of a holy life to come to the Lord's table or take any part in the preaching of the Word.

PREDICTIONS OF FAILURE

were plentiful, and mocking remarks about the unnecessarily large size of the church frequent; but the missionary went straight on and paid no attention to them, denouncing sin and worldliness and lust as vigorously as ever, and refusing to make the strait gate any wider, or to bring the Gospel teachings down an inch to gain a crowd. The result is that God has honoured his faithfulness with an abundant success. The people gather in such numbers every Lord's day from all the country round that the church has to be filled twice to accommodate them, and souls are being saved every week.

Our brother is very cautious as to baptism, and requires very manifest fruits of repentance before he puts a candidate forward, knowing how emotional the natives are, and how lightly and readily they enter into the most solemn of obligations. The list of professed converts at this one outpost is well over a hundred within twelve months, and every week the numbers are increasing. It was determined to close the year with a baptismal service, and to begin the year 1899 with a special thanksgiving; so I was invited to preside, and I make some extracts from my diary:—

"Saturday, December 31.—At 8.30 a.m. held a preparatory meeting with the candidates for baptism, explaining each step by reference to the Word of God. The women and girls dressed in plain white dresses made by themselves, and the men and lads in white duck suits, thirty-four in number, formed in twos, and followed us to the Blaanwkrantz River. The Dutch farmers and their friends and some 200 or more dusky spectators lined the high river bank. After prayer and exhortation in Dutch and Zulu, the candidates followed me one by one into the river, and were duly baptised, a few words being addressed to each as he or she rose out of the water. In the afternoon we held in the church, when the baptised ones witnessed to their faith in a few graphic words, many of them showing a clear insight into the spiritual meaning of the ordinance of baptism.

A TESTIMONY MEETING

"Lord's Day, January 1, 1899.—At 6.30 a.m. we had a prayer meeting, and broke bread with the newly baptised converts. A few words were spoken on "the joy of the Lord" and "separation from the world." It was a solemn and impressive service. At 10.30 about 250 people filled the Church, Brother Wilson, of Sunderland, officiating, whilst I gathered the overflow under a large thorn-tree, and soon had a congregation of 350. At the close, in response to an invitation for penitents, a large number came forward, and, prostrating themselves on the ground, soon worked themselves up into a frenzy of excitement. After permitting this to continue for some moments, and praying that the Spirit might convict some souls, we sent them all back to their places, and then requested those who had counted the cost and sincerely meant to abandon sin and follow Jesus to come forward. About thirty did so, to whom we explained simply the conditions of acceptance with God, before the whole crowd.

"At noon the Dutch friends came over to see the people, so we gathered them up into a circle and sang some hymns. By this time over 700 were present. At 2.30 we drew the waggon under the thorn tree, and used it as a platform, from which two old women, one young widow, two lasses, a man and two lads from among themselves testified to the saving and keeping power of God through Jesus Christ. The anxious were directed to go to the church, whilst Bro. Wilson continued the open-air meeting. After dismissing all who behaved in a light and careless manner, and eliminating the christians, about eighty remained as seekers. A great number of these came forward one by one confessing sin and praying for mercy; a few words of help or of prayer being added in each case. We then all joined hands and repeated a solemn covenant now and closed with a song of thanksgiving.

"Towards sunset the people broke up into little groups, and departed to their several homes. Saul and his wife and daughter reside on the spot, and hold classes for spiritual instruction and impart the rudiments of education, so that the people may be able to read the Bible in their own tongue. It was indeed a day of thanksgiving to me, and one of re dedication to the glorious service of our coming King."

Johannesburg. A.W.B.

Persecution in Spain.—Two members of the congregation of the Gospel Hall in Marin are at the present moment in prison for not raising their hats when the priest passed them in the street with the host. They appealed to the Higher Court in the capital of the province, with the result that the sentence was confirmed. As in the days of the Inquisition, the priest denounces such "heretics" to the secular authorities, who willingly carry out the wishes of the Church.

Italian Soldiers.

When Signor Capellini passed away in July last his last words bequeathed to God the work he left. God has accepted the bequest. Alfredo Capellini, his second son, has vowed his life to the service of the Church. He will go through his years of military service and his university course, and then he will be ordained. In the meantime the brave wife and mother is consecrated to the work; she keeps up the house, the Martin Luther Club, the classes; she registers accounts and answers letters. Carlo Musi, a soldier recently home from his training in an American missionary college, takes the pastoral work, and visits stations, hospitals and camps.

One thing remains to be told. All these years Capellini longed for premises adequate to the needs of his complicated mission, but he longed in vain. Now that he has passed to his rest premises are offered, containing all that is required, which, with thorough adaptation and furnishing, would cost at the outside £3,500. Nearly £1,000 have been collected, and £2,500 are needed to give to this living mission its own premises. Mr. Piggott, Dr. Gordon Gray, and others in Rome are thoroughly competent to do the business part of the purchase and adaptation, and the premises would be held in trust by them and the committee in this country to prevent all danger of interference.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Danish Associations, having recently accepted the Paris basis, have been officially received into the World's Alliance of the Y.M.C.A. There are 195 Young Men's Associations in Denmark.

Mr. Hedley G. Burrough, a member of the Aldersgate Street staff, has been appointed general secretary of the Eastbourne Y.M.C.A.

On Saturday next, April 15, Rev. F. B. Meyer will resume his Bible talks to young men at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. at three o'clock.

The Spring Conference of the South-Eastern District was held at Eastbourne on April 5. There was a capital attendance of delegates from the leading associations, and excellent reports of work were presented.

The jubilee of the City of Dublin Association will be celebrated in June this year. It has been decided to invite the British Conference of association delegates throughout Great Britain and Ireland to meet in Dublin at that time.

Mr. Christian Phildus, Geneva, has recently taken a tour in Galicia, Silesia, Moravia, Upper and Lower Austria, and held about thirty public meetings in behalf of young men's work, resulting in the formation of twenty-seven new associations.

The work in Lancashire has been greatly developed since the appointment of Mr. A. K. Yapp as the National Council's travelling secretary for that district. Eleven new associations have been formed, and the membership enrolled in these centres already exceeds 1,100.

The annual meeting of the Cardiff Y.M.C.A. was held on Wednesday, March 29. The feature of the meeting was the announcement that the new buildings to be erected at a cost of £15,000 are to be immediately commenced. Towards the cost £11,000 has been given or promised.

The nineteenth annual conference of associations in the Midland District Union took place at West Bromwich on Easter Monday. The report of the district travelling secretary (Mr. F. C. Bennott) showed an increase in the membership. Many practical topics bearing on the work of the association were considered.

Over eighty delegates and invited speakers attended the Easter Conference of the North-Eastern District at West Hartlepool on Easter Monday, the associations from Birdhope Craig, on the Northumbrian border, to the city of York, on the southern boundary, being represented. Encouraging reports upon work in small towns were given by various friends.

The fund started in order to enable the Board of the Cape Town Young Men's Christian Association to make extensive additions to the premises is being liberally subscribed to by the merchants of the city. It is proposed to expend some £7,000 in the alterations, which will practically double the size of the present building, and enable the association to centre its operations under one roof instead of carrying on work in two separate buildings.

History of the C.M.S.

HAVING completed its first hundred years of service, the C.M.S. has a wonderful tale to tell. And to whom should we look for the story but to Mr. Eugene Stock, editorial secretary of the Society, whose missionary interest is as deep as his knowledge of the subject is varied and wide? After many years of thought, and several years of hard labour, involving continuous and careful research, Mr. Stock has given us two of the three volumes of his great work—THE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY: Its Environment, its Men, and its Work. (6s. per vol., net. Church Missionary House.)

The preface to the first volume gives a good idea of the scope of the work. The history of such an organisation as the C.M.S. cannot be regarded as relating merely to a band of workers, or a school of religious thought, or indeed to a church. This history is much more than a commemoration of the lives of good men. It is concerned with something much greater and higher. The true idea of missions, as Mr. Stock well says, is not grasped unless on the one hand, a human race needing a Saviour; on the other hand, a Divine Saviour for all; and, between the two, the men who know Him, commissioned by Him to proclaim his Message to those who know Him not.

WE HAVE EYES TO SEE—

The history of the C.M.S. is the history of an attempt to take a definite part in the work of God in the world, the work of calling men back to their allegiance to their one rightful Sovereign, and of proclaiming his gracious offer of pardon and restoration, through his incarnate, crucified, and exalted Son, for all who return to Him. This is the greatest of all "the principles of the Society."

Three others naturally follow. The first is that those only are qualified to call men back to God's allegiance who are his true servants themselves. . . The second is that we are to be content, in actual missionary work, with nothing short of the real return to God of those who by nature are alienated from Him—that is, their real conversion in heart and life. The third is that the qualifying of men for such a service, and the success of their efforts are the work of the Holy Ghost alone.

The history of the C.M.S. is in many senses a different thing from the history of the Society's missions. Accepting this fact as

A GUIDING PRINCIPLE,

Mr. Stock has devoted probably one-third of his work to the affairs of the Church and the Society at home. His pages are replete with information that cannot be ignored by the student of ecclesiastical history and moral progress. They deal, moreover, with many important and otherwise unrecorded developments in Church and State within recent generations.

A perusal of these volumes cannot fail to impress one with the fact that the development of practical work in the Church of England during the past hundred years has been largely due to the members of the Evangelical party. We are continually face to face with Evangelical doctrines and principles as applied by Evangelical men. Whether in Central Africa or Mid China, in India or the Arctic regions, the same impression is borne in upon us; and this fact may well be emphasised in a day when it is all too fashionable to associate devotion with superstition, and hard work with Romish practices.

The history is divided into ten parts—half of which are in the first volume. Opening with a chapter on the great commission, this volume proceeds to describe missions

BEFORE AND AFTER THE REFORMATION.

Luminous chapters follow on the eighteenth century and the Evangelical Revival, with an account of the missionary awakening. Here we read of the foundation of the Baptist and London Missionary Societies, and then of the formation of the C.M.S. and its early efforts and struggles. For the first few years Thomas Scott was secretary; he was succeeded in 1802 by Josiah Pratt. The twenty years that followed saw prejudice largely reduced and criticism disarmed; in fact, there was encouraging development along various lines. At home a deepening interest had been aroused; on the field good work was entered upon—among other places in Africa and India, in New Zealand and the West Indies. Pratt retired from the secretaryship in 1824, being followed by Edward Bickersteth. In this period Baptist Noel and Thomas Dale were among the advocates of the great cause, and both went far to anticipate the "Own Missionary" plan of recent times. Noel said:—

Among all the friends of the Society, are there not fifty at least, who, without foregoing a single comfort which they now enjoy, without sacrificing what is more to them than the weekly penny contributed by the labourer, or the annual pound by the domestic servant, could each contribute £300 to the maintenance of one additional missionary in India?

It was two years later, in 1837, that Dale elaborated the same plan. He said:—

Not a few among us . . . would have each his own special representative ministering the Gospel to the heathen, scattering among them, in his stead, the seed of life, and thus supplying his lack of personal service. . . . Where the burden is too heavy for one, why should not two, or four, or six, if linked together in close bonds of kindred, or by the closer tie of Christian brotherhood, combine to maintain their own missionary? Why should not the various members of families, whom God hath blessed, be led thus to offer a living tribute to his praise?

Henry Venn became secretary in 1841, and the first volume ends with the jubilee of the Society in 1848. The Tractarian movement is reviewed, and Wilberforce and the "Clapham Sect" come in for description. There are many allusions to Simeon and Duff, Daniel Wilson and Samuel Crowther, with scores of other who, through faith, not only wrought righteousness, but in literal truth subdued kingdoms, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, out of weakness were made strong, and turned to flight the armies of the aliens.

GOOD MEN AND TRUE,

The troubles on the field are by no means overlooked in these massive volumes; but the sadder pages are little more than incidental to the story of blessing and progress described. In the second volume a worthy place is given to the work of the great Lord Shaftesbury, and the eminent Christian men who, as soldiers or civilians, did so much for India during the Mutiny and subsequently. It is impossible, in the space at our disposal, to describe the great work which Mr. Stock has here given us. Principles and polity, men and things, at home and abroad, are arranged with all possible clearness, and the reader and student will find the pages uniformly instructive and inspiring.

WORKERS IN HEATHEN LANDS

will find these volumes of great interest, and we trust they will be placed within the reach of many such. Portrait plates and maps add to the value of the work.

The second volume closes with the death, in 1872, of Henry Venn, whose mental versatility and herculean labours are justly eulogised. Mr. Stock writes with reason:—

The Church Missionary Society will never have another Henry Venn. No one man could now carry the whole work upon his shoulders, as he practically did; and no man could in these faster days work on as he did for thirty years. But the Lord raises up just such instruments as He needs for this and that period of his Church's history, for this and that sphere of work for Him. And though it is right and good that we should love and honour those who have gone before, and in whose steps we seem so feebly to follow, let us remember that all alike are but as earthen vessels, and that God uses such for the express purpose that the glory shall be his alone. Not Pratt or Bickersteth, not Venn or Wright or Wigram; it is the Lord of Hosts Himself that is with us for our Captain.

The third volume of the history, bringing the story down to the present day, is to be issued in May or June, and will include indices and other supplementary matter.

Deptford Medical Mission.—During the past ten years the mission has been enabled to continue uninterruptedly the work of ministering to the bodies and souls of the sick and needy poor in a densely populated quarter of the metropolis. The Sunday evening and Wednesday evening mission services continue to be well attended by the class of people that it is desired to reach—viz., those who go nowhere else. These simple services are addressed by the medical officer and various friends, who come now and again and give in this way very welcome help. A service is also held in the waiting-room on each dispensary day, a short address being given to the patients before the needs of the body are attended. The workers aim at the plain and simple proclamation of the Gospel Message; and those of the hearers who are blessed are expected to find their place among the churches. Dr. Sidney H. Carr, 188, High Street, Deptford, London, S.E., is the mission superintendent.

City Young Workwomen.—A sale of work on behalf of the Convalescent Home at Epping will be held on Thursday, April 27. Contributions will be gratefully received. On the success of the Annual Sale depends the number of free holidays given to girls too poor to pay.—HELEN REYNOLDS, Epping New Road, Buckhurst Hill, E.

C.M.S. Centenary.

THE Centenary Celebration of the Church Missionary Society has been devised on a scale fully in harmony with the grandeur of the record and the work in hand. A glance at the programme is sufficient to show that the past, with its achievements, is not to be allowed to eclipse the future with its still more glorious possibilities. Extending over five days, the meetings will be varied in character, and appeal to different classes of the Christian community; gatherings for men only, and for young people in particular, have their place in a list of meetings of the more ordinary type, along with special services and prayer meetings properly so named.

The programme was opened on Monday morning by a communion service in St. Bride's Church, Fleet Street, the more public proceedings beginning in the afternoon, when a meeting for thanksgiving and confession was held in Exeter Hall. A hundred years of blessing might well suggest this as a fitting inauguration of the general Celebration, and it was with hearts and minds set to the right key that the fathers and brethren of the Society, with others in the great army of helpers and supporters, assembled in the Lower Hall.

After a hymn, prayer was offered by Rev. B. BARING GOULD. Sins, personal and ecclesiastical, were confessed; coldness, apathy, and indifference were deplored; and prayer was offered that the Holy Spirit would direct the proceedings of the Celebration, with the result that the work would go forward as never before, and be still more abundantly owned of God.

Rev. H. E. Fox, honorary secretary of the Society, followed with Psalm cxv., a portion of Scripture in every way suited to the occasion. Bishop ROYSTON, who presided, remarked briefly upon the verse—"The Lord hath been mindful of us; He will bless us." We may, he said, make a plea and argument before God of his dealings with us in the past. The loving kindness of the past is a warrant of great blessing yet to come. Things were never so low and depressing, at home or abroad, as a hundred years ago; but since then what hath God wrought!

After prayer by Lord KINNAIRD, an address was delivered by Archdeacon RICHARDSON, who indicated the relation between home and foreign missions. Passing on, he showed that the message to be taken to the nations of the earth has for its subject the glorified Christ—no longer a child or a sufferer at the hands of men. The sacrifice of Christ is of the past, and cannot be repeated. Men require to know that Christ is head over all things to the Church, and that the Holy Ghost has been given to work in them the mind which was in Christ, unto well pleasing with God. Adverting to the subject of giving, the Archdeacon deplored the fact that so much wealth and talent is lying unused in the Church of Christ. The missionary cause should receive more of the treasure of those who love the Lord.

Prayer having been offered by Prebendary BARLOW, an address was delivered by Canon GARRATT. In the early centuries of our era, he said, missionary work was attended with enormous difficulties, but during the past hundred years God has continually been opening fresh doors; but with what slowness have the opportunities of entering them been embraced! Here is cause for humiliation; efforts have been languid, prayers cold, and zeal for God has been at a low ebb. The dominant note at the moment, however, should be thankfulness because of what God has done through the small and halting exertions of his people. Things evil in themselves, wars and revolutions even, have been used by God to open doors all over the world; and in almost every land there are ears opened ready to hear the missionary's message, and hearts opened to receive the Gospel and follow Christ. God has once again "chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty—that no flesh should glory in his presence."

In our next week's issue we hope to give an account of the succeeding meetings.

(169)

Home Missions.

Dublin Medical Mission.

An excellent account of the past year's operations was submitted to the friends attending the annual meeting recently held, over which Dr. R. B. McVittie presided. In his statement of the visiting department Dr. Pigott observed that the mission had an open door in every part of the city. Those who receive the benefits of medical care and attendance are most grateful and show their thankfulness in many practical ways. The workers had been cheered by seeing not a few of those who had passed away die trusting calmly in Christ. All classes are met with among the patients—the well-born and well-educated, as well as the extremely ignorant and poor. Drink is the great curse that levels all. Many of those who have come under the influence of the work have, however, been restored to sobriety of life.

Referring to the work daily sustained at the dispensary, Dr. McCullagh had many encouraging facts to narrate. There is an average attendance of 60 at the morning dispensaries, and to these the Gospel is simply and earnestly preached, as well as to those who come to every meeting. There is great need in Dublin for such work, and helpers would be cordially welcomed. The fruits of the mission are constantly seen in changed lives and happy homes.

As to finance, Dr. Bewley, hon. treasurer, reported a small balance on the accounts for the year, but the generous help of the public is needed to keep the work in vigorous operation.

Several friends gave addresses in warm advocacy of the work of the mission. Rev. James Alley said the mission was doing work that the churches had so long neglected. He related instances of blessing known personally to him, and declared that if Christians generally were aware of the grand influence exercised by such efforts there would be a large extension of them in all our cities. Dr. Long spoke of happy days spent in connection with the mission, and described it as a bright light in a dark city. He referred to the similar effort in Limerick, which was really an offshoot of the Dublin Mission. Mr. W. R. Wigham endorsed what previous speakers had said as to the spiritual and physical needs of Dublin, and the effectual way in which the medical mission meets these needs. The Chairman, in the course of his opening remarks, told of the desire of the committee to establish a convalescent home in the country in connection with the mission. This would be a great boon to many recovering from illness, and a valuable handmaid to the city work.

Help for Working Women.

In November, 1896, the South Metropolitan Union of the N.B.W.T.A. inaugurated its Police Court Mission Department. It obtained the sanction of the magistrates presiding at Lambeth, Greenwich, and Southwark Police Courts, and in the following month missionaries were appointed, and a work was begun the results of which are far-reaching and ever-growing. God has given many signal proofs of his approbation of this undertaking.

The missionaries attend at the police courts in the morning, interviewing the women and girls who are brought there. They spend the remainder of the day in finding situations for some, training homes for others, in restoring wandering girls to their friends, and visiting those who have previously signed the pledge. The only regret is that there is not a lady missionary appointed at every police-court in our land. Experience has shown that the most depraved women are amenable to the loving influence of a sympathetic, large-hearted Christian woman. Hundreds of women have signed the pledge, and many have yielded themselves body and soul to Christ. Changed homes and changed lives bear witness to the loving ministrations of our missionaries.

In order that the work at Greenwich should be still more effective and complete, it was found necessary in March, 1898, to open an intermediate home, where women and girls could be received for a few days before proceeding to permanent homes or situations. It has more than justified its existence; the frequent visits, letters and tokens of gratitude from those who have passed through the home are abundant testimony as to its great usefulness.

The urgency of the need for a home where respectable but poor working women could be received at a small charge has been continuously apparent. The Union has rented a home (140, New Kent Road, S.E.), which for the future will be known as "The House of Help," and has appointed a Christian lady as matron to supervise this work. Lady Henry Somerset has consented, health permitting, to open this home, and to receive purses (containing not less than one guinea) on April 18. Promises of gifts in money, furniture, clothing, &c., will greatly cheer the committee. The hon. treasurer is Mrs. Blomfield, Hillthorpe, Sydenham Hill, S.E. Gifts in kind should be sent direct to the House of Help.

(Mrs.) R. Kemp (Hon. Sec. S.M.U.).

Barnwell Mission, Cambridge.

Special gatherings have been held at the Barnwell Mission, Cambridge, in connection with an Easter visit from two earnest evangelists, the advertisement of whom, as "converted pugilists," brought together large audiences. The meetings were of a vigorous character throughout, and the solemn appeals and solos made a deep impression. The workers were much cheered by several of the hearers professing faith in Christ.

Mr. W. K. Vawser, hon. superintendent of the mission, presided at a tea and public meeting, and remarked, in allusion to some criticisms passed on the printed announcements, that their one desire was to promote the glory of God in the salvation of souls.

Leave was taken of Mr. F. G. Walker, who has for some years laboured in Cambridge with great acceptance, and Mr. Pouncey, the incoming worker, was cordially welcomed. The services of the mission have been maintained in Barnwell Theatre for over twenty years. Cambridge friends and undergraduates, aided by the missionary, have conducted the evangelistic meetings week by week, and much good work has been accomplished.

Scripture Readers for Ireland.

A record of excellent evangelistic work is to be found in the annual report of that useful organisation—the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. Referring to the moral condition of the country, the report observes: "It will, no doubt, be found that in those districts where crime is comparatively less frequent, the Bible is more read. We cannot rely much on the name of any Christian denomination as ensuring moral results; but whatever be the name, if the Bible be largely read, and Scripture readers at work, a higher moral standard will be kept before the minds of the people, while elevating and restraining effects will follow."

The accounts supplied by the Society's district superintendents, as to the value of the Readers' work, are framed in such terms of praise as the following:—"The Reader has faithfully carried out the wise rules of the Society, and has fully observed the instructions for his guidance during the past year. He has carried the message of salvation to many, and spoken it to those who, upon beds of pain and sickness, have found the simple Gospel story the only comfort of their souls. The Reader's consistent walk and daily life commend the one book which he knows and uses, 'The Bible,' to the people amongst whom he labours."

While the agents visit all classes and denominations, they confine themselves to a simple interpretation of the words of the Gospel—a message of love and peace. Itinerant mission work is carried on by special Readers, who distribute many gospel portions, testaments and bibles, and conduct cottage prayer meetings and bible readings. The Society's work is well calculated to reach the end aimed at, and has in fact been greatly owned of God, both among Roman Catholics and nominal Protestants.

Communications may be addressed to the secretary, Captain J. Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin.

Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

The flourishing evangelistic work, so long carried on at Winchester by the devoted Misses Perks, has received a fresh stimulus by the opening of a new hall, entitled "The Soldiers' Welcome." The building occupies an admirable position in the High Street, which was secured after much prayer and persevering toil. The opening services were presided over by Mr. John McCall, who was supported by Mr. Edwards (so long connected with the work) and many representative ministers.

Miss Perks, after alluding to the kindness of the friends who had fitted up the building, said the object in view was to gather in the soldiers and to make them feel that it was indeed a "Welcome." It would be a reading room, writing room, and coffee room; and on Tuesday evenings and Sundays the Gospel would be preached. Miss Perks also referred to the work on the troopships, which was growing every year, and to the social and evangelistic efforts to be made in connection with the forthcoming manœuvres on Salisbury Plain.

Rev. Graham Thwaites, dwelling on the enthusiastic character of the work, said he wanted to give then a word of encouragement in the work they were just starting there, and he did not think he could do better than give them the words from Gen. xxxii. 29, "And He blessed him there." Once convinced of the righteousness of the work, they should go straight on, never minding how many Esaus blocked the way, and in the end they would reap a blessing.

Rev. F. Ehlvers gave a helpful address, and Madame Annie Ryall sang several solos. The gatherings were characterised throughout by heartiness and spirituality.

Christian Police Association.

Christian work has been going on amongst City policemen for over ten years, but has suffered greatly for want of an Institute in which to carry it on. After waiting on the Lord for the last eighteen months, He has given us suitable premises in Sussex Place, 88A, Leadenhall Street, E.C., which Mr. John McCall has consented to open on Monday, April 24 (3 p.m.). Special services will be held each evening during the week at 7 p.m., when a deputation of policemen will witness for Christ.

Just two very interesting cases:—A policeman buried his chum, and God spoke to him at the open grave. He also listened to an open-air preacher, the word going right to his heart, convicting him of sin. On his arrival home, husband and wife surrendered to God, and both are now living testimonies to his saving and keeping power. Another brother had been in a Bishop's service as valet, had attended church regularly, robed his lordship, and heard him preach. But he declares that he had to come into the City of London Police Force to be arrested by Jesus Christ. His wife, too, now rejoices in salvation, and our brother has also led others to the Lord.

We are trusting the Lord to supply all our needs in the furnishing and carrying on the work, and we shall be greatly helped and cheered to be assured that your readers are praying for us. Herbert Leng, Hon. Sec.

The Spurious Sports Bill.—A meeting in support of the Spurious Sports Bill will be held by the "Humanitarian League" at the Westminster Palace Hotel, on Wednesday, May 3, at 3 p.m., Sir William Wedderburn, Bart, M.P., in the chair.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E C.

Daniel.

As you connect Noah with all animals, Abraham with a ram, Joseph with camels, Elisha with a bear, and Balaam with an ass, so you always think of me in connection with a den of lions. That part of my history has, I know, been always intensely interesting to young people, and has invested my name and life with the charm of a romance or Eastern fairy tale. I am sure that you will be pleased to hear an account of my life from my own lips. And as I cannot enter much into particulars, I hope that what you now hear from me will lead you to read with more delight than ever the fuller history of my life and times, as given in the sacred book that bears my name.

I was born in the tribe of Judah towards the close of good Josiah's reign. My early boyhood was spent during the reigns of his two sons Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim. My parents were among the princes of Judah, and they gave me the highest education, religious and secular, possible in my country. When about fourteen years of age, Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, came with his armies against Jerusalem, besieging it and overcoming it. So my king and his kingdom became his servants.

I was, as a lad, considered to have a fine figure and a handsome face, and being of noble if not of royal blood, well grounded in knowledge and alert in mind, I was carried away in triumph as captive to the distant city of Babylon. How sorrowful was that day I cannot tell you children. How would you like to be torn away by foreign soldiers, from parents, home, kindred, and country, and all your daily round of duty and pastime? It was, however, a great comfort to have and capability, and what was better, they had like myself strong religious principles, in which we had been carefully trained at home and at school. As we gave such excellent promise of making able officers in the Palace, we were taken charge of by one of Nebuchadnezzar's chief stewards. We underwent a three years' training in the language and learning of the Chaldeans. We knew that the king's food and wines would be harmful to us, so we would not take them, but lived upon a very simple diet, whereby it was found that we were fairer and fatter and cleverer than others who had partaken of the regular Palace diet. When my long period of training in Babylon was finished, I was found wiser than the magicians and astrologers of the kingdom, and was therefore appointed to a very important and honourable post by Nebuchadnezzar, viz., to stand before the king to do his personal bidding.

THREE COMPANIONS ABOUT MY OWN AGE

The king was greatly troubled by a vision which he had one night. His wisest men could not recall it to his mind, for he had himself forgotten all about it. In his despotism and wrath he ordered their death. I should have been slain among them. I begged the captain to defer the execution of the cruel command. My three companions and myself earnestly prayed the God of Heaven to make the dream known to us. The secret was revealed to me in a night vision. I thanked God, and went to the king. My God made me very fearless and faithful while I told the king all the particulars of his wonderful dream, and what God's meaning of it was.

HE WAS ASTONISHED AND DELIGHTED, and even ordered men to worship me. The lives of all Babylon's wise men were saved, and the king made me a great man, setting me chief among the governors, enriching me with great gifts, and promoting my three godly companions over the affairs of Babylon. As a post of great distinction I sat in the gate of the king.

About thirty years after this, Nebuchadnezzar had another dream which made him much afraid. His most learned men could not tell him the interpretation though he told them the dream itself. But when I heard it, God put its meaning into my heart. But the meaning was such a sad one that I was astonished and sorrowful for an hour. Then I told him plainly and courteously. Directly afterward my interpretation, was fulfilled, and my royal master was driven from his kingdom and ate grass like oxen. God restored him, and then he praised and extolled the King of Heaven. His son, Belshazzar ascended the throne of his father. He was idolatrous, reckless, and drunken. One night he had a great feast where was much wicked merriment and blasphemy. Suddenly he was startled by seeing a hand write some mysterious words upon the painted or sculptured walls of the hall. None of his wise men could read it, and horror seized the king. But the Queen sent for me, and I was able to tell the king that God was ending him and his kingdom. He clothed me with scarlet and put a chain of gold about my neck, and proclaimed that I was

THE THIRD RULER IN THE KINGDOM.

That same night Belshazzar was slain, and Darius the Mede reigned instead. I was made the first president over all the princes. Some were very jealous and tried to kill me. So, because they saw me praying to God three times a day, as was my custom, they induced Darius to put me in the lions' den, which was closed with a heavy stone and sealed with the king's seal. But Darius could not sleep that night. So when he came to the den early in the morning, he found that the lions had not touched me in the least, for God had shut their mouths, and made them more like friends or playmates than foes. So I came out unhurt and very happy, while those who accused me were cast in and at once torn to pieces. God sent me many visions of future days, and sent his great angel Gabriel to tell me that I was greatly beloved of God, and so are you. I lived until Cyrus the Persian monarch ruled the Babylonian kingdom.

C. H. P.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

RULES.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. But no answers can be dealt with which are received later than the Thursday morning following the issue in which the Competition appears.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

A Prize Competition is given the last week of March, June, September, and December. To be eligible every child must have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

Those whose 10th or 18th birthdays occur during the quarter may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age.

All communications must be addressed to the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 171).

DANIEL.

By whom and to whom were the following said? Complete the texts. Give chapter and verse wherever possible.

1. Is thy God . . . . able
2. Your God is a
3. How great are his
4. Break off thy sins
5. Write out the verse which tells what sort of an education Daniel and his companions had.
6. Why was the decree of Darius written? What was the result?
7. Who was the king who saw a hand writing on the wall at his feast?
8. What was the writing and interpretation?
9. Give the three verses (from third chapter) in the first of which Nebuchadnezzar defies the God of Israel, in the second the three youths trust the God of their fathers, and in the third the king acknowledges the God of all the earth.

Children under ten do any four, between ten and thirteen any six.

No. 170.—Correct answers (first list) have been received from:—

A—Zeldah Albert*, Jennie Almond*, Owen* and Arnold* Akers, George and Stewart Arthur.

B—Herbert Braddon, Ethel Barclay, Phyllis Boyd*, Ella Berryman, May* and Daisy Bligh, Marion and Ella Burton, Eleanor Bennett, Gertrude Bush, Kenneth Bewley, Mabel Birney, Emily Bridgewater*.

C—Anna Chanyen, Lily Church* Edith Chevalier*, Augusta Clark, Charlotte Crowe*, Lydia Cleary, Ethel Colgrave, Guy and Oscar Cross, Dorothy Charles, John Colville*, Ida and Mabel Cole, Bessie Cheale*, Nora and Daisy Clarke, Kathleen* and G. Code, Charles and Mabel Candlin.

D—Polognia Daws*, N. Dowsett, Margaret Duke, Kitty and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Hilda, Constance, George and Elizabeth Drayson, Lucy Davidson*, Stanley Drew*, B. Davis, Mary Driscoll*, Agnes and Catherine Darke, Dorothy Daintree.

F—Temperance* and William Foskett, Richard and Laurence Farmer, Marian* and James Freegard, Mabel Fleet, Hyacinthe Fitz-Simons.

G—Olive* and Irene Grandy, Irene and Kathleen* Gough, Dorothy Garfit, Clarice Gale*, Mary Gover, Alice Goad, Alfred*, Ethel, Mary* and Daisy Greenacre, Mary Gimson.

H—Hetty Hill, Willie Hopkins*, Elsie Hatcher*, Ruth Hinder*, Helen and Harcourt Hunter, Beatrice Hastings*, Frances Harding, Willie Hooper, Nellie Hatchett.

J—Betty Jacobs, Agnes*, Emily and Conrad Jones, Ruth Johnson*.

K—Stanley and Max Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Nellie Keeley*, Helen and Elsie Knight*.

L—Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Gertrude Lambert*, Margaret Lee*, Sidney, May, Edward and Henry Law, Blanche Lindup*, Bertie* and Gertie Lockington, Edith and Nellie Lockhart.

M—Kathleen McClure, May Mills, Arabella Mainwaring-Onslow, Barbara and Jack Maconchy, Marion Maran*, Mildred Morgan, Arthur and Evelyn* Moir, Nellie May, Dorothy and Elsie McMullin, Arthur Grace, and Lewis Morice, G. Macdonald.

N—George, Ernest* and Edith Nash*, Valerie and Eleanor Noel, Maude Nottage, Mary Nelligan.

O George O'Beirne.

P—Lizzie Pratt*, Lilian Pearson*, Mary Plumb*, Daisy Phillips, Alice Palmer, Mildred*, Evelyn and Hattie* Peters, Walter, Leonard and Katie* Picknell, Gladys and Ethel Palmer.

R—Kate Rosenbloom*, James Roy, Gwennie Ravenhill, Alice Reid, Ivor Rickers.

S—Mildred* and Gertrude* Scott, F., Amy, and D. Stileman, Cicely Sherbrooke, Maud, Arthur, Sydney, and Janet Speed, Solomon Stockfish, Minnie*, Bessie*, Edith*, Douglas, and Kathleen* Shepherd, Betty Stocks*, Joseph Stephens, Annie Shelley*, Laura Standen*, Ada, Jessie* and Ethel* Snowball, Flora Simmons*, Rosetta, Ivy, and Muriel Sherwin, Philip Southam.

T—Olive Taylor*, Herbert and Frank Tomkins, Theodora Thorn*, Derwent, Peveril, Herbert and A. P. Turnbull, Ruby, Eileen and Florence Tomlinson.

U—Queenie Upton.

V—Rosetta Viccars*.

W—Annie and Sarah Wood*, Florence Wild Dorothy White, Sydney Wisdom, F. Wilson, Digby Watson, Phillis, Noel and Cecile Wright, Emily Watson, Connie Wood, Helen and Frederick Webb, Charles and Amy Wingrave, Myra Webb, Greta Watson*.

FOREIGN LIST.

Correct answers have been received from:—

No. 158—Theodora Guinness*. No. 162—Cuckoo Lister No. 163—Daisy McArthur. No. 164—Dora Wallace, Vera Sjoström, Queenie and Llewellyn Dale. No 165—Dora Wallace, Lottie, Rotha and Ivan St. George. No. 168—Nettie*, Kate* and Willie Thomson.

ANSWERS TO BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 170).

1. Matthew xxvi. 40.
2. Acts xix. 34.
3. Matthew xx. 3.
4. Matthew viii. 13.
5. Matthew xxiv. 36.
6. Matthew xx. 5.
7. John iv. 52.
8. 1 Cor. xv. 30.
9. Matthew xxvii. 45.
10. John i. 39.
11. Matthew xx. 6.
12. John xi. 9.

Personal.

Many thanks for the parcel of blotters received for the soldiers (J.); also for some sweet flowers which have been much appreciated by the sick children in the hospital.

I am glad to welcome so many new members, and also to see a few old "Searchers" beginning again.

Winnie Grove and Evaline Pearson.—Many thanks for your interesting letters. I am always glad to hear of your pets.

Ian McGregor.—Your name and not your sister's is in the correct list.

Rotha St. George.—Many happy returns of your birthday.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Winchester, May 3; Grantham, May 5; Hale, Altrincham, May 6-7; Liverpool, May 7-8; Bolton, May 9; Heaton Chapel, May 11; Manchester, May 12; Smithills, Bolton, May 13-14; Sheffield, May 15; Bradford, May 16; Hereford, May 18; Leominster, May 19; Pershore and neighbourhood, May 20-25; Rev. R. Callender, Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill, to April 26; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Kettering, to April 24; Mr. Hankinson, Underriver, Sevenoaks, April 27-28; Mr. J. Spiers, Corn Exchange, York, May 4-19; Mr. W. H. Wilson, Workington, April 25-29.

Half-yearly Meetings and Conferences of S.U Secretaries.—Hope Hall, Liverpool, May 8 (4 and 7.30); Central Hall, off Deansgate, Bolton, May 9 (7.30); Strangeways Hall, Manchester, May 12 (3 and 6.30); Y.M.C.A. Hall, Sheffield, May 15 (7.30); Church Institute, Bradford, May 16 (7.30).

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending April 22.

Sun., April	16	Psa.	cxxii. 1-9	Thurs., April	20	Psa.	cxxvi. 1-6
Mon., "	17	"	cxxiii. 1-4	Fri., "	21	"	cxxvii. 1-5
Tues., "	18	"	cxxiv. 1-8	Sat., "	22	"	cxxviii. 1-6
Wed., "	19	"	cxxv. 1-5

Personalia.

A drinking fountain has been erected and unveiled at West Norwood as a memorial of the late Mrs. Woodford Fawcett, and the services she rendered in that neighbourhood to the cause of Christianity and temperance.

Many friends of evangelical truth will learn with regret that Miss Cusack has been passing through a season of severe illness, and is still unable to leave her room. She still hopes through God's goodness to be able to help on the Protestant cause by the publication of some lectures suitable for reading at mothers' meetings and other gatherings. Friends may render her great service in this time of her need by purchasing some of her works, all of which are most valuable in view of the present crisis in the Romish controversy. Particulars can be had from Miss Cusack, at 21, Landsdowne Crescent, Leamington.

Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.—The annual report of Mr. Thos. Hogben's evangelistic and social undertakings is a record of good and far-reaching work. The Mission exists chiefly to benefit sailors and time-expired service men and their families. Its work comprises Gospel services, temperance meetings, the gratuitous circulation of books, naval colportage, visitation of ships, hospitals, depôts, and homes, effort, by letter and book, to reach men on foreign service, and many other branches. The mission which is inter-denominational and particularly devoted to spiritual work, is carried on in Romanist and Ritualist districts. Address, Welcome Mission, Edinburgh Road, Portsmouth.

Evangelistic.

Great Assembly Hall.

THE East End of London suffered severely during March from fogs, but despite the fact, the attendances at the services in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall were above the average. This may be accounted for by the very able presentation of the Gospel by Mr. Thos. W. Canning, of the Evangelisation Society, who was the preacher for the month. Mr. Canning is a Scotchman, and his labours are principally confined to the northern land. Sometimes it was doubtful whether some of his audience caught the meaning of his quaint and original sayings, delivered in broad, unmistakable language savouring of his mother tongue. His power in word-painting has never been excelled by any preacher who has occupied the platform of the Great Assembly Hall. He is not unlike Rev. John McNeill in his earnestness, and yet his style is very different and quite his own. He is very quick of speech, and his matter is excellent and well prepared. He begins without any hesitancy, and obtains the ears of his listeners at once, which he keeps to the very end.

Most searching are his addresses, and they appeal strongly to the imagination. Very effective were the incidents with which he illustrated his sermons, and the description of the scenes was so vivid to the mind's eye that you felt you were actually an eye-witness to all he was narrating. It was a most impressive spectacle on Sunday nights to see that immense concourse of persons leaning over the galleries and hanging upon every word that proceeded from the lips of the speaker. Every one felt when he had finished his half-hour address that time had flown too quickly.

Naturally, one's first thought is, Does all this simply mean an exhibition of unique natural ability? No! the after meetings showed that the power of the Holy Ghost was manifested in the solemn and earnest appeals made by Mr. Canning to decide for Christ. Not a night passed but some boldly went into the inquiry room, and on Sundays the workers found plenty of work to do in pointing anxious men and women to Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

Rev. C. W. Yatman has concluded a series of evangelistic services at Honolulu. He preached to the English-speaking people, the native Hawaiians, the Portuguese, the Japanese, and the Chinese.

In a recent letter Rev. E. Payson Hammond says:—"I have reached home from an evangelistic trip of several thousand miles in the far North-West. I have had some remarkable experiences and seen many converted."

Considerable interest has been aroused and much blessing received as the result of a series of addresses bearing on the Second Advent of the Lord Jesus, being given by Pastor William Povey in the Lecture Hall, Hoole, Chester.

Mr. Henry Thorne, after concluding a successful mission at North Shields, visited Newcastle and Gateshead, giving at the latter place an address entitled "From the Stage to the Cross; or, the Story of My Life." On the 5th inst. he gave a temperance address for the "John Ploughman Gospel Temperance Society." Pastor C. B. Sawday occupied the chair.

Mr. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has completed a fortnight's mission at Brill, Buckinghamshire. The meetings were held in the Wesleyan Chapel, and were remarkably well attended. The evangelist's previous work in the neighbourhood had been greatly blessed, and many of the old converts came from the surrounding villages. Great interest was shown throughout the mission.

A five days' mission was conducted at Leighton Buzzard by Pastor John Wilson, of Woolwich. The blessing exceeded the expectations of the most hopeful. The rejoicing on the last night was great, as teachers, wives, and friends realised how fully their prayers had been answered. The pastor, Rev. R. E. Chettleborough, states that the blessing is still going on. Many anxious ones are met with, and the hope is that the fruits may continue to appear.

Rev. D. M. Cameron is at present engaged in a mission in Rafford Free Church, near Forres. A deep interest has been awakened, and a few have professed to have given their hearts to Christ. There are signs of abundant blessing in the North, and believers are earnestly praying that the showers may now be given. The evangelist has been encouraged by meeting in the Auldearn District with not a few who were led to decision during his visit there last autumn, and who are now witnessing for Christ in their daily life.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. Monro Collings.—During April, Haling Road Hall, Croydon.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Apr. 15-24, Bristol; 29-May 8, Sunderland; 13-21, South Croydon.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Apr. 15-24, Woodford; 30-May 8, Windsor; 13-21, Sidcup.

Gipsy Smith.—Apr. 15-24, Swindon; 29-May 8, Bristol; 13-22, Marylebone.

Mr. Geo. Clarke.—Till Apr. 17, Finchley.

Mr. E. P. Telford.—Till Apr. 20, Gainsboro'; 23-May 4, Leeds; 21-28, Bromley.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—Till Apr. 17, Sunderland; May 7-22, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—Till Apr. 20, Canning Town; 23, Stratford; 24, 25, Chester; 26, Bristol; 27, 28, North Wales; 30, Stratford Conference Hall; May 1-5, Dorking.

Mr John Burnham.—Till Apr. 14, Tredegar.

Mr. William Grove.—Till Apr. 24, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

Mr. Jas. Sprunt.—Apr. 16, 23, and Wednesdays in April, Willesden Hall, N.W.; Thursdays, Union Hall, Carlisle Street, N.W.; Apl. 30-May 14, Pulborough; 21-28, Billinghurst.

Mr. Newton Jones.—Till Apr. 17, Netherton (Free Church Council); 22-27, Greenhithe, 29, 30, Ealing; May 7, 8, Chester; 14, 15, Huntingdon; 21, Oxford; 27-29, Bedford.

Rev. F. C. Spurr (Missioner of the Baptist Union).—Till Apr. 17, West Green, Tottenham; Apr. 30-May 7, Onslow Chapel, Brompton, S.W., daily at 3.15 and 8.

Brothers Weaver.—Till Apr. 14, Dumbarton; 16-28, Hamilton; 30-May 2, Langholm.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Apr., Park Hall, Barking.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till Apr. 23, Dundee; Apr. 30-May 12, Banchory.

Mr. John Elliott.—Till Apr. 16, Aller Bridge, North Devon

Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday and Tuesday at 7, and Thursday at 8, Mr. A. C. Burley. Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sunday at 7, Thursday at 8, Mr. P. H. Thompson.

Requests for Prayer.

For a mission to children at St. Peter's Church, Islington, commencing on the 16th inst., to be conducted by Mr. C. Dudley Smith.

For a great blessing upon the Rev. John Brash's visit to Ipswich, April 20.

Fallen Asleep.

At Algiers, Rev. Walter Hook, rector of Porlock, Somerset, and Prebendary of Wells, died on Monday week. He was the eldest surviving son of the late Dean of Chichester.—Councillor Jackson, of Barnsley, an active Wesleyan worker and local preacher, aged fifty-five.—Rev. John Griffiths, aged seventy-one, for thirty-nine years vicar of Mynyddislwyn, Mon.—Rev. R. D. French, vicar of Market Weighton and Rural Dean. By his death the Church has lost an able and devoted clergyman, and the evangelical school one of its staunchest adherents.—Mr. Samuel Brown, for 33 years superintendent of Raunds Wesleyan Sunday school.—By the death of Dr. J. Brunton Regent Square congregation has lost one of its best known worshippers. He was greatly beloved by a wide circle of Presbyterian friends.—In his 68th year, Mr. William Williams. For many years he was one of the leading deacons in North Carnarvonshire, and had for over a quarter of a century been leader of the singing at Gerizim Chapel, Llanfairfechan.—At Maynooth, co. Kildare, Rev. Samuel Patterson, Methodist minister, aged sixty-eight years.—At Timolin, co. Wicklow, Rev. Jno. Twamley, M.A., for forty-eight years rector of Timolin, an earnest worker.—By the death of Rev. D. H. Shankland English Congregationalism in North Wales has lost one of its oldest and most respected ministerial members.—Rev. R. H. Morgan, a prominent Welsh Calvinistic Methodist minister, and secretary to the Bala College Fund, towards which he collected over £20,000.—At Birkenhead, Mr. J. Norris Hunt, who laboured for some years in the London slums, especially during the cholera epidemic of 1848, and was publicly thanked by Lord Shaftesbury. For fifty years he was a Wesleyan local preacher, and for thirty-five years a class leader.—Rev. R. Stevens, of Blyth. He had been in the Wesleyan ministry thirty-two years, and was in his fifty-seventh year.—Mr. J. W. Jameson, who has been associated with Hexham Free Methodist Circuit since its commencement. He was seventy years of age, the senior local preacher of the circuit, and for many years one of the circuit stewards. His wife also died a few days since.

Romanism in French Canada.—Rev. W. M. Roger, deputy of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, lecturing in the Tron Church, Edinburgh, said the party of liberty in the Quebec Province have come to feel their strength and to claim their rights of private judgment, and their growing numbers are in every direction breaking away from the control of the priests, and in too many cases drifting into infidelity. It remains to be seen if the people who owe so much to the open Bible will come to the help of the Canadian Church in saving this province from impending materialism.

Obituary.

MRS. ROUSE.

THIS Christian lady, whose death on the Continent we recently noted, was truly "a succourer of many" during her life, and in this she had the cordial co-operation of her husband, Mr. Robt. James Rouse. They supported and launched in life several families and orphans, besides caring for a host of individual widows and orphans. Preachers of the Gospel, foreign missionaries and workers, and other servants of Christ were freely and hospitably entertained for lengthened periods. For a number of years Mr. and Mrs. Rouse had an iron room erected at their own cost in their grounds at Balham, where many entered on a new life. Quite recently, in her old age, Mrs Rouse managed a Gospel tent during the summer season at Lee. All these efforts for the good of the community, and many more, were maintained in addition to the cares and responsibilities of a numerous family. Her children have arisen up to call her blessed, and they mourn their loss while rejoicing in her gain.

MR. J. A. PEARCE.

On Monday, March 20, Mr. John Alfred Pearce, of Cainscross, Glos., died, and his body was committed to rest by loving hands at Stroud Cemetery on the following Saturday. Mr. Pearce was born at Bath in 1836. His diary for 1853 states that on Sunday, June 12, he was baptised and received into communion at Prince's Street Meeting. After leaving Bath, Mr. Pearce took a business in Cainscross, where he thereafter remained for over thirty years, beloved and respected by all who knew him. His private chests have disclosed some diaries recording many Christ-like acts unknown even to his own family. Three years ago Mr. Pearce was seized with an attack of inflammation of the lungs, which left behind it spasmodic asthma. In September he went to Bournemouth, and returned much recuperated, but the benefit derived was of brief duration. After six days confinement to bed with influenza he passed peacefully away. He leaves a widow and six children.

MRS. SARAH FINN.

A well-known worker in the East End of London has passed away in the person of Mrs. Sarah Finn, at the advanced age of eighty-five. Born in 1814 in Kingsbridge, Devon, she was converted early in life, and was soon actively engaged in Christian work. Later on she removed to Dover, where, after her marriage, she and her husband were engaged in ragged school work, besides visitation amongst soldiers and others, which she continued until the death of her husband. Still later on in life she was much identified with Pyall Diprose in a remarkable revival which took place at that town, where numbers were converted.

Her steps were directed to Clapton, and there she joined Miss Morley in her Bible Class and work amongst women, which helped to prepare her for the chief work of her life, the amelioration of the lot of the outcast poor of our great metropolis. It is twenty-eight years since she commenced this work, by distributing books and tracts amongst the inmates of some of the common lodging-houses in the neighbourhood of Spital-fields. This she continued to do personally week by week, till at last the way was opened up for her to procure a room in Artillery Lane for the purpose of gathering in the people from the surrounding houses.

This work is a striking illustration of what can be accomplished by one who, without any power or wealth of her own, but in simple trust in God, says, "This thing will I do." Many a worker has found the Artillery Lane Mission to be a training ground for service in the regions beyond and the islands of the sea.

MISS HELEN ATTLEE.

The following touching tribute, which is somewhat belated, comes to us from Mr. W. Lethaby, of Aden:—

Christ's earthly church was impoverished and his heavenly choir enriched when, on last

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE Parliamentary vote on Mr. Gedge's resolution regarding lawlessness in the Church of England as voiced in the manifesto of the E.C.U. must have been a rude awakening to the Ritualist party. By it the House of Commons re-affirmed the constitutional principle set at nought in that manifesto, that while the Church is officially related to the State it must be faithful to the conditions of the compact. Only fourteen could be found in the House of Commons to vote against the amended resolution, while 200 voted for it; and among the minority were included the names of the two sons of the Prime Minister. It has been widely acknowledged that the manifesto was a mistake in tactics; it would be more accurate to call it a violation of principle.

Several correspondents express disapproval that we have not taken up a strong position against those who believe that the only remedy in the Ritual crisis lies in disestablishment. We believe that it should be possible to remedy the admitted evils without having recourse to so drastic a measure. If only Evangelical Churchmen would act together resolutely in the matter, something might be done. Nothing will play so much into the hands of the liberationists as division and irresolution among the non-sacerdotalists within the Church.

On the other hand, we cannot share the conviction of our correspondents that disestablishment involves a Godless nation. America has no Established Church, but it is certainly no more Godless than our own land. Indeed, we doubt if there is any institution in any nation which calls forth a more spontaneous and universal recognition of God on the part of the people as the annual National Thanksgiving Day of America.

Last week The Daily Telegraph had a short leader commenting, in its usual cynical fashion, on the reported conversion of J. L. Sullivan, the ex-pugilist, under the preaching of Mr. Moody. This news appears to have come from America by press telegram, and no confirmatory details have yet reached us. We refer to the article in our contemporary in order to correct a serious mis-statement of fact. The writer observes that Mr. Moody "will deeply regret that his late associate, Mr. Ira D. Sankey, did not live to witness his triumph." We are glad to inform The Daily Telegraph that, so far as very recent information goes, Mr. Sankey is alive and in the best of health. We hope our contemporary will find occasion to contradict an announcement which must have caused grief to many of its readers.

Our mournful drink bill is always giving opportunity for the making of calculations and comparisons that ought to produce a great impression upon thinking persons, indeed upon the most careless. Thus it is computed that the average weekly expenditure of working men on drink is six shillings for each family of five persons. If the average earnings be taken as thirty shillings, one-fifth of it is wasted. Were our English consumption of drink reduced to the measure of the American consumption, we should save fifty-seven millions of money yearly, and should still be spending ninety-three millions—a quite sufficient sum. Could we get Britons to be as sober as Americans, the saved money would provide all the means necessary for an Old Age Pensions scheme, and also in less than twenty-two years completely extinguish the National Debt. Surely God will punish our land for its wicked waste.

The reception by the Colonial Secretary of the deputation of the United Committee for the Prevention of the Demoralisation of Native Races by the Liquor Traffic was on the whole eminently favourable. Mr. Chamberlain, on behalf of the Government, avowed himself in complete sympathy with the aims and objects of the movement. From figures supplied by him, it would appear that the consumption of intoxicants in our African dependencies is gradually lessening, instead of increasing, and this decrease would go on at a still greater rate if it were not for the action of other nations, notably of France, whose province of Dahomey is positively "gin-soaked." There is to be a conference at Brussels between the representatives of Germany, France, and this country next week, on the lines of the conference of 1890. The future of the native races will very largely depend on the issue of this interchange of policy. The friends of temperance and missionary enterprise in Africa will look with prayerful anxiety to the result. Even if that proves favourable, it will require all their watchfulness to see that the compact is loyally carried out.

The statement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in announcing his Budget for the coming year, bears witness to the steadily-advancing material progress of the country, and, at the same time, suggests a grave and imminent danger. With an advancing revenue, our national expenditure is advancing at still greater strides, and, instead of a surplus, he anticipated a deficit, which it is proposed to make up from the Sinking Fund. The cause of this perilous situation is the same as has already almost ruined most of the Continental nations. It is militarism—the ever-increasing expenditure on the army and navy. It is clear that the higher reasons for the success of the coming Peace Conference are being reinforced by very strong material reasons. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach spoke hopefully of the issue of that Conference. It is probable that it will either be a great success or a greater failure.

For if the universal preparations for war are not to be lessened, the only alternative within a very measurable period of time seems a vast armed conflict among the nations, whose issue no man can tell. At this crisis in the world's history—and it is one of the greatest and most acute ever known—a vast responsibility rests on those who have the leading hand in shaping the destinies of the nations of the earth. If they seek counsel from the Most High and accept His guidance, there will be some hope that a new era is about to dawn; if they permit themselves to be moved by selfish and short-sighted and material considerations the outlook is dark indeed. This fateful hour calls upon all to wait at the throne of Divine wisdom and power, that the representatives who are about to meet on this great question may be led to use all their powers and influence to further the cause of peace and goodwill among men.

One of the most lamentable results of the experiment in seven-day newspapers is the extra labour laid on child-shoulders. Most of the morning papers are delivered by small boys, and the Sunday editions of the Mail and Telegraph are already adding greatly to the burden of those engaged in work, and increasing the number of the employed. One boy who usually finished his round by ten o'clock, does not now do so till 12.30., whilst he is at work at seven in the morning, instead of eight. Another case is that of a boy who is assisted in the distribution by a younger sister. Up till last week his master had not delivered papers on Sundays, but he has now succumbed to the pressure. As a consequence this boy has been obliged to give up attendance at the Sunday school in the morning, where he had previously gone regularly. In neither case, so far as could be made out, was any extra pay given for the extra labour. The prospect of young lives burdened with seven days' work and impoverished in opportunities of spiritual nurture is one that should appeal to all who have any influence in checking this iniquitous innovation.

It is a very significant fact that while in this country Sunday is gradually losing its distinction as a day of rest, the movement for keeping Sunday more strictly is extending on the continent. In Belgium there are postage stamps with a small portion perforated off, and bearing the words "Not to be delivered on Sunday;" this secures that only urgent letters unconnected with business are delivered on that day. For the same reason in Vienna and Buda Pesth no papers are issued more than six days a week. It is a disgrace to us as a nation that this all-important question seems to be allowed to go by default, while in Roman Catholic countries the tide is setting strongly in the other direction.

Rev. Will. Reason, M.A., in a booklet on "University and Social Settlements," has written some extraordinary words on the place of the public-house in social life, which is the subject of a debate in the April number of the Young Man. Mr. Reason has ventured the following statement:—

> A residence of over six years in the East End has convinced me that if it were possible to close all the public-houses in London at a stroke, we should speedily have an uncontrollable revolution. By serving as centres of social life on the one hand, and on the other by drugging the great mass of undisciplined malcontents into apathy towards their wretched conditions, they prevent this.

Dr. Barnardo has had a far wider experience of East End conditions that Mr. Reason, and he has replied in a paragraph of burning protest:—

All the experience I have gained in the East End leads me to a conclusion exactly opposite to that at which Mr. Reason has arrived. Where the public-houses are thronged, there is more disorder, more crime, more pauperism, and less contentment than in those districts where the public-house exercises less potent sway. No doubt there is a social element in connection with the influence of the public-house. But it exists, where it exists at all, only for a short time, and at a very early stage in the visit of the man who frequents the public. The social jollity of the first half-hour is soon exchanged for a quarrelsome, noisy, and offensive attitude. The passions of the young are inflamed, the evil intentions of the criminal are strengthened and stimulated, while the resources which would have gone to build up a comfortable home, where contentment and family life might be happily enshrined, are squandered in that which brings nought to the buyer but temporary forgetfulness.

Dr. Barnardo's words are likely to represent the real case.

"Servants and Served" is the subject of a thoughtful and wise article, from the pen of the late Mrs. Haweis, in the Contemporary Review. It is full of earnest and helpful advice to mistresses and servants on their mutual duties and obligations. The writer pays a higher compliment to the servant class than is fashionable nowadays. She says that—as a class, they are respectable, worthy, honest, and rarely come on the rates, unless they marry unwisely. They habitually do more for their poor relations than many average sons or daughters dream of doing.

This is profoundly true, as many of our readers can testify from experience. Mrs. Haweis earnestly impresses the duty of more thoughtfulness and consideration on the part of employers, and of faithful performance of duties on servants. We have to come back to the old maxim, "Love is the fulfilling of the law;" and if this were more generally observed we should not hear so much about the decay of domestic service as is customary nowadays. See article on page 11.

In the newly published and thoroughly interesting "Life of Dr. John Thomas, of Liverpool," there is an account of a remarkable sermon, preached by him, a year or two prior to his death, before the Welsh Congregational Union, which is extremely apposite to the present crisis. It was on Resurgent Evils in a country, and the text was from 1 Kings xvi. 34. He took as his divisions:—

(1) It is in times of deep religious declension that these evils reappear in a country. (2) That it is some man of more than usual wickedness that takes the lead in re-introducing ancient sins. (3) That these men who are so bold and presumptuous as to resuscitate evils once overcome, very often spring from old religious families. Finally: The terrible responsibility resting upon those who revive evil habits which the Gospel had once overcome.

This line of thought might be appropriately enforced from every Christian pulpit in the country in view of the widespread decadence of the religious habits of the nation.

The 300th anniversary of the birth of Cromwell, which falls on the 25th instant, is to be celebrated by a demonstration at Huntingdon, where the Protector was born, and a great meeting, under the auspices of the Free Church Federation, is to be held in the City Temple. It was the distinction of Cromwell's theory of the Church of Christ that it must be conceived as spiritual rather than theological, social rather than political, moral not sacerdotal, democratic and not prelatical, united, not in forms and politics, but one in spirit and in service, in faith and hope, in love and fruitfulness.

It is remarkable that a conception of Church life, which has so much in common with the movement among the Free Churches, should have been clearly grasped by the great champion of religious liberty nearly three centuries ago. It has taken a long time to turn this dream into a reality; it will be reserved, indeed, for the twentieth century to bring it to its full development. But the end seems sure.

The promised reduction of fares on the part of railway companies to persons travelling to certain religious gatherings and conventions is now in active operation. Application forms must be printed by the secretaries of the various bodies holding the meetings, and signed by them for the person travelling. It is to be hoped that the conditions laid down by the companies, which are by no means onerous, will be loyally followed by all who intend to avail themselves of this needed and long-delayed privilege. It is a merciful provision, and will enable many who have hitherto been debarred from attending many denominational gatherings on the ground of expense to join in their stimulus and refreshment, so extending their influence among a circle of hard-working Christian people who are in special need of encouragement.

The illusion that Roman Catholics are increasing in the United States at a greater rate than any other religious body is dying very hard, but certain figures drawn from official public statistics by Dr. Dorchester, a recognised authority on ecclesiastical statistics, ought to set the matter finally in a true light. The gain between 1850 and 1870 in the Protestant population of that country was, in round figures, 11,000,000, while that of the Catholics was nearly 3,000,000; while between 1870 and 1890, the increase of the former was 25,000,000. Thus, while in the one period the Protestant gain was four times as much as the Catholic, during the second period it was more than eight times as much. These figures are all the more significant when we remember that the increase in the Roman Catholic population is due far more to immigration than to any other cause, and if this fact is fairly estimated it will be seen that in the free air of the United States there is an enormous leakage from the ranks of Catholicism year by year.

In spite of the cry of the poverty-stricken and overburdened parson, the annual report of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, just published, gives abundant proof of the fact that the Church of England is not only the richest Church in the world, but that its wealth is constantly increasing, as may be seen that the commissioners are able to appropriate for the current year a sum of £185,000 for the augmentation of benefices. The secret of the poverty that afflicts so many livings in the Church is the unequal distribution of this wealth, which leaves so many hard-working clergymen with a pittance on which it is scarcely possible to keep body and soul together, while there are empty City churches with incomes of £1,000 and upwards attached to them.

Dr. Fairbairn during his recent visit to India made careful observation of the character of missionary work in that country. His estimate of its value is seen in a letter which he addressed to a cultured Hindu of Calcutta:—

Of the missionaries and their work, of their noble service to India, of the remarkable variety of their activities, and the astonishing efficiency of most of their agencies, I will not trust myself to speak, lest I be suspected of falling into extravagance. But I may simply state that the sight of their achievements sends me home a happier and more hopeful man than I was when I came.

Dr. Fairbairn's well-known independence of character and judgment gives additional weight to this testimony, which is indeed the testimony of all impartial and accurate observers. The detractors of missions, who were so numerous but a few years ago, are now few and far between. Even the dilettante traveller who skims over the earth like a swallow has opened his eyes a little to the extraordinary influence exerted by missionary influence all over the world. Few books of travel are now written without some kindly reference to the noble band who are preaching Christ in the dark places of the world.

The recent successful experiments in wireless telegraphy have demonstrated the independence of the electric fluid of special connections between the transmitting and receiving centres. Is there not a parallel to this in the spiritual life? It is an essential doctrine of the New Testament that Jesus Christ has done away with the need of all human intermediaries between the soul and the Father. This indeed is the special message of the Epistle to the Hebrews as has been strikingly shown in Dr. Bruce's recent volume on that book. The utter freedom of the soul in its access to God, without the intervention of priest or ritual or sacrament, has been secured to us through the sacrifice and priesthood of Christ. It is of the utmost importance in view of the recrudescence of Romanist views to preach this truth. It is even more important to practise it.

It does not appear to be generally known that the Revised Version of the Bible can now be obtained with references, a help and convenience that no Bible reader can dispense with. In reading the R.V. as originally published, there was always a sense of something wanting, but now the want is supplied, and in a more copious manner than before, e.g., in the first fourteen verses of John i. there are eighty-one references in the R.V. as against sixty in the A.V. Even the marginal renderings, so interesting and so suggestive, have their parallels marked. Parallelism of thought as well as of words is also indicated. The wisdom of including the Apocrypha will, however, be questioned by many, as tending to lead readers to the Popish and erroneous versions of the Scriptures. Would that there were an amount of time and care given to the reading of the Bible corresponding to the painstaking, diligent care devoted by scholars to its elucidation.

Dr. Bruce points out in his "Epistle to the Hebrews" that in that book the two words true and heavenly are synonyms. "Whatever is 'true' is heavenly—belongs to the upper world of realities; and whatever belongs to that upper world is true and real." Thus we read, "We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." And again: "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." This is only another rendering of the phrase: "The things which are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal." A wider recognition of this truth would lead to less eagerness for this world's good, and a corresponding increase of desire to possess the invisible heavenly substance.

With Good-will Doing Service.

Thoughts for Employers and Employes.

THESE are days of progress, we are told, and there can be no question that in some ways the condition of the people has changed, and changed for the better. The increase of intelligence and education, the wide spread of good and cheaper literature, have broken down some of those barriers between man and man which were dependent upon a continuance of the ignorance which made them possible at first.

There is to-day a wider area of common ground upon which we meet, and though certain differences are bound to exist, yet common interests and common sympathies are more widely recognised.

The question arises, Are men really happier and better under the new conditions than under the old? It seems at first as if the answer must be "yes." But as one ponders the meaning of modern upheavals of society, the unrest and tension, and especially the oft-recurring and devastating strikes which create so much ill-feeling and induce so large a degree of mutual distrust and misery, what can one say?

Are not such troubles—and the memory is yet so fresh—a new proof of what has been often proved before: that education, literature, intelligence, and greater independence are not able, in themselves, to confer happiness? Are we not driven back for a solution of this section of life's problems to the direct teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ?

An observance on both sides of the Golden Rule, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise" (Luke vi. 31) would do more to conciliate and restore peace and national prosperity than any number of agitations, meetings, deputations and resolutions can do. The grace of God and are the only things which can make us truly happy or prosperous, whether personally or nationally. Even as regards "the life that now is" it is true, though we too often forget it, that "Godliness" is profitable. Perhaps the Scriptural injunctions to masters and servants are amongst those parts of the Bible to which the least attention is paid. In fact, it may be noticed that, both in public and in private, there is a marked tendency to read the doctrinal parts of the Epistles rather than the chapters which deal chiefly with practical matters of every-day life. Pure doctrine lies at the root of pure practice. We plead that more earnest heed and more actual and practical authority should be given to those words of the Holy Spirit which guide as to life's every-day concerns and relationships. "He taught them as one having authority" (Matt. vii. 29). Happy those to whom the teaching of Christ on every possible matter still comes "with authority."

OBEDIENCE TO HIS LAW OF LOVE

With all our vaunted progress, have we, after all, greatly outrun, as regards the relationship of employers and employed, the great Bible examples? Are there many instances, in modern days, for example, in which the well-placed confidence of Abraham in the faithful Eliezer has been eclipsed? The annals of mistress and maid could bring before us few more striking and suggestive scenes than that depicted in Gen. xxxv. 8. The burying of the old nurse of Rebekah by the sons and grandsons of her former mistress, on their travels, is here briefly drawn, but graphically. The place was called "The Oak of Weeping;" that meant something beyond mere superannuation, surely! It was Joseph's faithfulness as a servant which was one of the means used by God for his own future exaltation and the succour of his nation. Naaman the Syrian was singularly happy in his servants, and his ready acceptance of advice, as well as remonstrance, indicates a noble trait in the character of one who, in those far distant days, must have been a wise and reasonable master. The Book of Nehemiah, too, testifies to conciliatory relationships between master and man which might well be copied.

Of the New Testiment instances, perhaps the history recorded in Luke vii. 1-10 is one of the most striking of all. It is said of the servant (slave) of the centurion that he "was dear unto him"—an expression the strength of which is such, that it would have to be used very guardedly in these and of vaunted "brotherhood." Too often the question of wages on one hand and their full equivalent on the other is made the consideration. There must have been something more than "eye-service" behind a statement like this, "who was dear unto him"; an expression still more striking, when we remember the cruel and rigorous rule of too many Roman masters in those days, who regarded their slaves (bought and sold) as mere chattels.

DAYS OF GREATER ENLIGHTENMENT

There are servants still of whom it could be truthfully said that they have made themselves "dear" unto their employers, but they are not numerous. There are masters, too, with regard to whom the old-time devotion of the willing bond-slave would, under similar circumstances, still find suitable utterance in the old-time resolve, "I love my master; I will not go out free." But perhaps such masters are rare. How little real affection exists in too many cases is demonstrated by the fact that in a variety of ways the "labour question" is one of the most perplexing and painful problems of the day.

If we take now what may seem the simplest instance of this complex difficulty, it will be admitted that in many a house is the chief worry and anxiety of the mistress. How often the comfort (or discomfort) of a home may be approximately gauged by the manner and appearance of the maid who answers the door!

THE DIFFICULTY WITH A DOMESTIC SERVANT

Ill-temper, discontent, love of change, self-seeking—these are the factors which spread a gloom on the whole house. Even where the work itself is satisfactory, is it not often marred by these things?

In one case known to the writer, a valued servant, and one who really valued her situation, contrived, all the same, to keep the house in a state of unrest and unhappiness by a mania for "giving warning to leave." When at length she actually did leave with tears and lamentation, it was because, even according to her own reckoning, she had "given notice twenty-nine times!" What a model of patience and long-suffering her mistress must have been!

If the centurion's servant had shown that feverish restlessness and ill-temper which in modern days find vent in the habit of "giving notice;" if he had been addicted to slamming doors, or when the "Do this" of his master referred to some duty a little outside the ordinary day's work, he might still have been a valuable servant, but we question if he would have been "dear unto him."

SHOWING SULLEN DISPLEASURE

Nor is the fault wholly on one side. We know, unhappily, that there are masters, honoured far and wide, but dishonoured in their own homes. Proverbially "no man is a hero to his valet," but why he should not be is a curious question.

There are mistresses, alas, who, though prominent in philanthropic work for the stranger and the outcast (and rightly so), are lacking in regard to care for the temptations of those under their own roof. A little real consideration and kindness from the mistress, go a long way in the direction of making good servants. Long years will not efface the remembrance of one act of a lady of high rank, who, seeing her young housemaid suffering under the weight of a heavy can of water required upstairs, undertook that part of the work herself until the girl had gained strength.

The bright and beautiful young ladies of another stately mansion insisted on packing, cording, and themselves carrying downstairs the box of a trusted servant who was leaving for her marriage. By acts like these the true womanhood of woman is crowned and dignified! Why so unusual, when the remembrance might lend brightness to a life obscure and prosaic? What we plead for, however, is rather a general habit of Christian kindliness and consideration on both sides. This would lift the relations of both to a higher level, and would surely be worth while if, in any degree, it superseded the present strained conditions of service.

Above all, it would be well pleasing to Him who has laid down rules for the guidance of masters and servants—rules which cannot, on either side, be broken with impunity. What education and civilisation have failed to finish, would accomplish. Is it not time that this should be fairly tried? With the servant the all-constraining consideration should be "As to the Lord, and not to men" (Eph. vi 7); masters have simply to remember, "Your Master also is in heaven" (Eph. vi 9).

GOD'S ETERNAL LAW OF LOVE

Whilst this applies to every part of the double duty of employers and servants, even the most trivial, it is, most of all, the Godward responsibilities which are the greatest of all. It is this aspect of their love for their master which gave to the service of Naaman's servants its highest significance. In the case of the centurion, the bringing of his sick servant's need to the Lord Jesus was at once the greatest proof of this affection and the act which immortalised it. Our service for each other, be the character of that service what it may, falls short of its noblest meaning and its highest possibilities if it lacks the element of intercession, and if it leads not to spiritual edification.

"For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer,
Both for themselves and those who call them friend!
For so the whole round world is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God."

And although it is not possible to anticipate a time when the distinction between master and servant shall have ceased to be—nothing would be gained by such a change—yet the advantage is not wholly and necessarily on the side of the master, even if it may seem at first sight to be so. In reality, the true nobility of any service or any position consists in the motive which underlies it.

"Who sweeps a room as for thy laws,
Makes that and the action fine."

Nor let us ever forget the often overlooked pre-eminence given in the New Testament to the place of lowly ministry, nor forget either that it was the Supremely Great who said "I am among you as He that serveth," and "Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant" (Matt. xx. 27).

LUCY A. BENNETT.

The Modern Sermon.

By a Minister.

DURING a recent period of rest I heard twenty sermons. They were preached by different ministers, one of whom was a student from a London college. Each sermon had been carefully prepared by the preacher. Most of them were read from manuscript. The themes were well thought out, and all were useful, interesting, and Christian. But I was greatly pained by the fact that in not more than three of these twenty sermons was there any attempt at, or any approach to, a clear statement of the Gospel way of salvation by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Nor was there any reference to the necessity of conversion, nor to the work of the Holy Spirit, so that if a sinner had come to listen to any or all of these seventeen sermons, desiring to know how he could be saved, he would not have been instructed.

Is this a state of things that justifies optimistic views of our ministry? Does it not rather call for misgiving and serious inquiry? Should our sermons be of this character? Are they not on this account shorn of their real power? Can we expect conversions while this is the case?

John Angell James, in his most earnest and spiritual introduction to "A Pastor's Sketches" of the late Dr. Spencer, says:—"In all preaching there should be a prevalence of the converting element—i.e., of truths, and the manner of treating them, which are likely to rouse the hearer to the state of his soul; to show him his state as a sinner; to awaken a deep solicitude for his eternal welfare by convincing him of his danger; to make him feel the necessity of repentance and faith, and to urge him to flee without delay to Christ for salvation. Almost any truth of the Bible may be so handled as to lead to this." Is not this true? Why then are our sermons so often destitute of this element? That this is their character is readily confessed by our best friends.

I was one of a group of ministers a short time since. We were speaking about the present-day pulpit. One of our company said, "How is it that there is scarcely ever any earnest pleading with sinners for conversion now? One seldom hears it." There was silence; all felt it was so. There is very little in the sermons we now hear to convince of sin and to lead to genuine repentance and conversion. Yet that should be the prominent aim of our sermons. I think it is William Law who says: "Nothing can do good, or should be used by us in preaching or worship, that has not in it a redeeming virtue." There is need for earnest prayer that our ministers may get back to more rousing, convincing, converting Gospel preaching. J. A. M. B.

Pastoral Unfaithfulness.—If a man should speak fire, blood and smoke; if flames should come out of his mouth instead of words; if he had a voice like thunder and an eye like lightning, he could not sufficiently represent the dreadful account that an unfaithful pastor shall make.—St. Chrysostom.

Westward Ho!—A party of about sixty young emigrants from Mr. Fegan's Homes left St. Pancras Station last week en route to Canada by s.s. Dominion. A pleasing feature was the presence of a widow with her two daughters going out to join her two sons who have passed through Mr. Fegan's Homes, and the elder of whom has not only sent home the money to bring out his mother and sisters, but has furnished a home ready to receive them. It is a striking proof of the prosperity of "Mr. Fegan's boys" in Canada, and of their gratitude for the kindness shown them, that they have voluntarily contributed out of their own earnings more than £2,000 towards the support of their "old home" during the last ten years.

The Ascent through Christ.

IN the world as it is, moral and spiritual advancement are conditioned upon the operation of an energy specifically Divine. If this is admitted, a still bolder proposition will not be questioned:—Man in his totality—spirit and soul and body—is subject to superhuman power and amenable to the ennobling influences of heaven; hence, in his entire being, he may realise "the Ascent through Christ." The title of Mr. Griffith-Jones's book* strikes us at the outset as a parabolic definition of Christian experience, both as regards the life that now is and that which is to come.

The redemption of the race and the salvation of the individual must alike be traced to Christ and his work. He who said, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world," gives a like victory through faith to those who love and serve Him. The strong Son of God is without peer or rival in the work of raising men and women from the mire and clay and setting their feet upon the rock; and at length He exalts them to the blissful society of heaven. He who shares with his Father the glory of times eternal will in due course say to those who lovingly admit Him unto their lives, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." "Ascent" is by as well as through Christ; and it is at once a grand present experience and a blessed expectation in the life to come.

The author's purpose in the book before us is not to point out happy analogies, doubtless as stimulating to him as to the typical Christian mystic; but, as the secondary title of his volume shows, to study in the light of the theory of Evolution. The work involves a degree of speculation such as we are instinctively disposed to distrust; but we have nevertheless read the pages with a certain sympathy and deep interest. Whole classes of Christian readers will have no patience with Mr. Jones's views: others will own that the subject has no attraction for them. Let this be as it may, the book affords ample evidence of thought and candour, also of wide and purposeful reading. Books on Evolution are a great host, and to make them seems comparatively easy; but to apply the theory to Christian doctrine was a daring and difficult thing, and in this particular Mr. Jones's work occupies a place by itself. Some may be helped by a study of spiritual truths and problems expressed in the terms of science and philosophy; for ourselves, the exercise is more exciting to the mind than profitable to the spirit.

THE DOCTRINE OF REDEMPTION

This work makes no profession to be a treatise in systematic theology, nor yet an attempt to reconstruct the entire contents of the Christian faith

ON AN EVOLUTIONARY BASIS.

Confining himself to spiritual facts which cluster round the mystery of Divine Redemption, viewed in the light of the great principle of Development, Mr. Jones writes especially for the assistance of any who may be in a position of unsettlement such as he experienced some years ago. He was then compelled to reconsider historic beliefs in the light of modern thought; and at length he emerged from the quest close to the point from which he had entered; but, as he tells us, on higher ground, and with an ampler and clearer outlook on both faith and life. He is to be congratulated upon the issue of his adventure; many good men have lost their parchment roll of Christian assurance through making excursion into Evolution Arbour.

The results of Mr. Jones's thought and study are the substantial message of his book. The subjects include:—Sin, the Fall, and Death; the Person of Christ, His Atoning Death and Resurrection, and the New Life in Him; the Ideal Man and the Man that is to be. Other questions and problems of supreme interest and importance also come in for consideration. Needless to say, Mr. Jones has a controversy with the materialistic school of Evolutionists as well as with those who renounce the fashionable theory and all its kindred. Where Evolutionist doctors disagree, who shall decide? While Principal Dawson sees nothing in the geological story to throw doubt on the plain and obvious teaching of Scripture that death came into our humanity through sin, we can assent to no statement to the contrary without expert corroboration conclusive beyond question. Again, in these days when the inductive method is followed with such cavalier disregard of consequences, it is refreshing to come across such a serious endeavour as this to show the substantial though we cannot pretend to endorse the result. There is, in our judgment, a great gulf between the ideas of the early chapters of Genesis and those of modern Evolutionary anthropology; and no spider's web of harmonistic accommodation will bridge the chasm.

AGREEMENT OF SCRIPTURE AND PHILOSOPHY;

In an eloquent chapter on the purpose of the Incarnation, Mr. Jones writes:—

> Merely to check the downward process in human nature would not be a complete salvation. To stop that is only to bring man back to the point at which he diverged from the true line of his spiritual development. Scarcely is it even that; for the consciousness of failure and of lost opportunity lies heavy on man's mind and conscience, and he yearns for that which will enable him to turn this sense of defeat and bafflement into a sense of victory. He has also in him an instinct of development. He is not satisfied, once the remedial process is commenced, merely to go back to the point at which he parted with his higher evolution; his face is towards the future and not the past; and having cast off the "brute inheritance" and the fallen nature, he looks for the perfect redemption of his whole being. And there are abundant passages in the New Testament, more particularly in the writings of St. Paul, which speak of the New Life as a growth, a true development, in both the individual and the race. 'The old sin-consciousness having been erased through the atoning sacrifice of Christ, and the believer having accepted that as the ground of his justification before God, he is henceforth under the dominance of the Holy Spirit, who not only leads him into all truth, but is a vital atmosphere around his soul, cherishing all its upward tendencies, helping it to wrestle with all hindering evil influences, and drawing forth the slumbering forces of his nature that make for righteousness and holiness of life.

In the enjoyment of "the Ascent" the human mind will soar; and heavenly and earthly things will ever and anon be combined "as apples of gold in baskets of silver." The doctrine of Redemption is the gold of this book; the theory of Evolution may be the silver. The versatile writer would assuredly not wish any other view to be taken of his work. It is excusable to admire the fair filagree of the philosophic basket, but we are compelled in the end to declare that the construction is too frail to comport the precious treasure of Divine truth.

* The Ascent through Christ. A Study of the Doctrine of Redemption in the light of the Theory of Evolution. By Rev. E. Griffith Jones, B.A. (7s. 6d. James Bowden.) Walking with Jesus.

(Luke xxiv. 13-35).

Draw near to us, as on life's winding way
Our path we take; and through the busy day
Constant abide. The toilsome hours beguile
With words of love, and cheer them with thy smile.

Abide with us, the evening hour is nigh;
The shadows creep across the darkening sky.
Weary with earthly toil and earthly strife,
Draw near and break to us the Bread of Life.

Reveal the glorious vision of thy Face,
The Father's likeness, full of truth and grace;
Ope our dim eyes to view, across the night,
The breaking dawn of endless life and light.

Thou, veiled in flesh and veiled in written Word;
Thou, Word of God! make Thyself seen and heard
By our dull eyes and ears. 'Tis even so;
The veil is rent, a risen Christ we know.

Eversley Reid.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 23. Deuteronomy xxix.

THE chapter of the Covenant! This was a second and supplementary covenant; an appendix to that which had been arranged at Sinai. Always in life we may come into deeper and yet deeper views of the obligations under which we lie to God, and of the claims which He has upon us. The measure of consecration in the young man is not adequate for his life when it has opened into maturity and old age. As the area and surface of our life grow, we must push the palings of its enclosure for God further back.

How often we see what the Lord is doing, and yet have not the heart to know and perceive its inner meaning (2-4)! It is for this reason, doubtless, that the Psalmist is so frequent with the prayer for teaching and understanding. Moses has reviewed the past history of God's dealings with his people beneath the light of inspiration, and now uses the wonderful story as an argument for deeper consecration. With us, also, as the Divine dealings pass in review, in those hair-breadth escapes, those marvellous interpositions, those thoughtful arrangements which turned out to be the best that could have been desired, though we dreaded them at the time, we find the most potent persuasives to present ourselves living sacrifices to God, which is our reasonable service.

It is only thus that we can have peace (19). We may think that peace is compatible with lawlessness and self-indulgence, and that we may obtain it in the opulence and security of our circumstances; but we shall experience a terrible awakening. The secret of blessedness lies in obedience, devotion, humility, and faith. Only in strict conformity to the Divine covenant can the soul reach its consummation and bliss. And to such conformity Jesus waits to bring us by his Spirit.

MONDAY, April 24. Deuteronomy xxx.

How moving it must have been to have heard Moses pleading thus. The strong man bowed with strong emotion, the aged law-giver beseeching as in God's stead. Surely the listening crowds, against whom he called heaven and earth to witness, must have been bowed as corn under the touch of the wind. The chapter falls into three divisions.

Invitations to Return (1-10). Some of us would never have come to God had it not been for our bitter sorrow, amid which we called to mind words heard long before, and which wooed us back to the God of our fathers. There is great comfort in that fourth verse—for those whose sons or friends are still in the far country; for it promises that from thence God will gather and fetch them. Oh, cherish and appropriate these precious promises! That God will circumcise the heart of our seed, will make us plenteous in fruitfulness, and will rejoice over us for good. In comparison with blessings like these, what has the world to offer?

The Nearness of God (11-14). We are often tempted to think that heaven only touches earth at the horizon of the past or future. We are disposed to climb to heaven or cross the seas of time to reach it. But there is no need. God is not more in heaven than He is on earth. The Spirit was not more mighty in the Upper Room than He is beside thee now. Jesus lives and loves as at the hour when He gave his life a ransom for thy soul.

A Momentous Choice (15-20). Choose life. Cleave unto God. Love the Lord thy God, and obey his voice. This is life and length of days, and the secret of permanence. So shalt thou dwell in the land of promise, the days of which are days of summer, of satisfaction, and of security.

TUESDAY, April 25. Deuteronomy xxxi.

This chapter, on Joshua's appointment and charge, is a link between the setting and the rising sun. How pathetic and solemn! The tints of evening and the flush of morning mingle on the same sky in the land of the midnight sun; and on this sacred page God buries his workers, but carries on his work. We are none of us indispensable to Him. A Moses is succeeded by a Joshua, a Stephen by a Paul. When the old oak is stricken to the ground by the storm, the young sapling arises to fill its place. Perhaps it would have been altogether stifled and stunted if the monarch had not been removed. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the Word of our God shall stand for ever."

In the old Greek race the exhausted runner handed on the torch to another hand to bear it forward; so Moses to Joshua, and Paul to Timothy. How strong the reassurance, which the aged law-giver gave to his successor! After all, he was to be little more than the figure-head of a Divine interposition. God was going over before him; God would destroy all foes; God would accompany him and deliver the land into his possession. Oh, why will not Christian workers learn to stand still, and let God work for them while they follow in his wake?

The chapter closes with sad anticipations of Israel's defection and backsliding. God knew all about the sin of coming days before He set his heart upon them. The worst could not take Him by surprise. But in spite of all, for their fathers' sake and for his covenant's sake, He would not abandon them. Canst thou not apply that lesson to thyself?

WEDNESDAY, April 26. Deuteronomy xxxii.

The Song of Moses, like the fabled song of the swan, was his last and sweetest. It is a mine of wealth, and it is remarkable to discover how largely it coloured the thoughts and speech of coming generations. To look up the references made to it in the subsequent scriptures, will show to how large an extent it entered into the very fabric of the national life.

In its earlier portion it is extremely tender and gentle, showing, by the use of natural images, how gracious were God's dealings with his chosen people. They were his portion, the apple of his eye, borne as young eaglets by the strong pinions of the mother bird, provided with the wealth of the earth. We may appropriate all these, because by faith we are the children of Abraham, and are included in the family and household of God.

Let us be warned also by the terrible judgments that overtake backsliding and wilful sin. The greatness of our privileges will be the measure of the anguish of our doom. Capernaum, which was exalted to Heaven by her privileges, was cast down to Hades for her neglect. The love that loves most fervently is the intensest fire when it turns to jealousy. O soul, thou mayest well fear to turn away from God, if thou hast been the favoured object of his affection. When a fire is kindled in his anger, it burns to the lowest pit.

But notice those closing words. The Lord will repent Himself for his people, not for their sakes only, but for his holy Name, and because of his eternal covenant. He may terribly avenge thy sin, but He can never cease to love thee.

THURSDAY, April 27. Deuteronomy xxxiii.

The blessing of Moses, which is the theme of this chapter, is crowded with precious words, which we may appropriate. He said on one occasion, "A Prophet shall the Lord raise up unto you like unto me." We know well to whom he referred; and we may infer that as the great lawgiver pronounced such blessings on his people, much more will the Greater than he, who is a son over his own house, spread his hands in blessing over our heads, and pronounce to us also these and similar promises.

To know that as his saints we are in his hand; to be told that we may still have our Urim and Thummim, of counsel and guidance; to learn that the beloved of the Lord may dwell all day between his shoulders, and be covered by his feathers; to be informed of all the precious things which are ours in Christ; to be assured that our day shall never be greater than our strength; to realise that God is our eternal home, that underneath our dizzy steps there are everlasting arms; and that God will thrust out our enemies before us—these are jewels indeed which flash and gleam through the ages for the enrichment and enlightening of souls. Speak them over again to us, thou High Priest and Apostle of our profession.

FRIDAY, April 28. Deuteronomy xxxiv.

The death of Moses may well have a chapter to itself.

Notice the inimitable beauty of the final scene. The majestic withdrawal of the illustrious law-giver from the sphere of his glorious ministry, as he went up, doubtless in the view of all the people, from the plains of Moab; the panorama that burst on his view, for his eyes had not waxed dim; the Lord's unfolding of the scene as He showed him all the land; the Lord's affirmation of the accomplishment of His promises: "This is the land which I sware;" and the Lord's kiss, beneath which the spirit passed rapturously unto his presence.

Note, too, the dispensational truth contained herein. Moses is the representative of the holy law of God, of which the eye never waxes dim, nor does its natural force abate. But the law can never lead the soul into the rest of God, nor give victory over the hosts of wicked spirits in the heavenly places. Moses must give place to Joshua, and the dispensation of law to the grace and truth of the Gospel, not only for nations, but for souls.

Also, ponder that sublime epitaph which the Spirit of God puts on the life-work of his faithful servant. There is the divine fellowship of his inner life, "face to face;" his Divine mission, which the Lord sent him to do;" and his divine credentials, "in all that mighty hand." May these be ours! His grave was hidden, that it might not be the object of superstition; but his epitaph is written large that we may emulate it.

SATURDAY, April 29. Joshua i.

This may be called the Be strong chapter, because it rings throughout with that message like a clarion call. God says it in three different verses, and it is taken up and uttered from the lips of the tribes (6, 7, 9, and 16). When we are stepping out on a new work for God, we need to be strengthened with his Spirit in the inner man, else we shall never dare to carry out his biddings when they seem, as in the case of the passage of the Jordan and the capture of Jericho, to conflict with the ordinary judgments and practices of our fellows. And when we are about to match ourselves against our spiritual foes, which are to us what the Canaanites were to Israel, we must be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might (Eph. vi. 10).

These are among the many lessons to be learnt:—(1) That the man who has served as minister to another is the best to act as leader and commander. Obedience is the apprenticeship of control; they who are most completely under authority are most able to say, "Go," "come," or "do this." (2) That faith has a claiming power: she puts down her foot on the enemies' territory, and says, This shall be for God, and she takes it for Him in possession before she actually occupies it. Let us claim the world for Christ. Let us claim for Him also the unsanctified tracts of our own characters. (3) God cannot fail those whom He thrusts forth into great responsibilities and enterprises. It is not his way to bid a man take up a position under the heavy fire of the enemy, and then withdraw from him, leaving him to his fate. (4) The Word of God is the source of strength and direction, but it must be the theme of our constant meditation. (5) When a man is right with God, he has power over men. They will do as we say, if only the Lord be with us, as he was with Moses.

Mechanical v. Spiritual.

Rev. W. H. AITKEN on the CHURCH CRISIS.

A VERY weighty and welcome contribution to the present discussion on Ritualism in the Established Church of England has been made by the experienced missioner, Rev. W. Hay Aitken. Written originally in the form of a letter to The Record, it has been revised and enlarged, and is issued by Messrs. J. F. Shaw and Co. as a penny pamphlet, in which shape it ought to have a world-wide circulation. It contrasts what the author aptly calls the "mechanical" and the "spiritual" conceptions of the Christian religion, and does this in such a clear, powerful, and convincing way that it seems impossible any candid mind can refuse acquiescence in the positions taken up.

While admitting that many upholders of Ritualism are good and spiritually-minded men, he shows that their superstitious devotion to ritual of the mechanical sort is utterly inconsistent with and subversive of the true spiritual theory of the Church of Jesus Christ. One or two extracts will illustrate the character of Mr. Aitken's deliverance, which is as timely as it is powerful. We hope our readers, though they may not in every respect agree even with the author's view of "sacramental" doctrine, will help in extending the influence which his pamphlet must exercise.

THE THEORY DEFINED.

"Let us get clearly into our minds what we mean by a mechanical theory. The best illustration of it is to be found in ancient and mediæval notions of art magic. The magician held that certain mysterious forces, whether divine or infernal, could be liberated, or constrained, to act in a certain particular way, by the use of certain incantations, and the employment of certain signs, or of combinations of physical substances. Supernatural and quasi-spiritual results were regarded as dependent upon purely mechanical conditions. Such a theory of the relation of the supernatural to the mechanical is what is usually meant by the word superstition.

"Now it seems to me that it is a view of Christianity analogous to this that is being taught in scores and hundreds of our pulpits to-day, with the most fatal results as to the spirituality of those who are affected by this teaching. Let me state this theory of Christianity in the baldest possible way, so that we may the more clearly get at the truth. Nothing would please me better than to find that, when exposed in its nakedness, it is absolutely repudiated by spiritually-minded Ritualists; but, if they do repudiate it, they will, I think, have to repudiate a great deal of which they now seem very tenacious.

"The theory assumes that God has been pleased to attach the powers of the Holy Ghost to certain mechanical acts accompanied by the recital of particular formulæ, so as to produce consequences of a distinctly supernatural order, whenever these mechanical conditions are complied with.

"The foundation on which the whole ritualistic system rests is the dogma of than which no fancy of the magician can be more rigorously mechanical. Upon this assumption, neither proved nor provable, the whole fabric is built; and, if it prove baseless, equally baseless is the whole system that it supports.

'APOSTOLICAL SUCCESSION';

"According to this theory the continuous existence of the Church through the ages is dependent upon an act of manual contact. It is assumed that the laying on of the hands of the Apostles upon the heads of their supposed successors, together with the recitation of certain words (what words no man can say), necessarily conveyed the Holy Spirit to those successors, whatever their character, so that they then and there became the repositories of certain supernatural powers which they, and they only, could in their turn transmit to their successors.

"Chief amongst these is the 'miracle of the altar,' the capacity to work which is dependent merely on this mechanical operation. So it comes to this, that the right and capacity to work the most stupendous miracle that the mind of man can conceive (indeed, I do not myself believe that the mind of man can conceive it), i.e., the reproduction of the body and blood of Christ on the altar, may be imparted to an utterly profane and godless priest by an equally unspiritual bishop, simply by a mechanical act.

"It may be as well to recall in passing that there was a time when the great majority of so-called Christian bishops were avowed Arians, and denied the Godhead of Christ. We must therefore believe that, in response to a merely mechanical act, the Holy Spirit was given to men who did not believe in Christ as God, to enable them to reproduce on the altar a Christ that they did not believe in.

"This theory un churches the entire Protestant population of Germany and of France, and about thirty-eight-fortieths of the Protestant population of America. Nearer home almost the entire population of Scotland, perhaps the most religious country in the world, while it recognises as enjoying the full privileges of the Christian faith the ignorant and superstitious peasants of Ireland, the religiously degraded populations of Spanish South America, and other Roman Catholic countries at large, and even those lowest specimens of the genus Christian which one meets with in parts of Russia, the Balkan States, Egypt and the Orient. To me it is simply amazing that intelligent, thoughtful men can bring themselves to accept such a paradox; but they must either do this or renounce their mechanical theory, and this last they cannot bring themselves to part with. . . . .

IT UN-CHURCHES

"To this theory stands opposed in every particular the spiritual theory of Christianity. It starts with the dread aphorism that fell from lips divine, that God is a Spirit, and that they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. From this it draws the inference that, in whatever way God is approached, no supernatural results can be induced, whether by sacraments or otherwise, without that faith which is the necessary condition of pleasing Him. It regards the sacraments as designed to assist our human weakness in concentrating our faith upon a Divine provision: not as a medium through which a divine blessing is conveyed to us, but as a means whereby we receive it.

"It is easy to see that the adoption of the spiritual theory of religion will render us little disposed to multiply unnecessarily ceremonial observances, and make us very jealous of whatever may seem likely to divert or distract the mind from or prove a substitute for it. Particularly it will lead us to shrink with aversion from whatever seems to imply the mechanical theory, which is its necessary opposite.

TRUE SPIRITUAL WORSHIP,

"This is really the reason why spiritually-minded Evangelicals can so little bring themselves to tolerate the introduction of innumerable mediæval practices which might have seemed in themselves too insignificant for us to waste time or thought upon. It is precisely because these practices belong to the "dark ages" (properly so called), when the mechanical theory was almost universally accepted, and, as a consequence, the grossest superstition prevailed, that those who have accepted, and who believe that our Church has accepted, the spiritual as opposed to the mechanical theory, cannot put up with these ritualistic innovations.

"With a sad heart I say it, as I go up and down all over the country I am ever and again being brought into contact with the disastrous results of this mechanical theory, and again and again I find it inducing self-deception and fatal self-complacency where I can discern no signs of real spiritual life.

"Wonders have certainly been wrought by machinery in this most ingenious age, but no machinery, ecclesiastical or otherwise, will ever be equal to the task of turning out saints. Not even the twentieth century will achieve this; for saints can only be made by God, and this is not God's way; but ecclesiastical machinery may produce any number of superstitious formalists, whose confidence in an unspiritual system will be the measure of their contentment with an unspiritual condition. It is against this perversion of our Church into one great manufactory of unspiritual devotees to an unspiritual theory that all who know what real spirituality means are called upon to make a resolute and determined stand."

Protestant Outlook.

WRITING on the ministry of good books in combating the evils of Romanism, an esteemed correspondent reminds us of the great value of Dr. Robertson's "Life of Fra Paolo Sarpi."

Though in the main a biography of the greatest of all the Venetians of his age, and probably since, the book gives such an insight into the methods of the Papal system as should open the eyes of any who may think that it is not so bad as has been represented. The Papacy—as anyone knows who has lived in and travelled much in Roman Catholic countries—is ever the same, though she may pursue various methods best suited to the time and position in which she finds herself; and if after the perusal of these sad, but truthful, pages of Venetian history any should desire union with such a deadly system, they must indeed be spiritually blind.

The rector of St. Mary's, Woolwich, admits having recently asked the prayers of his congregation for the Pope. It is stated that a similar request was made at St. Margaret's, Westminster, the church of the House of Commons.

The Archbishop of York, in an address to the House of Laymen in that Province, said that the experiences of the past twelve months had made it clear that it was impossible to tolerate a state of things under which every man did what was right in his own eyes in matters of ritual. It had also been made clear that we must maintain unimpaired the great principles of the truly catholic Reformation settlement.

The Council of the National Protestant Church Union has considered the subject of the proposed hearing of Ritual cases by the Archbishops, and passed a resolution which, while recognising the provision made in the preface of the Prayer Book for an Archbishop to advise such bishops as may appeal to him in matters which they cannot resolve, refuses to recognise any authority other than that of the lawfully constituted courts of the land in determining questions of doctrine and ritual.

An important debate on clerical lawlessness took place in the House of Commons on Tuesday last week, on a resolution moved by Mr. Sydney Gedge condemning the recently-published memorial of the English Church Union, and expressing the hope that Ministers of the Crown would not recommend clergymen for ecclesiastical preferment unless satisfied that they would loyally obey the law as declared by the courts which had jurisdiction in matters ecclesiastical. Mr. Hoare proposed an amendment limiting the condition of preferment to a declaration of loyal obedience to the Bishops and the Prayer Book.

Eventually the amendment was carried, with an addendum moved by Mr. Bartley, that clergymen should be asked to declare that they would obey the law as declared by the Courts which had jurisdiction in matters ecclesiastical. In a division 200 voted for this and fourteen against. In the course of the discussion Mr. Balfour charged the Ritualistic party with a desire to alter the traditional character of the Church in a manner which would make it practically unrecognisable. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. has expressed the opinion that this resolution is the strongest passed on Protestant principles since the Long Parliament.

The report of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, to be presented at the approaching Assembly, thus refers to the Ritual crisis:—

It was the conviction of our Nonconformist fathers that the Prayer-book of the Church of England, while including much devotional matter, contained also unscriptural utterances which might easily be the germs of a grave departure from Christian truth. Their forebodings are in the way of a sad fulfilment. . . .

Meanwhile, Dissenters indignantly remember that in thousands of English parishes their children are compelled to attend schools dominated by clergymen of this cryptopapist order. Moreover, they are Englishmen, and they grow impatient of inaction. How long must the nation endure a clerical usurpation that accepts its money but betrays its faith? Imprisonment of contumacious priests would be no remedy. It would invest traitors with the crown of martyrdom. Deprivation would be equally ineffective.

The one thing possible is to abandon once for all the discredited notion of lending state patronage to uphold Christ's Church. The present pitiful deadlock is eating into the fibre of the national character, imperilling its respect for law, menacing its love of truth, and endangering all that stability of its fortunes which coheres therewith."

Rev. W. Crosbie.

A NEW MINISTRY.

A MOST interesting series of meetings was held on April 6 in the lecture hall of Castle Gate Church, Nottingham, attended by friends from many parts of the country, assembled to thank God for the help they had received during the long ministry of Rev. W. Crosbie. A meeting for prayer and the communion of the Lord's Supper was held in the afternoon, and a public meeting in the evening.

Rev. Dr. Paton, who presided, said that he could not conceive of a minister of Christ retiring from the ministry, although, like their friend Mr. Crosbie, he might retire from the work of a pastor. Since giving up his pastoral work, Mr. Crosbie had in most impressive ways been called to a two-fold ministry for Christ and his Church. They knew very well how earnestly he had cared for children and for young men and women. He would now devote himself to urging upon the churches the paramount duty of caring for the young, especially during the critical and formative years from thirteen to seventeen. They knew also how constantly Mr. Crosbie had been calling the churches to continuous pleading and united prayer. He had taught them that any revival worth the name must grow out of deeper spiritual experience. Mr. Crosbie would now seek to bear this testimony even more definitely, and would endeavour to form prayer unions, in which all ministers and all churches should join to entreat an outpouring of the Holy Ghost, so that the Church might enter upon the new century divinely equipped for triumphant warfare. The new century would thus be a true "age of faith," and would witness mighty and glorious movements of the Spirit of God. To that two-fold ministry they now solemnly set apart their brother, and pledged themselves to sustain him by ceaseless prayer and sympathy.

Alderman Bottomley, of Derby, speaking for a large number of subscribers from all parts of England, then asked Mr. Crosbie's acceptance of a cheque for £165. Mr. Crosbie replied that he accepted the gift as a love token. The two-fold ministry which the Master had laid upon him he accepted humbly and joyfully. He would still prophesy his prophecy that the greatest want of these times is a genuine spiritual revival of the Church. The final triumphs of the Christian faith will be won by a Church filled with the Spirit of God, for "Thus saith the Lord God, 'The nations shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes.'"

Open-Air Mission.—On Thursday evening, April 13, a convention of open-air preachers and workers was held at Gresham Hall, Brixton, under the auspices of the South London Auxiliary of the Open-Air Mission, Mr. W. B. Doubleday presiding. The secretary intimated arrangements to re-commence the open-air meetings in Brockwell Park on Sunday evenings this summer. Dr. Z. T. Dowen, Wynne Road Baptist Church, and Dr. W. D. Springett, vicar of St. Matthew's, Brixton, gave helpful addresses to the preachers.

Ho Eisho, the Lamp-Mender.

ONE of the most familiar figures in Yokohama for some years past was that of a Chinaman wheeling a small cart through the streets and calling out from door to door, "Have you any lamps to be mended?" Often he might be seen engaged in earnest conversation with his patrons or the passers-by; and sometimes quite a crowd would be gathered about the little cart to listen to his exhortations. Some laughed and ridiculed him; but others listened intently as if impressed by his teachings. To either Chinese or Japanese he talked with the same eagerness, and among them were often those whom he had helped in time of need.

This poor preacher, though only a lamp-mender, kept two bags on the inside of his coat. When he received his pay for mending a lamp he divided it—putting one half in one bag and the other half in the other. The money in one bag he used to supply his own simple wants, but the other was the Lord's bag, from which he gave alms to the poor; and, if he had more than enough for his daily needs in his own bag, the balance of that was given away also.

His home was in a very small place in Chinatown, where it is said he had not room enough to lie out straight. Yet, this man, living so simply and engaged in such menial employment, was once wealthy and the owner of houses and lands in Yokohama.

He was born in the southern part of China; his parents died while he was young, and being left free to go where he chose he came to Japan to seek his fortune. Working early and late he succeeded in

ACCUMULATING A LARGE PROPERTY.

Having married a Japanese, his possessions stood in her name, and it was not long before he was left with nothing at all. The effect was to drive him almost mad. Then, on the pretext of being a religious pilgrim, he obtained a travelling passport, and went through the whole length of the land, enduring all sorts of privations and hardships, until sickness compelled him to return to Yokohama.

In the course of his sickness he one day bought a book of a paper-rag dealer, in order to have something that would divert his mind. It was a Bible, and though there was much in it that he could not understand, he was impressed by its teachings, and felt they were true. Soon after, a Christian invited him to go to church, and he went very willingly. What he there heard deepened the impression already made, and it was not long before he heartily accepted the new teaching, and acknowledged his faith by baptism and admission into the church. From that time forward he gave up all ambition to become rich, and engaged in active efforts to lead others into the Christian way. For the accomplishment of this purpose he took the humble occupation of a lamp mender because it gave him constant opportunities to preach the Gospel to the people.

Thus he went about the streets drawing his little cart, year after year, telling of Christianity to the crowds that collected about him. He was urged, by those who knew his ability, to go into business again; but he ever replied, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Had it not been for his faith in the invisible, and hope of eternal life, he could never have endured the ridicule, persecution, poverty, and discomfort of his simple and devoted life. His one joy and comfort lay in going to church and meeting with Christians. On Sundays, and at all religious services, he took a most active and efficient part. In the Japanese meetings, he was prompt and pertinent in prayer and Scripture exposition, and in exhortation. In mixed meetings of Japanese and Chinese he was invaluable in fluently rendering Japanese into Chinese for his fellow nationals.

In his last illness he was carried to the hospital, and as long as he was able he gathered the other patients about him and talked to them of Christ. When he grew so weak that it caused him to be raised in bed, he still prayed and talked with all who came to see him. In his last hours the exhortation most often upon his lips was, "Let not Satan deprive thee of thy crown;" and as earnestly as ever he endeavoured to impress upon everyone the importance of winning eternal life.

INTENSE PAIN AND WEARINESS

At the funeral services the church was filled to overflowing with Japanese, Chinese, and missionaries, all met to mourn the death of this poor Chinaman, destitute of means to buy a last resting place for his tired emaciated body, but rich in faith and good works. As the pastor gave a history of his devoted and useful life, the whole congregation was moved to weeping. As the long procession passed through the streets, people wondered who could be having such a grand funeral; and they were filled with astonishment when told that it was the funeral of Ho Eisho, the lamp mender.

We may all wonder at the influence of this simple, obscure life. He was not an accurate or eloquent speaker, and people would never listen to him on account of his skill or learning. The power he wielded was the power of faith and zeal, the power of a man who loved God with all his heart and his neighbour as himself; and it is a power which lives after he is dead, to make men better by drawing them nearer to God.

H. L.

Gladness.

By Pastor F. E. MARSH.

THE person who is said to be glad tells out the character of his gladness. What we are colours what we do.

I. The Gladness of Love.—"It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad" (Luke xv. 32). The object loved is glad in being blest, and in Him who blesses; while the One who loves is glad to bless, and in seeing the blessing appreciated.

II. The Gladness of Faith.—"Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad" (John viii. 56). Time and space are noted by faith. Faith's eye is fixed on God; faith's feet are on God's Word; faith's hands grasp the promises; faith's heart is entwined around Christ, and its mind is on the Unseen.

III. The Gladness of Victory.—"My tongue was glad" (Acts ii. 26). Christ's resurrection proclaimed the conquest of sin, the defeat of hell, the overthrow of Satan, and the undoing of death.

IV. The Gladness of Peace.—"The disciples were glad when they saw the Lord" (John xx. 20). The Word of Peace which Jesus gave to his disciples, and the revelation of Himself, filled their hearts with unspeakable gladness.

V. The Gladness of Consecration.—"When he came and had seen the grace of God, (Barnabas) was glad" (Acts xi. 23). The consecrated soul is always glad when the grace of God is manifested. It looks not at the means of blessing, but at its source.

VI. The Gladness of Sin.—"They were glad" (Mark xiv. 11). The priests join hands with the traitor Judas in seeking the death of Christ. Sin ever stabs at the heart of God, and seeks the destruction of men.

VII. The Gladness of Curiosity.—"Herod . . . was exceedingly glad" (Luke xxiii. 8). His gladness was born of idle curiosity and fed by self-desire; hence Christ would not respond to his wish, for He has no blessing for mere curiosity.

The C.M.S. Centenary.

THE various meetings last week in connection with the Centenary Celebration of the Church Missionary Society were very largely attended, and from first to last an earnest spirituality pervaded them. In the words of The Record: "The proceedings have been marked by the deep religious feeling which corresponds to the oldest traditions of the C.M.S., and preserves in happiest continuity the sanctified enthusiasm of its founders. The note of self-congratulation has not been heard; self-examination, humiliation, confession, rededication, and hope—these are thoughts that have appeared again and again in the sermons, speeches, and prayers of the week."

After the meeting for confession and thanksgiving, held at Exeter Hall on Monday, April 10, and described in our last issue, there was a special service in St. Paul's Cathedral, when the Archbishop of Canterbury preached from Acts xiii. 2: "As they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."

On Tuesday, three meetings were held at Exeter Hall, at which missions were reviewed. The morning was devoted to "Advances" and the afternoon to "Methods." In the evening the home work of the great organisation was discussed. The meetings were presided over by Lord Kinnaird, the Bishop of Wakefield, and the Bishop of Winchester. The various addresses were full of living interest.

Wednesday was the high day of the Celebration, being the hundredth anniversary of the Society's formation. First came a breakfast meeting, which was held with a certain appropriateness in the Castle and Falcon Hotel, Aldersgate-street. It was there that the twenty-five founders gathered on April 12, 1799. The chair was occupied by Rev. H. E. Fox, who remarked that the fathers of the Society were true Evangelicals and Protestants, loyal to the Bible and the Prayer Book. It is for their children in all humility and loyalty to follow in the same good path. The Bishop of Minnesota intimated greetings from America, and the Bishop of Derry delivered a like message from the Hibernian Church Missionary Society. Rev. Henry Venn, son of the worthy of that name who was the honorary secretary of the Society from 1841 to 1872, made a short speech; and Sir John Kennaway, the warm-hearted president, offered a cordial welcome to the missionaries and native clergy attending the proceedings in a representative capacity. Upwards of a hundred gentlemen were present, including many ecclesiastical dignitaries.

THE SOCIETY'S BIRTHPLACE—

A meeting for men, held in Exeter Hall later in the morning, was largely attended—about four thousand in all being present. Mr. Fox announced that a large number of telegrams and letters had been received from distant lands and from home friends and other religious organisations. The motto chosen for the Society's new year was: "There hath not failed one word of all his good promise. . . The Lord our God be with us, as He was with our fathers; let Him not leave us, nor forsake us; that all the people of the earth may know that the Lord He is God; there is none else."

After reading a sympathetic letter from Lord Salisbury, Sir John Kennaway delivered a vigorous address. He said that the Society's work had tended to remove the reproach of the Church; it had purified the life of Church and nation, had set before the world high ideals and lofty examples, and had added largely to and to the innumerable multitude gathered from all peoples round the throne of God. There was another side to the picture, for God worked slowly, though surely, and through feeble agents. The Society had excellently administered great revenues, had successfully dealt with great questions of ecclesiastical policy, and had claimed its rightful heritage in the national Church. They had held to the simple faith of their founders, and had maintained through thick and thin the Reformation settlement as defined in the Prayer Book and the Articles, and they meant, God helping them, to be true to that settlement to the end.

THE NOBLE ARMY OF MARTYRS,

The Archbishop of Canterbury proposed a resolution in the following terms:—

On the 100th anniversary of the foundation of the Church Missionary Society, this meeting of clerical and lay representatives of members of the society here assembled would first record their humble and hearty thanks to Almighty God for his abundant goodness manifested to the society during the successive generations of those to whom has been given the honour of serving Him in its ranks at home and abroad. They remember with adoring gratitude his grace bestowed upon the founders of the society, and his faithfulness to their successors, especially in enabling them to maintain the spiritual and evangelical principles which have been and are the life of the society. They praise Him for the vastly multiplied opportunities of proclaiming the Gospel which He has set before his Church during the past century, for the devoted men and women whom He has sent into the mission field, for the great company of converts whom He has gathered out of all nations, and for the increased zeal which He has given to the Church at home. In all these mercies his servants cannot but see proofs of his good pleasure in the past and pledges of larger blessing in the days to come.

In the course of his speech, the Archbishop said the Society's history had been marvellous, and especially marvellous was the faith which God had given to its founders that they would assuredly win, when there seemed so much to prevent them from winning. To go forth as a missionary in those days was such a very serious matter; missionaries' lives were far shorter then, owing to disease and incessant toil; and the perseverance which led the Society through everything was itself a great gift of God. He knew of no society which had persisted through so many disappointments. The list of their workers might almost fill up another eleventh chapter of Hebrews. If there were any slackness now, it would be a refusal to acknowledge what God had already done for them. There was great work to be done, not only in the mission field, but in the Church of England here, to convince men that the carrying forward of the Gospel message was an essential part of the ordinary Christian's life. He trusted that God would give his ministers power to rouse the Church to a realisation of the most important duty that Christians had to perform.

The Bishop of Bath and Wells.

From Photograph by Messrs. Russell and Sons, 17, Baker Street, W.

The Earl of Northbrook, as an ex-viceroy of India, seconded the resolution. Every thoughtful mind, he said, should put to itself the question for what purpose the building-up of

OUR MARVELLOUS INDIAN EMPIRE

had been allowed. We had established the Pax Britannica where a hundred years ago vast tracts were subject to rapine and ruin; we had introduced Western civilisation; our railroads and telegraphs covered the country; we had established an impartial administration of justice, and promoted education; by the magnificent organisation of our Indian services we had met the worst famine in Indian history with hardly the loss of a single life. Some of these achievements were certainly worthy of Empire; but there was something beyond them all, to be done, not by Government, but by individual Christians—in Milton's words:—

To guide the nations in the way of truth
By saving doctrine, and from error lead
To know, and knowing worship God aright.

In estimating what had been done with that purpose in these hundred years, he embraced in his view all Protestant missions. He remembered that Bishop Milman gave advice and assistance to the missionaries of all Protestant denominations, and that, he was proud to say, was the line always taken by the Church Missionary Society. Though the increase in actual converts might be slow, yet Christian feeling was pervading the Hindu population, and Christian books of devotion were habitually used among them.

The resolution having been carried, the Bishop of Minnesota moved:—

To their grateful record of the exceeding goodness of their Lord, the committee and supporters of the Church Missionary Society are compelled to add the acknowledgment of very much on their part which may well cause sorrow and humiliation. They confess with shame the grievous disproportion between that which the Church of Christ has done during the past century and that which it ought to have done. They mourn over the indifference shown by many to the "command of commands." They think with pain of the vast unevangelised areas inhabited by multitudes still without the opportunity of hearing of Christ, and of the many openings for which the supply of missionaries is wholly inadequate. Both for the Church's sake and the sake of a sin-stricken world, but chiefly for the honour of Him who gave his life a ransom for all, this meeting calls upon all Christian people to join in earnest prayer that it may please God to heal their unhappy divisions, and by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit unite them with one heart to fulfil His gracious purposes in the evangelisation of the world.

Referring to the "unhappy divisions," the venerable bishop said that the hedges in the garden of God were made up of human opinions, which it was not necessary for any man to believe in order to be saved. He trusted they had been cured of the fearful delusion that when the New Jerusalem appeared it would represent their particular doctrinal opinions. The re-united Church would be a catholic Church—catholic because it would recognise that narrowness and bitterness and strife were a treason to Christ. Their sister Church in America was learning, in the spirit of Christ, to recognise all as brothers who were winning souls to Christ. When thousands were asking, not which faith they should hold, but whether they should hold any—when the Church was confronted with problems such as it had never had to face before—it was enough to make angels weep to see men

WRANGLING OVER RITES AND CEREMONIES.

When, in a great Indian massacre, his missions were destroyed, it was a Scottish Free Churchman who sent him the means to rebuild; and when the Christian Indians and others were starving, it was the Society of Friends in Philadelphia that sent relief. The best cure for schisms was to be found in work for Jesus Christ. In grappling for a brother's life, there should be no room to quarrel about shibboleths that many a man could not speak.

Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., seconded the resolution, and it was carried.

Viscount Cranborne, M.P., moved the third resolution in the following terms:—

Conscious of the unprecedented opportunities and the solemn responsibilities of the present time, the friends of missions here assembled look forward with ardent expectation to the future. They believe that in the Scriptural doctrine and primitive order of the Church of England, in the history and character of the English people, and in their commercial and political power, there are peculiar privileges which constitute a Divine call to the Christians of the Empire to missionary enterprise in a far larger and bolder spirit than has ever yet been manifested. They earnestly long that the English-speaking race may have the honour of leading the way in a policy of Christian imperialism which shall have no other object than to bring nearer the fulfilment of the Divine promise that the kingdom of this world is to become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

The circumstances of the times, his lordship said, call for a larger and bolder spirit of Christian imperialism. Thousands of square miles are year by year coming under the sceptre of Her Majesty and the supremacy of the English people. This increasing burden of responsibility is only justified by a belief that our people can confer on the subject races benefits greater than any other nation could give, and that in the train of government would come the preaching of Christ. He asked the meeting to pledge itself to the Christianity of British rule. He did not care what they might do in the countries they conquered, what secular colleges they might found; unless they carried along with those institutions the definite teaching of Christianity they had done nothing at all.

Rev. H. E. Fox, in seconding the resolution, said that Western civilisation in India and Africa was making it impossible for the natives to believe in their own religions. The resolution was adopted, and the Bishop of Newcastle closed the meeting with prayer.

While the meeting in Exeter Hall was in progress, the Bishop of Liverpool was presiding over another gathering in the Queen's Hall, at which similar resolutions were adopted. In the course of a hearty address, the Chairman said he had been a subscriber to the Society for sixty years. In looking back, he said, he saw a few things to be regretted, but there was far more to be thankful for. The Society had adhered to the grand principles of its Puritan and Evangelical founders. The Bishop of Derry said that the Church of Ireland, since it became independent, notwithstanding its heavy burdens, had nearly quadrupled its gifts to this Society, while the gifts of the English Church had merely doubled. They had cause to be well satisfied with the working of the old Evangelical principles that showed the spiritual God for which the world was looking.

A THANKSGIVING SERVICE

was held in the evening in the Albert Hall. A series of short addresses were interspersed with hymns, prayers, thanksgivings, and portions of Holy Scripture. The proceedings were divided into five parts, of which the first was occupied with thanksgiving for the foundation of the Society. The singing of the "Old Hundredth" was followed by the recital of two thanksgivings and the Lord's Prayer, which preceded the chanting of Psalm xcviii. Sir John Kennaway, in his address from the chair, said that when the Society was born England was beset with enemies abroad, and there were scarcity and famine at home, so it might reasonably have been said that all available energy was wanted at home; yet their fathers decided to go forward, and by prayer and perseverance they had achieved great things. In the coming century they should go forward as never hitherto, utilising all their accumulated stores of experience and information for the development of the native churches, which must be the end of their labours.

The second part of the meeting was devoted to thanksgiving for extension at home and abroad. After a hymn, Rev. H. E. Fox read Deut. viii. 11-18, and the assembly united in a litany. Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., said that he had been a subscriber and collector for the Society for more than sixty years, and the crowning joy of his life was to take part in its Centenary. He pointed out that at not only was the Church at a low ebb and the claims of Christianity to authority over men's lives ridiculed, but the country itself was in peril; it had lost its greatest colony, and in the very Navy which defended its existence there was a mutiny. As, however, the country had learned to keep its colonies by giving them self-government, so the Church was developing self-governing churches to carry on the work more vigorously.

THE BEGINNING OF THE CENTURY,

The period allotted to thanksgiving for labourers who have entered into rest, and for those gathered in through their means, was opened with Archbishop Maclagan's hymn, "The saints of God, their conflict past." Several verses of Scripture were then recited by three of the native clergy, Canon Moore (Sierra Leone) and Revs. W. Seetal and W. D. Clarke (India). Archdeacon Eyre (Sheffield) followed, comparing that centenary celebration with the dedication of Solomon's Temple. The holy temple they were now offering to God was built of unspeakably precious stones, of souls that had been redeemed and regenerated.

After another hymn of thanksgiving for the supply of men and means, Mr. H. E. Thornton, of Nottingham, addressed the meeting. He had just visited, he said, the old-fashioned building in Nottingham, formerly a Baptist chapel, but now a curiosity shop, where

THE "CONSECRATED COBBLER,"

Carey, preached, in 1792, his memorable sermon that called the Christian world to arms. No better fighting motto for the coming century could be found than the heads of Carey's discourse—"Expect great things from God; attempt great things for God."

The final section of the service was devoted to "General Thanksgiving." The Te Deum having been sung, an address was delivered by the Bishop of Sierra Leone, who pleaded that thanksgiving must be shown in thanks-living. They had often repeated the words "O Lord, open Thou our lips;" let them now be ready to say, "O Lord, open Thou our lives." "Shall we pledge ourselves to pray," he asked, "for 100 volunteers as a birthday offering to the Lord?" The bishop had faith for 300; and he mentioned the Centenary offer of service from a young Christian layman, whose income from one section of his business alone was £2,000. "The call was a test; the response was a testimony." At the close of the bishop's address, prayer was offered for further effort and progress in missionary work, and the General Thanksgiving was repeated by all present. The final hymn was "All hail the power of Jesu's Name."

The Bishop of Sierra Leone.

From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, Baker Street, W

The same order of service was carried out at a great simultaneous meeting in Exeter Hall, when Colonel Williams, M.P., presided. The Bishop of Newcastle, who was the principal speaker, referred to the fact that his grandfather had preached the Society's annual sermon eighty years ago.

The proceedings on Thursday had an interest all their own, by reason of their recognition of

SISTER SOCIETIES AND ORGANISATIONS.

In the morning "Church Missions other than the C.M.S." were spoken of, the Bishop of Exeter presiding. The Bishop of Newcastle held that in China the success achieved had been quite as much as could reasonably be expected considering the deep-rooted prejudices of the people. The S.P.G. was at work in the north, while the C.M.S. and the American Episcopalians worked together in Mid-China. In Japan they saw the foundations of a really national Church. Of the work of various bodies in Burma, none could compare with that done by the American Baptists.

The Bishop of Rochester spoke of the remarkable achievements of the Universities' Mission in Central Africa, which was founded in response to the appeal of Dr. Livingstone. The missionaries received no stipends, and bare maintenance allowances were paid only to those who could not support themselves. As a result of their labours a people had been new-created in one generation. It was striking to notice how faith pioneered and worldly policy followed. At the consecration of Mackenzie, Bishop Gray spoke of the new Bishop's field as the first link in a chain of missions which would one day stretch from Cape Town to Cairo. The staff now numbered 200, of whom 118 were natives. Peace had been established where everybody had been at war before the coming of the missionaries.

THE BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS,

formerly Bishop of Adelaide, in a sketch of missions in the South Seas, said that in New Guinea the L.M.S. had worked nobly for twenty-five years; and Sir William Macgregor, with laudable anxiety to protect that society from intrusion, had divided the territory between it and the Wesleyans and the Church of England, with an island for the Roman Catholics. In Australia the story of the dealings of white men with blacks was a sad one; but the Bishop of Tasmania had been stirring up the Church to more systematic efforts to make up for the cruelties inflicted on the rightful owners of the soil. Important work was to be done also among the Kanakas who had been brought to Queensland, and the Chinese of Sydney and Melbourne. Denominational differences were lost sight of when face to face with the enemy. The great question was, "Are you for Christ or against Him?" It was not for lack of admiration, the Bishop said, that he did not go on to speak of the work of the Presbyterians in the New Hebrides, that of the London Missionary Society in the South Seas, and that of the Wesleyans in Tonga.

The Bishop of Minnesota said that in America they organised their missionary society in 1832, and in 1835 they sent the first missionary bishop to the West, which was then a wilderness. Last year the society's income was nearly 600,000dols. and it had 1,126 domestic and 518 foreign missionaries, under eighty-five bishops. One of their great problems was how to deal with the multitude of people of all races who flocked to their country. In his own city of 200,000 people, 50,000 were Scandinavians, so he had ordained Swedish clergy, and licensed them to use the service of the Church in Swedish. Another problem was that of the negroes, who, after emancipation, had developed a religion that was half fetish and half Christian. To-day, however, there were 1,400,000 black children in the free schools which the people of the South tax themselves to support. As for the Indians, where, at the beginning of his episcopate, they were mad with hate against the men who had robbed them of their heritage, there were now Christian churches under Indian pastors.

In the afternoon, Scottish and Foreign Protestant Missions were considered. The Bishop of Manchester, who occupied the chair, said that when confronted with the and miseries of heathenism, Christians forgot minor differences. In India there were 80,000,000 Hindus who held neither the Hindu nor the Mohammedan faith, and were looked upon by the Hindus as despicable and by the Mohammedans as accursed; but they shared Christ's human nature, in which there were vast possibilities.

GIANT SUPERSTITIONS AND CRIMES

Rev. Dr. Marshall Lang, ex-Moderator of the General Assembly, said that missions were carried on by the corporate action of the Church of Scotland. They rejected prelacy, but they insisted that the Church itself should be a prelate to all its parts. In their Church, clergy and laity sat side by side, with equal powers and rights, and they put the spread of Christ's Gospel in the forefront of the Church's business. Scotland was a small country, and a large part of it was occupied not by dear souls, but by soulless deer in forests created for the benefit of Englishmen and needy Highland lairds. Yet the mission income had trebled in twenty years, and was now about a sixth of the C.M.S. £330,000. They had 116 Scottish missionaries and 586 native assistants, with 9,000 or 10,000 baptized Christians on the roll, and 14,000 scholars, in India, China, and Africa.

Dr. G. Smith, for the Free Church of Scotland, said that their college at Madras was generously supported by the C.M.S., as well as by the other evangelical missionaries; and he wished the Society would send a distinguished Oxford or Cambridge man to fill the chair for which it already furnished the salary. On the Free Church staff there were 230 missionaries, and the income was £110,000. The Livingstonia Mission in Central Africa, with its medical and industrial and educational work, had made unexampled spiritual progress, and last year the number of communicants had doubled. After referring to the Indian, Arabian, and other missions of the Free Church, Dr. Smith said that the United Presbyterian Church stood at in the average amount given by her communicants for foreign missions. The English Presbyterians devoted themselves to China, where they had solved the problem of establishing purely native self-governing churches; and the Welsh Presbyterian Church was at work in Assam.

THE HEAD OF ALL CHRISTIAN BODIES

Pastor Theodore Monod said that the Paris Missionary Society was born seventy-five years ago out of an evangelical revival, at the bottom of which was a Scotchman—Robert Haldane. Their oldest mission was that of Basutoland, where there were 40,000 baptized persons in a population of 250,000. The work on the Zambesi, to which the founder, M. Coillard, was now going back with fifteen new missionaries, was well known. Among other countries in which French Protestants were at work were Madagascar, the Loyalty Islands, and the French Congo. The income of their society had risen from £20,000 in 1894 to £45,240 in 1898.

Addresses were also delivered by Herr Würz as representative of the Basle Mission, and Mr. Henry Morris on behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

The evening meeting gave a hearing to speakers belonging to Nonconformist communions. The Bishop of Sodor and Man presided, and in some opening words said he much pitied the narrowness that failed to see that the Spirit of God had produced rich fruit by other agencies. These Nonconformists loved and he looked forward to the day when all the hedges dividing the garden of God should be cut down.

THE GREAT REFORMATION PRINCIPLES,

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, observed that, although that organisation was only formed in 1817, the Wesleyan Church had carried on foreign mission work for thirty or forty years before. One example of Wesleyan work was to be seen in Fiji. There the whole people in 1837 were sunk in the foulest kind of paganism; to-day there was not one pagan left, and the islands had a larger proportion of communicants, of Sunday scholars, and of families engaging in daily prayer than any other part of Christendom. In the Transvaal the society had 46,000 natives under religious instruction. In South Africa, Australia, British North America, and the West Indies the mission churches had become self-governing and self-supporting.

The next speaker was Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, who said that it was four years older than the C.M.S., and, therefore, had had the honour of sending the pioneer Protestant missionaries to the South Seas, South Africa, China, and Madagascar; while another of their representatives, Dr. Livingstone, had made the first journey across Africa. In Samoa 29,000 of the 35,000 inhabitants regarded themselves as under the care of the society, which had many adherents in both the political camps, though Mataafa himself was a Roman Catholic. Mr. Thompson warmly acknowledged the brotherly spirit which the C.M.S. had shown throughout the mission field to the society he represented.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, who had lately been travelling in India, said that one came back after such a journey

AN IMPERIALIST IN SPITE OF ONE'S SELF.

He urged the need of increasing the supply of good literature for the natives who were learning English, and earnestly advised people of means and leisure to go out and live in India in order to help the missionaries—not necessarily to be missionaries themselves.

The last speaker was Rev. Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, who maintained that the things that unite Evangelical Christians are much greater than those that divide them; while at home we talk of union, the missionaries abroad are realising it in actual life.

On Friday morning Prebendary Barlow presided over a meeting at which helpful addresses were given by Revs. Hubert Brooke and E. H. Hopkins. In the afternoon the Bishop of Carlisle occupied the chair at a gathering to which Rev. H. B. Macartney and others spoke on "The Regions Beyond." At night the Bishop of Peterborough presided over a discussion of "The Claims of Christ on his People." From first to last the addresses were vigorous and inspiring.

The week of meetings closed on Saturday afternoon with in the Albert Hall. The spacious building was crowded in every part, and every child was presented with an aluminium copy of the medal which has been struck in honour of the Centenary. The chair was taken by Dr. J. Taylor Smith, Bishop of Sierra Leone. Addresses were delivered by Revs. E. A. Stuart, E. N. Thwaites, and F. Baylis. The concluding words by Bishop Taylor Smith were very serious in tone. He exhorted the children to remember the words of the Centenary text: "The Lord hath done great things for us: whereof we are glad;" and to carry away the facts of the world's deep need. Two of these facts were: (a) 990 each hour—that is, sixteen each minute—of the natives of India pass into eternity. (b) Every day over 13,500 natives of Africa pass into Christless graves.

A GATHERING OF BOYS AND GIRLS

It is estimated that the total attendance at the Centenary meetings, not counting the services in St. Paul's Cathedral or elsewhere, was at least 50,000. In the course of the proceedings frequent reference was made to Mr. Eugene Stock's remarkable work, "The History of the Church Missionary Society." These books were very properly spoken of as a monument of devoted labour, and quoted as sources of full and correct information on the work of the past century.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 30.

"The Comforter Promised."—John xiv. 15-27.

Golden Text.—John xiv. 16.

Introductory.

Recall last lesson. The place, the time, the reason and need of Christ's loving words. He had told the disciples He was going away; had promised them that they should do more work than He had done, and that He would answer their prayers. Now, we will read the remainder of the discourse.

Explanatory.

Verse 15. Love and obedience. True obedience is the result of love. Point out the difference between a child doing what father tells him, because he loves him and longs to please him, and a slave obeying through fear of the lash. Keep means to guard and watch lest they should be broken (1 John v. 3).

Verse 16. The condition on which this promise hangs; the Holy Spirit is only promised to those whose love makes them obedient (see vv. 21, 23). "The Comforter." This name for the Holy Spirit means much more than our English word expresses. The Greek word, Paraclete, indicates "one who is called to the side of another." The Latin word, Advocate, has a similar meaning. The Holy Spirit is our Helper in everything. Refer to John xvi. 7, and point out how much better it is to have the Holy Spirit than the bodily presence of Jesus: "He may abide with you for ever" Everywhere and always the Spirit is around us, and will come into our hearts if we will let Him in (v. 17).

Verse 18. "Comfortless" means "orphans."

Verse 19. The world did not see Jesus again after He was buried, but those who loved Him saw Him after his resurrection; also to the spiritual eyes He is real. (Question about Jesus being our life as taught in the last lesson.)

Verse 20. What day? With Christ within us we have communion with God. No other mediator is required or possible.

Verse 22. Judas (Luke vi. 16), i.e., Jude, the writer of the Epistle. The disciples could not divest themselves of the Jewish idea that their Messiah would appear with glory before the whole world, judge the Gentiles, and restore the kingdom to Israel.

Verse 23. Love and obedience are like the two lines on which the engine of our life is to run; the Holy Spirit is like the fire within, or the steam which makes the engine move. The engine running off its track brings ruin and destruction, and the fire soon goes out.

Verse 26. "Ghost" is the old English word for "Spirit." Test these promises by the results. Mark the difference between the disciples before and after receiving the Holy Spirit at Pentecost; especially trace the change in Peter.

Verse 27. The Saviour's legacy to all who believe and trust Him, "Peace;" not outward, but deep down in the soul, like the calm below the ruffled sea. It is a peace like that which the little boy had who had no fear in the storm at sea, because his father was at the helm. Jehovah's ancient blessing (Num. vi. 26).

The Eastern salutation was "salaam" or "peace," just as we say, "good morning," without thinking what it means. Christ's peace is a reality; nothing can disturb it. Illustrate by Peter rejoicing in prison, Paul and Silas singing in jail, Paul on the wrecked ship. Also give instances of this peace "guarding our hearts" (Phil. iv. 7, Col. iii. 15). In the greatest of troubles this peace in our soul keeps us calm. It harmonises our whole being.

The Holy Spirit.

Try to get the scholars to realise that He is now in the world on purpose to be their Helper, their guide in every detail of life. Impress upon them the preciousness of this gift. Let them point out and read all the verses in chaps. xiv., xv., xvi., which tell of his work. His first work is to "convince of sin," show us we are sinners. Has He done this for you? If so, He will renew your heart, help you to believe, recall the words of Jesus in your memory, teach you to pray, to sing, to work. Explain the difference between the Holy Spirit's work in Old Testament times and in the present. Then, only one here and there; now, every child of God may be filled if he will. In the New Testament there are 261 verses which tell us of the Holy Spirit. Point out the danger of grieving Him, resisting Him, quenching Him, neglecting his voice.

Other Lands.

Letters from America.

REV. SAM JONES ON THE NEGRO PROBLEM.

I HAVE been trying to summarise Rev. Sam Jones's replies to the questionings of Rev. David Macrae on the race problem. It was easy to do this on the liquor question, but I find it impossible with regard to the Negro, because Mr. Jones never gives a direct answer, and is unreasoning, incoherent, prejudiced, and unjust—a typical Southerner on this subject. I give the conversation in full, as reported in the Atlanta Constitution, lest I should seem to do Mr. Jones injustice.

In the discussion of the drink question, Mr. Jones had said:—

"In the United States, in the country they count on character, and in the city they run on chattels for developing manhood. In the country they work for God, and for mammon in the towns. The greatest curse of whisky in this country is its influence in politics, and perhaps the greatest curse in the south is the influence of liquor upon the negroes."

"That is one question upon which I would like to ask for information," interrupted Mr. Macrae. "What is the political status of the negro in the south?"

"The negro cuts no figure in elections in the southern states," answered Mr. Jones, "only as he is tied out as a reserve force by the devil, to run in on us on election day, and carry cities and towns overwhelmingly wet against the majority of the white people. The effect of this is not only demoralising to the state and the city, but it is hurting the negro in the sense that the better whites are losing patience and sympathy with him."

I suppose that Mr. Jones's remark about being tied out as a reserve force by the devil means that the Negro has generally voted with the Republicans against the Democrats, which was not unnatural seeing they owed their emancipation to a Republican Government.

THE RACE PROBLEM.

"Mr. Jones, what do you think of the race problem from a religious point of view? What will be the solution of that problem?"

"I have contended," said he, "that with the Bible in one hand and the spelling book in the other is the best way to Christianise the world. The negro is religious—not pious, but religious."

Mr. Macrae looked puzzled at the comparison, and Mr. Jones hastened to explain.

"I mean to say that the negro and his religion do not embody the ten commandments. The most religious negroes are the ones who pay the least attention to the commandments. There are a great many negroes who shout and sing in religious fervour until 12 o'clock at night, and go home by way of a hen roost that night. As I say, they shout every time they go to church, but never raise any chickens until they are half-grown."

The visitor looked mystified, but did not ask for an explanation.

"How does the religion of the negro act upon him?" inquired he. "Does it provide a force for elevating him? Does it tend to bring him into the line of good living?"

"Of course," replied Mr. Jones, "a religious negro is better than an irreligious one. But there are three things—we might call them intemperance, dishonesty, and licentiousness or lasciviousness—which are the three flagrant sins of the negro race. The old negro nearly expressed it right when he said: 'It ain't stealing, boss, whar de wrong is; it's being kotched at it.' His conscience in the matter is at the point where he is caught. When it comes to whisky, he believes that whisky is God and there is no other, and that God made whisky. But, I say, you can never take anything made by God and turn it into whisky until you rot it."

"But do you not believe," remarked Mr. Macrae, "that the morals of the negro are improving—that he is advancing in the scale of civilisation?"

"Yes," assented Mr. Jones, "the morals of the labouring negro have improved. It is the idle negro, who sweeps out saloons and lays around the streets gambling and shooting 'craps,' and who gets into the courts and the penitentiary, who causes all the trouble."

"And do you not think it is the increasing influx of the negroes into the cities and towns, where there is no employment for them and where they become associated with the most depraved of their race, which in the moral scale? And would not education tend to alleviate this condition?" questioned Mr. Macrae.

TENDS TO DEPRESS THE NEGRO

"The good, old-fashioned country negro," said Mr. Jones, "is an institution of the south of which she has always been proud and felt very kindly toward. When a negro is educated in the south, the prejudiced southerner will say, 'Well, you have fixed him up for preaching or teaching or the chaingang.' These are the only possible openings for the educated negro."

"What is it that keeps closed the avenues that might otherwise be open to him? When these forces have led to an issue, what do you expect the outlook to be? What do you expect these influences to make of the negro?"

"We can only look around us," responded Mr, Jones, "and work out this problem by the facts of history. The Anglo-Saxon race has been the dominant race since its incipiency, and the Anglo-Saxon race in this country will always be the dominant race. There is nothing more intolerable to a southern man than for you to put a negro above him, to advance a negro ahead of him. They won't let negroes become locomotive engineers; the brotherhood won't suffer them to be conductors, and the avenues of higher endeavour are closed to the negro. We have a few doctors and a few lawyers among them, but not enough to talk about. When a negro becomes educated, the rule is he will either preach or teach or beat his way and get into the chain-gang. When he becomes educated, the only kind of work he will accept is a first-class job or none. We already have more first-class, educated fellows in the south than we have jobs for, and hence we find them committing forgery, larceny, and all manner of crimes, for which they are committed to the penitentiary. We have a great many more men in Georgia who can read and write well than we have first-class jobs for."

"Then," said Mr. Macrae, "do you think it a wise policy to educate the negro when every avenue open to the better class of white people is closed to him? Do you think it wise to endow him with powers which he cannot exercise in the wisest and best way?"

"A man does not need the classics nor the curriculum of our colleges in order to plough well, or make a good horseshoe, or drive a team well," said Mr. Jones. "Now if education means a man's best preparation for his life work, I can see how he can be over-educated. I can see how every white man and negro in this country should know the three R's, reading, 'riting, and 'rithmetic; but when you educate him to where he considers himself a gentleman—and education no more makes a gentleman than good clothes: it may set off a gentleman, but never makes one; he must have a gentleman's occupation."

CHARACTER LEADS BEYOND ALL EDUCATION—

"Do you think," asked Mr. Macrae, "that with all the education the negro gets, he is not to be qualified for any work excepting purely servile work? Do you think the race is not worthy of education to a higher position?"

"Well," laughed Mr. Jones, "this country has more white applicants than there are positions open for. I can see no future for the negro in the south beyond manual labour, except for a few."

"Suppose in the development of negro education the negroes in certain localities should equip themselves to exercise the right of suffrage, giving in these localities a majority of educated negroes over the whites. What will be the effect then in the matter of control as between the whites and blacks?"

"The negro will be controlled then just as he has been for the last twenty years," answered Mr. Jones. "We have had no qualification of franchise in this state for twenty years; anybody, white or black, male, twenty-one years old, can vote. Now, when you make an educational qualification, as soon as the negro gets where he can displace the white in office, there will be no such result. The democrats of the south are running the south politically; and what the democrats don't know about running their man for office isn't worth knowing. They are very tractable ordinarily; but put a negro in ahead of them, and I imagine that the devil himself could go to school to them and learn some new tricks."

"Suppose," Mr. Macrae interposed, "the coloured people in any state or district became so well educated, of such good character and ability, that had they been white they would have been taking ruling positions, from taking such positions? and do you think it right their colour should prevent them?"

WOULD THEIR COLOUR PREVENT THEM

"Let us take Booker Washington, for example," said Mr. Jones; "there is a man who is respected all over the country; he commands the esteem and confidence of all classes of people. He is listened to as closely and as enthusiastically in Atlanta as he is in Boston or Denver or New Orleans; he is a man of character and intelligence. The Anglo-Saxon race has a history with its poetry, with its oratory, with its inventions of genius, with its statesmen, with its literature, that the negro can never achieve. The white race will take care of its history, its poetry, its science, its art. Our brother in black is not much when it comes to inventive genius, nor when he aspires to the professions and sciences. While men like Booker Washington, Douglas, and Granderson are men of ability, and are making history for their race, it will take them a thousand years with men like these pushing the race to reach the position which the whites have achieved."

"Do you think," persisted Mr. Macrae, "that a man like Booker Washington should be excluded or would be excluded on account of his colour from a high office to which he might be elected? Would the fact of his being coloured prevent his taking such a position and being recognised in such office?"

"Yes. I believe that white is better than black in America, and ever will be. It is a better colour; it stands for more, and America gives the right of way to the white man, but contends every inch with the black man."

"Then, Mr. Jones, is a good black man inferior to a bad white man, or should a negro be recognised as better when he is better, and given the place that his actions would fit him for were he white?"

"Booker Washington may be the equal of thousands of white men occupying positions such as state legislators or even congressmen; but as to whether he would be acceptable to Atlanta as a legislator or as a congressman, that is another question," replied Mr. Jones.

"We do with the negro in the south," a gentleman interrupted, "just exactly what the British do with their colony districts in South Africa, and with the Indians in India. In India the Indians outnumber the whites possibly a thousand to one, and in the British colony of South Africa the negroes outnumber the whites hundreds to one; but in neither country has as much been done for the inhabitants as we have done here for the negroes, because Great Britain has to the negro. The same principle of white domination applies here as in the British dependencies."

REFUSED EVEN THE RIGHT OF FRANCHISE

"When the negro was a slave," pursued Mr. Jones, "America did more toward the uplifting of his condition than will be done the first hundred years of his freedom. There are more lawyers and preachers among the negroes to-day than there were in 1865; but immediately upon emancipation the majority of the rascals went and hired out to the devil. There are more rascals and scoundrels among the negroes to-day than any day in the history of America."

"What do you attribute that to?" asked the visitor. "With your far more intimate knowledge of the coloured man, you are in a position to know more about this question than I; and, while we are very much interested in the problem on our side of the water, we have not an opportunity of studying the question among ourselves. We are anxious to know what you expect from the negro, and what you look forward to as the ultimate solution of this question."

"I was twenty-one years old," responded Mr. Jones, "when the negro was freed. I grew up as the son of a slaveholder. The smaller negroes were my playmates and associates, and the older ones cared for me. I know the negro instincts and I know his 'outstinks.' The best negroes in the south to-day are the ones who were once in slavery. They are the best disposed; they are the best behaved."

"Perhaps," Mr. Macrae suggested, "they are like young fellows who, under the control of their parents, are all right, but when they leave home their strong passions or superabounding energy leads them out of the straight path. It is true with all of us that some things have to be learned by our mistakes and blunders. I should suppose that without preparation or training, and with no hand to guide and restrain them, plunging into vices and immoralities, prevented them from developing what they might otherwise have learned of self-control."

THE NEGROES SUDDENLY SET FREE,

"Slavery taught him to read and write," insisted Mr. Jones, "and introduced him to our religion; but immediately upon emancipation, instead of falling in line with the better currents of his life, many of them degenerated into vagabonds."

"Yes," assented Mr. Macrae, "but first of all, slavery gave him no principle. Then, again, with regard to lasciviousness and immorality, the negro received a very poor lesson in that, as the history of the mixed race shows. Is it not the bad example he received in moral restraint that is responsible for his present condition?"

"A famous negro congressman from Mississippi," replied Mr. Jones, "said that God Himself could never educate the negro until the negro thought more of his women and less of whisky."

"I am delighted to have met you, Mr. Jones," said Mr. Macrae, "and to have had the pleasure of hearing you. I would like to have had a longer talk with you upon religious questions as well as the solution of this vexed problem."

"In reference to the religious outlook," said Mr. Jones, "a paralysis seems to be on the churches and on the life of the individual. The churches are not aggressive; we are not holding our own numerically. We have force in a way, but it is not the applied force. It does not take hold of the individual as a great moral force should do, and lift humanity up. The average churchman thinks that if he belongs to a church and is respectable, it is all that could be expected of him."

"Do you think," asked Mr. Macrae, "that in the churches there is too much attention paid to mere dogma and creed?"

"Oh, no!" laughed Mr. Jones, "they have got so now they don't even care anything about creed. The average church member is willing to pay his preacher if you will let him alone. All he wants is just to be let alone. He hasn't life enough to get into a fight."

In these pronouncements it is difficult to discern the spirit of the Gospel, or any recognition of the God either of the Old Testament or of the New. Think of this:—

The democrats of the south . . . are very tractable ordinarily; but put a negro ahead of them, and I imagine that the devil himself could go to school to them and learn some new tricks.

Is there then no God overhead? Is there anything, in all Mr. Jones has said about the Negro, so appalling to the whites, as their condition as described by Mr. Jones under the Democrats who "are running the South politically," and to whom "Satan himself could go to school to learn some new tricks"? There is not in all the South so ominous a sign as the attitude of the white Christians to the Negro, and to the Negro's God, who "hath all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth" (Acts xvii. 24-31; read the whole passage). They either sit on the fence, afraid to make a sign, or they take their positions actively against "their brother in black," as Mr. Jones calls him, although the brother may be three-fourths or seven-eighths white.

MADE OF ONE BLOOD

R. Cope Morgan.

Note from Algeria.

WRITING from El Kseur, Mr. Alfred Smith Lamb says:—"After an absence of over five years, I returned here last January, leaving my family in Scotland. The object I had in view was twofold: to help to encourage fellow-labourers, and to evangelise by word and song among the Kabyles. I have indeed cause to bless God for having enabled me to carry out this object with a certain measure of blessing. Here, as at Taaroost, Tabaarooth and Djemaa-Sahridj, I have had frequent opportunities of ministering to my brethren in the Word, and at each station of speaking and singing the Gospel to numbers of Kabyles, both young and old. God has graciously helped me to add more than a dozen new hymns to the Kabyle collection. These comprise various themes—'The Lord's Coming,' 'The Name of Renown,' 'Two Ways,' 'The Touch of Faith,' &c.

"I may be returning to England soon, but hope that my way may open up to revisit this country later on. The interest shown in the message is greater now than it was years ago. During some of my tours I have felt conscious of the Holy Spirit's presence and power while taking part in a service. I was greatly cheered to meet the young Kabyle Christians at Djemaa Sahridj. There is work to do there in building up the young men and teaching them the things of God. More labourers are wanted."

For the present Mr. Lamb's address is, Chez M. Hocart, Il Mathen, El Kseur, province of Constantine, Algeria.

Young Men in Paris.

THE Anglo-American Young Men's Christian Association of Paris is now thirty-one years old, having been formed mainly through the generous efforts of Sir George Williams in 1868. For the last twenty and odd years it has occupied five small rooms at 160, Rue Montmartre, behind the Bourse, where many a young man has been enlisted as a faithful soldier of the Cross.

Originally the association was composed of French as well as of English young men, until 1888, when the French members, aided by the munificent gift of Mr. James Stokes, of America, separated from their English brethren, worked independently, and ultimately built for themselves the splendid house in the Rue de Trevisa, where the Union Chrétienne has now its headquarters. The English association, which has consisted of 130 to 150 members and associates, has been toiling on through these thirty and odd years, relying entirely upon the annual subscriptions and donations, which barely suffice to make up the £400 required annually for its maintenance.

In spite of the financial hardships which the association has been going through all along, the directors are most thankful to be able to report some very encouraging and rejoicing results of their unwonted efforts in drawing the English-speaking young men in Paris from the fascinating temptations and the bewitching snares of that

BEAUTIFUL, GAY, FRIVOLOUS CITY.

The main object of the directors has been to offer to every English-speaking young man a corner in Paris where he could find the comfort and cheer of a true Christian home, at the same time bringing back to his mind and to his heart the happy and genial influence and enjoyments which he has left behind him by the side of Christian parents in the "home, sweet home," across the Channel and the Atlantic.

The president or the secretary often receives a letter from some young man, a former member or associate, now employed in a firm abroad or returned to "the old country," expressing his deep gratitude for the real spiritual good he received at the Y.M.C.A. The "Testimony Book" of the association contains many such letters. Other young men have expressed their hearty thanks to me personally, or to some other member of the board, for having directed them to 160, Rue Montmartre, where they found what true "heart's ease" meant, and where they were able to spend many a genuine English Christian Sabbath. Several of the members are great helps to the various Protestant English churches of Paris, as leaders of services in and out of the city, active members of various Christian Endeavour societies, helpers in the McAll Mission, &c.: one or two have gone out into the mission field abroad, the Congo and elsewhere.

The directors, as well as the young men, together with the visitors, who number annually 350 to 400, passing through Paris on their way to and from home, find the present rooms far too small and altogether inadequate to the requirements of the association. The association has not been able until now to afford itself a library room, a separate secretary's and committee-room, nor a separate reading-room; hitherto one room has had to serve many purposes. No improvement is possible without large expenditure. A sum of £2,750 is urgently needed to enable the association to move into larger and more commodious quarters, where the young men will be able to enjoy most if not all the comforts and advantages which they expect to find in a Y.M.C.A. Will your readers help us in getting the £2,400 yet needed for this effort?

Jas. Forrister Anderson,
Hon. Sec. Extension Scheme Committee.
A.-A. Y.M.C.A. Paris.

Prayer for the Blind.—The first Sunday in May, which for forty-three years has been set apart for special prayer on behalf of the blind, will again be observed on May 7. I am desirous that as many as possible should join with us in asking a blessing upon what is being done on behalf of this afflicted class.

Brighton. Adelaide E. C. Moon.

South America.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers will be glad to learn that all the work of the Forward Evangelistic Movement of the South American Missionary Society in Buenos Aires is making rapid progress. We have three free schools now fully at work, two for native boys and one for native girls. About 380 children are connected with these schools. In addition to the full course of education prescribed by the Argentine National School Board, the New Testament is a reader in our schools, and Biblical teaching is given every day. It is a standing rule that all our children must attend the Sunday school. This is not possible, however, at present, because our little mission hall could not seat half the number.

Our native services are all well attended; the hall being often quite packed. We hope soon to build a large mission hall, and also a native church. Our colporteur and Bible woman are doing very good work in disseminating the Word of God. The foundations of a great work are being laid, and we much need earnest and constant prayer and generous co-operation.

William C. Morris.

Buenos Aires, March 24.

"Teach Me to do Thy Will."

(Psalms cxliii. 10.)

"Thy will be done, as in Heaven, so on earth."—(Luke xi. 2.)

"It is God that worketh in you, to will and to do of his good pleasure."—(Phil. ii. 13.)

"Teach me to do thy will,"
As the hours and days go by;
Teach me to love and serve Thee still
With single heart and eye.
"Who teacheth like to Thee?"
Patient and sure and true;
Showing each moment tenderly
Just what thy child should do.

"Teach me to do thy will,"
In the little things of life;
Teach me thy pleasure to fulfil
'Mid quietness or strife—
'Mid weariness and pain,
Or joy and gladness fair;
Teach me love's victories to gain
And please Thee everywhere.

"Teach me to do thy will,"
And—to look to Thee alone,
Ready to labour, or be still,
So that thy will be done.
Teach me to show thy praise
In silence, or in speech;
By lip and life, thro' all my days,
As only Thou can'st teach.

"Teach me to do thy will,"
And—have no will but Thine;
Alas! how slowly, and how ill
I learn the task divine!
How often I would fain
That Thou the page should'st turn;
Yet, teach me—e'en through tears and pain—
All Thou would'st have me learn.

"Teach me to do thy will,"
And—to glorify thy Name,
Let me thy purposes fulfil;—
'Twere an Archangel's aim!
Yet I may make it mine,
And press towards it still;
O Teacher, Master, all Divine!
"Teach me to do thy will!"

Plymouth. Edith Gilling Cherry.

["The Master's Touch," "Keep Watch," "With Thee," "The Time is Short," by the same writer are now in print. Address: Mrs. M. S. Cherry, care of the Bible Society's Tract Depôt, Bedford Street, Plymouth. 3d. per doz.]

Mr. Fegan's Homes.—With reference to the action of the Wisborough Green Parish Council last August, in applying to the Court of Chancery for an injunction to restrain Mr. Fegan's boys from using the village green while camping out in the neighbourhood, it is interesting to learn that at the recent election the candidates publicly pledged to welcome Mr. Fegan's boys again this year were all successful, while those who were unfriendly or neutral were all rejected.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Making a God.

THIS is not a pen picture so much as a biography—the biography, in fact, of a heathen god.

Biographies of men who have lived for a purpose and become famous as historians, travellers, inventors, philanthropists, discoverers, or preachers, are full of incidents that thrill and inspire young minds. But the biography of a god is quite a different matter. A heathen deity is nothing but an idol wrought in metal, or wood, or stone. In any case it is the work of men's hands. Mostly it has eyes, ears, feet, hands, mouth, the psalmist tells us; but it neither sees, nor hears, nor walks, nor works, nor speaks. It can, however, have a history. I thought you would be interested in knowing how it came about that a god was made for the Hindus.

Of course, you will have heard already that the false gods of heathendom are generally hideous things, and invariably spoken of as cruel or wicked. They are never to be loved, but feared. They never performed kind or gracious actions unless bribed to do so by gifts of food or money, or by sacrifices. They terrify into obedience, never win it by love. And Jagannatha, of whom I am going to tell you, was

NO EXCEPTION TO THE RULE.

The image of Jagannatha is anything but beautiful and attractive. If you were to dream of it in your sleep it would frighten you. It is an almost shapeless block of wood, with no legs, and only stumps for arms. This then is the story:—

Centuries ago, as the worship of Vishnu—and Jagannatha is only another form of Vishnu—had ceased in a particular district, a king prayed to the god to appear and re-establish his worship. The request was acceded to: the god manifested himself to the king, and instructed him to build a temple, and promised to send the architect and builder of the gods to prepare an image, by which he could be always represented on the earth.

The king, delighted with this honour, did his part. When all was ready Visva-Karma, the divine workman, came down and began his work in an enclosure that was protected by high walls from the gaze of the multitude. Not wishing to be seen at his work, gave strict orders that he was not to be overlooked as he prepared the idol. For some days his wishes were respected. At length the curiosity of the king overcame his discretion, and led him to get a ladder that he might have a peep of the great work in progress. But this curiosity was not passed over. The angry celestial workman returned to heaven, leaving the image in its unfinished state. The king was greatly disappointed at first, as he saw the shapeless block of wood; but was re-assured by Vishnu (Jagannatha) that, notwithstanding its ugliness, it should still be regarded as his representative. To this day, whenever the idols are renewed at Puri, the scene of the worship of Jagannatha, this ugly model is followed.

THE HEAVENLY VISITOR

At certain times in the year—festival days—gold or silver bands are fixed to the stumps of arms to relieve in some measure the ugliness of the image. The object of a visit to Puri is to see this wonderful idol, because to behold Jagannatha is to cleanse the soul from sin. The sanctum in which it is kept is quite dark, and the people are not allowed to remain long in front of it, but are hurried along by the temple officials.

THE IMAGE IS BLACK,

The priests declare that it is because of the enormity of their sins that the vision of the god is withheld. At special festivals the people flock to it in tens of thousands. Many die on the journey to and fro; but there is this consolation for them—the Hindu scriptures distinctly promise that if a pilgrim sets out for Jagannatha's temple and dies on the way, he secures all the benefit that would have come to him had he lived until he reached the place.

You will, I know, think that all this is very absurd, and so it is. But the ignorant people know nothing better, and trust to no other gods than these dumb, hideous carvings for their own salvation. Do not you pity them? Are you not sorry that so very many have never heard of the living God and the Divine Saviour, Jesus? and multitudes who have listened to the missionaries telling of the great love of God for them will not come to Christ and have everlasting life?

You see, it is so easy for these idolatrous people, believing in their own "graven images," to smile at what is preached, and forget it all forthwith. "The effectual fervent prayers" of the humblest of God's children can work spiritual miracles to-day in the hearts of all who trust in the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world.

Thirteenth Prize Competition.

I have pleasure in giving below the names of the successful competitors:—

FIRST PRIZES.

Division I.—Margery Smart, Gladys Mary Stockman, Willie Hooper.

Division II.—Agnes Dick Kay, Gladys Mary Phipps, Marie Alice Meek, David Gardner, Harcourt Hunter.

Division III.—Isabel Winifred Phipps, Muriel Coldicott Sherwin, Muriel Edwards, Dorothy Pelly Grove.

Division IV.—Kathleen Eva Violet Ashworth, John Walter Thomson, Kate Gertrude Johns, Alice Maud Thompson.

SECOND PRIZES.

Division I.—Evelyn Everard Hewer, William Nevill Gordon Boxer, Winifred Eva Martin, Jessie Christine Palmer.

Division II.—Gladys Calvert, Dorothy Gertrude Hewer, Flora Simmons, T. M. Stanier.

Division III.—William Aston, Janet Thomson, Evelyn Mary Shaw, Mary Ellen Plumb, Emily Bridgewater, Ethel Selina Williamson.

Division IV.—Florence Blackman, Francie Hoyte, Ruth Eunice Harrison, Elsie McMullin.

FIRST CERTIFICATES.

Division I.—Dorothy Winifred Nathan, Gwendoline L. Moir, Herbert M. Stuart, Mary Lillian Nathan, Richard Cornthwaite, Thomas John Groombridge, Madge Wilson, E. Thorne, Eleanor Mary Chance, Winnie Williams, Edith Julia Wheeler, Kathleen Elise Pincott, Charles Williams, Daisy Martin, Lizzie Johnstone, Leonard Norman Wall, Hilda Drayson, Ella Berryman, Ella Hake, Dorothy Barrett.

Division II.—Arnold James Akers, Pologhia Daws, Rosa Theodora Hill, Margaret Agnes Morris, Katie Edith Rudland Oliver, Willie Palmer, Aileen Edith Figgis, Sidney Elizabeth Law, Kathleen Alice Shepherd, Louis W. H. Berthé, Frank Thompson, Pringle Wilson Constance Drayson, Reginald V. Measor, Betty Stocks, Herbert H. Braddon, Leonard Southaicke Browne, Dorothy Cooper, Charlotte Aileen Gardner, Charles Macdonald, Dorothy Morris.

Division III.—Alfred Henry Greenacre, C. Bessie Symes Violet G. Donaldson-Selby, Maude Naylor Oakes, Amy Nottage, Eleanor Lowe, Bessie Scantlebury, Blanche Lindup, Isabel Candlin, Temperance Eveline Foskett, Ella C. Williamson, Maude Nottage.

Division IV.—Lindsay Foster Browne, Rosetta Mary Sherwin, Ivy Gladys Donaldson-Selby, Eva Laura Oakes, Ashley Hugh Bowker, Ruth Pledger, Mary Louisa Tibbits, Ethel Hutchings, Nancy Harvey Grove, Freda H. Hunton, Kathleen Scorer, Gwendoline Kathleen Shaw, Randolph Daintree, Flossy Fullarton, Anna Elsie Leigh, Kenneth Julian Vining.

SECOND CERTIFICATES.

Division I.—Cicely Musgrave Craven, Bessie Hope, Ronald Studd, Joseph Gerald Stephens, John MacMurray, Leslie W. Mayes, Harry Gribble, Robert Alexander Weddell, Violet Salvesen, Eileen Margaret Tomlinson, J. Ernest Pearce, Harry Mansfield Lowe, Alice Edith Crang, Dorothy McMullin, John Colville, Louis Maclachlan, Mary Lita Symon, Edith Holms, Elizabeth Bennet Black, Edward George Gidleigh Wheeler, Charlie Banks, Mattie Osmond, Nellie Crawford, C. Alice Reid, Frank Gibbs.

Division II.—Violet Walker, Isabel Inglis, Lily Kinvig, Sidney George Oliver, Margaret Alice Clarke, Florence Hoyte, Ethel Kelsey, Mary Beck, Dorothy Trevor Daintree, Henry Gilbert Allsop, Isabel Theodora Salt, Sydney Charles Speed, May C. Mills, Florence Tomlinson, Winifred Blanche Cox, Evelyn Giddings, Annie Gray Macnair, Hilda Schaeffer, William C. Mallinson, Edwin Laurence Turnbull, W. Harvey, Mary Ada Stopford Law, Arthur George Cox, E. Mabel Golding, Florrie Smith, James Barker, Ida C. Cole, William Douglas Foskett, Alfred Edward Gibbs.

Division III.—Kathleen Mona Gough, Florence Antoria Osmond, Albert Parkes Baker, Charles Herbert Gale, Frances Anna Figgis, Maggie Fullarton, Constance Schaeffer, Mary Josephine Hill, Constance Devenish Mears, Louisa Walker, John Corbet Browne, Irene Gough, George Frederick Drayson, Peter Gibb Nicholson.

Division IV.—Nellie Jelfs, Gladys Allan, Hilda Montgomery Medill, Frances Elizabeth Allsop, Helen M. Hunter, Christina Marshall, John Gibb Nicholson, Undine Muriel Shaw, Arthur Peveril Turnbull, Mary Freeman, Allen Baker.

HONOURABLE MENTION.

Division I.—Charles Wingrave, Walter Stuart Gray, Helen Wingate, May Gray, Violet Dodsworth, Marie Denizot, Charles Noel Wright, Edward Francis Bold Law, Henry Robert Stopford Law, Cecile Helen Wright, Edith Lockhart, Donald Dunn Stanier, Lucienne Brabandes, Jack Maconchy, Daisy Rosalind Clarke, Muriel Patten, Douglas Howard Shepherd, Miriam Ecroyd, Ray Kelsey, Marjorie Tracey, Edith Harvey, Dorothy Berry, Mary H. Neligan, Edith Barker, Eliza Mary Allsop.

Division II.—Edith Jane Lowe, Dorothy Ellen Harris, Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Bessie Freeman, Jeanie Blair Kyle, Agnes Fullarton, Janie Crawford, Mabel Beatrice Candlin, William James Havergal Petter, Enderby Anderson, Willie Rigby, Muriel Ecroyd, Eric Dennis Penrhyn Shaw, Norah Annie Marjory Dyke, James Sinclair Jackson, Gladys Emilie Shaw, Lois Muriel Craven, Dorothy White, Phillis Mary Katharine Wright, Vera Petrides, Daisy Petrides, Abraham Mack, Annie Mackenzie, Daisy Mackenzie, Vera Constance Dickinson, Annie Clarice Gale, Frank Medcalf, Ivy Mabel Sherwin.

Division III.—Millicent Musgrave Craven, W. Stangoe, Christina Nicholson, John Lawrence Clarke, Alice Lemar, Hyacinth Blanche FitzSimons, Gordon Bligh, Margaret Sandles Carter, Maggie Banks.

No. 170.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Gladys Allan*, Violet Ashworth*, Irene Ashdown*, Ralph and Ernst Aldwinckle. Douglas Adams, Willie, Frances and Percy Allen, John Adams.

B—Louis Berthé, Dorothy Billings, Conyers* and Massy* Baker' Eva Browne*, James and Edith Barker, Leonard Bentall, Leonard, Lindsay and Corbet* Browne, Daisy Bowman, Avory, Frank, Teresa and Lilian Blackie, Stanley and Gordon Boxer, Henriette Bardot, Ernestine Buhl, Lucienne Brabandes, Elizabeth* and Janet Black, Kathleen Brenton*, Mary Bryant*, Maud, Sylvia, Evelyn* and Dorothy* Barrett, George and Colin Brown, Gladys* and and Godfrey Bates, Susette Beck, R. G. Browne*, Ruth and Rhoda Braithwaite, Charlie Banks.

C—Alice Cady, Daisy Clarke, Alice Crang*, Janie Crawford, Jessie* and Maggie* Carter, Katie Cross, Joan* Clarke, Beryl Calvert, Duncan Campbell*, William and Mary Charles, Richard Cornthwaite*, Ethel Craigie, Herbert Clark, Walter Carter*, S. A. Cumbers, Dora* and Edith Corrie, Henry Cheney*, Dorothy Cooper, Cicely and Millicent Craven, Arthur Cox.

D—Cecil Darley, Faith Duncan, Albert Davis, Vera Dickinson, Dorothy* and Marjory* Dyke, Violet and Mai Davidson, Jessie Donaldson*, Marie Denizot, Blossom Davis*, Constance Devenish-Mears.

E—Maud Eddey, Leonard Ewin, Muriel and Miriam Ecroyd, Muriel Edwards*.

F—Louise Filhol, Jeanne Faucon, Janet Fawkes*, Constance Furlong, F. A. and Aileen Figgis, Bessie, Kate, Eva, Maggie and Mabel Fletcher, Reginald and Arthur* Findlay, Helen Forbes.

G—Mary Glass*, Agnes Grierson*, Alfred and Frank Gibbs, Minnie and Evelyn Giddings, Thos. Groombridge, Daisy and Ernest* George, Mabel Golding, William Gale*, Henry Gibson, Margaret Gribble, W. and Mildred Greenwood, Harry Gribble, D. Gardiner, Nancy*, Winnie and Dorothy Grove, Edith*, Dorothy, Jack, Margaret* and Stuart Gray.

H—Elsie Hanson*, Violet Holford*, Theodora Hill, Winifred and Edith Harvey, Kathleen Hughes*, Georgette Hoffmann, Jennie Holmes*, Freda Hunton, Sandy and May* Handasyde, Ella Hake*, Mary Haines, Cyril Hills, Gladys and Netta Hussey, Mary Hinton, Marjorie Hogge, Ethel Hutchings*, Edith Holms.

I—Nellie Irving*, Isabel* and Ami Inglis.

J—Emily Jeynes*, Lizzie Johnstone*, Edith Jepson, Kathleen James, Sinclair Jackson.

K—Lily Kinvig, T., Wm., and Isa Kay, Hélèn Kœune, Grace Kerr, Jeanie Kyle*, Flossie Key.

L—Norah, Harry, Linda, Edith, and James Lowe, Hannah Lovell*, Harriet Lynham, Arthur Lamb, Elsie and Guinefred Leigh, G. Lincoln.

M—Edmund Mansfield, John* and Ella MacMurray, Marjorie Macphee*, Florence* Mackenzie, Dora Marples, Mabel McClean, Mabel Morris, James Mackay*, Margaret and Dorothy Morris, Olive Mewburn*, Edith Monet, Louisa Merritt, Dora Muir*, M. Mounstephen, Edith and Mary Maitland Kirwan, Charlotte* and Bessie Millar, Christina Marshall, Hilda Medill*, Dorothy and Sydney Morgan, Nellie* Daisy* and Annie Mackenzie, Howard Moir*, Margie Marston, Abraham and Bella Mack, Maggie Munro, Frank and Charles Medcalf, Eliza and Ian MacGregor, Daisie and Tita Mackenzie.

O—Benjamin Onions, K. Oliver.

P—Laura Percy*, Edith Purkiss, Marjery, Leo and Gordon*, Pibel, Vera and Daisy Petrides, Lillie* and Eva Petter, Ruth Pledger*, Kathleen Pincott, Muriel Patten, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, J. Ernest Pearce*, Winnie Page*, Willie Petter, Percy and Geoffrey Peach, Willie, Ada, and Jessie Palmer.

R—Margie Rickards, Harrington Robley, Evelyn Rashley, Jeanie, John, and Willie Robertson, Willie Rogers, Kathleen Remon, Marjorie and Herbert Rainey, Mary and Willie Rigby, Gussie and Marion Roach, Nora Read, Jessie Roe.

S—Mabel Stembridge, T. M. and D. D. Stanier, Marjorie Sherbrooke, Ronald Studd, Evelyn Shaw*, McLeod Staight, Mervyn, Gwendoline, Undine, Wilfred, Eric, and Gladys Shaw, Violet Salvesen, Bertha Stocker, Alan and Mary Symon, Elsie Slark, Emma* and Susie Sutton, Nellie Sery*, Florrie Smith*, Mary Smith*.

T—Lucy, Fred, and Frances Trotter, Sarah Tyson*, Frank* and Alice* Thompson, Olive Tritton*, Ethel Taylor, Marjorie Tracey, Alice Truelove*, Nannie* and Louie* Tibbits, G. Taylor.

V—Ruth and Dorothy Vigers, Kenneth Vining*.

W—Dorothy Woodforde, George Wright*, Robert and Thomas Weddell, Ibla Woodman*, Madge Wilson, Leonard Wall, Edward and Edith Wheeler, Edith and Ruby Wilkins, Arthur, Violet and Luisa Walker, Charles Williams, Ella Williamson*.

Y—Eva* and Gladys Young.

ANSWERS TO BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 171).

DANIEL.

1. vi. 20. Darius to Daniel.
2. ii. 47. Nebuchadnezzar to Daniel.
3. iv. 3. Nebuchadnezzar to all the people.
4. iv. 27. Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar.
5. i. 4.
6. iv. 3, 4, 16 and 28.
7. Belshazzar, v. 5.
8. v. 25, 26, 27, 28.
9. "Who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?" iii. 15.

"Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and He will deliver us out of thine hand, O king." iii. 17.

"There is no other God that can deliver after this sort." iii. 29.

No. 171.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Zeldah Albert*.

B—Ethel Barclay, Kenneth Dewley, Herbert Braddon*, Kathleen Brenton*.

C—Anna Chanyen, Edie Chevalier*, Lily Church*, Vernon Clarke, Dorothy Cooper, Arthur Cox*, Lois Craven*.

D—Ralph* and Dorothy Daintree, Lucy Davidson*, Pologonia Daws*, Vera C. Dickinson*, Kitty, Violet and Ivy Donaldson-Selby, Stanley Drew, Elizabeth and Constance Drayson.

E—Muriel Ecroyd.

F—Kitty Faussett, Vincent and Mabel Fleet.

G—Clarice Gale*, Mabel Golding, Mary Greenacre*.

H—Hetty Hill, Ruth Hinder, Willie Hooper.

K—Max*, Stanley and Eva* Kalb, Nelly Keeley.

L—Sidney, May, Edward and Henry Law, Margaret Lee, Blanche Lindup*.

P—Leo Pibel*, Evelyn and Hattie* Peters, Lilian Pearson, Kathleen Pincott, Mary Plumb*, Lizzie Pratt.

R—Nora Read, Alice Reid.

S—Hilda Schaeffer, Kathleen, Bessie*, Minnie, Edith* and Douglas Shepherd, Margery Smart*, Jessie Snowball, Lucy Soltan*, Laura Standen*, Douglas Stevens, Betty Stocks*, Mary Symon*.

T—Olive Taylor*, Theodora Thorn*, Florence Tomlinson, Frank Tomkins.

W—Madge* and F.* Wilson, Florence Wild, Sydney Wisdom, Sarah Wood, Phyllis, Cecile and Noel Wright.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 172).

When you have found the words, take the first letter of each, and read downwards. These will form three words of loving invitation found in St. Matthew's Gospel (viii.-xii.).

1. One of the most needed of Christian virtues (1 Cor. xii.-xiv.).
2. How many lepers returned to give thanks? (Luke xv.-xviii.).
3. The blessed to whom mercy is promised. (Matt. iv.-vi.).
4. A title of Our Lord meaning "God with us" (Matt. i.-iii.).
5. An animal of which we have none now (Psalm xc.-xciii.).
6. How many does Paul say are righteous? (Romans i.-iv.)
7. A virtue mentioned as a fruit of the Spirit (Gal. iii.-vi.).

8. A precious stone in the breastplate of the High Priest (Exodus xxviii.)

9. A little word of two letters used by Jesus in speaking of His sheep (John ix.-xi.).

10. What are we to do at the strait gate? (Matt. vi.-viii.).

Uncle Tom.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending April 29.

Sun., April	23	Jer. xxix. 1-14	Thurs., April	27	Jer. xxxvi. 1-10
Mon., ,,	24	,, xxxi. 10-20	Fri., ,,	28	,, xxxvi.16-28
Tues., ,,	25	,, xxxi. 27-37	Sat., ,,	29	,, xxxviii. 1-13
Wed., ,,	26	,, xxxiii. 1-16

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Winchester, May 3; Grantham, May 5; Hale, Altrincham, May 6-7; Liverpool, May 7-8; Bolton, May 9; Heaton Chapel, May 11; Manchester, May 12; Smithills, Bolton, May 13-14; Sheffield, May 15; Bradford, May 16; Pershore and neighbourhood, May 20-25; Rev. R. Callender, Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill, to April 26; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Kettering, to April 24; Mr. J. Spiers, Corn Exchange, York, May 4-19; Mr. W. H. Wilson, Workington, April 25-29 Mr. W. H. Stentiford and Mr. Mont. Goodman, St. Peter's, Cricklewood, April 22-30.

Half-yearly Meetings and Conferences of Scripture Union Secretaries.—Hope Hall, Liverpool, May 8 (4 and 7.30); Central Hall, off Deansgate, Bolton, May 9 (7.30); Strangeways Hall, Manchester, May 12 (3 and 6.30); Y.M.C.A. Hall, Sheffield, May 15 (5 and 7.30); Church Institute, Bradford, May 16 (7.30).

The Aldersgate "Mid-day."

On Monday last Mr. W. R. Lane gave a helpful address on 1 Cor. iii. 4-9. Adopting the illustration which compares Christian workers to husbandmen, the speaker deprecated the too-prevalent view which attached an overwhelming importance to the position of reaper. God gave the increase, and used to the great end many and varied means.

Drawing a lesson of encouragement for all who are engaged in Christian service, Mr. Lane pointed out that, valuable as the labours of evangelists might be, yet in many rich seasons of revival the glorious effects were frequently to be traced to the zeal and entreaties of whole-hearted ministers, the labours of faithful Sunday school teachers, the tears and prayers of loving parents, or the home influence of a godly husband or wife. Mr. Lane urged that less importance be attached to the worker and more to the evangel-message. If this were done, those who laboured sincerely and to their utmost ability without being able, it might be, to point to many results would no longer be unduly downcast, as he, the speaker, had found them to be in many instances. All, prominent or otherwise, who earnestly toiled to secure the harvest, whether by ploughing or sowing, or in whatever way the recurring seasons demanded, would rejoice together at the Great Harvest Home.

Mr. M. H. Hodder added a word on the same line of thought. He recalled a visit to an aged evangelist, who, in refusing to admit having taken any chief share in leading souls to Christ, pointed to his stove fire, and remarked on the many labourers who had toiled to bring together paper, and wood, and coals, and who certainly contributed as much to secure a fire as the person who struck the match and ignited the paper. Pastor Fuller Gooch, who presided, emphasised the value of the points and illustrations of the speakers, and closed the meeting with prayer.

Aid to Discharged Prisoners.—At the annual meeting last week of the Metropolitan Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, Dr. Robert Anderson said he looked forward to the time when crime of a certain sort, which we now blindly and unintelligently regard as inevitable, would be stamped out in this country. He did not despair of a condition of things under which criminals who had proved by their acts that they were outlaws would be removed from the community and placed where they could no longer prey upon it. There remained another class which was encouraged by those professional criminals—people who were drawn into crime for the first time. It had been said that of people in the prisons half ought never to have been sent there and the other half ought never to have been released. The statement was an exaggeration, as most epigrammatic statements were, but there was a great deal of truth in it. The Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society got hold, at the prison gates, of a man who had been once drawn into crime and put before him, not only motives which were admirable, but opportunities of entering upon a new career.

A Scotch F.C. Convention.

Last week an interesting convention was held at the pleasant seaside town of Oban, under the auspices of the Highland Committee of the Free Church of Scotland. It was, so to speak, a sequel to the gathering held in Inverness last autumn. Some sixty F C. pastors were present, besides representatives of other churches; and a good proportion of the general community attended the more public sessions.

From an excellent summary of the practical addresses given in The Oban Times we extract some of the more important utterances of the two days. On Tuesday, the opening day, an impressive Gospel discourse was delivered by Rev. Dr. Whyte, Moderator of the Assembly. At a subsequent conference meeting on "Prayer," Rev. John Hall, of Glasgow, pointed out the need of a still hour for prayer in the cultivation of the religious life. One of the most crying necessities of our religious life was the recovery of the lost art of meditation—what the mystics called the exercise of recollection. Among brethren in the ministry there was a temptation to study the Scriptures professionally, to study them for the benefit of their people, to find a passage that would provide them with capital material. Principal Rainy said that in connection with the reading of Scripture, it might not be a bad rule for some of them to give a corresponding proportion of time to simply thinking and meditating after they had done their reading. A great danger at this time was to be deprived of the power of profitable thinking and meditating. There never was an age when there was so much facility for escaping from thinking, and so much yielding to those temptations.

At a public breakfast on the morning of the second day one of the speakers was Rev. John McNeill. He said he had lately been making a first-hand acquaintance with the Highlands, and he had enjoyed his work. The conditions were different in the south. They were more hearty in the south, and would interrupt the preacher in the middle of his sermon with an "Amen" or "Hallelujah." That would not encourage some Presbyterian ministers; they would lose their place. When he came north after such a career as he had had in England, where the people were so responsive, it seemed strange to find so grim a silence. But they were taking it all in, and if they did not say anything, they were thinking hard, and he had seen that they could be converted to God. The people in the north had their difficulties; they were very doctrinal, and sometimes doctrine came between them and the Lord. But still the Highland heart was there.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY was the first theme of conference on Wednesday, when a number of the ministers spoke.

Principal Rainy, in introducing the speakers, said it had always struck him that when ministers met to discuss their position, one of the first thoughts that must come to their minds was that no class of men could feel themselves so disproportioned to their work. No class of workers had such reason to be conscious of faults and failings in their work in its intellectual and its moral features. But that was not to discourage them, because they had great promises, and they had Christ as their Head. They all fell back at last upon the great truth, that their message was a Divine message, and if they were able to report it faithfully and press it earnestly, it was the message that God would bless amid their imperfections. There were two great dispositions they would do well to have, and to consider how far they had them, with the view to the right discharge of their ministerial work. One of these was—Wonder. There was a fatal flatness about many of their ministrations that disappointed the people and bereaved their work of its power. The prophets were full of wonder at their message. Oh, that we could come to the pulpit thrilling with the wonderfulness of our message! The other disposition he had to speak of was Love. They as men and ministers professed that they had come into a world of love, and that they were the heralds of it. Their ministrations should be animated by a passionate love—love to God and man. If Love came with something wonderful to propound to those whom Love would help, the business would be complete.

Rev. Dr. J. H. Wilson, Edinburgh, pointed out that sometimes two mistakes were made. One was the idea that all who formed their church congregations were Christians in the strictest sense of the word, and that they needed to be helped in the way of instruction and upbuilding, rather than in conversion. The other extreme was that of being exclusively evangelistic—always preaching what was ordinarily understood by preaching and setting forth the way of salvation. They must keep these extremes in view; but they were not to lose sight in the very first instance of the great and blessed work of winning souls. They might spend much time upon sermons, but if there was no saving power accompanying them, there would be no ingathering of souls.

Rev. Mr. McCallum, Ardeonaig, said that on the previous evening reference had been made to "gloomy Christians." He was opposed to gloomy Christians, but he was likewise opposed to frivolous Christians. He would combine the cheerful and the grave Christian in one person.

A discussion on the subject of the Youth of the Church, was next entered on with spirit and some practical suggestions made. One speaker, a "layman," thought that there was need for a university chair for the teaching of sympathy with the young and tact with the old.

In the afternoon the work of office bearers was spoken of, and thereafter the topic of was earnestly and practically considered.

TEMPERANCE

Ex-Provost MacLeish, Fort William, alluded to the changes that had come over some of our social drinking customs, and to the many efforts being made to cope with drunkenness. Every one agreed that something must be done to remove the danger of indulgence in alcoholic liquor. Let them try to do all they could, and remember that God was on their side.

Rev. Wm. Muir, Blairgowrie, said that only a great revival all over the country would enable them to deal satisfactorily with this question.

Mr. Guthrie, Q C., said his experience legally in the civil and criminal courts, and as legal adviser to the Church, led him to the conclusion that for Scotland, at the present time, next to religion, there was no cause so important as that of temperance. There was no adequate remedy for the existing evil other than total abstinence. He called upon them to take a stand for total abstinence on the ground of Christian expediency. The matter was summed up in the words so often quoted: "If we become total abstainers, it will make our heads clearer, our hearts lighter, and our pockets heavier." But he appealed to them on the even higher ground—"I will not eat flesh, or drink wine, or anything whereby my brother stumbleth or is offended."

Rev. John McNeill contributed a speech urging particularly upon Highlanders that total abstinence was not "a reflection upon the grace of God," as was written in a certain pamphlet.

At a largely-attended public assembly on the last day an admirable and timely address was given by Mr. C. J. Guthrie on "John Knox and His Work." He vindicated the character of the great Reformer, not only as a strong Protestant, but as a man worthy of respect and admiration in all the relations of private life. Principal Rainy spoke with knowledge and sympathy of the work of John Wesley. Dr. Whyte closed the conference with a dissertation on a congenial theme, "Boston, of Ettrick," whose autobiography he highly commended for study.

Personalia.

Rev. R. Balgarnie is slowly recovering from nervous exhaustion, and is ordered to Bournemouth for rest and change.

Mr. Monro Collings, who has been in poor health for some time, has completely broken down with the strain of constant meetings. He has been ordered a long rest, and his engagements have been cancelled. He requests that our readers will remember him in prayer.

Home Missions.

Orphan Homes of Scotland.

OUR earnest friend, Mr. Wm. Quarrier, of Glasgow, has sent out an "Occasional Paper" describing the present condition of his various philanthropic agencies and the special burdens that press upon him. After uttering some notes of praise, he refers in detail to the controversy between the County Council and himself as to the payment of rates for the Orphan Homes at Bridge of Weir.

It may be remembered that for sixteen years the homes were exempted from rating, on the ground of their being entitled to that benefit under the Act of 1869, which allows taxes to be remitted on buildings where free education is given to the poor, and where Sunday schools and other free classes are carried on. Certain members of the County Council insisted on claiming rates, and the question was tried in the Outer Division of the Court of Session as to whether Mr. Quarrier's institutions were entitled to remission. The decision was that though there were all the elements of a ragged school, they could not on the whole claim exemption. Appeal was taken to the Inner Court of Appeal, and here judgment was given against Mr. Quarrier on an entirely different ground. The argument of the judge in the Court of First Instance was ignored; but it was laid down that the operative words of the Act were only permissive, and not absolutely binding. As the Council had not exercised its discretion, the benefits of the Act were not available.

These conflicting decisions leave the matter in a very unsatisfactory and uncertain state, and Mr. Quarrier is anxious to refer the dispute to the House of Lords for final decree. He appeals to all the friends of rescue and Christian work among the poor to help him in this struggle by contributing to his

HEAVY LEGAL EXPENSES.

His contention is that the Homes have relieved the public rates to a large extent by caring for the neglected children, who would otherwise have been a burden on the community, and on that ground they are entitled to exemption. His plea, it seems to us, is at once sound and just, and we hope he may be the ultimate victor in this legal tournament.

The Occasional Paper tells also of the progress of his consumption hospitals, which have already done good service in a curative sense. Mr. Quarrier wants to have six of these hospitals, with a total accommodation for 200 patients, but as yet he has only got the means to carry through half his scheme, and he invites other wealthy friends to have a share in this good enterprise. The hon. secretary of the hospital department is Mr. D. Hill Jack, 141, West George Street, Glasgow.

The emigration of boys and girls to Canada in connection with these Homes has been stopped by our friend for two years past, because he does not see his way to expose these young emigrants to Government interference on the other side, in the terms of a recent Act passed for Ontario. As to whether he has sufficient grounds for so deciding we express no opinion; at any rate, as he remarks, Scotland will gain what Canada loses, as the boys and girls are now being carefully trained for home trades and domestic service respectively. As to the work of home-training, Mr. Quarrier says:

During the winter months we have admitted to the Homes ninety-eight children, not a few of whom have been taken out of the hands of cruel parents and relatives who have had to suffer the penalty of the law for ill-using their little ones. Our family at present numbers close upon 1,200, and it takes on an average £50 a day, or £15,000 a year, to feed and clothe and educate them. In addition to this, we require £10,000 annually for new buildings, making a total of £25,000. Those who give of their means to help forward the work will find that the investment is one that pays in the salvation of young lives, in the healing of diseased bodies, as well as in spiritual results. We require new cottages to provide accommodation for our increasing family, and trust some friends will be led to give money to build one or more at a cost of £2,000 each. No more fitting monument could be raised to the memory of some loved one gone home.

We heartily commend our brother and his good work to the generous consideration of our readers. His address is Orphan Homes of Scotland, Bridge of Weir, Renfrewshire.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle.

THE following appeal, initiated without the knowledge of the Tabernacle authorities, is a gratifying instance of brotherly fellowship, to which we hope a liberal response will be made:—

"The work of the late C. H. Spurgeon has been of such world-wide influence that there is probably no country in which English-speaking people are found where that influence has not been very beneficial.

"We, the undersigned, representing various denominations, think that the appeal now being made for funds to complete the rebuilding of the Metropolitan Tabernacle (which, as you know, was destroyed by fire last year) is one which will awaken a chord of sympathy in the hearts of Christians generally, no matter to what branch of the Christian Church they belong.

"Some £8,000 are still required to complete the undertaking without debt, and we hope you will see your way to contribute to this end. Gifts may be remitted to Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington, London, S.E." Signed by—

Lord Overtoun,	Rev. J. Monro Gibson, D.D.,
Lord Radstock,	Rev. Chas. Garrett,
Rev. Canon Fleming,	Rev. Samuel Vincent,
Rev. A. McLaren, D.D.	Geo. Cadbury, Esq.,
Rev. Mark Guy Pearse,	T. A. Denny, Esq.
Rev. Newman Hall, D.D.,

Cage Lane Mission, Plumstead.

THE annual meeting in connection with the useful work at Plumstead, maintained for so many years under the guidance of Mrs. General Anderson, was held on Thursday last at the mission centre in Lakedale Road.

Since the initiation of the work the district has grown enormously, until there extends from the gates of England's great arsenal such a vast working-class population as affords a splendid field for the devoted workers of Cage Lane. The open-air and indoor evangelistic agencies in connection with the mission are many and thriving, and by Divine blessing the faithful words of preachers and teachers have resulted in the changed lives of many hearers. The year's record bristles with striking incidents.

General Sir Wm. Stirling, who presided, spoke in stimulating terms of the industrious efforts put forth in spite of the difficulties attaching to what was to a great extent a floating population. Passing to the spiritual needs of those engaged in the work, he encouraged them in the thought of the unity of the Church—those who had passed to the heavenly city, and those still labouring in Cage Lane being one in Christ. In appealing words Sir William called for continued labour in consecration and faith.

Mr. J. Lydall, in the course of a brief but spiritual address, urged that Christians should concern themselves more as to their personal religion, that there should be a great increase in prayer, in meditation on the Word, and in evangelistic effort on behalf of the perishing multitudes.

Colonel Roberts added cheery words, especially addressed to young men. In the course of his report on the year's work, Mr. Carnegie remarked that in the day of small things, when they were housed in a hay-loft, moderate funds were well able to cover all the cost, but now that the work had far outgrown its original dimensions, they gladly welcomed outside aid towards reaching so many of the "home heathen" still sitting in darkness. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Anderson, Cage Lane Mission, Plumstead.

Sailors at Poplar.

IF you want to meet with sailors at the hour of entering or leaving the Port of London, you will find them in large numbers around Limehouse and Poplar. Thither, accordingly, flock the crimps and harpies bent upon robbery and ruin, and many a sad tale might be told of lonely seamen being tripped to a terrible fall immediately after being paid off from long voyages. Thank God, this mission field is not now left unchallenged in the hands of the devil and his agents, but Christian men and women are engaged in efforts to shield Jack from his enemies, and bring him under Gospel influences for his present and eternal good.

A singularly interesting piece of work in this line is the Wesleyan Seamen's Mission, over half a century old, and at present under the sympathetic direction of Rev. David Roe. The chapels of the mission are the home and centre of good work, but after visiting the Seamen's Rest, in Jeremiah-street, we are inclined to regard them as of secondary importance. It is impossible to conceive a more advantageous position than that occupied by the Rest, immediately in front of the busy offices of the Board of Trade, whither sailors resort in a steady stream throughout the day to sign articles and receive their pay. The Rest overlooks the entry to the offices, and its agents and workers are ever at hand to act as true friends and counsellors of home and foreign seamen.

Formerly a public-house, and known as "The Magnet," this Rest is now as public as ever, and more worthily magnetic. The workers tell wonderful stories of men being found of Christ in its walls. A Bible Class, held daily at noon, has been the means, in God's hand, of arresting many in the downward course, and as sure as the poor fellows turn their feet into the way of the Divine law, and come under the influence of the love of Christ, they find situations, and are enabled to regain moral health and dignity. Men of various nationalities benefit by this excellent institution, and the workers rejoice to tell of God's blessing upon their labours and of his gracious response to the prayer of faith.

Miss Gurney recently wrote in her journal:—"One thing has struck me often: that when a man has sought 'first the Kingdom of God' the other needful things have been added. Men have said more than once, 'I gave my heart to God last week, and He has found me work to do since then.' One man said to me one Sunday, 'I found you were right this week, as I have got work, and am to go on Tuesday.' I said, 'How was I right?' and he said, 'You told me to trust and pray about it, and I did.'"

Our indebtedness to the men who "go down to the sea in ships" is great. Whether coming off our great liners or off vessels of lower degree, thousands of men in East London are thrown upon Christian care and sympathy. Those who would like a partnership interest in work for the lasting good of such should communicate with Rev. David Roe at 18, Stainsby Road, Poplar, E.

"In His Steps."—The following letter was written to an inquiry as to Mr. Sheldon's views:—"My dear Brother,—I believe with all my soul in the Atonement of Christ for a sinful world, and I preach it constantly in my church. The book, 'In His Steps,' was written to arouse church members and nominal Christians. It was not written as a text-book on the doctrine of the Atonement.—Very cordially, your brother, Charles M. Sheldon.

Topeka, Kansas, U.S.A., March 29, 1899.

Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission.—The annual report of this mission is a pithy record of good work. By personal dealing and the distribution of literature, many foreign sailors have been helped to a better life. Some hundreds of yachtsmen also have received during the year bags of books; Testaments, Gospels, &c. Much encouragement has followed the work on board the lightships anchored off Spithead and Southampton water. The men always give a warm welcome and listen attentively to a Gospel address. On shore, both among adults and children, the various undertakings have been much blessed. Copies of the report may be obtained, post free, from Mrs. Cook, 47, Stoke Road, Gosport.

Welsh Forward Movement.

THIS movement was started for the purpose of evangelising the lapsed English-speaking masses of South Wales and Monmouthshire. Thousands of the wildest spirits from different parts of the world flock to the great seaports of Glamorgan and Monmouth, and thousands, too, of the most reckless from all parts of the British Isles pour into the great coalfields of these counties. The development of the coal mines has been such of late years that Glamorganshire in point of increase stands at the top of all the counties of Great Britain; in this respect Monmouthshire stands fourth, while Cardiff stands at the top of all the towns of the British Isles in point of increase.

If this were all, Welsh Christians would only have cause to rejoice; but alas! with this growth of population has come an increase of sin and crime. Realising these facts, Rev. J. Pugh left his charge in a well-to-do neighbourhood of Cardiff some seven years ago, and initiated the forward movement which, under God, has wrought marvellous results.

The movement, begun in a borrowed Gospel tent, has now thirty-three mission centres in full operation. These are chiefly situated in the most neglected and populous districts, where ordinary Church methods are of little avail in evangelising the lapsed masses. The growth of this movement has been so rapid that the committee—consisting of forty of the leading ministers and laymen of the Principality—have been at their wits' end to know how to meet the urgent demands made upon them. But they have felt compelled to go forward in this campaign against the forces of evil.

With all the rapid advance which this movement has made among non-church and chapel goers, the committee have been compelled for lack of funds to turn a deaf ear to the clamant needs of many a sadly neglected district.

CARDIFF.

They have been appealed to for over six years to do something for the neglected thousands of Cathays and its immediate surroundings. To meet the needs of at least 20,000 souls there is not sitting accommodation for 3,500 in all the places of worship in the district. For some time the committee could not secure a site for the erection of a suitable hall and school premises. Last year, however, they persuaded a Cardiff builder to give up an excellent site. As he had begun to build upon the land and gone to some expense, they had to pay him £124 in order to secure freedom of contract on his 99 years' lease. The annual ground rent on the piece which he surrendered is £30 per annum—not dear as things go in Cardiff.

The new hall proposed to be erected will hold 800 persons, but will be so constructed as to hold 1,200 with very little additional expense. This hall—with a school hall for the children—will cost £2,600.

An old Sunday drinking club, which has done immense mischief, and which has been recently closed, is now offered for £1,100. At the back of it are five rooms, which may be fitted up for mission and rescue work for £100. Something is sadly needed on this spot to save the young girlhood of the district. If God's stewards will help in the purchase of these premises a good work will be carried on at Cathays, an experienced Christian worker and his wife will be placed in charge of the home, with a trained Christian Sister to work among the suffering poor and their children.

Anyone desiring further information regarding the special needs of the work about to begin at Cathays, Cardiff, or to help the general work of the movement, are invited to correspond with the general superintendent, Rev. John Pugh, 32, Llanbleddvan Gardens, Cathays, Cardiff.

Canarvon Y.M.C.A.—The inaugural meeting of a new branch has been held. Rooms have been opened in a central part of the town, and the membership of the association already exceeds fifty.

Obituary.

GENERAL SIR JOHN FIELD.

THE death took place at Guildford, on Sunday last, of this well-known officer, who acted for so many years as secretary of the Evangelical Alliance. His military service was largely given to India, where he commanded a native regiment in the time of the Mutiny. He was appointed to this command because of his known influence over the Sepoys. He also rendered distinguished service in the Abyssinian expedition of 1867-68, and received in consequence the titular honour of C.B. He was for over three years Judge Advocate-General of the Bombay Army. During recent years he was best known for his earnest efforts on behalf of Christian unity and kindred objects in connection with his secretariat of the Evangelical Alliance. His son now fills that post. General Field had attained the age of seventy-eight.

SIR MONIER MONIER-WILLIAMS.

The death is announced of Sir Monier Monier-Williams, Boden Professor of Sanscrit in the University of Oxford. He died last week at Cannes from the effects of pneumonia supervening on influenza, in the eightieth year of his age. He was the third son of the late Colonel Monier-Williams, Surveyor-General of the Bombay Presidency, and was educated privately and at King's College, London, and Balliol College, Oxford. Obtaining an East Indian Writership, he proceeded as a student to the East Indian College at Haileybury, where he took the first prizes in all the Oriental subjects, but for domestic reasons did not proceed to India, resigning his appointment and returning to Oxford. At Oxford he entered University College, and was elected to the Boden Sanscrit Scholarship in 1843. Having taken his degree, he went to Haileybury as Professor of Sanscrit, Bengali, and Telugu, remaining there for twelve years. In 1860 he was elected to the Boden chair at Oxford. He was an hon. D.C.L. of Oxford, and hon. LL.D. of Calcutta, and hon. Ph.D. of Göttingen. In 1880 he was made a Companion, and in 1887 created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Indian Empire, in recognition of his exertions in founding the Indian Institute at Oxford, which was opened in 1884. This was the crowning work of his life, and in pursuit of it he made several journeys to India with the object of securing the support and co-operation of educated natives, combining with his project the establishment of a school for Indian studies at the University. Sir Monier was an authority on Buddhism and other Oriental systems of religion. A sincere Christian man, he occasionally delivered strong utterances on the missionary platform, and spoke warmly in the interest of the Bible Society and its work.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. Matthew Davison, minister-emeritus of the Presbyterian church at Clapton, and formerly of Birdhopecraig, Northumberland, aged seventy-two.—Rev. Dr. Muir, of Huntingdon, Canada, recently died of pneumonia. He was a native of Argyleshire, but had with remarkable success served the Presbyterian Church of Canada for nearly forty years.—Rev. F. G. Marchant has succumbed to the trying illness from which he had been suffering for some few months. His retirement from his position as one of the tutors in the Pastors' College was mainly due to the state of his health. Mr. Marchant entered the ministry thirty-five years ago, being one of the earliest of the late Mr. Spurgeon's students.—Rev. J. J. Irving, pastor of the Baptist Church, Appleton, Wis., U.S.A., died March 17, aged fifty-four. He studied at the Pastors' College, and held pastorates in England at Melton Mowbray, Swadlincote and Maidenhead. He left for the States in 1886.—Rev. John Boyd, of Skelmorlie, aged fifty-eight. He was the first minister of the church at Skelmorlie, a union charge comprising adherents of the Presbyterian Free Church. During the twenty-eight years of his pastorate the place of worship was built, and two years ago it was largely extended.—Mr. Duncan Watson, aged eighty, of Pollokshaws. He took a prominent part in public work, and was a familiar figure at Synod meetings.—Rev. Joseph R. Cleminson, Wesleyan, in his seventy-fifth year. He entered the ministry in 1849 and travelled principally in northern circuits.—At Chelmsford, Rev. George Sargeant, Wesleyan. He had been in the ministry fifty-two years, and rendered great service in the West Indies, being at one time President of the West Indian Conference. On retiring from active work he settled at Chelmsford and heartily aided the causes in that circuit.—At Bournemouth, Mrs. Close, widow of the late Dean Close, of Carlisle, in her ninety-fourth year.—Rev. J. Lomax, rector of Washington, county Durham, from pneumonia, after three days' illness.—At Dunkineely, T. M. Pollard, M.D., for many years a devoted Methodist class leader and Sunday school worker.—At Carrickfergus, Mrs. Johnston Bowman, a faithful follower of Jesus Christ.

About Books.

The Bible Definition of Religion, by George Matheson, D.D., is an exposition of Micah vi. 8. (1s. J. Clarke & Co.) Christian people do well to heed the message of this searching booklet.

The Palm Branch, and other verses, by Arthur R. Shrewsbury, minister of Albion Church, Hammersmith, is a choice little volume of poems, some of them in hymn form. (Elliot Stock.)

A volume of exceptional utility in its special line is The Abiding Law: Twelve Addresses on the Ten Commandments. By Rev. James Aitken, M.A., Dundee. (2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) The pages will prove of real help to students and teachers, alike as regards the Mosaic law and Christian ethics.

A book deserving the earnest attention of parents, and calculated to save young men from evil courses, is Through Boyhood to Manhood: a Plea for Ideals. By Ennis Richmond. (2s. 6d. Longmans.) The main divisions of the book are Unselfishness, Self-control, and Purity. The author is candid and practical.

The biographies of members of the Society of Friends have a peculiar charm for many minds. A typical little work of this order is Memorials and Letters of Ann Hunt (late of Bristol), compiled by Matilda Sturge. (3s. 6d. Headley Brothers.) There is a portrait of the subject of the book, and the letters are profitable reading.

The Bishop of Stepney has brought together a series of discourses, with the title Banners of the Christian Faith. (3s. 6d. Gardner, Darton & Co.) Designed to "explain in a popular way the main truths which a consistent Churchman holds," the pages will find a welcome with many. Here and there the teaching is decidedly "Catholic."

Dr. Ernst Dryander, of Berlin, is widely known as a scholar and preacher, and a series of addresses by him have been issued with the title, A Commentary on the First Epistle of St. John. (5s. Elliot Stock.) Translated and edited by Rev. W. O. E. Oesterley, these pages open up a very important part of the New Testament, to a practical purpose and in a thoroughly devotional spirit.

A historical sketch which will be valued by all who are interested in ecclesiastical developments and distinctions, is The Origins of Scottish Presbytery, by Rev. A. Morris Stewart, M.A., High Street Free Church, Arbroath. (1s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier). Many will welcome a statement which Principal Rainy and Professor Orr declare, in an introductory note, to be "compact, intelligible, and interesting" in form.

A little work of peculiar interest is In Christ Jesus; or, the Sphere of the Believer's Life, from the pen of Dr. Arthur T. Pierson. (2s. 6d. Funk & Wagnalls.) The doctrinal significance of the words that constitute the title will be readily allowed. In these pages their teaching is set forth in general and in particular, a luminous introduction being followed by studies founded on the Epistles of Paul. The result is a book full of instruction, and edifying in a remarkable degree.

Rev. A. R. Cavalier, of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, has written a useful story of mission work in zenanas, hospitals, schools, and villages, with the title In Northern India (Partridge & Co.). The pages describe a tour which the author recently took, visiting mission stations in Bombay, the Punjaub, and North-West Provinces. Lord Kinnaird, who also went over the ground, writes a hearty introduction to the book. There are many illustrations, and the work is sure to do much good by way of exciting interest in evangelistic work among the millions of our immense Eastern dependency.

The "Present-Day Preachers" series has been enriched with a volume of choice sermons by Dr. Alexander McLaren, entitled A Rosary of Christian Graces. (3s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son.) The discourses are twenty-one in number, and all of the high order which the author's name guarantees. The first seven are based on the clauses of 2 Pet. i. 5-7, and two follow on the next four verses of the famous passage. From these the book receives its title. The remaining twelve sermons are on great texts, and the treatment is always luminous and spiritually instructive. The exterior and general get-up of the book leave nothing to be desired, and the portrait frontispiece is a feature of special interest and value.

Messrs. George Newnes & Co. have issued Mr. Gladstone's book The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture in their well-known "Sixpenny" series.

The Handy Guide to May Meetings (Id. May, 21, St. Bride Street) this year contains, in short and handy form, an increased amount of reference matter, and is altogether a convenient little handbook.

Evangelistic.

Mrs. Baeyertz in Sunderland.

THROUGH the mission which Mrs. Baeyertz has been holding in Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland, the joy of faith has come to many hearts; while there has also been gladness in the hearts of believers, as these seeking ones have found the Saviour and been found by Him. Close upon 500 persons have been in the inquiry-room as expressive of their desire to know the Lord. The varied character of the cases dealt with in the inquiry-room has been most marked. The burly miner and the little child have sat side by side; the maid-of-all-work has been seeking Christ as earnestly as the lady with her jewelled hand; and hardened sinners, as well as young manhood and young womanhood, have been found at the feet of Jesus.

The meetings have been crowded every night, and sometimes closely packed, even on several occasions when the rain poured. On the last Sunday evening hundreds could not obtain admission, although all standing room was occupied, and the adjacent vestries were filled.

The afternoon Bible readings have been exceptional in their attendance, the large chapel being nearly full on the last afternoon. Christians have been searched, helped, and stimulated by the truth ministered. The churches in Sunderland have every reason to praise God for the manifestation of his working. And those who read this report are asked to pray that all who have professed faith in Christ may be kept true and thorough in their allegiance to Him. F. E. Marsh.

Sunderland.

Mr. Henry Thorne has held Gospel services in Queen's Park Congregational Church, Manchester.

United Evangelistic services have been conducted by Rev. J. T. Mateer at Isleham, Cambs., with good results. Quite a number have professed faith in Christ during the sixteen days' services. Bible-readings were held in the afternoons.

A fifteen days' united mission has been held in the Congregational and Wesleyan churches, Isleworth, by Mr. Monro Collings. A rich spiritual blessing has been received; many persons have professed decision. The afternoon Bible readings were a great spiritual stimulus both to believers and seekers alike.

Mr. Thomas Payne has concluded a four days' mission at St. Alban's, Berington, Liverpool. Though the time was short, there was much blessing. The addresses were thoroughly sound and scriptural, and the word was indeed with power, as was evident by many seeking pardon and peace, not a few of whom were enabled to rejoice in the knowledge of God's forgiving love.

Mr. Chas. Inglis has been conducting services during March at the Edinburgh Castle. God has been pleased to honour his servant again in this place; for by the message of the Gospel from his lips several souls professed decision for the Lord in accepting Him as their Saviour. It was also a time of refreshing to the children of God. May the Lord spare our friend and brother to return to us again!

Walter Notman, Secretary.

Mr. James Wharton conducted a mission at Orange Park, Florida, U.S.A., from March 22 to 30. The work was chiefly in connection with the Orange Park Normal and Manual Training School. At the close of the mission every boarding student was a professing Christian and nearly every day student. In addition, some of the people of the town were reached. Mr. Wharton's work was a great blessing both to the school and town.

Ernest R. Latham, Principal.

Orange Park, Florida, U.S.A.

Dorking, in Surrey, has been the scene of much spiritual awakening of late. The minister of the Baptist Chapel at the beginning of this year rallied his Church members for prayer. For many weeks incessant and earnest work was done in conviction and consecration among the Christians. Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a fortnight's mission in the Baptist Chapel, and God has greatly honoured him in gathering in many. An interesting feature of the work has been that so many young people have been brought in, so that in several of the churches in the town parents have had the joy of children, sometimes three and four in a family saved. An-Eye-witness.

EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—The following missions among others will be in progress on Sunday next:—Great Assembly Hall, H. Collins; Warnford, J. Shields; Salford, J. Whiting; Wandsworth, Hy. Bray; Colchester, J. Stanger; High Wycombe, C. Noakes; Fressingfield, A. E. Knight; Whissonsett, C. Chenery; Martock, Jas. Lovell; Shaftesbury, H. S. Smith; Bournemouth, T. Goudie; Ucklow, G. Attwood; Liverpool, H. Laughland; Glasgow, J. W. Moodie; Coalsnaughton, C. Galletley; Woodside, C. G. Roger; Castletown, H. Young; Cambuslang, R. Hill; Kirkhill, D. Pittendrigh.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Till Apr. 24, Woodford; 30-May 8, Windsor; 13-21, Sidcup.

Gipsy Smith.—Till Apr. 24, Swindon; 29-May 8, Bristol; 13-22, Marylebone.

Mr. E. P. Telford.—Apr. 23-May 4, Leeds; 21-28, Bromley.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—May 7-22, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—Apr. 23, Stratford; 24, 25, Chester; 26, Bristol; 27, 28, North Wales; 30, Stratford Conference Hall; May 1-5, Dorking.

Mr. William Grove.—Till Apr. 24, Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

Mr. Jas. Spruntt.—Apr. 23, 26, Willesden Hall, N.W.; 27, Union Hall, Carlisle Street, N.W.; 30-May 14, Pulborough; 21-28, Billinghurst.

Mr. Newton Jones.—Apr. 22-27, Greenhithe, 29, 30, Ealing; May 7, 8, Chester; 14, 15, Huntingdon; 21, Oxford; 27-29, Bedford.

Rev. F. C. Spurr (Missioner of the Baptist Union).—Apr. 30-May 7, Onslow Chapel, Brompton, S.W., daily at 3.15 and 8.

Brothers Weaver.—Till Apr. 28, Hamilton; 30-May 2, Langholm.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Apr., Park Hall, Barking.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till Apr. 23, Dundee; 30-May 12, Banchory.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Till Apr. 24, Bristol; 29-May 8, Sunderland; 13 and 21, South Croydon; 17, Dorking; 27-June 5, Ramsden Road, Balham.

Mr. John Elliott.—Till Apr. 23, Marchand Bishop, Devonshire; 24-30, Barn Mission, Priddington.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander.—Apr. 22 May-3, Presbyterian Church, High Road, Tottenham.

Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday, Apr. 23, at 7, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Tuesday, 25, at 7, and Thursday, Apr. 27, at 8, Mr. A. C. Barley. Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sunday, Apr. 23, at 7, Thursday, Apr. 27, at 8, Mr. P. H. Thompson.

Letters to the Editor.

The New Biblical Guide.

DEAR SIR,—There is reason to fear that the present aggressive unbelief in centres of theological teaching will lead to a sure, though slow and silent, relinquishing of belief in the Word of God among the people. Their faith will die under the pressure of a seemingly authoritative opinion.

I feel that we must get at the people before this fatal work goes further. I hope to begin in September the issue of a popular edition of "The New Biblical Guide," in sixpenny monthly parts. Each volume will be completed in seven parts, and arrangements will be made for binding the volumes cheaply and well. Care will be taken to have it abreast of the latest researches.

But I may publish, and yet not reach the people. Every well-wisher can give me most valuable assistance by obtaining a few subscribers among friends. Will those who feel with me that this work ought to be done, send me a postcard with name and address?—I am, yours sincerely, John Urquhart.

Parkview, Cambuslang, N.B.

An Appalling Experiment.

SIR,—Nowhere is experimentation on living animals more rampant than in Germany; yet it is in that country and in Austria that the most scandalous abuse of hospital patients constantly takes place.

The Medical Press and Circular in a recent issue (March 29) states that a member of the German Parliament recently called attention to the fact that a certain professor had actually published the results of his experiments in inoculating eight healthy persons with the serum of the victims of the most loathsome disease which afflicts the human race. The Minister admitted the gravity of the charge, and promised an inquiry. La Semaine Médicale says that the incriminated doctor is Dr. Neisser, and that his experiments are described in Vol. XLIV. of the "Archiv. für Dermatologie." He injected eight healthy girls with specific virus derived from subjects suffering from a horrible disease. Of these eight healthy girls, four developed the hideous malady.

The craze for serum experiment, and the rage for bacteriological inoculations, are fostered by the countless experiments on animals, carried out in the Pasteur Institutes, everywhere being established with the assistance of the wealthy.

These experiments, it has been proved a hundred times, imperatively demand human victims. It is protested that there is no danger of that in this country. I believe that the enthusiastic investigator is the same in all places. The great John Hunter, often called the father of English surgery, records in one of his works how he inoculated with this same disease a man, a woman, and a child in St. George's Hospital, London.

So far from experiments on animals saving human beings from the researches of enthusiastic investigators, the practice of vivisection directly leads to them.

The root of the upas tree is in the laboratory of the vivisector; the fruit, in the hospital ward.—Yours, &c.,

Edward Berdoe, M.R.C.S., &c.

Tynemouth House, Victoria Park Gate, E.

The Sects Abroad.

Correspondence continues to reach us treating of the recent articles by Pastor Fuller Gooch and Rev. Heywood Horsburgh on Undenominationalism, at home and abroad, and especially of the influence of sectarianism in the mission field. Mr. I. Churan Greet in the course of an interesting letter says:—

"It is to be regretted that such undue prominence has been given to the names of sects and their doctrinal or other differences before the heathen. 'Sects' at most should be no more than sections of an acknowledged whole. But why confuse the Hindu with such things as 'Metodee' (Methodist), 'Ishkatch' (Scotch), 'Speejee' (S.P.G.), &c?"

"Two to four open-air meetings are sometimes to be seen going on simultaneously in one of the public squares of Calcutta by Christians of different denominations. (Praise God that more open-air work is done than was at one time.) Ninety-nine hundredths of the people passing are Hindus, Mohammedans, and such. Imagine one of them laid hold of by the Word. Suppose he inquires of someone where the preachers' 'girjas' (church buildings) are. Perhaps somebody among the bystanders is able to tell him that the 'girja' of yonder group is in Dharamtalah Street, the group to the left have theirs in Wellesley Street leading out of it, that of those nearest him is in the same street as the first one, and the fourth he doesn't know. If the inquirer goes to these places he sees inside the palings a notice board with a mysterious name—each different. Of course he wants to know which is Christian.

"It would not be hard for us to make the A B C of the Hindu's introduction to us simpler in several ways, and one trifling thing that would contribute to it more than we think would be to cease to placard our 'girjas' with enigmas for the passing crowds of people who don't know Christian church history."

Requests for Prayer.

For a special mission, commencing on Sunday, 23rd, in Havelock Place Mission Hall, Belfast.

For blessing on a mission to be conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, from April 29 to May 8, under the auspices of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A.

For blessing on mission services at St. George's Church, Tufnell Park, N., by Rev. E. J. Kennedy, April 23 to May 1.

Inebriates' Homes.—Three inebriate reformatory institutions under the recent Act have been certified under the Home Office, and are actually at work These are the Royal Victoria Homes, Bristol, which are certified for sixty women; Lady Henry Somerset's Homes, at Duxhurst, certified for twelve women; and St. Joseph's Home, Ashford, for Roman Catholics. Committals have already been made under the Act. All these homes, however, at present receive women only. There is an immediate need of a reformatory institution to be certified to receive men.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

It is stated that the Bishop of Exeter expects shortly to resign his see, in consequence of his advanced age and increasing weakness.

The vicar of Maindee, in order to meet the spiritual needs of a rapidly growing population, proposes to purchase and remove an iron church from Newport capable of accommodating 600 worshippers.

The Bishop of Beverley, in consequence of an attack of influenza, has been obliged to cancel all his immediate appointments. Though progressing favourably he is still confined to the house.

The Duke of Buccleuch has presented the living of St. Andrew's, Holborn, vacant by the death of Rev. Henry Blunt, to Rev. Dacre Craven, who has for over twenty years been rector of St. George-the-Martyr, Queen Square.

The Ripon and Wakefield Diocesan Training College at Ripon has been enlarged at a cost of more than £9,000. The new buildings, which include a chapel, hostel, lecture-room, laboratory, &c., will be dedicated and opened on May 8.

Rev. D. Bell Hankin, preaching at St. Jude's, Mildmay Park, alluded to the C.M.S. Centenary, and contrasted the poor results of movements which were merely the outcome of intellectual unrest with those which have had their origin in conviction of sin and the acceptance of Christian truth.

Archdeacon Thornton recently held an examination at the Church Army Training Home, when twenty-six young men successfully passed, and were subsequently commissioned as evangelists. Fourteen women were also examined, and having all passed successfully, were afterwards commissioned as mission nurses, rescue, and slum workers.

The Bishop of Liverpool, speaking at St. Helens, said the whole diocese was full of men who had not adequate assistance to do the work that lay before them. They had an undermanned diocese, and they had nearly the smallest percentage of clergy to the number of people of any diocese in the kingdom. The result was that vicars were continually getting disheartened. Let them get good men to assist their vicars, good Churchmen, not semi-Romanists, but real, downright good Protestants.

The Primate, preaching at Canterbury the opening sermon in connection with the congress of the Kent County Temperance Federation, said that the progress of the work in which they were engaged appeared at times to be slow and discouraging. This slow progress was, as a rule, the only effective way by which work was so done that it stood fast afterwards, and the truth took firm hold not only of man's intellect and conscience, but also of his instincts, and affected all his being.

Mr. A. B. Lloyd, the C.M.S. missionary, who recently completed his record journey through the land of the Pigmy and cannibal tribes of Central Africa, gave an address at a service at Leicester. Taking as the basis of his remarks John x. 16, Mr. Lloyd explained that it was a sermon preached from that text in the same church seven years ago that had induced both his sisters—who perished in the ill-fated China—to give themselves to the missionary work. He then gave an interesting sketch of his work in Uganda.

Congregational.

Rev. W. Spurgeon has resigned the pastorate of Wood Street Church, Cardiff.

The London Congregational Union has sent another batch of fifty men to Canada. This will make a total of 400 sent out in connection with the Union's social work, the headquarters of which are at Medland Hall.

Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, who has now been confined to his house for six weeks, is only just recovering from his illness. In consequence of his prolonged inactivity he has been compelled to cancel all engagements for the coming summer.

A ten days' mission at Thirfield, Herts, has been held by Rev. R. H. Noble with the help of the lay-pastor (Mr. Moon) and a few workers in the village. Blessed fruit has been gathered for the Master, and a very hopeful Christian Endeavour Society has been formed.

Congregationalists of Bow, under the guidance of their pastor (Rev. F. P. Thompson) and a strong committee, are providing a new chapel at a total cost of about £600. The site was given by Mr. W. Carter Pedler, who has also erected a commodious schoolroom, and presented it, together with a site for a burial ground.

Rev. Howard Williams writes from Palapye in reference to the erroneous report of the death of Khama, published two months ago:—"Khama is in the best of health, and shows a vitality and energy that a good many during the present hot summer might well envy. May he long live to rule and guide the Bamangwato nation, who to-day more than ever need an enlightened and determined man at its head."

Baptist.

Successful opening meetings have been held in connection with an Iron Chapel, erected upon a prominent corner site at Haydon Park, near Wimbledon.

At the one hundred and eighteenth anniversary of Carey Memorial Chapel, Hackleton, and the eighth of the pastor's settlement, a sermon was preached by Rev. E. G Gange, and a public meeting was held under the auspices of the Northampton Free Church Council.

Successful anniversary services were held at the English Baptist Church, Oswestry. The preacher was Captain R. Carey-Brenton, R.N. On Monday, Mr. C. S. Dennis presided at a public meeting, where the pastor, Rev. Malcolm N. Thomson, gave cheering accounts of the work.

The Baptists have opened a mission in the chapel connected with Ilkley College. This step has been taken with the sanction and approval of the Yorkshire Baptist Association, from which a "supply" will be sent every week, until the mission is strong enough to have a resident minister.

The first anniversary of the settlement of Pastor Sydney J. Jones at East London Tabernacle was celebrated last week. The special preachers were Pastors Thomas Spurgeon and Archibald Brown; and encouraging progress was reported at a public meeting on Thursday. During the year 121 persons have been received into church fellowship.

The presidential address of the late Rev. Dr. James Spurgeon, which he had anticipated delivering at the assembly of the Baptist Union on the 24th inst., was so far advanced that it will be read, at the request of the executive of the union, by Rev. James Owen, of Swansea. Dr. Spurgeon completed the first draft on the night previous to his sudden death.

The spring meeting of the western district of Baptist Churches in the Lancashire and Cheshire Union took place at Crewe. Rev. S. W. Bowser explained the Century Fund proposals, pointing out that the Baptist Church had not kept pace with the great increase of population throughout the country. Half of the fund was to be applied to evangelisation purposes and works of church extension. The proposed fund was unanimously approved.

Methodist.

The Durham Primitive Methodists have decided to engage a lady evangelist, whose work will chiefly lie in the new mission at Neville's Cross.

Mr. Bolton Smart, of the Wesleyan East London Mission, has accepted a call to take charge of the large mission hall to be shortly opened at Ipswich.

The Somers Town slum sisters of the West London Mission are arranging to hold, on May Day, a rummage sale, when the sisters will sell to the poor all kinds of old garments, crockery, and furniture. Address, Sister Agatha, People's Hall, Chalton Street, N.W.

Throughout Yorkshire and the north generally there is considerable activity among Wesleyans in the way of chapel and school extension. Among the various proposals recently submitted to the Chapel Committee were fifteen cases of new chapels, which are estimated to cost at least £35,000, and will provide 5,270 sittings when completed.

The newly-elected President of the South Australian Wesleyan Methodist Conference is Rev. J. D. Langsford, of Broken Hill Circuit. He is a brother of the retired president, Rev. W. A. Langsford. It is described as a touching sight to have seen one brother hand the other the Bible, at the official installation, with the words, "This is the book our father loved."

Rev. W. R. Winston and Major Smith, who have been visiting as a special commission the Wesleyan churches and mission stations in the West Indies, are expected to arrive home this week. The financial position of the native churches in the West Indies, altogether apart from the damage done by last autumn's hurricane, is causing great anxiety not only to the Methodist but to the other Free Church communities.

Rev. J. H. Greeves, of 88, Penn Road Villas, Holloway, London, N., is organising a subscription for the widow and children of the late Rev. G. W. Clutterbuck, the minister who perished so heroically in the Stella. The President, has sent Mr. Greeves a letter of sympathy, in which he writes: "I feel proud to belong to a church and a ministry which his sublime and glorious death has adorned." The President heads the subscription list.

The new regulations for the examination of candidates for the Primitive Methodist ministry, adopted by the last Conference, have taken effect, and Revs. J. Watson, D.D., J. Travis, and R. Bryant have conducted the oral examination at the three official centres—viz., London, Leeds, and Bristol—with the result that sixty have been recommended for the district meeting examinations, the results of which will be considered by the General Examining Committee, which will meet at Sheffield in May, and determine the number to be recommended to the Conference for acceptance.

The General Mission Secretary of the Methodist New Connexion pleads for a forward movement for Chinese missions. In a comparison of the statistics of 1888 and 1899 he points out that there are 36 more churches, close upon double; 873 more members and 765 more probationers, also nearly double; 67 more native preachers, seven times as many; 20 more schools, 23 more teachers, and 342 more scholars. He thinks that in the fewness of its English agents the mission is approaching a peril; for the native agents, however excellent, must have constant direction from the English missionaries.

The new night shelter and coffee tavern of the Manchester Wesleyan Mission is to be opened on the 20th inst. Accommodation is provided for forty women casuals, who will have a separate entrance. The second section will be for those who seem likely to regain their place among good women, and the third is for servant girls temporarily out of employment and stranded in the city. They, too, will have a separate entrance to the others. The coffee tavern is to be fitted with all modern appliances for carrying on a good business. A dedicatory service will be conducted in the Central Hall by Dr. Randles.

Presbyterian.

The extensive mission premises adjoining Regent Square Church are nearing completion, and some of the rooms will be used for committees during the sittings of Synod.

The church at Fifth Avenue, New York, has renewed its call to Rev. Alex. Connell, of Regent Square Church, London, to succeed the late Dr. John Hall, at an annual stipend of £2,000.

Rev. J. Morgan Jones, an ex-moderator of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist General Assembly has completed the twenty-fifth year of his pastorate of the Pembroke Terrace Calvinistic Methodist Church at Cardiff. Meetings in celebration of the event were held.

At a meeting of the committee in charge of the negotiations for union between the Free and United Presbyterian Churches held in Edinburgh, it was agreed to recommend that the Theological Hall curriculum should be for four years provisionally, leaving the matter to be decided finally by the united Church. The next meeting will be held in Glasgow, when the question of training colleges will be discussed.

Notices.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS FROM.—E.P.G. A.M. G.J.H. W.Q. E.L.B. J.M.H. P.H. E.W. D.L. J.K. M.G. J.O.B. E.B.S. H.R.A. J.B. M.M. E.J.B. G.A.W. W.J.M. H.E.W. T.S.M. F.R.C. F.R. C.M.B. L.E.T. G.A.W. R.J. M.S. B.G. T.A.G. G.R.K. J.C. S.A.C. F.C. J.W.C.F. W.R.B. E.A.S. C.H. J.K. W.H.M. S.J.B. A.P. G.D.B. J.B.F. A.E.C.M. W.M. J.B.McK. W.C.M. G.E.A. J.C. A.E.G. E.G.S. G.J. C.M. H.H.C) J.M. E.A.D. E.E. E.T.S. E.W.L. J.E.S. E.C. F.C.S. C.E.L. C.B. T.W. T.M.M. F.R. O.V. A.W.D. W.L.A. J.K. H.B.G. S.S. T.P. E.W.A. M.K. H.T. E.H. W.H.A. W.J.E. J.E.B. S.B.N. A.Y. R. R.L.A. M.J.F. Miss A.C. J.M.

APPLICATION FOR TRACTS.—Wm. Price, 68, Salisbury Road, Everton, Liverpool; Rev. Hugh A. Ellis (especially for soldiers and sailors), 160, West Street, Fareham, Hants; Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cawley Road, London, N.E.; J. Brenton, St. Just, Penzance; Mr. E. Meddemmen (for children), 84, Credon Road, Rotherhithe, S.E.; Mr. C. Fidler temperance and anti-Romanist), Ardfert Abbey, Ardfert, co. Kerry; Mr. Jesse Brayford, 29, High Street, Silverdale Staffs; Miss Wilkinson, 44, Wilmington Square, Rosemary Avenue; Miss R. Warters, Musley Lane, Ware, Herts.

"MAY" MEETINGS.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.	Place of Meeting.	Chairman.
APRIL.
Fri. 21	3.0 p.m.	Bible League	m Portman Rooms	Mr. J. H. Tritton.
,,	3.0 p.m.	Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission	m Exeter Hall, Parlour	Rev. F. Paynter.
,,	3.0 p.m.	Army and Navy Missionary Union	m Soldiers' Home, James St., S.W.	Maj.-Gen. Hutchinson
,,	3.0 p.m.	Medical Missionary Association	m Lower Exeter Hall	Sir Alex. Mackenzie.
,,	7.0 p.m.	C. of E. Sunday-school Institute	m Church House, Westminster	Bishop of Islington.
,,	7.0 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Soc. (Young People)	m Mission House, Furnival-street	Mr. F. J. Marnham.
Sun. 23	7.0 p.m.	National Temperance League	s Westminster Abbey	Archbp. of Canterbury
Mon. 24	2.30 p.m.	Baptist Union (first session)	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. S. Vincent.
,,	2.30 p.m.	Methodist Free Church Missions	co Lower Exeter Hall	Mr. J. Craske.
,,	3.0 p.m.	Children's Fresh-air Mission	m Mansion House	The Lord Mayor.
,,	3.0 p.m.	Church Temperance Society	m Lambeth Palace	Archbp. of Canterbury
,,	3.0 p.m.	Dr. Stephenson's Homes	m Wesley's Chapel, City Road	Mrs. John H. Lile.
,,	7.0 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	m ,, ,, ,, ,,	Mr. J. T. Burden.
,,	6.30 p.m.	Baptist Union (Century Fund)	m City Temple	Mr. H. Wood.
,,	6.30 p.m.	Bible Translation Society	m Mission House, Furnival-street	Mr. R. Souttar, M.P.
,,	6.30 p.m.	Methodist Free Church Missions	m Exeter Hall	Mr. R. Turner.
,,	8.0 p.m.	Church Temperance Society (Juvenile)	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Bishop of Chichester.
Tues. 25	9.15 a.m.	Lord's Day Observance Society	b St. James's Restaurant	Mr. W. D. Cruddas, M.P.
,,	10.30 a.m	Baptist Missionary Society	m Mission House, Furnival-street	Mr. G. E. Foster.
,,	3.0 p.m.	British Syrian Mission	m Lower Exeter Hall	Rev. F. Paynter.
,,	3.30 p.m.	Baptist Union	m Bloomsbury Chapel
,,	3.30 p.m.	Barbican Mission to Jews	m St. Paul's Ch. Room, Onslow Sq.	Preb. Webb-Peploe.
,,	4.0 p.m.	Bishop of London's Fund	s St. Paul's Cathedral	Bishop of London.
,,	5.30 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	so Holborn Restaurant	Mr. J. H. Tritton.
,,	7.0 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	m ,, ,,
,,	7.0 p.m.	Trinitarian Bible Society	m Exeter Hall	Mr. Jas. E. Mathieson.
,,	8.0 p.m.	Church Temperance Society	m Exeter Hall	Archbp. of Canterbury
Wed. 26	8.45 a.m.	Baptist Zenana Mission	b Holborn Restaurant	Mr. E. P. Collier.
,,	12.0	Baptist Missionary Society	s Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. J. H. Jowett.
,,	2.30 p.m.	Church Temperance Society	c St. Martin's Town Hall	Mrs. Temple.
,,	3 p.m.	Protestant Alliance	c Queen's Hall	Lord Overtoun.
,,	3 p.m.	Baptist Union	m Bloomsbury Chapel
,,	3 p.m.	Missions to Seamen	m St. James's Hall	Sir T. F. Buxton.
,,	3 p.m.	Asiatic Strangers' Home	m The Home, W. India Dock-road	Dr. E. R. Johnson.
,,	3 p.m.	Ch. of Eng. Scripture Readers' Assoc.	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Bishop of Stepney.
,,	3.30 p.m.	Colonial and Continental Church Soc.	s St. Martin's Church	Bp. of N. Queensland.
,,	4.0 p.m.	Wesleyan Missionary Society	s Wesley's Chapel, City-road	Rev. H. P. Hughes.
,,	5.0 p.m.	Baptist Total Abstinence Association	m City Temple	Alderman White.
,,	7.0 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	m ,, ,,
,,	7.0 p.m.	Railway Mission	m Exeter Hall	Mr. Alex. Hubbard.
,,	7.30 p.m	Wesleyan Missionary Society	s Wesley's Chapel, City Road	Rev. T. F. Hulme.
,,	7.30 p.m.	Protestant Alliance	m Queen's Hall	Mr. T. A. Denny.
,,	7.30 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Soc. (Young People)	s Regent's Park Church	Rev. J. T. Forbes.
,,	8.0 p.m.	London Anti-Vivisection Society	m St. James's Hall
Thurs. 27	10 a.m.	Baptist Union (fourth session)	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Dr. W. R. Nicoll.
,,	11 a.m.	Church Temperance Society	c St. Martin's Town Hall	Mrs. Creighton.
,,	3.0 p.m.	Wesleyan Miss. Soc. (Women's Aux.)	m Wesley's Chapel, City-road	Mrs. Barnsley.
,,	3.0 p.m.	Christian Evidence Society	m Stafford House	Sir Richard Temple.
,,	5.0 p.m.	Christian Colportage Association	c Exeter Hall	Lord Kinnaird.
,,	7.0 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	m ,, ,,	Mr. J. Colville, M.P.
,,	3.30 p.m.	Baptist Ministers' Prayer Union	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. F. B. Meyer.
,,	6.0 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	m Exeter Hall	Mr. G. W. Palmer.
,,	6.30 p.m.	Wesleyan Miss. Soc. (Women's Aux.)	m Wesley's Chapel, City-road	Mr. T. R. Friens.
Fri. 28	11.0 a.m.	Wesleyan Missionary Society	s Great Queen-street Chapel	Rev. Dr. H. McMillan
,,	11.0 a.m.	Spanish and Portuguese Ch. Aid Socy.	s Holy Trinity Ch., Marylebone	Dean Farrar.
,,	3.0 p.m.	South American Missionary Society	m Lower Exeter Hall	Sir F. L. McClintock.
,,	4.0 p.m.	Bishop of London's Fund	c Sion College	Bishop of London.
,,	6.30 p.m.	Dr. Stephenson's Homes	m Wesley's Chapel, City Road	Ld. Mayor of Liverpool
,,	7.0 p.m.	Sunday School Union	m 56, Old Bailey	Mr. F. F. Belsey.
,,	7.0 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Soc. (Young People)	m Exeter Hall	Mr. W. Payne.

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; co.—Convention; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soiree.

☞ Later meetings will be announced in successive issues.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE many Christian workers and others who attended the Bible School recently held in London will be glad to hear that the health of Professor White has become fully re-established. He is understood to be awaiting guidance regarding future work. As to this, also, many of our readers are praying for the great Head of the Church. They will likewise, we are sure, thank God for the renewal of strength graciously accorded to Dr. White.

Following up the "School for Bible Study" recently carried on by Professor White, arrangements have been made by Rev. F. B. Meyer and Dr. Harry Guinness to invite Professor W. R. Newell, of the Bible Institute, Chicago, to conduct meetings on similar lines. Particulars as to dates and places will be given in due course.

Now that the agitation against seven-day newspapers is assuming practical shape, why should not the Evangelical Churches unite in a common protest on a given Sunday—say May 13? We hope some such definite step will be taken to show a simultaneous and united front.

One of the memorable sayings of Oliver Cromwell, the tercentenary of whose birth is being celebrated to-day, was the following:—"A man never mounts so high as when he does not know where he is going." By this he meant not that our conduct should be aimless, but that when it is under the complete control of the Divine Spirit we are led "by a way that we know not," and are carried to nobler issues than would be possible if we kept the reins in our own hands. Thus, in obedience to the call of God, Abram "went out, not knowing whither he went." The best men seldom have clear plans for the future, but they have clear and steadfast principles, and they trust to the "inner light" for the guidance needful in applying these principles to the practical problems of life. St. Paul often changed his plans; he never changed his purpose, which was ever to be at the call of the Spirit of God. The light of duty, like the light of the sun, shines only from day to day. Remembering that, let us act accordingly.

The extraordinary success of the C.M.S. Centenary gatherings suggests one reflection, among others, which is full of hope. On the platform the common bond of service drew together representatives of all the parties in the Church; and, in spite of the recent unseemly protest of the Church Times against the inclusion of Nonconformists among the speakers, these were received with a warmth that was unmistakable. For one week the sword of controversy was sheathed, and every department of the Christian Church forgot their differences in a great outburst of the spirit of the underlying brotherhood of all those who are engaged in the propagation of the Gospel among the heathen. So long as the missionary spirit survives, the evils of division will never entirely triumph. Love to Christ and towards the world for whom He died—this is the true bond of union among his followers. Priestism is the centrifugal force of Christendom; service is its centripetal energy. The more the latter spirit is cherished, the more surely will the former decline.

As the time for the meeting of the Peace Congress at the Hague approaches, the efforts on the part of enemies to destroy its usefulness are increased. We must be prepared for bitter and unscrupulous attacks from many quarters. The hand which deals the blow, and the power which inspires it, will not be shown, but the correspondents of newspapers will have a busy time in retailing evil prophecies from every European capital. The pity of it is that Russia's harsh treatment of Finland, and England's objection to the Transvaal being represented, have stirred a good deal of feeling among the best friends of the Congress. Still, we submit that lovers of peace must strain every nerve to win a substantial result. Some say that, were arbitration adopted, our country would suffer by the arrangement, because she is so universally hated; but we hope that notwithstanding this painful fact our representatives will vote for this better, this more human, method of settling disputes.

Personal controversy between public men is not altogether an edifying subject of comment: but the dispute between Lord Halifax and Lord George Hamilton (representing the "High" and "Low" parties in the Anglican Church) brings into prominence the exact point of offence in the recent E.C.U. manifesto, which is well put by Lord George in these words:—

> You repudiate the jurisdiction of the Crown and Parliament in order to glorify the authority of the Bishops; but you decline to accept the decisions of the only authority you recognise, except when they are in accord with your own views.

This is the exact situation in the Church of England at the present moment, and it reduces the Ritualist position to an absurdity. Priestism logically demands a Pope, and while Ritualism repudiates the authority of the Pope of Rome, it aims at setting up in his stead a pope in each village. Hence the chaotic state of doctrine, practice, and authority in the Church of England at the present moment.

Lord Peel's strong action as chairman of the Liquor Traffic Commission is an eloquent testimony to the high-handed and obstructive policy of the brewers in their attitude towards that endeavour to shape a workable policy on the Temperance question. The difficulties of the situation are being immensely increased by the rapid conversion of the brewing businesses into limited liability companies. This movement aims directly at poisoning public opinion against reform by enlisting as many citizens as possible on the side of the "trade." Those who hold a "stake" in the success of any firm whose business it is to make capital out of the drinking habits of the nation are thereby converted into the opponents of reform. Every nerve is just now being strained to gain an unfair advantage in the battle between drink and duty. There is need of a thorough campaign in regard to the investment of money. Much that is well gotten becomes ill-invested, and so helps the "interests" which thrive on the degradation of society.

There are wider aspects of the evils of joint-stock investments than have just been hinted at. This growth of modern times makes for evil in several important directions. —(1) By enlisting vast multitudes of small investors in businesses over which it is impossible for them to exercise any personal investigation; (2) by lessening the sense of individual responsibility; (3) by placing the power in the hands of directors whose one aim is to produce a good dividend. The result is a steady decline in commercial morality, and a spirit of widespread greed, which pays no heed to the ways in which wealth is earned, so long as a personal profit is secured. Those who hold the Scriptural principle, that all our possessions are held in trust, should ponder this question carefully and prayerfully. It is one of the burning questions of the hour, and too little is said and felt upon it by those who thoughtlessly invest their money in all sorts of dangerous and doubtful concerns.

The endeavour of the Lord Chief Justice to suppress illicit secret commissions deserves the support of every honest man. The evil complained of has reached the most serious dimensions, and its effects on trade and on the character of all sorts of men are utterly demoralising. A wholesale warehouseman has termed the system "a hydra-headed monster," and a witness testified that the blackmailing system even included the boy who took a manufacturer's card in to the persons on whom he called. The boy knows his price, and demands it of a man who looks down upon him. Secret commissions create a conflict between interest and duty, and the object of Lord Russell's bill is > to check, by making them criminal, a large number of the inequitable and illegal secret payments, all of which are dishonest, and tend to shake confidence between man and man, and to discourage honest trade and enterprise.

Many a man who would do a thing which the law does not condemn as criminal will refrain when the law condemns it. Public opinion, and especially Christian public opinion, must support this endeavour to purify life.

In view of the great and numerous temptations to which policemen are exposed in all great cities, one cannot help asking the old question—"Who shall guard your own guards?" A drink seller in an English borough recently admitted that for many years he had paid the local police a large sum of money every year, but he said that this was a reward for their keeping his houses free from objectionable characters! His explanation hardly carried conviction to the minds of his fellow-citizens, who are bent on probing the matter to the bottom, and paying their policemen all the wages they receive. The power of the "trade" is present and active in every part of our national life, and the sooner we subdue it to the national will the better will it be for all classes.

The battle fought against immoral entertainments in the music halls a few years ago, which had a profound influence on public opinion in spite of several apparent repulses, will soon have to be renewed against the theatres. A leading actor, who made himself conspicuous recently in defending the character of actresses from the charge brought against them by Mr. Clement Scott, is now taking part in a play that has been denounced, even by the secular newspapers, as grossly immoral in its tendency, yet nightly draws huge audiences in the West End. There are other signs that the moral standard (such as it is!) of our theatres is in danger of a serious decline. Gilded vice, the basest cynicism expressed in all the graces of style, subtle and shameful innuendoes against virtue—these seem to be the leading characteristics of several new plays, if we may judge from the descriptions given of them in the newspapers. They bear witness to the extreme watchfulness necessary on the part of the public authorities in licensing our places of amusement.

The deliverance of Mr. Clement Scott on the character of the stage and the influence of the theatre will still be fresh in many memories, and so will the storm of anger which it raised among actors. Now comes another corroboration from Miss Florence Bright, formerly an actress, who says:—

> People sometimes affirm girls have no temptations on the stage. That is a silly fable, and most of those who say it know it to be so. Then, again, the life of the stage is peculiarly full of other tragedies. The woman of soft, tender, sensitive nature—the very woman whose refined sensibilities make her specially responsive to the fineness of fine ideas and things—the very woman who is temperamentally fitted to appreciate, and potentially, at least, to body forth with adequate expression, the delicacies of light and shade in a great play—she is the one upon whom the rough, sordid, demoralising life of the stage presses most hardly.

Mr. Brodrick recently informed the House of Commons that an outlay of £200 in recruiting expenses in a certain district of Scotland had produced only one recruit! The money might have been saved had the recruiting sergeant gone to a minister there and asked him what were his chances of enlisting men. He would have told him, as he told some of his own friends, that "not a mother's son about here will join an army so rotten as the Government statistics make out." So that the sensational statistics employed to secure the protection of vicious men have struck a heavy blow at the popularity of the army. Someone trifled with both truth and with morality in the name of the Government, and now the sin comes back in consequences—as it always does.

The attempt of Roman Catholics to fasten upon the London Missionary Society the responsibility of the troubles in Samoa is a case of the wolf, who is drinking up the stream, complaining that the lamb lower down is muddying the water. Unpleasant as it may be to say so, there is no denying the fact that representations of a Roman Catholic grievance made through a Roman Catholic channel are tainted. The truth is that the Society avoids politics; its work is religious; and as Mr. Wardlaw Thompson says, if "any of its missionaries have actively taken the side of either the one or the other of the claimants to the throne, the directors will have no hesitation in expressing their condemnation of such conduct." A commission of enquiry has gone to Samoa, and its report should be awaited. Roman Catholic attempts to prejudice public opinion should be sternly resisted.

Mammon's Assault on the Lord's Day.

THERE is nothing new in misuse and abuse of the Lord's Day. Indifference to the claims of God has been combined with a selfish misappropriation of the day by multitudes who have enjoyed the privileges of Christian instruction.

The seven-day newspaper movement is a flagrant infringement of the privilege of Sabbath repose. It has its origin, not in meeting a legitimate public demand, but in a purpose to create new customs calculated to enrich a few who are already wealthy, while robbing many working folk of the priceless heritage of the Day of Rest. To publish and circulate the new editions on Saturday would by no means satisfy the oppressive ends of Mammon, who is the god of modern Sabbath-breakers.

It is very cheering to note the widespread feeling on the subject throughout all classes. We are face to face with a great national danger, and the mere passing of resolutions will not deter the interested parties. Action must be met by action, and the surest action on the part of the people is (1) to refuse to subscribe at all to the offending newspapers, and (2) to refuse to advertise in them. If this course were consistently followed by all who are really concerned to save the country from the inrush of secularism which would follow on the establishment of Sunday papers of the kind now initiated, the movement would speedily collapse, and an impressive object-lesson be taught to others eager to follow suit.

That the fight will be severe is shown by the tactics of the Daily Mail proprietors, who at first complained that they had been driven to publish their paper on Sunday by the necessities of competition. Their action altogether contradicts that contention. They have left no stone unturned to force their paper on the public:—

> They sent a motor-van to Brighton at two o'clock on Sunday morning; they sent another motor-van to Windsor and other quiet riverside resorts, with a huge supply of papers, and a horn to announce its approach and to disturb the Sabbath rest; and they despatched six men to Liverpool by an early Sunday morning train to plant copies of the paper all over the city.

It is a good sign that the newsagents are calling out loudly against the innovation. They see that other papers will follow, and if morning papers then also evening issues. Meanwhile a petition is being signed by those who are expected to sell the papers, asking the proprietors of the Daily Telegraph and Daily Mail to reconsider their attitude in producing a seven-day journal, which will eventually involve the news trade of the country, numbering from ten to twenty thousand tradesmen, in Sunday labour. The Archbishop of Canterbury has signed, and large public support is assured. If the law as it stands is not equal to saving us from this new tyranny, there are men in Parliament who may be trusted to give a good account of themselves on the subject; and we trust that an efficient majority of our legislators are on the right side in this great cause of the people.

We hope that the agitation will strengthen the hands of such papers as the Daily News, the Morning Leader, the Morning Herald, the Echo, and other papers not concerned in Sunday issues, either nominally or actually.

Two questions have exercised the minds of many concerning this subject (1) Is it a Christian act to "boycott"? (2) What difference will it make for a few Christian readers to drop the daily editions? The first is well met by the British Weekly:—

> Boycotting in the right sense is one-half of Christianity. "Touch not, taste not, handle not." "Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good."

A London newsagent supplies the answer to the second, when he is enabled to state that as the result of Christian support in his locality he has been able to reduce his orders for the two offending papers by over 1,800 copies a week. That is a good start. Christian newsagents may fairly look to the members of churches to strengthen their hands in the struggle. It must be forced upon the proprietors of the papers by hard facts that the nett result of their new ventures is to produce less profit from the seven issues than was formerly yielded by the six. Where the only potent argument is that of the pocket, there let that argument be employed; and we earnestly hope that in this case it will triumphantly succeed.

The London Tent Campaign.

THE remarkable blessing and far spread awakening which attended the work conducted by Mr. Leonard Weaver, in the well-known American tent at Tottenham, has very naturally led to a widely-expressed desire for the further development of such evangelistic work among the unreached masses of the metropolis.

As a result of a meeting of friends and sympathisers interested in the question, it was resolved recently, after prayerful consideration, that a committee should be formed to undertake the general direction and management of an aggressive movement, and on Monday last a meeting was held in the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., Mr. Robt. Scott occupying the chair.

After the chairman had introduced the subject, with a reference to the imperative call for more Gospel work of such a character as to rivet the attention of the multitude, he called upon Mr. Leonard Weaver, who gave a spirited address, reviewing his experiences in tent work, and pointing out that the classes who generally avoid churches and chapels willingly make themselves quite at home in a tent. The work would be economical, for durable tents and fittings could be obtained nowadays on very reasonable terms, and there was no difficulty in securing suitable workers possessed by a fervent love for souls.

After much helpful consideration and discussion, during which Mr. T. A. Denny and Mr. T. B. Miller expressed a deep interest in the proposal to consolidate and extend the work, it was decided to purchase two large tents, which, with the familiar American tent handed over to the committee by Mr. Weaver, will mean that in a few weeks the work will be initiated, by divine blessing, in three important suburban centres of population.

Mr. A. Garstin has accepted the position of treasurer, and the constitution of the committee is such as to thoroughly secure confidence in the undertaking. The American tent is now being removed to Tooting, and many pressing invitations and offers of the use of land have been received.

Many readers of The Christian who have already expressed their sympathy with the suggested tent campaign will rejoice to hear that a responsible committee of representative Christian men has been formed, known as the London Tent Evangelisation Committee, and that the said committee has taken definite steps to commence the work immediately. Two new tents have been ordered, with seating capacity for 3,000 to be worked in conjunction with the great American tent.

May we earnestly plead for a constant remembrance at the Throne of Grace, and that all to whom the Lord has entrusted this world's goods shall so respond that the committee, in their loving service, may be encouraged to undertake still greater things as the season advances!

We should be glad if friends who feel that there is need of such work in their own district will communicate with the secretary, Mr. G. R. Williams, 21, Greyhound Lane, Streatham, S.W.

Leonard Weaver.

Christ's Testimony Regarding Judgment.

By Rev. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE thought of judgment is not welcome to the sinful heart, and is eagerly put aside. To mitigate its terrors it is moved into the distant future, just as by standing off from a furnace we are not scorched by its heat. By degrees the word comes to have a far-off muffled sound in men's ears, that fails to alarm. "If we can only tide over the present," is the secret feeling, "and escape detection and exposure by our neighbours, we need not concern ourselves about the future." And so the thought of accountability slips quietly out of mind, and is forgotten. "Yesterday! Well, yesterday is past and done with—it will never be heard of more;" "it will be all the same a hundred years hence;" "all this talk about judgment is the mere conjuring up of a bugbear to frighten us into being good, as if we were naughty children."

Yet lurking behind all evasions is the consciousness, less or more distinct, on the part of men everywhere, that they have come short, that they have done wrong, that they are blameworthy. A voice within the breast is judging them even now, however they may try to suppress it. This consciousness of blameworthiness is as solid and substantial a fact as any five-senses-learned fact of physical life. Hence arise self-condemnation and anticipation or dread of judgment to come. This anticipation or dread is found not only in modern Europe, but in the farthest back ages that history knows of. It is inscribed on the bricks of Babylonia, it is painted on the monuments of Egypt. It is found not only in the bosoms of great sinners, but also in those whose life is beautiful and praiseworthy in the eyes of their fellows. It may be suppressed or argued down for a time, but cannot be finally and utterly extinguished. It seems to belong to the very constitution of our moral nature. Reason and conscience unite in justifying it.

Such words as "responsible," "accountable," and the like do not belong to "revealed religion" only; they indicate a predicament of our very being. In the more outward and less spiritual provinces of our experience, we count on "a day of reckoning." Retribution in the physical realm seems as certain a "law" as that of gravitation, and we can no more evade the former than we can the latter. If a man breathe poisoned air or drink impure water his health shall suffer. If he squander the golden hours of youth and the opportunities of manhood in inglorious sloth, it shall end in poverty. If he yield to vice, it shall bring on him disgrace, disease, physical wretchedness, and lay up fuel for remorse. In this we have not something accidental and occasional, but a rule which holds without respect of persons.

Is it so in the moral and spiritual realm? It seems as if things were "loose" in this realm. We find a retributive system instituted and carried out so far, yet left imperfect; halting where we should expect the final act. Is the halt a full stop? Does it create a presumption of final impunity for the wrong-doer? Or does it mean only a merciful pause, giving summons and opportunity of repentance? In travelling through an unknown piece of country, we chance upon some building of grand design and noble proportions, begun but not finished; blocks of marble lie about, on which we observe recent marks of the chisel; builders' apparatus, such as ladders, planks, scaffolding, all in order. We assume that the building is not meant to remain as it is; some day, we infer, it will be finished, and finished in keeping with what is already disclosed of the architect's design. May we not take this as a parable of what we find in the moral region—a retributive system sufficiently developed to reveal some of its ruling principles, but not complete?

Just here a fierce conflict of argument rages. A widely-accepted philosophy, based on materialism, according to which mind is but a brain-product, denies the determining power of the human will in the shaping of life and conduct, and by necessity of thought denies all blame-worthiness in the doer of wrong. By necessity of thought, to deny the free operation of the will is to deny the possibility of morality, or to admit a morality with nothing higher in its heart than the "greatest-happiness" principle. To persuade men that they cannot help themselves is to fling them into recklessness, or into idle despair that weakly awaits its fate.

This philosophy takes man at random—the first man that comes—and finds him to be the "resultant" of an infinite complex of influences, summed up by the two words, "heredity" and "environment." Just as a tree is what seed, soil, climate, and other environments make it, so is a man. According to this philosophy, to take a case by way of instance, a licentious man is licentious as a matter of course, and cannot be otherwise. It is his nature to be licentious, just as it is his nature to have red hair, or blue eyes, or large hands and feet. He is indeed "injurious," like a slug in a garden or a wolf near a sheep run, but he is not "blameworthy." He is a "result," and is impelled to do what he does, irresistibly, as the puppet moves when you pull the string. "Freewill," it is maintained, "does not exist, neither does any amenability or responsibility, such as morals and penal justice and heaven knows what else would impose upon us."

(To be concluded.)

C.M.S. Centenary Thanksgiving.

Bowed in the dust of our own nothingness,
Accept, Almighty Father, through thy Son,
All adoration, gratitude, and praise,
For thine o'erwhelming mercies through a week
Of cloudless blessing! Thine alone the fire
That down a century of battling years
Burned steadfast on ten thousand altar-hearts
'Mid heathen darkness. Thine alone the love,
The love of Calvary, that stung to life
Our saintly fathers, who apart, unknown
Within an upper chamber as of old,
Unconscious of the miracle at hand,
In child dependence, dared to dream again
The dream that thrilled the Christ upon the Cross,
Time's first white dream of empire over souls—
Fair dream of empire—Christ Himself the King.
And there and then, betwixt those narrow walls,
That band of saintly men upon their knees
Spread out in mighty faith at Jesu's feet
The glittering spoils of sovereignty to be.
Then thanks to-day for throngs of burning souls,
That fain had pierced the future's golden gates
And realised forthwith the dream of God.
Thanks for the incense of ten thousand prayers
Wafted aloft 'mid clouds of penitence.
Thanks for the billows of tumultuous praise,
That salt with tears of lifelong sacrifice,
Yet, gleaming as with ocean's countless smile,
Broke ceaseless daily on the eternal shore.
And thanks, once more, for words that leapt to flame
From pleading lips or granite souls on fire—
The fire of sunrise speeding on the dawn.
Then thanks yet deeper, homage more intense,
O Father, for the awe and kindling hush
Of thy near Presence, with thine own dear Son;
Who in the splendour of his Spirit's power,
Through all that week of crowning festival,
Revisiting the battlefields of faith,
Before the hungering gaze of half his Church,
Held royal court within our city walls!

Charles A. Fox.

Planning a Great Campaign.

ON Monday of last week a largely attended meeting of ministers and Christian workers was held in Glasgow, to receive from the directors of the United Evangelistic Association a sketch of the lines on which the evangelistic campaign is being planned for next winter.

Lord Overtoun, in his address from the chair, referred to the fact that Glasgow is often spoken of as being in the van of progress in the careful organisation of Christian work, and in the faithfulness of its Gospel ministry; yet when celebrating the semi-jubilee of the formation of the association—in the revival times of 1874—the directors had felt that the time was now ripe for another great effort for the evangelisation of the city. After much prayer and waiting upon God, they believed that the finger of God was now pointing the way. A general committee (seventy members) had been formed, representing all the churches and the more important branches of Christian work in the city. Nine sub-committees were hard at work arranging details, and the executive consisted of the conveners of these, with the general officials. Briefly stated, the area of the city, comprising a population of 868,000, had been divided into nine districts; and within each of these (for six months beginning next October) meetings would be held, changing about from place to place, until the whole of the ground had been covered. In each district the local ministers and workers would be left to decide about suitable centres and other details.

Dr. Marshall Lang declared that already there was perceptible the thrill of a great expectation. He desired not excitement, but incitement, to intensify the life of the Church.

A hearty assurance of the full sympathy and help of the non-Presbyterian churches was given by Rev. George Gladstone. The view their ministers took was that it was simply a most welcome proposal to help them in their own work—a whole-hearted attempt to spread the kingdom of our blessed Lord and Saviour.

Recalling the small gatherings which preceded the movement of 1874, Dr. Wells thought the present plans were being matured under what appeared to be much more hopeful auspices. He believed the scheme to be the largest that had ever been placed before the Christian community of a great city. It is a very serious thing to pray for a revival. We must ask ourselves if we are prepared to take up the responsibility it brings to us, to give up all else, and place ourselves at the disposal of the work.

Rev. G. L. Carstairs said that although we looked back with longing to 1859, 1874, and 1882, we should not ask a repetition of any former experience, or propose that what had been done years ago should be done again God has not exhausted the possibilities of blessed discovery that He has for his people and willing servants. We are going forward at his leading, because there is work lying to our hands manifestly to do, and because we hear his call. The circumstances are different, but the power is the same.

In closing, Lord Overtoun expressed the hope that ministers and congregations, in making their plans for work during next winter, would give the prospective campaign a large place in them. The directors had asked each of the churches to supply the names of pastors best qualified for this work, that they might be officially asked to give their services. Many leading evangelists — including Rev. John McNeill—hoped to take part in the work; and as Mr. D. L. Moody had not yet sent a definite reply to a request addressed to him, the directors were authorised to cable to him, in the name of the meeting, urging that he should spend a part of the time in Glasgow.

The meeting was of the most widely representative character. Workers of every class and name united in the expression of a deep conviction that God is about to do great things in our midst. It was felt at the close that much progress had been made in welding together the various elements which must make up the standing army of the campaign.

T. C. M.

Letters from America.

MR. MOODY'S RETURN FROM THE WEST.

WE travelled to Detroit, to meet Mr. Moody, who has been for the six winter months in the South and West. He has held meetings in thirty-three centres of population, and one of the newspapers thus deftly describes the purport of his present visitation:—

"Mr. Moody is with us this time in the interests of the spiritual renewal of the ninety-and-nine." That is to say, he has endeavoured to reach the pastors, officers, and members of churches, rather than the man and woman in the street.

Mr. Moody is the same man as we have known him for thirty years, only more so. He is in excellent physical health, mellowed by increasing years, marked by the same quiet and unassuming influence, the same kindly humour, directness, courage, and earnestness, the same spiritual tone, the same power with God and with men, that have always characterised the man, his work, and his words.

In Chicago he is forty times the power to-day that he was when he began his work in that go-ahead city forty years ago. This is from the Chicago Record of April 8:—

With his old simple directness Dwight L. Moody yesterday emptied the vials of his wrath upon the higher criticism and scientific analysis of the Scriptures, and, with homely illustrations and humorous stories, urged the faithful acceptation of the Word of God.

Morning and afternoon, the mighty audiences that he had attracted to the Chicago Avenue Church laughed with him, groaned in reprobation, sighed with long-drawn breath, or shouted fervid amens and exclamations of praise, as the evangelist moved them at will.

There was no apparent straining for effect in the manner of the preacher. He employed no florid figures of speech or elegancies of gestures. His voice was rather husky, and the people in the back seats and galleries had some difficulty in hearing him at times. He talked as if his audience was a familiar friend and he had something to tell him concerning other intimates—the saints, apostles, and prophets, who were to him living and breathing men and women.

In similar terms the Free Press records his VISIT TO DETROIT.

Dwight L. Moody took Detroit by storm yesterday. During the day his voice reached at least 5,000 people, who flocked to the different churches where he spoke and packed them to their utmost capacity.

It is not the gift of oratorical eloquence that draws the crowds to Moody, for that he does not possess. It is the straightforward way he has of saying things. It has been called homely eloquence—simple yet impressive.

During his talks yesterday, Mr. Moody did not use a figure of speech in illustrating a point of argument. Figures of speech are not necessary with him. He says nothing that is not as clear as crystal to those who listen.

Words of one syllable mostly are employed. He nails an argument down hard with the hammer of common sense. When he speaks and says some startling things, with as much assurance as he would say "Good day" to a friend on the street, it sometimes seems that he does so recklessly and without serious contemplation. But such is not the case. He announced at one of the meetings yesterday that if anyone in the audience wished to question him on any of the statements he had made, he would be glad to talk with that person after the service.

After the service was over there was an eager throng about him to find out why he made some statements, and he organised those people into a sort of Sunday-school kindergarten, and told them why.

Thus does Evangelist Moody go abroad in the land and preach the Gospel to all people. He has not been in Detroit before for many years, and those who heard him speak yesterday noted that since his last visit he has lost none of the vim which years ago placed him in the front rank of religious workers. He is just as energetic, although he has, perhaps, lost some of the vocal power he possessed when a younger man. Moody is plain-spoken, frank, a good story teller, and he keeps his audience with him all the time.

Mr. Moody arrived in Detroit on Saturday morning (8th inst.), and spoke to crowded audiences—at four, on the power of the Spirit for service; at eight, on three types of Christians in John iii., iv. and vii.—Nicodemus, born of the Spirit—life; the woman who left her waterpot—abundant life; he that believeth on Jesus as the Scripture hath said—overflowing life.

I was reminded, as we walked to the place of meeting on the two following days, of the hymn—

> What means this eager anxious throng > Pressing our busy streets along?

for as in our own cities in past days, so here and now the churches were thronged. Rev. R. A. Torrey, superintendent of the Bible Institute, Chicago, preached to the overflow congregations on the Holy Spirit, and on the wisdom of winning souls, of which his sermon at night was a vivid illustration.

Mr. Moody's address at nine o'clock on Sunday morning to Christian workers was on the weak and base things God uses, illustrated by Moses' rod, Joshua's rams' horns, Gideon's 300, &c., &c. In the afternoon another large church overflowed with men, and although the text was familiar, the sermon was new to me, but terse, racy, searching, tender, humorous, spiritual. One of the papers headed its report with the line

"MEN IN TEARS."

On the platform, and in pew and gallery, men—young, middle-aged, and old—wept as some specially pathetic facts were told which moved them to pity and to indignation.

The address was a straight and fearless attack on many of the more prominent evils in society, in family, and in business.

Mr. Moody took for his text, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." "The most deceitful thing in the world is the human heart," said he. "Man is for ever trying to deceive God. But God cannot be deceived. A text of this kind applies as much to the preacher as to the hearers; to the saint as well as the sinner. Since the day of Cain man has reaped what he sowed. No millionaire can, by gift or otherwise, escape this great law."

The foregoing furnished the basic thought for the address. Mr. Moody held that if the father is a liar the son is a liar by birth.

"You can't plant cabbages and expect to reap oak trees. Some people wonder why their children are such liars. If these parents would look into the mirror they could find the solution to their problem. Some merchants wonder why they have dishonest clerks, while at the same time they tell their clerk to sell home-made stuff with foreign tags on, and offer half-cotton stuff for all wool. As for me, I have just as much respect for the clerk who goes into his employer's till as for the employer who goes into my pocket and takes my money for a 'snide' (spurious) article worth one-half the price obtained. I have no use for business lies, or for political lies, even when they are called white lies. A white lie is just as black as the blackest lie that was ever told."

Mr. Moody made every statement a positive one. He struck out directly from the shoulder, and wherever he saw a chance to strike he struck home without hesitation. Old men listened with their hands to their ears. The evangelist addressed himself at times directly to individuals in his audience and forced them to reply. He was interrupted frequently with:

"That's true," to which he replied:

"True, of course it's true, I know it's true."

He spoke of the lives of prisoners; of the good that could be done among them by the right class of literature.

"Don't wait until they have been in jail several weeks, but get at them immediately. God bless the motherly woman who goes to the jails," he added fervently, and an echo of "Amen" came from all portions of the church.

"All that are in favour of this work," he cried, "hold up your hands."

It looked like a field of wheat as hands shot up all over the audience.

"Now put them right down into your pockets and give something towards it."

This came like the snap of a whip; the hands went into the pockets; the baskets, as they were passed about, were filled with silver and bills. There were many bills of large denominations. Mr. Moody himself passed a hat about on the platform, and to the choir loft above.

"If you're a believer in silver, give silver," he called, "and if you believe in gold, give gold."

Taking for his text, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," Mr. Moody shot many shafts of oratory and evident truth directly home.

"Is that so?" he asked now and then. "Own up when I hit you, bow your head and say, 'That's so.'" One man replied, "Certainly," and Mr. Moody resumed, "Certainly, of course, it's so. I know it's so."

In speaking of the saloons, he exclaimed:

"PLANT WHISKY AND YOU'LL REAP DRUNKARDS.

"The man who rents his property for the liquor business is just as bad as the man who sells it."

The applause at this point was deafening, and everyone shouted: "That's so."

"Don't applaud, I don't like it," cried Mr. Moody.

"How about the voter who supports the saloon?" asked a voice.

"He votes for the drunkard, and he will find he is sowing them right in his own family," replied the speaker. "I believe in No Licence. We not only need a revival to bring some men into the church, but we need a revival to turn some men out of the church. The man who rents his property for a liquor-store or a brothel is not fit to be a church-member."

"That's the stuff," ejaculated someone on the platform.

"Don't sell out either, you liquor dealers. Get an axe and smash in the heads of the barrels, and let the stuff run into the sewer.

"I know what cry will answer this; I've heard it before: 'Do you want me to starve?' Yes. We haven't had a martyr in this century; it would be a good thing for Detroit at the close of the twentieth century to have a man starve to death for his principles. I think I'd come any distance to attend his funeral. 'The first martyr of the twentieth century.' It would just take about till the first of the year to starve him out."

At another time, with tears running down his cheeks and his deep feeling projecting itself among his auditors, Mr. Moody said:

"It is a shameful thing the way woman is treated to-day after she has been ruined by man. She is ostracised, but he walks down the aisle with his head erect."

Mr. Moody then made a strong plea for the rescue missions. He did not hesitate to ask leading questions, and directed them all over the audience, until people seemed to squirm beneath them. In speaking of the observance of the Sabbath day, Mr. Moody said:

"It will be a dark day for this republic when we give up the Sabbath. It will grind the working man down beneath the heel, as he is in the old countries."

Mr. Moody again and again declared that the pendulum which has swung to the side of scepticism and contempt of the Bible is now swinging the other way. He defended revivals and affirmed the need of them. And in public meeting and in private conversation said:

"We must reform governments and municipalities by beginning with the individual. That is the only way to get the reforms we hear a demand for at every election. If things go on the way they have been going for the last twenty-five years this land of ours will be swept with a storm of riot and bloodshed before another twenty-five have passed. Nothing can avert it but the power of the church—a church quickened and awakened by the Spirit of God."

After leaving Detroit the evangelist was to address the students of Yale College, and to preach at Philadelphia.

R. Cope Morgan.

Detroit, April 10.

Centenary of Union Chapel.—Union Chapel, Islington, which is this week celebrating its centenary, has had a somewhat remarkable history. The present building was erected in 1876, with schools, at a cost of nearly £50,000. The church has only had three pastors in the hundred years of its existence—Rev. Thomas Lewis, until 1852; Rev. Henry Allon, from 1844 (beginning as co-pastor to Mr. Lewis) till 1892; and Rev. Hardy Harwood, from 1892 till the present time. Dr. Guinness Rogers, who preached the centenary sermon to a very large congregation on Sunday morning, said that the foundation of their church was, like that of the Church and London Missionary Societies and the Religious Tract Society, a fruit of the great evangelical revival. The history of the church, which had only been called Congregational since 1847, showed, first, that there were spiritual affinities infinitely stronger than our dividing sectarianisms; and, secondly, that under the influence of strong convictions and attachments, without any unpleasant assertion of their peculiarities, men drifted into societies shaped according to their own view of what a church should be.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 30. Joshua ii.

THIS chapter is dedicated to the story of Rahab, partly because of her importance as a link in the genealogy of David, and so of our Lord (Matt. i. 5), and partly because her story shows how much faith may exist in the Gentile soul, though reared amid the darkness of superstition, and blighted by failure in the outward life. We can never forget the words of the sacred writer, "By faith Rahab, the harlot, perished not with them that were disobedient, having received the spies with peace" (Heb. xi. 31). And may we not hope that there have been thousands more like her, who have been recognised by no visible church, but have groped after God through the darkness, andbeen found of Him? "Other sheep," said our Lord, "I have, which are not of this fold, them also must I bring." What precious words! Notice, He says: "Other sheep I have."

We must also recall the inspired comment on this chapter made by the Apostle James, when he adduces the treatment which Rahab meted out to the spies, as an evidence of the genuineness and strength of her faith, so that faith wrought with her works, and works were the evidence of her faith. Her treatment of the spies was not the result of a womanly tenderness and compassion merely; but was dictated by her strong belief that the Hebrew people were in a special way under God's care, that their God was the true God, and that they were the destined occupiers of Canaan.

What she did for the two that claimed the protection of her roof, she did unto God. He accepted and recompensed the service. As she had sheltered, she should be sheltered; as she had given, it should be given her again. God is not unfaithful to forget the labour of love, which is shown towards any of his saints. The King will recall it on the judgment seat (Matt. xxv. 40).

MONDAY, May 1. Joshua iii.

The passage of the Jordan is the burden of this chapter. It was an unknown and untried way, which the Hebrew people had not passed before. The people were called upon to sanctify themselves, that there might be nothing to limit or restrain God's wonder-working might. This was all-important, because the miraculous cleavage of the water was entirely due to the presence of God in the Ark of the Covenant, borne reverently forward by the priests. "What aileth thee, O thou sea, that thou fleest? Thou Jordan, that thou turnest back. Tremble, thou earth, at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob."

The passage of the Jordan may be taken to illustrate the passage which God gives us through the many floods that threaten to bar our progress heavenwards, and overwhelm us with their waves. It seems as though God loves to bring us to the lip of the Jordan flood, just when it has overflowed all its banks, in order that we may learn to trust Him, and to believe in his almighty power and Godhead. But whenever you approach such a flood, whether it be of anxiety or physical and mental suffering, or of bereavement, or of death, be sure to let the Ark of God go first. Let the feet of your great High Priest stand in the brimming tides till they recede and leave a path through their channel-bed, so that you may pass over on dry ground.

The inner meaning of the passage of the Jordan is, of course, deeper than this. It speaks of our oneness with Christ in death and resurrection; it reminds us to identify ourselves with Him in death to the old that is passing away, and to the new that beckons us; it bids us enter the Land of Rest and Promise, and Victory. And because of this, no one can properly understand the inner meaning of the book of Joshua, who has not drunk into the spirit of the Epistle to the Ephesians.

TUESDAY, May 2. Joshua iv.

This is the chapter of the memorial stones. There were apparently two sets of them. The one, taken from the midst of Jordan from the place where the priests' feet had stood in the oozy river-bed; these were carried up the bank, and set down in the place where Israel spent the night. But the other twelve stones were set up in the midst of Jordan in the place where the priests' feet had stood. Thus there were twelve stones in the river-bed, and twelve on the bank.

By these stones a lasting memorial was maintained of the wonderful incident with which they were associated, and which in this way was kept always before the national recollection. The thought of the children who were to come after was frequently present to the thought of these great and wise legislators. Moses thought of them at the Exodus (Ex. xii. 26); and again in the setting up of the great code associated with his name (Deut. vi. 20); and here they are mentioned twice (vv. 6-21). See also Psa. lxxviii. 4.

But surely we shall not be accused of an undue straining of the story when we say that those in the river-bed remind us that we were crucified with Christ, and lay with Him in his grave—"for, if one died for all, all died." Those, on the other hand, that were borne to the location of the camp signify our oneness with the risen and ascended Lord. Where He is, we are.

WEDNESDAY, May 3. Joshua v.

The chapter of Rolling, the Rolling-away of the Reproach. Hence the name Gilgal (Rolling). There, by the act of circumcision, the symbol of the putting away of the sins of the flesh, Joshua removed from Israel the last vestige of the reproach which had attached to them, during their sojourn in Egypt, and since; in that they had neglected the sign of God's ancient covenant with Abraham. They now became, what it was always intended they should be, a people dedicated to separation and purity of life.

That this rite should have taken place on their entry to Canaan, on the threshold of the land of victorious conflict and peaceful rest, is more than significant. It teaches that God cannot show Himself strong on the behalf of those whose heart is not perfect towards Him, and that He cannot give victory or rest to the unseparate and unholy soul. Is not this the reason why your life is a failure, why you are so perpetually defeated by the adversary, and why the blessed rest, which others enjoy, perpetually eludes you? You are not separate from sin, you have not allowed God's sharp knife to pierce to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, as it cuts you off from your old associations, your evil habits, your bad and secret imaginations. Submit yourself to it, I pray you. The path of purity is the only one of safety and blessedness.

The remainder of the chapter beautifully illustrates the blessings of the separated life. (1) The Paschal Lamb is partaken of with new zest and great joy. (2) The soul feeds on the fruits of Canaan. (3) There is a vision of the Captain of the Lord's Host. There were three hosts engaged in the plains of Jericho: that of Ai, that of Israel, and that of the Lord, who had come to ally Himself with his cleansed people.

THURSDAY, May 4. Joshua vi.

Across this chapter we must inscribe the words, "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down" (Heb. xi. 30). Whose faith? Perhaps the people's, but probably Joshua's. And thus we have a memorable instance and illustration of what can be achieved when God combines with man, or when man yields himself entirely to the indwelling and co-operation of God's mighty Spirit. Ah! how many walls would fall down, walls of drink and immorality, and Sabbath desecration and careless indifference, if Christian people would only learn to ally themselves with his wonder-working power!

To the people of Jericho the action of Israel must have appeared first incomprehensible, and finally ludicrous. Day after day the marshalled hosts contented themselves with escorting the symbol of the Hebrew faith round and round the city walls, amid the blowing of the seven trumpets of rams' horn. What do these feeble warriors? Why should we fear their methods? Why abash ourselves before their invasion? But during all this time Israel was being trained to obey, emptied of self-confidence, and taught to wait patiently and helplessly on God. Their attitude was one of absolute obedience and dependence, the two conditions out of which the noblest faith always arises. Then came the glad outburst of appropriating faith, as they sprang over the ruined walls to the capture of the city.

It is easier for us all to adopt the methods of the world, and use either the mine, the battering-ram, or the scaling-ladder, than to perambulate around the city with prayer, and song, and faith. But only through the latter can God co-operate, and his co-operation alone secures the victory. Be still, O eager warrior, till God bids thee shout, and lays open thy way into the heart of the foe.

FRIDAY, May 5. Joshua vii.

Th story of the Valley of Achor may well be pondered by us all. Mark its lessons.

1. Sin will alienate God's help. The walls of Jericho fell, not before the impact of that mighty shout, but before the assault of the unseen warrior band whom the Captain of the Lord's host was leading, viewless, through the air. The one condition of that high and sacred alliance was purity and separation on the part of Israel. Whilst these conditions were realised there was no limit to their success; but sin shut off that celestial help, as surely and suddenly as the turning of a switch will shut off electric heat or light.

2. One individual may bring shame and disaster on a host. Achan's act was the cause of defeat, of the death of three dozen men, and of hours of anxiety. No man can sin by himself. The evil which we do in private will spread its baleful effect into other lives, and exert a paralysing influence on the progress and comfort of those with whom we are connected. Let there be one plague-stricken house, and the entire population of town or city are imperilled; let there be one wilful and persistent sinner, and the whole church and organisation amid which he lives is exposed to spiritual defeat.

God's investigation of sin is very searching. One by one we file before Him, as I have seen an entire ship's company pass one by one before the doctor before he permits the vessel to pass out of quarantine. We cannot hide behind our parents, or shelter ourselves in our religious lineage or descent. Each must give an account of himself to God, and the one offender will be inevitably exposed.

SATURDAY, May 6. Joshua viii.

The chapter of the Ambush. The main point is, that when we have put away sin and are assured, as Joshua was, of the Divine companionship and help, we must, nevertheless, adopt all such measures as strategy and common-sense approve, for the obtaining of any object to which the Spirit of God is conducting us.

There is a golden mean between the presumption, which leaves God to do all, and the self-confidence, which practically refuses to let God do any. We have no right to cast ourselves down from the mountain as though God must at any moment compensate for our carelessness by the swift interposition of his angels. Though, if He bids us cast ourselves down, their strong hands will swiftly interpose between us and the jagged rocks beneath.

Let us, therefore, ponder the words with which God comforted the leader of the Hebrew hosts: Fear not, neither be thou dismayed; I have given unto thine hand the king of Ai and his city; but take all the people of war with thee, and set thee an ambush to the city behind it." There is a place for the use of means in the divine economy; but notice the place which they are to occupy—not at the dictation of our reason, but at the suggestion of God's Spirit—not to shut God out, but to supply Him with the pathway along which He may help us. Fear not, nor be dismayed, the Lord is with thee; only put away sin, and none shall withstand thee.

Glimpses of Romanism.

VII. — The Monastic System in Italy.

By ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

THE monastic system, though associated intimately with Christianity, is not the outcome of it. It existed long before Christian times in Pagan and Jewish lands, and is associated with Brahmanism and Buddhism, with Mohammedanism, and, in the sect of the Essenes, with Judaism; and it has existed independently of any religion. Wherever found, and in whatever time, its rise has been more or less due to men and women seeking refuge from political turmoil, from social luxury and extravagance, and from public looseness of morals; and also to a desire for quiet and leisure for study and contemplation, for the exercises of religion and charity, and for the peaceable pursuit of art, husbandry, and industries.

But while such innocent, or even commendable, reasons may explain the origin of monasticism, and while it is undeniable that many men and women have found in the system what they sought, and that such have helped on the commerce and civilisation and intellectual progress of their times, so that we owe to them the preservation of much that is invaluable in art and literature, still the tendency of the monastic system everywhere has always been downwards towards degeneracy and decay.

Indeed, the very evils it was designed to counteract—idleness, luxury, infidelity, and corruption—it has been ever found eventually to foster. Theoretically it has been one thing, practically it has been the very opposite. So much has this been the case, that in every nation where monasteries and nunneries have existed, they have become its plague-spots, sheltering, behind cloistered walls under the garb of piety and self-sacrifice, hypocrites and impostors, profligates and rebels.

SUCH PLAGUE-SPOTS

had monastic institutions become in England about the middle of the sixteenth century, when a Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into their condition. The revelations that were disclosed, and which were embodied in what was called the "Black Book," and laid upon the table of the House of Commons in 1536, shocked the moral sense of the nation. It seemed as if monks and nuns had touched the lowest depths of human depravity. The result was the passing of the Acts of Dissolution in 1537 and 1538, which swept the evil out of the land.

In every land the history of monasticism has been identical with what it was in England, and in every land suppression has been the only cure. In Germany monastic houses were weeded out by the Reformation, and those spared were cut down by the decree of Joseph II. in 1780. In France, after the revolution in 1792, over a thousand houses were suppressed. In Portugal a complete clearance of them was effected by the decree of 1834. In Spain they were similarly dealt with by the decrees of June 21 and October 11, 1835. Next followed their suppression in Switzerland in 1847. Lastly, Italy, the country that had suffered as much as any other in Christendom from them, but which had hitherto been powerless to take action, roused itself to the cleansing of these Augean stables.

In 1866, before the overthrow of the temporal power, the Italians began the work of purification in the sub-Alpine kingdom of Piedmont, although Napoleon before that had set them the good example. Wherever that extraordinary man went he brought about reforms. He cleared Italy from one end to another, although but temporarily, of some of its worse plague-spots. I came across two ruined monasteries in out-of-the-way places, one amongst the mountains of Umbria and one amongst those of the Dolomites. On inquiring how they were in ruins, I was told that Napoleon, on learning that both were centres of corruption, sent his soldiers to destroy them. That in the Dolomites, beautifully situated on the summit of Monte Froppa, was tenanted by the Batuti, or Flagellants, monks, who, unbaring their bodies, scourged themselves in public with knotted cords, in order to atone for their sins. But their self-inflicted flagellations do not seem to have effected much, for Ciceni, the historian, says: "Erano più che altro un branca di buontemponi, e di fuggifatica." (They were more than anything else a herd of good livers, and of sluggards). When at last Italy's > " . . . dreams were done,

> And she herself had wakened into life,
> And stood full armed and free,"

one united kingdom under King Victor Emmanuel, with Rome for its capital, then the suppression of monasteries and nunneries was decreed throughout the length and breadth of the peninsula. In doing this, the Government took possession of all the monastic buildings in the land, declaring them to be, like the churches, national property. The different religious orders and the creation of new monks and nuns was made illegal.

WERE DECLARED TO BE DISSOLVED,

At the same time the life interests of existing monks and nuns were secured. This was done by allowing them to remain in their monastaries, until reduced by death or other causes to a certain number, say twelve or twenty (dependent upon the size of the house), when these were removed to another monastery where there were more, and the State took possession of the property. In this way, up till the present time, some 3,000 monastic properties have fallen into the hands of the Government, and very few now remain to fall in. These buildings have for the most part been turned by the Government into hospitals and barracks and other such-like useful institutions, and into public schools. Thus they are again serving, in another way, the original design of their foundation, orderly discipline and intellectual development. "But," I have been often asked, "since this is the case, how is it that there are so many monasteries still in Italy?"

The explanation is as follows:—In some cases, where the building, as until lately it was at Pavia, near Milan, is worthy of preservation from an art and architectural point of view, it is declared to be a national monument, and a certain number of monks are retained in it as custodians and showmen. Another reason is that when the monastic property falls in, the Government sometimes has no use for it. It is therefore thrown upon the market for sale. In such cases the Papal Church induces some rich English or American Roman Catholic to buy it. It now becomes private property. The next step is to put back the monks or nuns into it as the servants of the owner, when the law cannot touch them.

A notorious case of this kind is exemplified in the monastery of St. Francis of Assisi. I remember being shown over that building some years ago by a very young monk. When he had finished I asked him, "How is it that you are a monk?" to which he replied, "Why should not I be one?" "Because," I said, "your order was suppressed long before you were born." He then laughed, and said, "Come and I will show you why I am a monk." He then took me to a door in a courtyard, and, pointing to a coat-of-arms over it, said, "Look at that."

IT WAS THE ARMS OF LORD RIPON.

The property had fallen in, Lord Ripon had bought it, and it had become again an extensive monastery. I could not but think that Lord Ripon's conduct was little to his credit. He knew very well that monasteries were being suppressed, not in hostility to religion, but in its interests and in those of the nation; and yet in this manner he does his best to thwart the efforts alike of government and people. His conduct affords another proof of the utter impossibility of a Roman Catholic being true to his political principles when the interests of his mundane church are at stake.

At the same time as Lord Ripon's young monks wore the monastic garb, which is an illegal dress, the Italian Government could take action, but it allows such things to pass. Sometimes, however, the dress is objected to. Some years ago, when I was at San Remo, Queen Margherita passed through the station on her way to visit her mother, the Duchess of Genoa, at Bordighera. The municipality of the town, and the English colony and others, embraced the occasion to show respect to the Queen by presenting Her Majesty with flowers. Some Franciscans attempted to do the same, when the Queen told the Syndic to bid them withdraw, as she could not receive them in the monastic garb.

I am sorry to say that Lord Ripon is not alone in his effort to maintain monastic evils in Italy. Not a few monasteries are in English hands, and I am told that English Roman Catholics are buying properties in Rome, which are turned into nunneries.

The action of Italy and of other countries, in regard to monastic institutions, at the present time, where there is a recrudescence of them. In Scotland, old monastic ruins that ought to be preserved as national monuments are being sold to Roman Catholics, who restore them and use them again as convents. It is urged as an excuse for permitting this that monasteries are no longer the political and social evils they once were. It may be so, but there is every probability that they will become so. In Italy those existing, on the testimony of those who were their inmates, are just what they ever were.

READS ENGLAND A LESSON

There is a beautiful island out in the lagoons near Venice, called S. Lazzaro. It belongs to the Armenians, who have there their monastery. It is not suppressed, but is in full working order, because it is under Turkish rule. The old Republic of Venice having given the island to the Armenians, who were then suffering persecution, they, by placing themselves under Turkish suzerainty, thus escape the Italian law. These Armenians have now, too, deserted their Church and become Roman Catholics. However, as the monks have a printing press, and some of them are men of letters, I always had some admiration for them. The island, too, with its flower and fruit gardens, is so well kept that a visit to San Lazzaro is one of the things visitors to Venice usually do. What was my surprise, when speaking to an ex-Armenian monk of his old home, and saying, "Well, you have left a paradise," to hear him reply, "Yes, externally a paradisa, but

INTERNALLY AN INFERNO."

England, I repeat, ought to take warning. Monasticism is the same as ever, and fallen human nature is the same as ever; and when these elements come together, like those of some fatal compound, the infallible product is a poisoning of the moral atmosphere, with results such as we have noticed, moral and intellectual deterioration and degradation, moral and intellectual decay and death.

In England all the evils of the monastic system are aggravated by the exemption of these institutions from government inspection. I suppose England stands alone amongst the nations of the world in respect of that anomaly. In Italy, in Spain, in Portugal, in Austria, in every European country there is not a house that is not open to the light of day. Strange that England should not only allow monastic institutions to be multiplied to any extent, but should permit their inmates to work as they list behind their walls in secret, against, it may be, the interests of the individual, the family, and the State.

Orphan Working School.—The anniversary dinner in aid of the funds of this charity was recently held. The chairman, Mr. A. W. Aston, made an appeal for additional support. It was the oldest established orphanage of its kind in the United Kingdom. The senior school at Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, provided accommodation for 400 orphans. In 1877 the Alexandra Orphanage at Hornsey Rise was amalgamated with the senior school. They also had a convalescent home at Margate. Some 500 children of both sexes were now being maintained and educated at a cost of £13,000 a year. Altogether, about 5,500 children had directly received the benefits of the institution. Donations and subscriptions were announced amounting to £5,000.

Protestant Outlook.

THE Memorial at Canterbury of the martyrdoms in the reign of Queen Mary is approaching completion. The site of the martyrdoms has been purchased and planted with trees and shrubs, and June 10 has been fixed as the date for the ceremony of unveiling the monument. The Dean of Canterbury has promised the use of the Cathedral for a special service on the occasion, to which all subscribers will be invited.

A great Protestant Demonstration will be held at Sheffield on May 1. The Lord Mayor of Sheffield will preside, and the Earl of Portsmouth and Prebendary Webb-Peploe will speak on the present crisis in the Church. Archdeacon Eyre and a large body of the clergy are showing warm sympathy with the effort.

Colonel Dewé White, writing from 41, Church Road, St. Leonards, urges hearty co-operation between Evangelical Churchmen and Godly Nonconformists. He says:

As an undenominational Protestant (being as free to worship in church as in chapel), I regard it as a sort of suicidal madness to quarrel at such a time as this on such a very minor point as disestablishment.

I consider those Churchmen dislike disestablishment more than Popery if in the present critical posture of affairs they hold aloof from the Nonconformists, whose help is imperatively needed for getting a bill passed in Parliament for clearing the Mass and the Confessional out of our Established Churches.

And, on the other hand, those Nonconformists who, on account of their longing for Disestablishment, refuse to join Evangelical Churchmen in defence of our national Protestantism, show that they have sadly departed from the glorious examples of their forefathers, who rendered grand and noble service to Protestantism.

Let us remember the good cause at the prayer meeting, and at the next general election let us as a band of Christian brethren, put Protestant principles before party politics.

An Italian correspondent of the Morning Herald states, on "unquestionable authority," that—

For some time past confidential negotiations have been proceeding between the Government and Catholic authorities in London and the Catholic authorities in Rome, with a view to the appointment with recognised diplomatic position and powers, of duly accredited Ministers to and from the Holy See. The Pope and his advisers have long considered the present mode of conducting negotiations with England as unsatisfactory; and this has been emphasised to them by the direct and indirect communications which have been carried on in respect to the protest made by the King and the Government of Italy against the Pope being represented at the Peace Conference.

The correspondent adds that "a great Catholic personage" recently said to him:

Were this done in proper form, it would be an enormous facility to us. Your English Church is rapidly drifting towards true Catholicism, and prosecution will cause a split and bring over to us large numbers, including men of exalted social and political influence. With adequate diplomatic relations firmly established between the Holy See and the British Government, intercommunication would be immensely facilitated, and ecclesiastical separated, as it ought to be, from the secular diplomacy.

Even although the Romanist's expectations may not be realised in this particular, it is certain that his interpretation of High Church proceedings in England to-day is very much the same as that of many who hate Popery and all its progeny of evil.

The Peace Conference.—A Vienna correspondent says that as the time for the meeting of the Conference at the Hague approaches, confidence in the beneficent result of the deliberation does not increase. Count Komaroffsky, Professor of International Law at Moscow University, stating his views on the Conference in a Vienna paper, lays stress on the fact that, while all the Governments have expressed sympathy with the Czar's idea, some of them have put forward distinct projects for the increase of their armaments, and he regards this as clear evidence of their indifference, or even hostility, to the Czar's proposal. But, says the Vienna correspondent, Russian armaments have been continued during the last few months with at least as much activity as those of any other European Power, and 300,000 Russian troops remain, as they have done for the last nineteen years, on the Austrian and German frontiers.

The Situation in Armenia.

DR. RAYNOLDS, writing from Van, on April 3, says:—"Let me briefly describe the situation. In the city we are keeping off starvation, doing all that is possible through the industrial bureau, but being obliged to supplement this with a good many free rations. The care of the villages is much more difficult. About £1,000 has been distributed among them. Probably there are 25,000 souls now eking out a most unsatisfactory subsistence with famine food—i.e., hayseed, flax-seed, roots and such like. To keep this multitude in anything like ordinary comfort, at least a 'chop' of grain would be required till harvest, and this would involve a cost of £12,000 for the whole.

"Of course we ought not to give anything approaching this sum, even if it were available, but the £1,000 we have in hand for this purpose will scarcely suffice to prevent actual death, and would need to be doubled or trebled to give the men the strength needed to perform their work, or keep the people in anything like fair health. There have been a good many deaths from hunger, and more from exposure in seeking to appease it; and the general health of the people is being sensibly affected. This is being made manifest by the relatively large number of deaths among the children recently received into the orphanage.

"Despite all the suffering, the poor villagers plead with us to give them all we can as seed, saying they will gladly endure anything short of death to secure this, and we are now giving our strength to this distribution. We shall give out not less than £2,000 (Turkish) in the form of seed, and the Government is giving out a similar amount. The two together may furnish, say, a fifth or fourth of what would have been the normal spring sowing before the massacres. So, you see, we are not making the people rich, but may hope, with God's blessing on the harvest, to avert famine next year."

We received the above letter from Rev. W. A. Essery, secretary of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, who is in communication with many workers in the East. Letters to him may be addressed 7, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

A Neglected People.—I have received a petition signed by Mr. Ivan Pejov and Mr. Antal Trankalof, of O'Besenyo, county Torontal, Hungary, in which they state that while the Scriptures have been translated already into 320 tongues, it has not yet been given to them in their tongue. Therefore they beg that a translation should be made into the language spoken by them, namely, the Palityán. I find that the people were originally Bulgarian, that their language is a dialect of Bulgarian, that it is spoken by 8,000 people in O'Besenyo, 2,000 in Bolgár Telep, 2,000 in Módos, 7,000 in Lárárfôld, Rosendorf, some other small places in county Temes and Vinga, and by several thousands in Denta, Szekelykeve, Omori, Morava, Cserwenka, &c. The people belong nominally to the Roman Catholic Church, but they have no pastors who speak their language and no religious books. I have sent the petition to the committee of our Bible Society—the National Bible Society of Scotland; but perhaps these lines may catch the eye of a kind friend in possession of means who would esteem it a privilege personally to present these poor people with the Scriptures in their own tongue.

ANDREW MOODY, D.D.

Rudolf Quai 8, Budapest.

Coloured People in Canada.

A GREATER number of coloured people are resident in the Dominion of Canada than is generally supposed. Census statistics show that in the Maritime Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island there are over 8,000 negroes, whilst the entire coloured population of the Dominion is about 22,000. The majority of these are the descendants of slaves who, no longer able to bear the misery and degradation of their bondage, fled from the United States to find in Canada a haven of refuge.

The people thus rescued from slavery, and brought to know the salvation of God, have greatly benefited by the sympathy of the Christian Church; but many difficulties have had to be contended with. Whilst the good seed has been sown, and there is promise that the doctrine that all men are brethren before God, no matter their origin or colour, is nigh unto full recognition, the baneful effects of hereditary prejudices keep asunder those who, after all, are separated by naught but the accident of the colour of their skin.

So it is that, although the ministers of our white brethren heartily co-operate with us in the work of spreading the Gospel of Christ, and we in turn assist them in the work of evangelisation, our people have sufficient reasons for still worshipping in separate churches. One such church it is my privilege to represent. It is the African Methodist Episcopal Church, or rather its Nova Scotia Conference. There is no need to insist upon the good that is being done; the fruitfulness of her labours is visible in the blessings which, thanks to our gracious Lord, she is able to bestow upon those who, in consequence of their fathers' and forefathers' bondage for centuries, are yet in some respects like children.

I have come to England to solicit the sympathy of Christian people. Our brethren in the Maritime Provinces are manfully struggling to maintain their churches; but they have a hard struggle for physical existence. We desire to extend our work, and shall be glad of opportunities to make known our needs.

HENRY B. BROWN, Elder,
Fin. Sec., Nova Scotia Conference.
10, Dalmeny Road, Tufnell Park, N.

The Y.M.C.A.

IN Cuba the Y.M.C.A. is now at work in about ten regiments and two division hospitals.

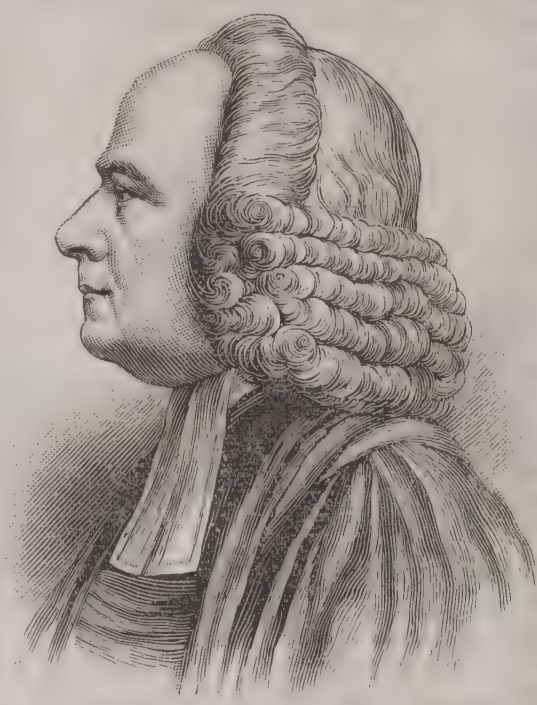
The naval department of the American international committee of Y.M.C.A.'s recently established in Brooklyn is doing remarkably well. Already the necessity for enlarged quarters is felt, and the committee is trying to secure an additional house.

The Croydon Y.M.C.A., which started its financial year with an indebtedness amounting to nearly £250, has, owing to the kindness of a few local friends, been enabled to close its account free of debt.

Mr. F. J. Fedarb, recently of Ottawa, Canada, who has succeeded the late Mr. W. H. Roberts in the travelling secretaryship of the South-Western District, reports gratifying progress in the work of several of the associations in the district.

Mr. John R. Mott, of the American Y.M.C.A. Executive and secretary of the World's Christian Student Federation, has just paid a visit to Finland. Dr. Karl Fries, of Stockholm, who acted as Mr. Mott's interpreter, writes of "remarkable and most blessed" meetings held at the university of Helsingfors. "In no other continental university," he says, "have the manifest results of the work in clear conversions been anywhere so large."

Mr. Galen M. Fisher, who went out in December, 1897, as one of the American Y.M.C.A. representatives in Japan, sends an interesting account of a recent association conference in Kobe, which was addressed by Lieutenant R. P. Hobson while on his way to Manila. Hearing that an association rally was to be held, he excused himself from a social company and hastened to the gathering just an hour and a half before sailing time. Upon request he spoke for a few minutes, through an interpreter, on "Religion in Action."



Holiday Home.—Miss Harriet Mason asks us to announce that, Bessel's House being no longer available, she has removed her Home of Rest for Young Women to Oakwood Lodge, Ide Hill, Sevenoaks, which is even more suitable and in a more bracing and healthy situation, and in the midst of lovely scenery.

The Great Awakening in 1740.

GEORGE WHITEFIELD IN NEW ENGLAND.

THE great Evangelical or Methodist Revival may also be called the Revival of the Anglo-Saxon people; for it spread among them in every place in which they were settled, and was one of the forces that aided mightily in their unification, long before "Imperialism" was dreamt of. It was, in fact, a strong cord of unity during the American War of Independence, holding together in sympathy and goodwill at least the evangelical sections of British and American people.

Whitefield, who was born December 16, 1714, converted in 1735, and ordained a deacon in the Church of England on June 20, 1736, went first to America in 1738, leaving behind him in London and in the West of England an astonishing reputation for eloquence and spiritual power, though he was only a young man of twenty-four. He landed at Savannah, where religion was in a deplorably low condition. In the Southern and Middle States he preached with the same success among the rough colonials as he had done at home among more refined people. In the backwoods, in small settlements, and in Philadelphia he was God's messenger to thousands.

At Bethesda, near to Savannah, he founded an orphanage for the destitute children of Georgia which exists to this day, after having encountered numberless difficulties and perils. Whittier, in his fine poem, "The Preacher," speaks of it and the church connected with it as now "but dreams," things swept away by the judgments of God, because Whitefield owned and used slaves for the good of the orphans; but this is a mistake. God's mercy which founded the orphanage, which touched men's hearts with tenderness through Whitefield's appeals, and brought abundant supplies for its need from every part of Britain and the American Colonies, upheld it when its earthly founder and friend was dead and gone. It was, perhaps, the most fixed point in Whitefield's wandering life, and supplied him with motives for exertion and prayer. It was at the invitation of two respected ministers of Boston, and under a strong desire to see the descendants of the Puritans, that Whitefield in 1740 sailed from Charleston, and came, as he believed by a special Providence, first of all to Newport, Rhode Island, just after the beginning of Sunday evening service. He sat in the church, undiscovered as he thought, but after the sermon a gentleman asked him if his name was not Whitefield. "Yes, it was." He had come to a country that was prepared for his work. The local revivals which began under Jonathan Edwards had not died down. A spirit of expectation and desire was widely diffused. Many believed that great and gracious things would come to pass. The short stay at Newport gave evidence that it would be so. On the evening of the first day the house where he stayed was filled with hearers, for whom he held an hour's service.

The Assembly, one day, adjourned its sitting to attend divine worship. So eager were the people after the truth that he could not move about the town, even in the darkness of the evening, without being noticed and followed. A thousand of them once crowded round a friend's house, which he had thought to visit privately, and others came into the house until every room was filled. Taking his stand on the threshold, he preached for nearly an hour from the appropriate text, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." "Blessed be God," he says, "it was a very solemn meeting." His pointed way of dealing with sin was exemplified in his speaking of the common sin of running in goods; he asked in one of his sermons, "What will become of you who cheat the king of his taxes?" His hearers looked at each other, like men conscious of their own and each other's guilt.

At Boston he was cordially received by the Governor and several gentlemen and ministers, yet was denied the use of the Episcopal Church. He therefore took to the meeting-houses and the fields as his sanctuaries, and preached to thousands. A terrible and unaccountable panic seized one of the congregations as it was awaiting his appearance. Some threw themselves out of the gallery, others leaped from the windows, and some of the strong trampled upon the weak. When he came it was a scene of wild confusion. His invincible presence of mind did not forsake him, and he announced his intention to preach on the common. Many thousands followed him through the rain into the field, but there were five dead persons left behind in the meeting-house, and others were dangerously wounded. The calamity, which weighed heavily upon his spirits, in nowise damaged his popularity, because, notwithstanding the painful selfishness shown by some of the people in the meeting-house, there was a real desire to know the truth.

Neighbouring towns were not forgotten. One of his excursions extended over 178 miles, and had sixteen preachings, yet he returned to Boston without being in the least fatigued. The students of Cambridge had several visits from him, and his language to them was, according to his after confession (made in the most public manner) both from the pulpit and the press, both harsh and uncharitable. He suffered himself to be guided too much by hearsay; and there are always plenty of alarmists who can find nothing but heresy in tutors, and worldliness in students.

Some of the days must have been glorious indeed, such for example as a Saturday, when he preached to about 15,000 people on the common. He thus describes it: "But oh, how did the Word run! It rejoiced me to see such numbers greatly affected, so that some of them, I believe, could scarcely abstain from crying out that that place was no other than a Bethel, and the gate of heaven." He went to his lodgings. "The power and presence of the Lord accompanied and followed me. Many now wept exceedingly, and cried out under the Word, like persons that were hungering and thirsting after righteousness. And after I left them God gave me to wrestle with Him in my chamber in behalf of some dear friends then present, and others that were absent from us. The Spirit of the Lord was upon them all. It made intercessions with groanings that cannot be uttered."

After travelling along the coast to Marblehead, Salem, where he preached to about 7,000 people; Ipswich, where he met a descendant of John Rogers, the martyr; Newbury, Hampton, Portsmouth, and York, in Maine, he returned to Boston, taking these places again on his way. At Boston everything fanned the flame of zeal, both in the preacher and in the people, and the end of the visit was more remarkable than the beginning. The touching words of a little boy, who died the day after he heard Whitefield preach, furnished the ground of one of Whitefield's strongest appeals to old and young. Immediately before he died the child said, "I shall go to Mr. Whitefield's God." Old people bowed their heads in grief, not in anger, when the preacher, with a tenderness that desired the salvation of all, said, "Little children, if your parents will not come to Christ, do you come and go to heaven without them!" Like a skilled fisher of men, he knew that if the children were won, the salvation of their parents would be more probable.

The condition of mind in which he conducted some of these services was very remarkable and suggestive. "On one occasion," he says, "I was so oppressed with such a sense of my base ingratitude to my dearest Saviour, that Satan would fain have tempted me to hold my tongue and not invite poor sinners to Jesus Christ, because I was so great a sinner myself. But God enabled me to withstand the temptation; and since Jesus Christ had shown such mercy to me, and did not withdraw his Holy Spirit from me, the chief of sinners, I was enabled the more feelingly to talk of his love."

From Boston he passed to places that had been directly under the influence of the revival of 1735. At one place he complains that his heart was dead at first, and had but little freedom; but before he finished, the Word came with such demonstration of the Spirit that great numbers were very much melted down. At Worcester, where he preached in the open air to some thousands, "the Word fell with weight indeed. It carried all before it." At Hadley, where Christians were complaining of deadness and losing their first love, as soon as he mentioned what God had done for their souls formerly it was like putting fire to tinder. The remembrance of it quickened them, and caused many of them to weep sorely. At Northampton he spent several delightful days with Jonathan Edwards, whom he describes as a "solid, excellent Christian, but at present weak in body. I think I may say I have not seen his fellow in all New England. When I came into his pulpit, I found my heart drawn out to talk scarce anything but the consolations and privileges of saints, and the plentiful effusions of the Holy Ghost in the hearts of believers. And when I came to remind them of their former experiences, and how zealous and lively they were at that time, both minister and people wept much, and the Holy Ghost enabled me to speak with a great deal of power."

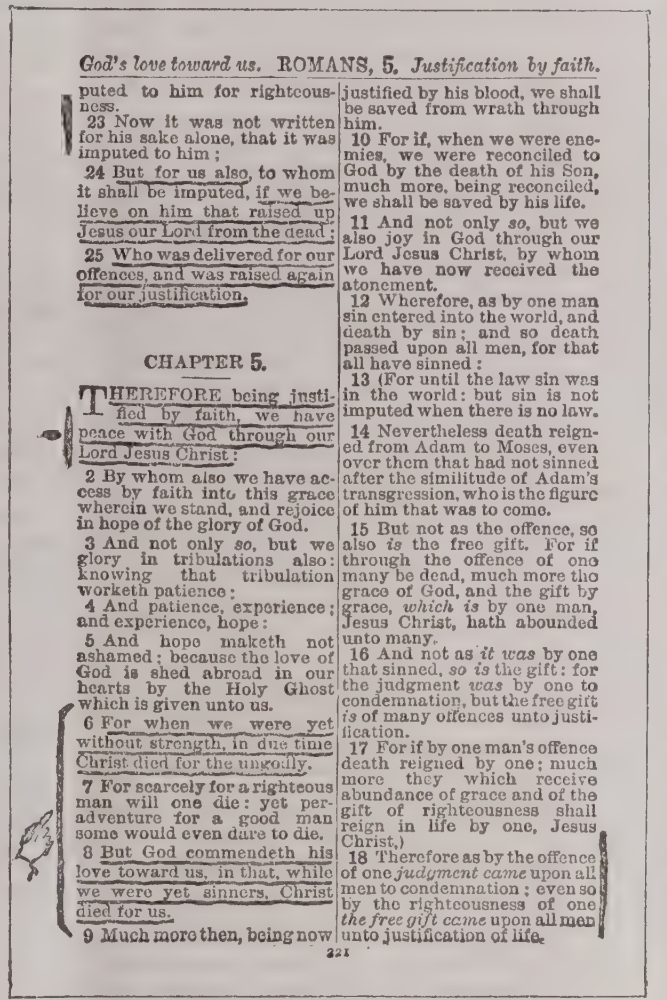
During this visit Edwards spoke to Whitefield, alone, about impulses, and told him some reasons he had for thinking that he gave too great heed to such things. He also spoke to Whitefield in the presence of others about judging other persons to be unconverted. Edwards' kind and wise words on these important subjects were not taken amiss; nevertheless Edwards thought Whitefield liked him not so well for his opposing these things, and never made so much of an intimate of him as of some others. Similarity of theological belief was a bond between them, and Whitefield's humble, teachable spirit made him willing to confess his mistakes and adopt more scriptural methods. His safeguard against flattery and fanaticism lay in his humility, teachableness, and candour.

In 1744 he returned to New England, coming, as one minister remarked, "with the same extraordinary spirit of meekness, sweetness, and universal benevolence as before; in opposition to the spirit of separation and bigotry, he is still for holding communion with all Protestant churches."

Subsequent visits to New England were made in 1754, 1764, and 1770 with similar results. On Friday, September 28, 1770, he preached at Portsmouth, the next day at Exeter, for nearly two hours, to a large congregation in the fields. He rode forward to Newburyport with a friend, and stayed with his friend, the Rev. Jonathan Parsons. As he passed through the hall, on his way to his bedroom, the sight of a number of people who had come to hear him, constrained him to halt on the staircase, turn towards them, and begin an exhortation. He spoke until the candle went out in its socket. Next morning, Sunday, September 30, at six o'clock, he died. They buried him under the pulpit of his friend, Mr. Parsons, and New England holds the dust of England's greatest evangelist.

J. P. Gledstone.



West London Mission.—The story of the past year's work of this mission has been issued, in anticipation of the annual gatherings at St. James's Hall on Friday, May 5. It has been considerably shortened, so as to secure a better chance of perusal. We can honestly assert that those who will take the time to study or even to scan these fifty pages will be well rewarded. Copies may be obtained from Mr. W. T. Piper, Evangelistic Secretary to the Mission, Craven Hall, Foubert's Place, Regent Street, W.

Caledonian Christian Club.—About a month ago the attention of the directors of this institution was directed to a most desirable and commodious residence at 24, Guildford Street, Russell Square. Within a few hours, a few generous Scotsman became responsible for the purchase of the lease. This, with removal expenses, will involve about £450, leaving a very moderate annual rental. The committee have every confidence that their fellow countrymen will rally to clear off the initial debt. It is hoped that parents and pastors of young men and women, coming to or in London, will communicate with the secretary.

Army Scripture Readers and Soldiers' Friend Society.—The basis of the society is interdenominational, and the sole object to spread the saving knowledge of Christ among our soldiers. The Readers work with all Protestant chaplains, Church of England, Presbyterian and Wesleyan. The general testimony is that their services are invaluable, as they reach the men and their families in barracks and out. As a rule, the readers are pensioners, or have been in the Army. The operations of the society are now restricted for want of means. There are at present seventy-two Readers on the staff, and the need is urgent for many more. The cost of a Reader is about £80 a year, and the secretary of the Society, Colonel G. Philips, 112, St. Martin's Lane, W.C., will be glad to communicate with any one desirous of promoting the work in any way.

The Red-Marked Testament.

Mr. R. Cope Morgan writes from Detroit:—"I have received the specimen pages of Mrs. Menzies' marked New Testament, in which those verses are conspicuously and emphatically marked which most vividly present the primary truths of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The testimonies of approval from many leading evangelistical ministers of various churches will have the endorsement, I am assured, of all who make it their business to win souls. And not only will these marked passages be of great use to such, but the study of them will be an education to all young Christians in the way of salvation, and a means of giving light to those who are seeking after God, if haply they may find Him. I earnestly hope this valuable help to the knowledge of the Gospel will be widely scattered. I am rejoiced to know from Mrs. Menzies that many cheering testimonies are coming in as to the use these marked verses are likely to prove to seeking souls, and to Christian workers in dealing with them."

God's love toward us. ROMANS, 5. Justification by faith.

puted to him for righteousness.
23 Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him;
24 But for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead;
25 Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification.

CHAPTER 5.

THEREFORE being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ:
2 By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.
3 And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience;
4 And patience, experience; and experience, hope:
5 And hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.
6 For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly.
7 For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die.
8 But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.
9 Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him.
10 For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life.
11 And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement.
12 Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned:
13 (For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law.
14 Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come.
15 But not as the offence, so also is the free gift. For if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many.
16 And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation, but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.
17 For if by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ,)
18 Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life.

321

The new edition of the Testament, with its red markings and large type, is being welcomed by Christian workers all over the country. Its object is to direct seeking souls—unacquainted with the Word of God—to passages setting forth the way of Salvation. Mr. Moody's name for it is a good one—"a finger-post for seeking souls." As a helpful guide to young Christian workers, also, when dealing with inquirers, the markings will be found of great service.

We are glad to be able to give a fac-simile of one of the pages. The book is published by Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press.

The Sabbath a Delight.

Holy of the Lord, honourable.

GOD'S GOOD GIFT.

The blessings of the Sabbath are the gift of our earliest, our best, our latest Friend. How can we sell such, or give it for the idea of a paltry gain? Where Sabbath labour is bartered for bread or coin, it is like the sorcerer's money offered to purchase the Holy Ghost—it will perish with him. Whoso goeth out to gather manna on the Sabbath, will find none.

John Younger.

O day most calm, most bright,
The fruit of this, the next world's bud,
Th' indorsement of supreme delight
Writ by a Friend, and with his blood;
The couch of time; care's balm and bay;
The week were dark but for thy light:
Thy torch doth show the way.

Herbert.

MAN'S "SAVINGS BANK."

The Sabbath which God gave was intended as a savings bank; into it we are to gather the resources upon which we are to draw all the week. That man who breaks the Sabbath robs his own nerve, his own muscle, his own brain, his own bones. Every gland and pore and cell and finger-nail demands the seventh day for repose.

Dr. Talmage.

A FAMILIAR TESTIMONY.

I have found that a due observance of the duties of the Lord's Day hath ever had joined to it a blessing upon the rest of my time, and the week that hath been so begun hath been blessed and prosperous to me; and on the other hand, when I have been negligent of the duties of this day, the rest of the week hath been unsuccessful and unhappy to my own secular employments. This I write, not lightly or inconsiderately, but upon long and sound observation and experience.

Chief Justice Hale.

THE HEAVENLY DAY.

Why, ye sordid sons of Mammon,
Hew for brother man a tomb?
Rob his children of the heaven
He could make one day in seven
Of his poor but happy home?

A NATIONAL BLESSING.

The people of Great Britain have many peculiarities, and it is to some of them that, humanly speaking, they owe their position among the nations. One of their peculiarities, as contrasted with other people's, is the observance of the Lord's Day. It has stamped a vigour of character on their thoughts and actions; it has created a greater liveliness of conscience and a sense of responsibility—qualities, without which no freedom can be generous, nor the possession of power be safe, either to the possessor or the subject of it.

Lord Shaftesbury.

FORETASTES OF HEAVEN.

Bright days, abide with us! We need you still.
Ye are the ever-gushing wells of time;
Ye are the open casements where we hear—
The distant notes of Heaven's descending chime.

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL BENEFITS.

Believing in the authority of the Lord's Day as a religious institution, I must, as a matter of course, desire the recognition of that authority by others. But over and above this, I have myself, in the course of a laborious life, signally experienced both its mental and physical benefits. I can hardly overstate its value in this view, and for the interest of the working men of this country, alike in these and in other yet higher respects, there is nothing I more anxiously desire than that they should more and more highly appreciate the Christian Day of Rest. W. E. Gladstone.

THE WORKMAN'S JUBILEE.

O precious day! the workman's jubilee, the slave's release, the shield of servitude, the antidote of weariness, the suspension of the curse! How it smoothes the brow of care! How it brightens the countenance of gloom! How it braces the enervated limbs of labour! How it revives the drooping spirit of despair! It is a perpetual rebuke to the reigning rapacity of the world.—John Allan Quinton.

The "May" Meetings.

The London Y.M.C.A.

WEDNESDAY of last week was the annual field-day of the Central Association, which embraces the work carried on at Aldersgate Street, Cornhill, and Exeter Hall. There were three rallies during the day—a prayer meeting with address at the old Home of the Association, in Aldersgate Street; a meeting intended mainly for City folk at the Mansion House in the afternoon; and a mass meeting in the evening at Exeter Hall, the headquarters. All the gatherings went with that swing which indicates a high measure of prosperity and abounding enthusiasm.

The afternoon assembly, under the Lord Mayor's official roof, indeed was too much of a success in point of numbers. Several hundreds of people were left lamenting on the wrong side of the entrance door. It is not at all easy to gauge the probable demand for accommodation or to explain the motives which bring a crowd. The fact of the Lord Mayor being an old Y.M.C.A. man himself may have helped to popularise the meeting at which he presided with much cordiality, and at which equally hearty speeches were made by Lord Aberdeen, Canon Fleming, and that wonderfully youthful old man, Sir George Williams. He really seems to get more young in heart and sympathy as the outward man begins to show signs of decay. For that jubilant and sanguine hopefulness and the gladsome outlook which we associate with adolescence, Sir George was probably

THE MOST UPLIFTING SPEAKER OF THE DAY.

It may be presumed that those who were excluded from the afternoon reception consoled themselves by securing good seats at Exeter Hall in the evening, when there was again a splendid audience, but room for all so far as we could see. A male choir made the half-hour of waiting pass quickly and pleasantly. That militant hymn "The Church's one foundation" was sung with a loud-voiced confidence which seemed to indicate that, in the opinion of a typical Exeter Hall assemblage at any rate, the great ecclesiastical storm of the moment was nothing more than a light breeze ruffling the surface of the ocean deeps. A word of praise might be uttered here for the pretty programme, which contained finely reproduced portraits of the afternoon and evening speakers; but veracity compels us to admit that even Association secretaries are not immaculate, otherwise they would not have described Rev. Henry Sharpe (who read the Scriptures and offered prayer) as "of Christ Church," instead of Holy Trinity Church, Hampstead.

SUMMARY OF THE YEAR'S WORK.

There is really not much scope for novelty in a Y.M.C.A. annual report. We have listened so many times, since the days of Shipton downwards, to the customary unfolding of the four heads of discourse that we could give it all in substance, if not literatim, from accumulated memory. It must be admitted, however, that Mr. J. H. Putterill showed quite a Pauline touch of originality when he remarked that the departments of association work for young men were "these four—physical, mental, social, and spiritual; but the greatest of these is the spiritual." Mr. W. Hind-Smith, from a front seat on the platform, honoured that epigrammatic sentence with a special cheer. The two outstanding events of the past year, Mr. Putterill informed us, were the generous gift to the Association, by the President, of Shaftesbury House, Margate, as a sea-side holiday house for young men; and the renewal of the leases of the premises in Aldersgate Street and Cornhill. The latter item, involving increased rentals and considerable outlay for improvements, was made the basis of an earnest appeal for a special fund of £1,000 to cover the cost. It goes without saying that all the agencies at work have been kept in full operation during the past twelve months; these include preachings and teachings innumerable, tea parties, educational classes, recreations social and physical, besides conferences and special Gospel efforts on behalf of different sections of the Association constituency. Indeed, one may say something good is going on all the time at all or either of the three centres. The red coats and blue coats have now come to stay in the Association ranks since the incorporation of the work among soldiers. Every reference to these uniformed and stalwart brethren evoked a cheer which seemed to show that the assembly was not composed of "peace at any price" devotees.

We have not left ourselves much room to speak of the

FOUR ADMIRABLE SPEECHES

that filled up the greater part of the proceedings. Of Sir George Williams' "cheery optimism" we have already spoken; but he does not overlook the other side, for he well observed that young men are hard to catch and hard to keep. Nothing but love, born of the divine love could do the work. Love goes after the young man, and is not satisfied till it gets him safely into the Saviour's fold. As a rule argument is of little use, unless it be the sort of argument used by the Irishman, who, when he wanted to gain a young friend, treated him to a couple of dozen of oysters and took him out for a walk. He thought that was a "tract" which the young man would appreciate. The chairman recalled, in his own happy way, some notable memories of the Basle Conference of July last, when, mirabile dictu, he, a simple layman, was permitted to address a crowded congregation in the venerable cathedral of the city. Such a thing in this "enlightened" country would hardly do, but over there it seemed to answer admirably. Another very excellent point was scored by Sir George when he remarked that nowadays people want unity. Why, they had it already in the Y.M.C.A.—the fullest unity, with ample diversity. As an old London man of business, he told his young friends that if they wanted something that would help them in times of stress, that would give them backbone and make men of them, let them say a long good-bye to scepticism and give themselves to Christ in the ranks of the Y.M.C.A.

The speech of the Bishop of Minnesota was at once simple, fatherly and full of consecrated good sense; that of Rev. R. J. Campbell, of Brighton, was thoughtful and slightly academic; and the closing utterance by Rev. Dinsdale T. Young was fervid enough for "an excited Methodist" (as he modestly called himself), though it was somewhat too consistently humorous for a last word on such an occasion. The Bishop told of a Y.M.C.A. man who is preaching Christ in the far North America, and has won for Christ many of the wandering Red Indians there. He loved the Association because it teaches its members to go forth and bring others to the Saviour. A tremendous cheer was evoked by the aged prelate as he referred to the bonds of Christian love existing between the two great Anglo-Saxon nations. An apt corollary to the chairman's remarks on the potency of love was Bishop Whipple's story of how love had won both to himself and to Christ the heart of a great medicine-man in an Indian tribe. When these people become Christians they live it out. He had never seen anything more like the love of the Divine Master than the way these red men set to bring back any erring brother to the true fold. It was touching to hear from the lips of the aged bishop how, when he was appointed to that office forty years ago, he took for his seal of office this motto: Pax per sanguinem Crucis—"Peace by the blood of Christ." Let the members of the Y.M.C.A. band themselves together for the world's salvation. With the sympathy they have learned from Jesus Christ let them go forth and do his work. And let no word of bitterness or strife ever be spoken by their lips.

Mr. Campbell confessed this to be his first appearance in Exeter Hall. Speaking as a young man to young men, he discoursed on the importance of having a definite purpose in life in order to true success. Too many Christians nowadays are little more than well meaning opportunists; they do little to frame their own career. There must be deliberate choice. Imitation of others whom we regard as ideal characters is well enough so far; but it must not go the length of the students under a certain professor, who was wont to make some peculiar gestures by reason of a physical deformity, and whose students all left college using the same gestures. A reference to Christ as the Great Exemplar brought out a commendatory reference to Mr. Sheldon's book, "What Would Jesus Do?" The speaker, however, anticipated any possible criticism by asseverating that to him Christ was first of all his Redeemer. He was none the less the unique and sinless Example in our relations with the outside world. He urged his young hearers, in closing, to adopt the character of "the fighting mystic," and to be certain that they possessed a working faith.

Mr. Young's speech was delivered rather under the pressure of time, but he imported much life into his remarks and expatiated ably on the grounds upon which he fully endorsed the work and the principles of the Y.M.C.A. They had never blushed to own the word "Evangelical," or the word "Protestant," or to uphold the sanctity and rest of the Sabbath. All these points were, of course, thoroughly up to date, and the speaker's treatment of them earned the approval of the great gathering.

Christian Police Association.

CHARACTERISED throughout its many undertakings by a sturdy evangelistic spirit, this helpful organisation continues to thrive at home and abroad, proving, by divine blessing, a source of spiritual inspiration and social assistance to members of the various police forces in many countries.

Connected with the association in London and the chief cities of the United Kingdom, are many centres, each maintaining its Bible reading union, temperance society, and other good works; while a missionary union, which has its agents busily engaged in Ceylon, Northern India, and West Africa, is supported almost entirely by the subscriptions of constables. Both the Metropolitan and provincial headquarters, so familiar as continue to flourish, and the many orphanages and convalescent institutions have a record of increased usefulness.

SPIRITUAL RALLYING PLACES,

The annual gatherings were held on Thursday, 20th inst., at Exeter Hall, the programme including many excellent features. Conferences, morning and afternoon, were followed by a missionary gathering, at which Rev. F. B. Meyer gave a telling address. Subsequently the large hall was occupied by audiences evidently eager to demonstrate a hearty appreciation of the objects and work of the association. In the afternoon, Rev. F. Paynter, Mr. T. A. Denny, and other friends, supported Mr. J. H. Tritton, who presided, in the absence through illness of Colonel E. H. Carlile. Mr. Tritton, after referring in feeling terms to the labours of Miss Gurney and the many other ladies now connected with the movement, dwelt on the relative value of physical and moral courage, and urged his audience, which of course consisted largely of constables and their families, to be before all things godly, instant in season and out of season in witnessing for the Master.

Mr. John Colville, M.P., in a very earnest address, pointed out the many opportunities which came to the force of manifesting a practical missionary spirit. Enforcing a vigorous appeal with many homely illustrations, the speaker went on to remark that it was the fashion nowadays to regard an out-and-out man or woman as a crank or nuisance; nevertheless let none be discouraged, but by word of mouth and the sincere seven-day-a-week witness of a consistent life, confess Jesus as their Lord.

Rev. Thos. Cook, in a stimulating evangelistic address, dealt with the difficulties that seem, to the unconverted, to bar the way of salvation. Mr. Cook's chief point was that grace would be given to them in the hour of need. When Mr. Moody was asked if he possessed grace to be a martyr, he replied, "No; but if I were called to be a martyr, God would give the grace." Mr. Cook concluded with a pathetic appeal for immediate acceptance of Christ, and a number of his hearers quickly responded. The tone of the meeting was one of deep spirituality throughout. Subsequently another largely-attended gathering was held, attended by much blessing. An interesting feature was the presence on the platform of a police choir and a band of charming little singers from the orphanages.

The Midnight Meeting Movement.

THE friends of this long-sustained effort on behalf of wronged women held their thirty-ninth annual meeting on Tuesday last week in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall. Sir George Williams presided, and was supported by Mr. Wilson M'Cree (secretary), Mr. W. J. Taylor, of "Friendless and Fallen;" Rev. A. J. Poynder, vicar of St. Michael's, Burleigh Street; Rev. J. Surman Cooke, of Lambeth; Mr. J. H. Lydall, and other friends. Extracts from the Annual Report, read by Mr. D. Nixon, went to show that not only in London, but in many provincial towns, meetings had been held. Grateful acknowledgment was made of the kindness shown by Sir George Williams for providing an annual gathering of women frequenting the Strand. One could have wished to hear a larger income announced at the close of the report than £926 13s. 1d., in support of an effort of such importance.

The President, in his address, likened the society to the Good Samaritan, who of old found the poor traveller robbed, stripped of his raiment, and left half beaten to death by the thieves who had sprung upon him. It was a graphic picture of the condition in which the workers of this society found so many women, robbed of everything they counted valuable. Rev. A. J. Poynder said that, living as he did in the centre of London, amidst the many courts abutting on Drury Lane, it was with thankfulness that he welcomed the assistance of this society. Two nights had they spent among the busiest and most frequented thoroughfares of Piccadilly, Regent Street, and Oxford Street, but with their best efforts he felt that they were only touching the fringe of the evil. Mr. J. H. Lydall expressed a hope that the "Letters to Men" would have a yet larger distribution, and that hearts and consciences might be stirred by them. Rev. J. Surman Cooke reminded the meeting that one case rescued was of infinitely more value than the society's entire income.

The Pastors' College.

THE usual gatherings for friends and supporters of the Pastors' College were held on Wednesday, April 19, in connection with the College Evangelical Association. The capacious hall at the rear of the Tabernacle was filled with a large and enthusiastic assembly, and the entire proceedings were of a spiritually stimulating character.

Mr. Henry Wood, who occupied the chair, remarked that the work of the college was more necessary than ever. One of the great features of the century almost closed would be the work of their honoured and revered friend, the founder and first president of the institution.

A pithy review of the work was given by Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, who pointed out that no fewer than 765 former students are labouring as in various parts of the world. The reports of their work afford great encouragement to all concerned in the administration. The college income, however, has shrivelled considerably. This, perhaps, is not to be wondered at, for a strenuous effort is still in progress for the restoration of the beloved Tabernacle. Even now that the church has returned to the old spot, the weekly offerings cannot be wholly devoted to the college. As to the interior workings the aim remains unaffected, and methods are much as they were. If the educational standard is somewhat raised, the spiritual tone is not allowed to be lowered. There is, of course, no change of front with regard to doctrine. The college is in statu quo in that respect, even at the risk of being labelled as behind the age.

PASTORS, MISSIONARIES, AND EVANGELISTS

Pastor Charles Spurgeon gave a characteristic address, demonstrating that the character of the college had not changed. As in times past, so in the present, by the help of God, those who were called to its management intended to keep upon the lines laid down by its founder. The growing requirements of the age, from an educational point of view, are being efficiently met by a tutorial staff whose competency is unquestionable, and the training received by the students is commensurate with the demands which will be made upon them in their future ministerial career.

A number of short addresses by ministers who owed their training to the college were RECEIVED WITH KEEN INTEREST

by the great audience. Pastor W. Whale, of the City Tabernacle, Brisbane, said that in Queensland they had not half a million of people in a country ten times larger than England, but many positions in the ministry were held by old students of the College. Six out of about twenty Baptist ministers in Queensland were educated there, including the president and secretary of the local Union and the editor of the denominational journal.

Pastors A. W. Bean, of Glasgow, R. N. Snellgrove, of Dalston, and Mr. T. Murray gave vivid and helpful accounts of difficulties surmounted and causes built up, and at the close, in accordance with custom, the large company took supper together, the meal being laid in the new lower hall of the Tabernacle. The responsibilities of the college management are just now especially numerous and arduous, and the remarkable vigour and enthusiasm of these annual meetings must have proved an emphatic incentive to continued effort.

Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society.

LORD KINNAIRD presided in Exeter Hall on Monday, 17th inst., at the annual meeting of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society.

Rev. John Forgan, hon. secretary, said that the society's evangelists worked among the small communities of our fellow-countrymen scattered along the railway lines and on tea and coffee and jute plantations.

Lord Kinnaird said he hoped they would receive more help from Episcopalians in the future than in the past. If we did not do something to keep alive in our scattered fellow-countrymen the sense of duty to God, their lowered condition would react on us at home. He thought it would be a great thing if mission stations were so strengthened that the missionaries could do some work among their own countrymen where there was no chaplain.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie, ex-Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, highly commended the society for its unsectarian character and the catholicity of its aims. The churches at home did not appear to realise the importance of the work to be done. The real danger of Anglo-Indian life was not sun or pestilence, but the heathenising influence of the surroundings. He maintained the truth of a statement which Lord Northbrook had rather countered last week—that the ungodly lives of many Anglo-Indians were the greatest obstacles to the spread of Christianity among the heathen, though he would be the last to deny that there were many good Christians exerting great influence on the right side. By neglecting the Anglo-Indians and Eurasians, we were creating missionaries of evil who did far more harm than the Christian missionaries could do good. Numbers of our people in India were living practically heathen lives. All who took an interest in India should come forward to support this society; and he specially appealed to commercial firms, if only for their own interests, to share in the work done among their isolated representatives in India. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P.

Stratford Conference Hall.

ONE of the many good all-round Gospel agencies of Greater London is the Stratford Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A. An "all-round" agency, on the one hand presupposes a needy sphere, and on the other hand involves wide sympathy, commonsense, discernment, and earnest devotion on the part of the workers employed. These important conditions are all realised in the Conference Hall work in the populous Stratford district of East London, and it is a joy to learn that the labourers are not without continual encouragement in their faithful ministry. As elsewhere, there is, much to grieve and disappoint; but the victory over these and other depressing influences is given by an ever-enlarging and deepening faith in God.

The fourteenth annual report of the work says: "The preaching to the people of the glad Gospel of Jesus Christ has gone on as heretofore in our large hall on Sunday afternoons and evenings. Without attempting to tabulate results, we yet may say that there have been many visible results of these services. One case is worthy of notice. An intelligent young man, but densely ignorant on spiritual matters, was brought into light, and his were under God used to the conversion of three others in the same house, who are all to-day rejoicing in a new-found joy and peace. These two services are together attended by an average of over 2,000 persons.

CHANGED LIFE AND CHEERFUL WITNESS

"One hundred and sixteen have joined the Y.M.C.A. during 1898, making a total of over 400 members; and thirty-five, on giving satisfactory proof of their faith in Christ, were elected to full membership. As ever, the Bible Classes have been the chief care. The Sunday afternoon Bible Class has kept up its truly remarkable attendance—the average through the year was 127. This class is strictly limited to young men, which makes its large membership the more significant. The class owes no small measure of its success to the devoted labour, in looking up absentees, &c., of a band of workers who, having themselves been blessed, seek to make the Class a means of blessing to their fellows.

"The Junior Y.M.C.A. has gone ahead during the year. A room has been specially fitted up as a sitting-room, and is well patronised by the lads. In addition to week-night meetings, there is a flourishing Bible Class on Sunday afternoons, with an attendance of forty. This branch of the work is growing, and is exceedingly promising. It has already proved itself to be a good

RECRUITING GROUND FOR THE Y.M.C.A.

While recognising the fact that the spiritual side of our work is that which we should labour most earnestly to develop, we are careful not to forget that the physical and intellectual side of young men also wants developing.

"The year's record of the Y.W.C.A. is decidedly encouraging. The enlarged accommodation provided in the 'Jubilee' Hall has enabled workers to increase their agencies for the welfare, physical as well as moral and spiritual, of the young women of Stratford. The Tuesday evening Bible Class has an attendance of 100 to 120. The various agencies of the Mizpah Bands have again done good work. Some 200 meetings were held, being an average of ten a week. The workers were encouraged by several interesting cases, and many pledges were taken."

The general secretary of the work, Mr. E. Fox Butlin, continues with unabated vigour his many-sided and devoted ministry. He has a host of true and loyal helpers. At the annual meeting, held on Wednesday last, Mr. C. Boardman, J.P., the treasurer, was present, though not now enjoying the strength of years gone by. He would have preferred to report a balance in hand rather than a deficit of £37. Cheery words were spoken by Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, who presided on the occasion; and Dr. Harry Guinness delivered a capital address on "Redeeming the Time." Several anthems were sung by a choir from the Blind School, St. George's Fields, Southwark.

City Police Institute.

THE work of the International Police Association has made rapid progress of late in the City of London, and one especially cheering outcome is the new Police Institute in Leadenhall Street, which was opened on Tuesday last by Mr. John McCall.

The premises are capacious and centrally situated, and will be so fitted up as to afford accommodation for Bible classes and spiritual meetings, as well as the usual arrangements of a well-conducted educational centre. The chief object in view is, however, aggressively evangelistic, and it was refreshing to note the fervency and freedom of the testimonies from converted policemen, which formed, to everybody's satisfaction, so pronounced a feature of the opening meeting. The combined earnestness and simplicity of these transparently sincere men, so concerned about the conversion of their fellows, came like the tonic of a vigorous breeze from the ocean.

The proceedings were characterised throughout by a happy informality. Mr. McCall and Mr. T. A. Denny evidently enjoyed very much the duties devolving upon them while presiding. Lady Hope made forcible and touching references to the policeman's consecration to his duty, and Miss Gurney gave an address full of thankfulness for the deep spirituality of tone which spoke so well for the future prosperity of the institute. Pastor Fuller Gooch, expressing his appreciation of the bubbling joy of the various young constables, and the simple directness with which they sought to preach the Gospel, wished the work God speed; and certainly Mr. Leng, who has devoted himself to the work as hon. secretary, has much to cheer him at the outset. The financial burden is a somewhat heavy one, and the empty bookcases seem to call loudly for supplies of sound literature. Communications may be sent to Mr. Leng, Police Institute, Sussex Place, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

The Salvation Army.

IN the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House on Friday last, the Lord Mayor presided over a meeting on behalf of the social work of the Salvation Army.

Mr. Bramwell Booth said that their object was to rescue what was called the worthless class. In business the prevention of waste often meant the difference between poverty and affluence; and he believed it would make a great difference to the nation if the worthless people in our midst could be turned into honest citizens. It was a monstrous thing that the workhouses should be harbouring thousands of able-bodied paupers who lived and grew fat at the public expense. The Salvation Army had found a better plan.

The Earl of Aberdeen bore testimony to the value of the work. He had visited the farm colony, and, as one who knew something of agriculture, he was highly pleased with what he saw there. Lord Monkswell, who had also visited the farm colony, was gratified with what he witnessed. The Salvation Army undoubtedly understood how to do a large amount of good with a small sum of money.

Mr. Cecil Rhodes remarked that he could only speak regarding South Africa, where the work of the organisation came before him in a very practical way. The Parliament there was asked to make a grant in aid of the work, and he was a member of the Cabinet to whom the matter was submitted for consideration. Statistics were called for, and it was seen that the Salvation Army afforded a home for the waifs and strays—for the homeless—and that it was through the medium of their agencies that those who had been in prison or destitute obtained a fresh start in life.

The practical outcome of the opinion of that Parliament on the work was a vote in aid, and it had been continued ever since. He was told that in fifteen of our colonies grants were now made by the different Parliaments towards this social work, not on a sentimental basis, but as a practical return for the good work done in distant parts of Her Majesty's empire. He had been told that members of other religious organisations in this country objected to details of the Salvation Army's work—among others, to the band and to the employment of what might be called military forms and titles. He did not intend to discuss those matters; but, after all, let them put those details aside and recognise that the work which was being done was for the betterment of humanity.

Lord Justice Rigby, Dr. Cockburn (Agent-General, South Australia), and Mrs. Bramwell Booth also addressed the meeting.

The Bible League.

THIS organisation held its seventh annual meeting in Portman Rooms, Baker Street, W., last Friday afternoon, Mr. J. Herbert Tritton presiding. The membership embraces Christians of all denominations, who, believing in the full inspiration of Holy Scripture, are banded together to counteract the injurious influences of rationalistic criticism.

Extracts from the report were read by the hon. sec., Rev. John Tuckwell, showing that dependence upon Divine strength had turned difficulties into blessing in the furthering of operations which touch the source of all true spiritual power. The past year's work had been specially encouraging in the ninety-seven engagements fulfilled; and the League had made its influence decisively felt in that educational sphere which concerns the young.

The Chairman declared that the spade of the explorer favours the cause of consistent and constant opposition to the shifting attacks of men who assail the integrity of God's Word. But, after all, Scripture is its own best apologist, when reverently and fairly examined; and this the speaker illustrated at some length.

The need of positive advocacy of Bible truth, and discovery to men of its authoritative bearing, was the subject of exposition by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas (Portman Chapel). The church, said he, by its reception of God's revelation, becomes the product and not the seat of Divine authority. An embodiment of this authority is found only in that Book which is accessible and reliable, as well as clear and definite in its testimony to Christ. The ultimate test of canonicity must be the sanction of accredited representatives of Christ in the Apostolic age; and, having this, Holy Scripture becomes unique in its supremacy and sufficiency.

Pastor W. Fuller Gooch (West Norwood) urged the claims of the League because of its sound basis. It is to be deplored that attacks upon the Word of God now come mainly from within the professing Church, and these attacks, which have widespread and deplorable results, must not pass unchallenged and unmet.

Reformatory and Refuge Union.

THE annual meeting of this excellent association was held on Thursday last, at St. James's Hall, Lord Kinnaird presiding. An especial feature was the presence of a choir of 500 children, drawn from the various industrial schools of the metropolis.

The annual report gives a businesslike review of many important undertakings. For some years special efforts have been made, and with no small measure of success, to save the children of tramps and vagrants from the neglect and misery inherent to the life pursued by their parents; but the council are seeking further amendment of the law prior to initiating more extensive work.

Over a thousand hopeful cases have come under the care and influence of the twenty-two workers in the female mission department of the union's work; the mission houses in the different parts of the metropolis have all been maintained, and every part of London has been visited with the direct view of the reclamation of those who in circumstances of moral danger.

The girls' protective home continues to be a most valuable adjunct. It has been full during nearly the whole year. Some hundreds of children also have been placed in homes and schools.

Examinations in Holy Scripture are held annually at many of the industrial schools. Each child's work is examined separately, and marks, certificates, and prizes are awarded. The teachers and managers are able thus to compare the result of the instruction given in their own school with that given in other similar institutions in different parts of the country.

Commercial Travellers.

THE annual meeting of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association was held at Exeter Hall on Saturday evening last, Sir George Williams presiding. The general secretary (Mr. L. Courtney) stated that during the year 450 new members had been received, and the present membership was about 2,000. The Association publishes a monthly magazine, Good Lines, which yielded a profit of £50 to the funds, and to which 1,400 new subscribers had been enrolled.

The Chairman commented on the fact that the benevolent fund was rarely called upon to assist members of the Association, most of the applications coming from non-members. It was those who gave way to habits of improvidence and intemperance who were compelled to seek relief. He wished they could get all commercial travellers to become total abstainers. The firms they represented, and the firms with whom they did business, would benefit. He deprecated the custom of "treating," and hoped the members would do all in their power to discountenance it, and also to exercise a Christian influence over young men just entering upon life as travellers. Mr. John Colville, M.P., also delivered an address.

The Open-Air Mission.

THE forty-sixth anniversary gatherings of this Mission, held in Exeter Hall, on Tuesday last week, will long be remembered by those who attended. For numbers, for enthusiasm, and for interest, the meetings reached the high-water mark, and should give a decided impetus to the growing work of the society.

In the afternoon, when Mr. J. Herbert Tritton presided, the body of the hall was full. Two announced speakers, Revs. E. Bachelor Russell and W. Houghton, were unfortunately absent through illness; but the interest of the meeting was well sustained throughout, first by the sympathetic utterances of the Chairman, and afterwards by addresses from Dr. Henry Soltau, Mr. Henry French Ridley (from China), and Mr. B. Barry Wake. The last-named delighted the audience by a graphic description of a recent evangelistic invasion by the society of the Torquay Racecourse, where large crowds had gathered, and blessing had resulted from the efforts put forth.

Tea was partaken of by nearly 300 friends, a large proportion of whom were active open-air preachers connected with the society, and at seven o'clock a crowded and enthusiastic meeting began. Sir Henry H. Bemrose, M.P., was in the chair. The report, read by the secretary (Mr. F. Cockrem), was listened to with keen interest. It was a recital of profound significance, showing that during 1898 evangelists of the society had laboured in 714 towns and villages, had witnessed for Christ at 811 races, fairs, and fêtes, had distributed more than a million Gospel publications, had conducted 2,493 special services, and had travelled 63,414 miles while engaged in their holy toils. Dipping into the pages of the report, Mr. Cockrem outlined the story of a memorable year, in which the income had risen to £2,034, and the expenditure to £2,028.

Sir Henry Bemrose's genial speech was listened to with much appreciation. It was full of happy points and of spiritual sympathy. Thereafter addresses were delivered by Rev. J. Tolefree Parr and Dr. A. Christy Wilson (Doncaster), both of them utterances of great power. Dr. Wilson narrated case after case of remarkable blessing on the labours of the Mission at Doncaster races.

Medical Missionary Association.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie, ex-Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, took the chair on Friday last, at the annual meeting of the Medical Missionary Association, held at Exeter Hall. The secretary, Dr. J. L. Maxwell, presented the annual report, which showed that eighteen students were now undergoing the five years' course.

In connection with the association medical missions were being carried on, not only abroad, but among the poor at home, in Islington and St. Pancras. It was calculated that there were now 550 medical missionaries in the foreign field in connection with the Churches of this country and America. The Continental Churches were still sadly behind, having only thirteen men and no women.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie said there was no surer way of getting at the heart of people than by dealing with their bodily needs. The Mohammedans were perhaps the most difficult class to deal with. They were proud of their monotheism, and there was hardly a chink in their religious armour; yet there was one soft place, and that was reached by medical missions. Christian people were specially bound to support medical missions to the women of India, because in the administration of Lady Dufferin's fund religious teaching was absolutely excluded. The wives of American missionaries in Burma were nearly all medically qualified; and as many lady medical missionaries as possible should certainly be sent out. Dr. P. B. Cousland and Dr. W. Gauld subsequently gave accounts of medical mission work carried on in China and in London.

The Suppression of the Opium Trade.

The annual meeting of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade was held on the 18th inst, at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, under the presidency of Sir Joseph W. Pease, M.P. In their report the executive committee stated that the chief feature of the past year's agitation had been the complete exposure of the Opium Commission's report, as regarded the trade with China, by the Rev. Arnold Foster, of Han-Kow. Besides endorsing Mr. Foster's charge against the Commissioners, of misrepresenting the evidence which they professed to summarise, the Archbishop of Canterbury had protested against the principles asserted in the report, as opposed to Christian morality. Hitherto no reply had been attempted in this country to the precise and serious allegations made, under such weighty auspices, against the majority report of the Commission.

The Chairman referred to the position of the opium question in the House of Commons. In 1891, he pointed out, a resolution was passed that the system by which the Indian Opium revenue was raised was morally indefensible. On that occasion the late Mr. W. H. Smith declared that it was the policy of the Indian Government gradually to reduce the acreage of the poppy under cultivation, and later, Mr. Gladstone, when Prime Minister, urged the Government of India to carry out that policy. Nothing of the kind, however, had been done.

Speaking of the China Trade, Sir Joseph went on to say that no one who knew the facts could doubt that it had resulted in demoralising the Chinese. It was admitted by their opponents that opium was doing harm in China, but they pleaded that the drug did not all go from India. That was true, but we were responsible for our share in the evil. The only argument that now had to be met was, that if we did not do the trade some one else would.

Sir William Wedderburn, M.P., in a well-informed address, said that it was extraordinary that there should be so much difficulty experienced in bringing the report of the Opium Commission before the House of Commons. The Indian Government were on their defence in this matter, and were not to be considered as an unprejudiced authority which would tell the public the truth regarding this great controversy. Dr. Philip B. Cousland (of the English Presbyterian Mission, Ch'ao-chow-fu, Swatow), Sir W. T. Charley, Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., and Mr. J. R. F. Pledger (missionary from West China) also spoke in support of the aims of the Society.

Work for Jews.

The annual meetings of the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel were held on Monday in Brunswick Chapel at 3.30, and at the Mission House, Whitechapel Road, at 7.0, Mr. James E. Mathieson in the chair. Before opening the meeting, the chairman introduced Deacon Abraham, of the Nestorian Christian Orphanage, Oroomiah, who is at present on his third visit to this country.

Mr. Mathieson said he believed the city of London, both east and west, to be the best mission-field in the world for Jews, and the methods adopted by Mr. Baron and his co-workers were also about the best, both in the home and the foreign fields.

The honorary treasurer, Mr. A. Boake, made the interesting statement that after long and repeated efforts a site had been secured for the new mission premises, and the contract signed only that morning. The sum of £3,500 is urgently required to open the same free of debt.

Rev. David Baron recited some causes for thanksgiving to God in the features of the work, for the privilege of preaching Christ to his own people, for the many opportunities of the same, for the many others that were at work besides themselves. He spoke of the constant stream of Jews nightly filling the mission room, and the thousands during the year who thereby hear of Jesus as the Messiah, many of them for the first time in their lives.

Interesting addresses followed from Rev. Abraham Herschell and Rev. Robert Graves Walker, who very happily compared the workers in their two-fold sphere of labour to Zebulun rejoicing in his going forth and Issachar in his tents. The meeting concluded by short testimonies from Rev. S. Bachert, twenty-four years missionary amongst the Jews at Hamburg, and Pastor Edwards, of Dover, a friend of Israel.

Lord's Day Rest Association.

At the annual meeting of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, held on Monday last at the Holborn Restaurant, a crowded attendance and conspicuous enthusiasm bore witness to the strong feeling which exists in the matter of Sabbath desecration.

The Bishop of Exeter, who presided, said that the essence of the Sabbath consisted of the consecration of one day in seven to God. Works of necessity, mercy, and piety were sanctioned by our Lord, but he had never suffered any infraction of the day's holy Sabbath character. Mr. Gladstone had attributed the long preservation of his own life and faculties largely to his observance of the Sunday rest; and the Bishop of Durham had declared that in proportion as we neglected our day of rest and our study of the Bible we should be preparing our national ruin. They were bound to attempt to baffle and crush the recent attack of newspaper proprietors upon the sanctity of Sunday.

Mr. Charles Hill, the secretary, presented the report, from which it was evident that much excellent effort, characterised by heart and intelligence, had been successful in many ways in combating the spirit of worldly disregard of the claims and needs of Sunday rest. The Daily Telegraph has long been foremost in efforts to secularise the Lord's Day, and the proprietors of that paper now publish seven days a week, and the Daily Mail professes that this competition has forced its proprietor to publish on Sundays also. Most vigorous opposition is being made by the association against Sunday newspapers, which inflict the burden of Sunday labour on thousands of newsagents and boys, many of whom work seventeen hours a day on week-days; and a great volume of opinion against Sunday newspapers is being expressed all over the country.

Sir Fortescue Flannery, M.P., moved a resolution adopting the report, and declaring that newsagents and newspaper workers were entitled to rest on the Lord's Day. The publication of two papers on seven days a week was, he said, a most insidious attack on the rights of labour—an attempt of rich men to make themselves richer by the toil of those who had their bread to earn.

Rev. J. W. Ewing said that to whatever school of religious thought his hearers might belong, he was sure they would agree in defending the Lord's Day. Tracing the influence of the day on the child, the youth, and the person of maturer years respectively, Mr. Ewing declared that respect for the Sabbath, and an appreciation of its privileges, was one of the secrets of England's strength. Those privileges must not be surrendered to an unholy triple alliance of atheists, pleasure seekers, and money grabbers. He seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

Lieut.-Colonel Rotton moved a resolution cordially approving of the committee's efforts to check Sunday labour. This was seconded by Mr. Richard Bell, secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, and adopted.

The Baptist Union.

The annual assembly of the Baptist Union commenced at Bloomsbury Chapel on Monday afternoon. A memorial service was held for the late Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, who would have become president on that occasion. The presidential address he had prepared, and which urged contention in a right spirit for the faith once delivered to the saints, was read by Rev. James Owen, of Swansea. Subsequently Dr. Clifford was elected president for the present year, and Rev. W. Cuff, vice-president.

A great public meeting, on behalf of the Twentieth Century Fund, was held in the evening at the City Temple. Rev. J. H. Shakespeare (Norwich), the new secretary of the union, made a statement from which it appeared that the scheme has been adopted in a brave and hopeful spirit. The scheme proposes to raise at least £250,000 from half a million Baptists, by contributions of at least 10s. each. Various proposed allocations of the fund are: £125,000 for evangelistic work, including church extension; £30,000 to assist weaker churches in maintaining pastors; £30,000 for the annuity fund for aged ministers and widows of ministers; £6,000 for the establishment of scholarships open to students in Baptist colleges; a sum not exceeding £34,000 for the building of a Baptist church house; and £25,000 for educational and other objects, which, in the judgment of the council, may appear desirable.

Brief words of commendation having fallen from Rev. J. G. Greenhough (Leicester) and Mr. Alderman White, of Norwich, Rev. Dr. Maclaren said his conscience, judgment, and feeling entirely went with the movement, because under its prominent money considerations lie spiritual ones, which we dare not neglect, in view of the growing heathenism of our great cities and the torpid indifference into which the rural life of our country is lapsing. To this end organisation and sacrifice will be needed.

Dr. Glover expressed the view that the world is standing in the market-place, waiting for someone to hire it for the holiest of all ends. Our heritage of Protestant birth needs to be realised and applied by means of our great wealth as a community. An age is upon us that demands the blending of the keenest inquiry with the most absolute submission of the heart to Christ.

Dr. Clifford, president elect, made touching reference to the decease of Dr. Spurgeon ere he could see the beginnings of a movement which was very dear to his heart; but the inspiration of their departed friend's memory and devotional consecration would remain. Criticism of this scheme, he said, must be met in the spirit of self-sacrifice; and the men of 1899 and 1900 may, by deeds of generosity, heroism, and self-denial, provide a noble equipment for the evangelisation of our country and of the world in the coming era.

Palestine and Lebanon Nurses.

THE annual meeting of the Palestine and Lebanon Nurses Mission was held at Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon, Rev. F. Paynter, M.A., of Guildford, presiding. The balance sheet and report, read by Mr. W. Southall, the secretary, showed how great a necessity there is to add a men's ward to the hospital at Baakleen, and a clergyman to work among the men would also be a great help. From the balance sheet, however, it appeared that there was great need of further financial support.

The Chairman, who has kindly taken the presidency of the society, alluded to the matter of the men's ward, and promised, together with Mr. Paynter, to give £100 towards this object, if the balance of £200 could be raised. He said that he hoped to visit Baakleen at some future time, if it was the Lord's will.

Rev. R. Douglas made a few remarks on the work of the mission; after which Miss Kitching, the honorary superintendent of the station at Baakleen, gave an outline of the work done. Miss Eliot and Miss Ward, ladies who have spent many years at Baakleen, showed how much the Druses need a medical mission, and how thankful they are to have good medical care and skill; also how ready to hear the Gospel message, although very slow to act upon it.

The various speakers pleaded earnestly that God's people would pray both for the workers and the population of the Lebanon.

Reunion of Christian Singers.

AN interesting gathering of Christian singers connected with the choirs which led the singing at Rev. John McNeill's London Mission last year was held at the Mildmay Conference Hall on Thursday last, by the kind invitation of Colonel Morton and Mr. W. H. Seagram.

On the motion of Colonel Morton, a resolution was adopted declaring it to be desirable that some scheme should be formed for a closer union of Christian singers in the north and other parts of London, with the object of promoting mutual fellowship and co-operation. An adjourned meeting for the fuller carrying out of this resolution is to be held at the Conference Hall at Mildmay on Thursday, May 4, and Christian sight-singers who would like to be present and co-operate, are asked to communicate with Mr. H. Beaton, 54, Leigh Road, Highbury, N., who will furnish all particulars.

An interesting feature of the meeting was the presence of singers who took part in Mr. Moody's first London mission at the Agricultural Hall in 1875. Mr. J. W. Godfrey, leader of the North Evangelistic Choir then formed, almost from the very first, also led the singing on this occasion, the pieces being selected from the "Christian Choir." It was with thrilling interest that those privileged to be present listened to reminiscences of the early morning meetings at the Agricultural Hall, and the Sankey hymns sung along the streets and in railway stations by workers in the service of song, as they went about their Master's business of winning souls.

The Traffic in Young Girls.—The Times St. Petersburg correspondent telegraphs:—"A letter appeared in The Times of April 14 from Colonel G. H. Bolland announcing the intention of holding an international congress in London, in June next, on the European traffic in young girls. It was stated that most of the European countries had agreed to take part in it, and that Russia would also probably send delegates. Mr. William Alexander Coote, of the National Vigilance Association of London, has just paid a visit to St. Petersburg, and Russia's participation in the congress is now assured. Mr. Coote had interviews with Count Muravieff, Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Baron Fredericks, Minister of the Imperial Court, as well as with the Ministers of the Interior and Education, all of whom expressed warm sympathy with the object of his mission. A Russian committee has accordingly been formed with reference to the congress, including Princess Dolgorouki, Princess Alexander Lieven, Countess Tolstoi, and others.

Obituary.

MR. EDWIN WEEKS.

IN the recent death of this Christian worker a striking personality has been removed from the life of Northampton. In his early days he passed a wild career, but his conversion through a London city missionary turned him right about. He soon began to preach, and though he was comparatively illiterate he had a remarkable gift of utterance; his past experiences, moreover, gave him plenty of material. He gave up his occupation of engineering, and for many years carried on mission work in Northampton with great energy and success. Two years ago failing health compelled him to cease many of his activities. He has left a fragant memory behind him of overflowing zeal for Christ and the welfare of his fellow men.

REV. F. G. MARCHANT.

After a lingering illness, Rev. F. G. Marchant, who will be widely remembered in connection with his work at the Pastors' College, where he filled the position of classical tutor, died on the 9th inst.

Mr. Marchant was brought up a member of the Church of England, but, becoming friendly with a neighbouring Baptist minister, his views altered, he was baptized, and soon afterwards sought admission into the Regent's Park College. There being no vacancy just then, he applied to Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, who received him as one of his early students. After useful work at Birmingham and Wandsworth, he accepted a pastorate at Hitchin, subsequently undertaking, at the request of Mr. Spurgeon, the additional duty of assisting at the Pastors' College. Resigning his position at Hitchin, and removing to Brighton, he continued his tutorial work till the spring of last year, when his health completely failed. In 1878 Mr. Marchant published a homiletical commentary on the book of Joshua.

MRS. G. B. SETON-KARR.

Although by her immediate circle of friends the serious state of the late Mrs. Seton-Karr's health had been for some time recognised, yet to very many the end came at last with a painful shock of surprise, as it was hoped that by unremitting care and attention her life might have been prolonged. It pleased God, however, to order it otherwise, and after much suffering, patiently borne, she passed peacefully away on Thursday morning, April 13, 1899.

Mrs. Seton-Karr was the widow of a distinguished Indian Civil Servant, the late Mr. George Berkeley Seton-Karr, whose services during the Indian Mutiny were of the highest value to the Government. The present writer has often heard her describe the tact and ability with which, in that time of most trying suspense, Mr. Seton-Karr succeeded in controlling the population and preserving the allegiance of the native chiefs and princes in his district, mainly by his remarkable personal influence and the confidence which he inspired. His unlooked-for death on his return to England, at a comparatively early age, was a heavy loss, not only to his mourning widow and children, but to the country which he served so well.

After her husband's death Mrs. Seton-Karr first resided at Malvern, where her name is still loved and honoured. She subsequently moved to London, and finally, in 1887, took up her abode in Wimbledon. She was in many respects a remarkable woman. She possessed a personal charm of manner, which was the true index of a still greater charm of mind and heart. Beneath an unfeigned kindliness of disposition lay a penetration and discernment which were seldom at fault. Her prevailing characteristic, however, without doubt was thoughtfulness for others. She had a large-hearted sympathy which seemed to make their trials and sorrows her own. Few cases of real distress appealed to her in vain. How many toilers under life's burdens have been cheered and comforted, either directly or indirectly, through her liberality, her hospitality, and, in countless cases, her personal sympathy, the Great Day alone will declare.

It has not been generally known (for she shrank from publicity), but it should be known, that "The Welcome," in Jewin Street, E.C., to which Mrs. Seton-Karr has devoted her life, and which has brought hope and help to hundreds of working girls, was originated by her in conjunction with Mr. E. M. Denny and the late Mr. W. T. Paton, and has since been maintained in great measure at her personal cost, besides being continually indebted to her sound judgment and practical wisdom in its working. A firmly attached member of the Church of England, she was a warm supporter of C.M.S. and other evangelical Church societies, but her sympathies were not limited to the work of her own communion, and she rejoiced to recognise and aid every good work which had for its object the extension of Christ's Kingdom. The Evangelisation Society, and in later days the South Africa General Mission, may perhaps be specially named among the many agencies in which she was interested.

With the movement for the deepening of spiritual life she had a very real sympathy. Friends of the work will not forget the kindness with which on one occasion in years gone by she placed her house in Lancaster Gate at their disposal for the purpose of a conference. The multiplicity of her engagements in her London life proving too much for her strength, Mrs. Seton-Karr moved to Wimbledon in 1887; but though debarred from the same measure of activity as formerly, her interests in every good work remained unabated. Her pleasant home at Atherton Grange became a "House Beautiful" to many a weary worker or tired missionary, while nothing gave her greater pleasure than to throw open her grounds on the summer afternoons to gatherings of workwomen and others from the City.

Much more might be added, but this brief outline must suffice. Upon the sacred ground of personal friendship, continued without break or hindrance for nearly twenty-two years, this is not the place, nor could the writer trust himself to enter. Enough for him, and those who with him mourn an irreparable loss, to look forward with "sure and certain hope" to the reuniting of severed ties in the resurrection morning, when "the day breaks and the shadows flee away." E. W. M.

Personalia.

Mr. Geo. Clarke is suffering from loss of voice, and has been compelled to cancel his Chorley engagements. He requests the prayers of our readers.

Rev. Alexander Connell, of Regent Square Presbyterian Church, has decided to decline the call recently addressed to him by the Fifth Avenue Church, New York.

Rev. George Wainwright, late of Bournemouth, after a twelve months' pastorate in Launceston, Tasmania, writes that his health is now completely restored. Mr. Wainwright is on his way home, and due in England early in June.

Dr. A. Robertson.—The Princess of Wales, during her recent stay at Venice, graciously accepted from Rev. Dr. Robertson a copy of his new work, "The Bible of St. Mark." Dr. and Mrs. Robertson had the honour of being invited by Her Royal Highness on board the Osborne.

Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe.—In a letter to hand on Monday from Miss Radcliffe, Waterloo, Liverpool, she writes, respecting her mother: "On Friday, quite suddenly, her illness, which has lasted since January, took a serious turn for the worse. Three doctors were here consulting, and all seemed grave. Will your readers ask that her precious life may be spared, and that we may fully trust our Heavenly Father in this great trial?"

Rev. J. Tinson Wrenford, for forty-five years vicar of St. Paul's, Newport, is this year celebrating his ministerial jubilee. His parishioners propose to present him with a token of kindly appreciation of his long and faithful ministry; and others who have profited by the products of his singularly helpful pen are having a part in the testimonial. The treasurer of the Jubilee Fund is Mr. Henry Duckham, Gaer Fach, Newport, Mon.

Putney Y.W.C.A.—The annual report of this branch states that the membership now stands at 300, there having been an increase of 100 during the past year. In view of the increased membership, the question of obtaining larger premises is occupying the attention of the committee.

Oxford Letter.

BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

THE comparative dulness of the vacation has been broken by the C.M.S. Centenary meetings which have been held this week. They ought to prove a crisis in the spiritual history of the city; the meetings have been marked by a spiritual power rarely reached perhaps in ordinary gatherings. God has spoken, and we trust many hearts have responded.

Rev. F. J. Chavasse, Principal of Wycliffe, gave the key-note to some of us on Sunday morning when he preached at St. Aldate's. "Union with Christ," was his subject: "its responsibilities." The vine bears fruit through its branches; the head works through the members of the body.

A united prayer meeting was held on Tuesday, and the series of meetings began on Wednesday. The Bishop of Coventry preached in the Cathedral at three, and those present will not easily forget the reading of the "roll" of Oxford men "called, chosen and faithful." We felt that this was the only true succession, and prayed that we might be in it.

Sir Henry Bemrose and Dr. Barlow were the speakers in the evening at the Town Hall. The latter roused the meeting to some enthusiasm by telling us that at Bristol the day before, the Nonconformists had asked permission to present an address of welcome. It was on Thursday that the spiritual tone of the gatherings rose, perhaps, to the highest. The afternoon and evening meetings were marked by a warmth which we wish was oftener exhibited in Oxford. Rev. W. E. Burroughs, central secretary of the C.M.S., and Rev. F. J. Chavasse were the chief speakers. The former told of a letter received at Salisbury Square, scarcely intelligible, but enclosing a £10 note, from a servant, "who loved Jesus Christ, and wanted others to love Him, too!"

It was left to Mr. Chavasse to bring the series of meetings to a close. This he did in a speech full of unction and searching appeal. Taking as his subject the reflex blessings on the Church at home from an interest in foreign missions, he showed how this interest brought a higher standard of living begotten by the self-sacrificing lives of the missionaries; a spirit of prayer fostered by the fact that some had gone out from our own congregations; and a stronger faith derived from a study of great things attempted and done in the face of great difficulties.

Some valuable testimony to Sunday school work was given at the meeting held on Monday week in connection with the Wesley Memorial Church Sunday School anniversary. The Mayor of Maidenhead, who presided, said it was a remarkable thing to find tens of thousands of men and women freely giving up their time and day of rest to engage in Sunday school work. He urged that one of the surest bulwarks of the sanctity of the Sabbath was the Sunday school.

The annual meetings of the Association of Congregational ministers and churches have been held in the city during the week. On Monday evening a public meeting was held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. in George Street. Rev. R. H. Sewell, in the course of a stirring address, urged that while a chapel may be built of bricks or other material, a church must be made of souls. He urged this distinction on the ground that a protest should be made against sacerdotal heresy. A devotional service was held in George Street Chapel on Tuesday morning, and in the evening the Mayor and Mayoress held a reception to meet the Principal of Mansfield, Dr. Fairbairn, on his return from India. In the course of a long address, in which Dr. Fairbairn described his journeys, he remarked that everywhere one felt that God had given the life that teemed in India into the hand of England, and she had undertaken to guide and to form that life; and, in spite of mistakes, she had marvellously prevailed in shaping it to more noble and more consistent uses. Referring to missionary work, he said that England's duty lay deeper than England's power, and that duty was to make India loyal, not merely to England's rule, but to England's God.

The Schoolboys for Christ.

THE story told at the semi-jubilee gathering, held on the evening of Friday, April 20, of "The Schoolboys' Meeting" in Glasgow is one which may well be laid to heart by those interested in Christian work among the children of the well-to-do classes in other towns and cities. In April, 1874—when the spiritual life of the city was being stirred—a special meeting was arranged for schoolboys, with the intention of, perhaps, repeating it for two or three weeks. But no fitting time to stop has ever presented itself, and the weekly gathering is still an active force for good in the west-end of the city, girls having been admitted also in later years.

From the commencement it has been the spiritual birthplace and training ground of a continuous stream of ministers, missionaries, and helpers in every branch of Christian effort—a fact abundantly proved by the names of those who apologised for absence, and at the same time testified to blessing and impulse received.

The attendance was reported by the present chairman (Mr. John W. Arthur) to average about 250. So carefully has the missionary spirit been fostered that the contributions to the Fresh Air Fortnight Fund alone have amounted to fully £600. Over 220 boys and girls are members of Scripture-reading unions, and the whole work seems to find its deepest roots in two prayer meetings (boys and girls separately), which have gone on for a number of years, and which are at present full of vigour and power.

In the course of a vivid and interesting sketch of early days and doings, Mr. Arthur A. Govan (chairman for the first ten years) paid an affectionate tribute to the memory of Dr. Donald Morrison, who, after labouring among the young people from the outset, was a few weeks ago called to higher service. The blessing of many a lad followed him: indeed, the thought of him often recalled Great Heart, in "The Pilgrim's Progress," to the mind of the speaker.

During the second period the president of the meetings was Mr. J. G. Govan (of the Faith Mission), who was unable to be present; but Mr. Andrew T. Arthur (now of Manchester) told how, in the autumn of 1886, a few months after he had been led into the light himself, the way opened for him to take charge. Before Christmas of 1888 the attendance was at a low ebb, when Miss Tyson visited the city; and her preaching was so greatly blessed that within a week or two the accommodation available was insufficient for the numbers who presented themselves.

From among old members present Mr. David J. Knox testified gratefully to the influence for good in his life of counsel received from leaders and speakers; Mr. George F. Newlands recalled the timidity with which he remained to after meetings about the time of his conversion; and Dr. Alexander Mowat (Jalna, India) told how one piece of advice—when temptation presented itself, even in the playground, to go aside and ask for help—led on the following morning to his first experience of a personal relation with the Saviour.

In an address dealing with the spread of the Gospel in other lands, through the influence of the meeting, Mr. W. A. Campbell told what he had seen of the much blessed labours of one former member in Durban; and was immediately followed by Mr. Thomas A. Boyd, who showed, from an old notebook in his hand, that he had himself dealt with that worker on spiritual matters, on April 19, 1874. In the same book Mr. Boyd had the names of forty-three boys whom he had the privilege of pointing to the Saviour, within three weeks, and expressed the hope that in the coming evangelistic campaign in the city, special steps will be taken to reach the schoolboys of the new generation.

City Young Workwomen.—The sale of work announced by Miss Helen Reynolds for Thursday, April 27, is to be held on behalf of the Convalescent Home at Woodford Wells.

International S.S. Lessons.

May 7.

"The Vine and its Branches."—John xv. 1-11.

Golden Text.—John xv. 5.

Introductory.

THE last verse of chapter xiv. records that Jesus said: "Arise; let us go hence." The first verse of chapter xviii. says: "When Jesus had spoken these words, He went forth," &c. We must infer that the intervening chapters must have been spoken after rising from the table and before leaving the house. Perhaps our Lord noticed the distress of his disciples, and comforts them by the assurance that they are vitally united to Himself, even though He is going away. He had used many illustrations to show their relationship to Him, such as the shepherd and the sheep, but this one shows a living union. Similar illustrations in Eph. v. 23-30. Col. ii. 19, Members of one body. Family relationship.

The Vine (1).

Palestine was a country full of vineyards, and the illustration of a vine familiar to the Jews (see Ps. lxxx. 8-10, Isa. v. 1-7, Eze. xix. 10, Hos. x. 1). Some of the vines were 300 years old, and their trunks 6ft. or 8ft. high. Describe how they grow in the open, trained up tall sticks. The grapes were exceptionally fine. Recall the story of the spies going into Canaan (Num. xiii. 23). All God's works in nature teach us spiritual lessons. So Jesus used the familiar vine as an illustration or allegory to try and make the disciples and us understand how closely those whom He saves are joined to Him. The true vine, of which all other vines are only a picture. (Compare John i. 9, Heb. ix. 24.) True also means genuine.

The Husbandman (1).

God the heavenly Father planted the true vine, and cared for it. He sent Jesus Christ into the world to be its Saviour and life-giver. He originated the close relationship between the vine and its branches.

The Branches (2, 4, 5, 6).

Two kinds of branches, the living and the dead. The branches are entirely dependent on the vine for life and power to grow. The sap flows from the vine stem into the branch and nourishes it. The vine supplies the sap on purpose for the branch to bring forth grapes; we do not praise the branch for bearing beautiful grapes, but the vine—"In Me." The living branches are true Christians. It is useless to profess to be a Christian if you are not really one; it is like tying a beautiful looking branch on to a vine or sticking it on with glue. No fruit results, and time shows what it is. The vine-wood is no use for anything but to be burned (Eze. xv.). The dead branches must be cut off, because they hinder the growth of the living ones. (Matt. xv. 13; Luke xiii. 6-9; Matt. xxi. 19, 20).

The Fruit (2, 4, 5, 8).

"No fruit." "Fruit." "More fruit." "Much fruit." Four steps; how many have we taken? No tree requires so much care, and washing, and pruning as a vine. After the fruit is gathered, the branches are closely cut, and all through the summer all extra growths have to be continually removed if we would have good fruit. We cannot make the grapes grow, but we can fulfil the conditions of growth. Even so in Christian life, we can avoid all that would hinder by prayer and the Word (verse 3), keep ourselves cleansed, and all clear for the flowing through us of the life-giving, life-preserving Spirit. The branch has nothing but what it gets from the vine; we have nothing but what we get from Jesus. The fruit is produced for the blessing of others. Distinguish between mere work and true fruit.

The Blessed Results of thus abiding, depending, trusting, resting, and fruit-bearing.

1. Answer to our prayer, v. 7.
2. Being Christ's scholars, v. 8.
3. God glorified, v. 8.
4. Hearts full of love, v. 9.
5. Power to obey, v. 10.
6. Fulness of joy, v. 11.
7. All this always; v. 11.

Important Lessons.

The necessity of being sure that we are really joined to Christ. How can we tell this?

We can do nothing that will last without Christ; with Him we can do all things. (Phil. iv. 13).

The fruit of the Spirit (Gal. v. 22-24). Like a perfect bunch of grapes, if one grape is missing the bunch is marred.

Evangelistic.

As a result of large attendances and much blessing, Mr. John Elliott is continuing his mission at Morchard Bishop, North Devon, for another week. The people willingly receive the Gospel message.

The seventy theatrical women and girls who accepted Mr. Forbes' invitation to tea on Thursday last, at Orange Street Lecture Hall, listened with attention to an address from Rev. G. F. Johnston Ross, of Westbourne Grove Presbyterian Church. The Bible Flower Mission sent primroses with texts attached.

The two days at the Epsom spring races witnessed earnest toil on the part of the evangelists of the Open-Air Mission, who, joined by several from the London City Mission, and making altogether a company twenty-five strong, held meetings on the racecourse and in the town, and distributed thousands of Gospel booklets. The last day—Wednesday, the 18th—seemed like a "Derby Day" in respect of the vast crowds present, and the preachers had a grand time at their prolonged service on the racecourse.

Mr. Josiah Nix has had an interesting time during a Gospel mission at Spennymoor, co. Durham, in the Wesleyan church. Most of the people are colliers or ironworkers, and the evangelist's blunt, hearty mode of address made his labours very acceptable and effective among these sons of toil. Large numbers were dealt with spiritually, and over 400 temperance pledges were taken. Gamblers, drunkards, pigeon flyers, &c., were among those who professed conversion.

Mr. Joseph Whiting, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded special services at the Salford Dock Mission, held from April 9 to 23 inclusive. God has owned and blessed his Word through his faithful servant. Sinners, young and old, have been led to Jesus, and one who had been a backslider for thirty years was restored. Believers have been greatly helped and strengthened. Our Lord Jesus Christ has, through him, been greatly magnified and glorified, and the exposition of the Word of God was faithful, clear, and plain, also strikingly illustrated from life.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Apr. 30-May 8, Windsor; 13-21, Sidcup; 27-June 5, Brockley.

Gipsy Smith.—Apr. 29-May 8, Bristol; 13-22, Marylebone.

Mr. E. P. Telford.—Till May 4, Leeds; 21-28, Bromley.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.—May 7-22, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—Apr. 30, Stratford Conference Hall; May 1-5, Dorking.

Mr. Jas. Sprunt.—Apr. 30-May 14, Pulborough; 21-28, Billinghurst.

Mr. Newton Jones.—Apr. 29, 30, Ealing; May 7, 8, Chester; 14, 15, Huntingdon; 21, Oxford; 27-29, Bedford.

Rev. F. C. Spurr (Missioner of the Baptist Union).—Apr. 30-May 7, Onslow Chapel, Brompton, S.W., daily at 3.15 and 8.

Brothers Weaver.—Till Apr. 28, Hamilton; 30-May 2, Langholm.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—During Apr., Park Hall, Barking.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Apr. 30-May 12, Banchory.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Apr. 29-May 8, Sunderland; 18 and 21, South Croydon; 27-June 5, Ramsden Road, Balham.

Mr. John Elliott.—Till Apr. 30, Barn Mission, Priddington.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander.—Till May-3, Presbyterian Church, High Road, Tottenham.

Evangelistic Mission.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday, Apr. 30, at 7, Mr. A. C. Burley.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on meetings for deepening of spiritual life, at Christ Church, Coventry, April 30-May 8.

Children's Fresh-Air Mission.—The annual meeting of this society was held on Monday at the Mansion House. The Lord Mayor warmly commended the object of the mission, and said that, in order not to interfere with similar work, the committee selected the children which they sent away into the country almost exclusively from among those living in the area known as the Holborn Union. The Bishop of Stepney made an earnest appeal for sufficient funds to enable the committee to give a holiday this year to even more children than in 1898, when the number was 3,034. Canon Newbolt said this was one of the societies which helped the charitable to lay out their money to the best possible advantage. Mr. Flower, M.P., and others, spoke.

Letter to the Editor.

The Person of Christ.

DEAR SIR,—In your "Notes and Comments" of April 6 you touch upon one of the most important and fundamental Articles of the Christian Faith. You say: "Either Jesus was the Christ of God, or He has no claim on the absolute trust and service of mankind." This is most true. To those who take the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as their infallible guide, there is absolutely no standing ground for the Unitarian and Broad Church view that Jesus, whilst one of the greatest teachers and examples this world has ever seen, was something less than the Son of the Highest—co-equal with the Father.

It appears to me that there is no alternative between these two opinions—either, Jesus was the Son of God equal with the Father (John x. 30, 33, 36), or He was the greatest impostor the world has ever seen.

If Perkin Warbeck—who claimed the throne of Henry VII on the pretence that he was the Duke of York (really murdered by his uncle Richard, afterwards Richard III.)—was an impostor, how much more was Jesus an impostor IF he was not really the Son of God. That He claimed to be such, cannot be doubted unless by those who will not read the Bible or who practically ignore all texts that do not harmonise with their previous opinions.

If any doubt this let them refer to John iv. 25, 26, v. 17, 18, ix. 35-37, x. 30-36 (and see 33), Matt. xxvi. 63, 64. The last is the most important of all, being the answer given by Jesus on oath to the High Priest's question at the crisis of his life.

The above are Christ's own testimonies to Himself; second only in importance are the testimonies given by others in the presence and hearing of Christ, and without eliciting from Him any rebuke or denial, and in some instances a distinct confirmation. Such are John i. 49, by Nathaniel; John vi. 69, by Peter; Matt. xiv. 33, by the disciples; Matt. xvi. 16, by Peter; John xx. 28, by Thomas. We have also in Matt. iii. 17, and xvii. 5, the repeated message from God the Father, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Further, we have the testimony of Christ's miracles. The proof does not lie in the fact that Christ raised the dead, &c.—Elijah, Elisha, Peter and Paul also did this—but in the fact that Christ raised the dead, and performed many lesser miracles, claiming at the same time to be the Son of God. The miracles of Christ could only be worked, like those of Elijah, &c., by the power of God. Would God grant this power to one who was claiming to be his Son when in reality he was not? Impossible! Jesus was therefore either the Son of God, co-equal with the Father, or He was the greatest impostor who has ever lived—which? There is no middle course.—Yours truly,

T. Crewdson Wilson.

Thorny Hills, Kendal, April 23, 1899.

* I do not for a moment mean to place our Divine Saviour on an equality with Elijah, &c.; but, in becoming Man He appears to have emptied Himself of much of his Divine Power, or, more correctly, kept it in abeyance, thus being dependent hour by hour on his Divine Father.

Notices.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Will the friend who recently sent us postcards, kindly send his name and address?

Applicants for Tracts.—Mr. William Pode, Launceston, Cornwall; Mr. Tom Ham, Wadebridge, Cornwall; Rev. D. H. Ritchie Snoddon (Standburn Church), Constie Cottage, Avonbridge, N.B.; G. H. Binks, 53, Nunnery Lane, York; Mr. G. E. Pugh, Rose View, Pontesbury Hill, near Shrewsbury; Mr. John Martindale, 11, Broad Street, Bloomsbury, London, W.C.; Geo. O. Carroll, 5, Titchborne Row, Titchborne Street, Edgware Road, London, W.

Communications Received with Thanks from.—J.H.H. E.P.F. E.C.S. S.H.J. F.A.H. H.E.W. E.M. R.M.R. J.W.C. C.W. W.F. H.G.G. F.C. W.F.C. D.J.E. G.J.J. D.F. J.T.C. G.S.J. H.J.E. D.E. W.J.B. L.W.B. C.H. H.M.B. C.W. B.M.C.B. E.W.M. J.G.W. C.H.A. A.L. H.J.E. H.M. W.J.F. C.L.E. J.P.W. W.W. W.G.W. A.F.S. A.C. H.P.L. E.H. G.J.C. F.C. J.H. C.H.F. A.M. S.D.W. H.R.F. H.A. C.E.K. W.D. F.C. J.H.H. A.H.B. W.S. C.R.H. R.B. T.C.W. M.C. J.T.R. A.M.P. J.C.G. E.C. N.B. H.F. W.W. E.B. A.L. J.R. W.W.M. M.L.J. L.J. F.S. T.S. W.B. S.B. L.B. W.E.B. E.G.B. C.E.W. L.A.R.J. W.W.C.

About Books.

Rev. John Mitchell's book, Points and Illustrations for Preachers and Teachers, is now issued in two forms. (Paper, 1s.; cloth, 2s. 6d. Stoneman.) It is a useful collection of suggestive matter.

Frances E. Cooke has produced a bright and useful little biography, The Story of William Penn. (1s. 6d. Headley Bros.) A true nobleman, the old Quaker deserves to be remembered. Several illustrations embellish the book.

Some of the most remarkable contents of that deeply interesting French journal Le Chrétien Français, conducted by ex-priests, have been translated, and published in a handy form in Rome from the Inside; or, The Priests' Revolt. (1s. James Clarke & Co.)

Mr. H. W. Fry's book, The Brand of Hell; or, Life in Babylon, has been issued in cheaper form (1s.). A companion volume, The Seal of Heaven (2s.), is, in the words of the preface, "intended to depict what may be expected to be the condition of things during the period of the millennium." (Marshall Bros.)

Rev. Robert Tuck has written a series of meditations, or "spiritual preparations," with the title The Hour before Holy Communion. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) Twelve in number, the meditations are preceded by Scripture selections, prayers, and verses of hymns. The pages are calculated to prove helpful to many.

There is much that is curious and mysterious in E. W. Beaven's book, Tales of the Divining Rod. (A. H. Stockwell & Co.) The general contention is that the gyration of the rod is owing, not to any functional potency in the diviner's brain, but to the electric power of the water spring, or other substance for which search is being made. Some of the stories are quite wonderfully made.

The new volume of the "Self and Sex" series is entitled What a Young Woman Ought to Know. It has been written by Mrs. Mary Wood-Allen, M.D., of the Purity Department of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and Rev. Sylvanus Stall, D.D., of Philadelphia. The pages treat of matters of great importance in the realm of morality and general behaviour, and delicacy and candour are admirably combined in the method followed. (4s. net. Vir Publishing Co., 175, Fleet Street, E.C.)

Two thousand copies of Mr. Mackenzie Bell's volume of poems, Pictures of Travel, have now been printed, including an American copyright edition.

Mr. Charles M. Sheldon's new book, The Miracle at Markham; or, How Twelve Churches Became One," will be published by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier, who have secured the copyright for Great Britain.

A pamphlet of distinct value is The Personal Study of the Bible: an address delivered at Nottingham, before the Midland Clerical and Lay Association, by Rev. H. J. R. Marston, M.A., incumbent of Belgrave Chapel, S.W. (2d. C. J. Thynne.)

A booklet which should be read by all who have the care of lads is Schoolboys' Special Immorality, by Maurice C. Hime, M.A., LL.D., some time headmaster of Foyle College, Londonderry. (6d. net. J. & A. Churchill, 7, Great Marlborough Street, W.)

Captain Henry Toynbee has issued a timely tract on religious error, entitled The False Prophet: his Past and Present Work. (½d. Thurgate & Sons, 18, Harrow Road, London, W.) Coming from the pen of a thoughtful and sincere man, these pages deserve careful attention.

Mr. E. Kaufmann, 5 and 6, Paternoster Square, E.C., issues some striking Gospel cardlets. The Time and Eternity series, in various tints, will be of service in many quarters. (18 for 6d.) Some new booklets are Favourite Bible Stories in Words and Pictures. There are Old and New Testament series. (Packets of twelve for 1s.) These will be specially useful in Sunday school work.

Messrs. T. & T. Clark announce that the second volume of the new Bible Dictionary, edited by Dr. Hastings, is now all printed off, and they hope to publish it on the 29th of this month. It extends from "Feign" to "Kinsman," and includes the three most important subjects: "God," by Professor A. B. Davidson and Professor Sanday; "Jesus Christ," by Professor Sanday; "Holy Spirit," by Professor Swete.

Lord Halifax in a Nonconformist Chapel.—On Sunday afternooon Lord Halifax paid a visit to Stepney Meeting-house on the invitation of the Men's Sunday Union. The chairman, Mr. H. A. Kennedy, introduced the president of the English Church Union as one whom they were accustomed to consider as their arch enemy, and it was useless to disguise the fact that Nonconformists were divided from High Churchmen not merely by forms and ceremonies, but by very serious differences of principle. Lord Halifax gave an address on "Other-Worldliness." This world, he said, could not satisfy the high ideals planted in man—ideals that were only explained and satisfied by Christianity. Nothing but devotion to a person, to Christ, could supply us with an adequate motive for life; and with that motive the weakest and most selfish would do for others what they would not do for themselves.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

A Suggestion—Will You Help?

My Dear Young Friends,—Two years ago you were kind enough to provide a bathing machine for the use of the cripples at the Ragged School Union Home at Southend-on-Sea. I need hardly say that your gift is heartily appreciated by the poor little sufferers who are fortunate enough to spend a holiday in the home. Your kindness has led me to make another suggestion, which I hope will also meet with your approval and call forth your sympathy.

The visitors to the home are not supposed to stay more than two or three weeks, and I am glad to tell you that in this brief time many of them gain strength, and return home much improved both physically and spiritually. But, alas! in many cases the physical improvement is not sustained when the child comes back to the great city. The stifling air and the poor living which are the portion of so many do not favour the return of health, and some unhappily suffer much pain until death releases them.

Now, it is a fact that many of the crippled children of East London would derive permanent benefit if circumstances permitted a prolonged stay in the home, so I have asked Mr. John Kirk, the secretary of the R.S.U., if he will kindly have a cot set apart, to be called for the purpose of one such sufferer being supported by the numerous nieces and nephews of "Uncle Tom." Shall I tell you the story of the dear little girl who now occupies that cot? The accompanying picture will, I hope, give you some idea of the child's happy face; though I hope many of you when visiting this favourite resort will call and see her, as I have done.

"UNCLE TOM'S COT,"

POOR LITTLE HANNAH

is eight years of age. Until last Christmas twelve-month she was able to run about and play as merrily as other girls of her own age; but one day she was accidentally knocked down in the school playground, and the blow she received resulted in hip disease. She was taken to the Royal Free Hospital, where she remained for a whole year. Then she was discharged a helpless little cripple, with irons round her waist and down each leg—really encased in an iron frame.

Hannah's parents being poor, and having to struggle for a living, they were unable to do what they would like to have done for their child. She needed fresh air and good food, a spinal carriage in which she could be wheeled out, and someone to constantly attend her. But these things were impossible in her humble home, and the wound would not heal. Then some good friend got her away to Southend, and here she improved so rapidly that it seemed a pity to send the child away without seeing what a few more weeks would do for her. When I heard of the case and saw the dear girl so patiently enduring this heavy cross, I thought of you happy rollicking boys and girls, and said I was sure you would contribute the sum needed for Hannah's stay to be prolonged. The doctor believes that if she can remain in the home for nine or ten months in all she would be quite cured—that is, as far as it is possible to cure hip disease. She would be able to run about again with other children, though it may be necessary for her to wear a special boot to make up for the shrinking of the limb.

Now, the probable cost of Hannah's stay in the home for this period would be £12; and seeing that this would set the dear girl on her feet again, I feel confident that you will gladly fall in with my suggestion and show your approval by sending your contributions, which "Uncle Tom" will be pleased to acknowledge. The home is situated at Southchurch Beach, Southend-on-Sea; the office of the R.S.U. is 37, Norfolk Street, Strand, London, W.C.

F. T. Watt.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending May 6.

Sun., April 30	Jer.		Thurs., May 4	Jonah	iv. 1-11
Mon., May 1	Jonah	i. 1-17	Fri., " 5	Eph.	i. 1-14
Tues., " 2	"	ii. 1-10	Sat., " 6	"	i. 15-23
Wed., " 3	"	iii. 1-10

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 173).

IMPOSSIBLE THINGS.

Complete the texts, give chapter and verse.

1. It was impossible for God——— (Hebrews v.-vii.
2. Without———it is impossible to (Hebrews ix.-xi.
3. It is impossible but that——— (Luke xvi.-xviii.)
4. It was not possible that He should——— (Acts i.-iii.)
5. It is not possible that the blood——— (Hebrews ix.-xi.)
6. Ye cannot serve———and——— (Luke xiv.-xvi.)
7. St. Luke records these words of Jesus: "The things which are impossible with men are possible with God." What was the question which drew forth this answer?

Children under ten do any three; between ten and thirteen do 1 to 6.

No. 172.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Zeldah Albert*, Gladys Allan, Violet Ashworth*, Ralph, Dora, E. and W. Aldwinckle, Jennie Almond*, Enderby Anderson*, Irene Ashdown*, Arnold* and Owen* Akers, Henry and Mary Allsop.

B—Herbert Braddon*, Susette Beck, Phyllis Boyd*, Evelyn* Sylvia, Dorothy and Maud Barrett, Kenneth Bewley, Florence* and Lillian Blackman, Rose Butler*, William Berwick, Ethel Barclay, Kathleen Brenton*, Gordon*, May* and Daisy* Bligh, Ella and Marion Burton, Emily Bridgewater*, Gertrude and Edith* Badham, Dorothy Butcher, Alan and Charlie Banks, James and Edith Barker, Ella Berryman, Mary Beck*.

C—Anna Chanyen, Mabel* and Ida* Cole, Katie*, Guy*, Philip* and Oscar* Cross, John* and David* Colville, Arthur Cox*, Daisy, Vernon and Jack Clarke, Kathleen Code*, Eleanor Chance, A. M. Clark, Edie Chevalier*, Edith Clarence, Lily Church*, Lois*, Millicent and Cicely Craven, Brereton Code*, Dorothy Cooper, J. A. Chamberlain.

D—Folognia Daws*, Vera Dickinson, Hilda, Elizabeth, G., and Constance Drayson, Stanley Drew*, Dorothy and Ralph Daintree, Nellie Dowsett, Lucy Davidson.*

E—Leonard Ewin,

F—Mabel and Vincent Fleet*, Temperance Foskett*, Kitty Fausset, Aileen and Francis Figgis, Constance Furlong.

G—William Gale* Irene and Kathleen* Gough, Gracie Grout, Bertie* and Clarice* Gale, Ethel*, Alfred*, Mary* and Daisy* Greenacre, Mabel Golding* Alice Goad*.

H—Nellie Hatchett*, Theodora Hill, Hetty Hill*, Edith Holms, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewer, Mary Hinton, Willie Hooper, Elsie Hatcher, Ruth Hinder*, Jennie Holmes*.

J—Ruth Johnson*, Betty Jacobs*.

K—Stanley, Max* and Eva Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky*, Nellie Keeley, Lily Kinvig*.

L—Cecilia Lichenstein*, Alan, Harold, and Frank Light, May*, Edward, Henry and Sidney Law, Gertrude Lambert*, Margaret Lee*, Blanche Lindup*, Nellie and Edith Lockhart.

M—Hedley Meader*, Ian MacGregor, Marie Meek, Daisy and Winifred Martin, Lewis, Grace, Arthur and O. L. Morice, Charles Macdonald, Arabella Mainwaring-Onslow, Marion Maran*, Elsie and Dorothy McMullin, Elsie* and Annie* Moule, Nellie*, Annie* and Daisy* Mackenzie, Frank Medcalf, Abraham Mack, Arthur, Gwendoline* and Howard Moir, Louis Maclachlan.

N—Ernest*, Edith and George Nash, H. and Mary Neligan.

P—Kathleen Pasley*, Ruth Pledger*, John Pearce*, Alice Palmer*, Ruth Patient, Walter and Katy* Picknell, Mary Plumb*, Kathleen Pincott, Lilian Pearson*, Lizzie Pratt*, Eva* and Lillie* Petter, Hattie* and Evelyn Peters.

R—Kate Rosenbloom*, Alice Reid, Gordon Remington.

S—Solomon Stockfish, Esther Simmons*, Douglas*, Kathleen*, Edith* and Minnie* Shepherd, Sydney, Janet and Arthur Speed, Mabel Stembridge, Cicely Sherbrooke, Annie Shelley*, Laura Standen*, Jessie Snowball*, Herbert Stuart*, Betty Stocks*, Mary Seed*, Joseph Stephens, Alan and D. J. Symon, Douglas Stevens*, Mildred* and Gertrude* Scott, Flora Simmons*, Mary Symon, Lucy Soltau*.

T—Olive Taylor*, Arthur*, Peveril, and Derwent Turnbull, Eileen*, Ruby and Florence Tomlinson, Theodora Thorn*, Alice* and Frank Thompson.

V—Rosetta Viccars, May* and Edwin Vickers.

W—Annie* and Sarah* Wood, Madge and F. Wilson*, Sydney Wallace, Ibla Woodman, Thomas* and Robert* Weddell, Greta* and Digby Watson, Cecile, Noel and Phillis Wright.

Y—Gladys and Eva* Young.

No. 171.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Violet Ashworth*, Enderby Anderson, Victor Armstrong, Ernst and Ralph Aldwinckle.

B—Alan, Maggie, and Charlie Banks, Edith Badham*, Colin and George Brown, Mary Beck*, Dorothy Barrett, Ashley Bowker*, Louis Berthé, Ella Berryman, Dorothy Berry, Edith Barker, Lily Boxer, Lucienne Brabandes, Henriette Bardot, Ernestine Buhl, Leonard Browne, Alcina and Frank Bentall, Eva Browne*, Frank, Avory, and Lilian Blackie, Percy, Edward, and Dorothy Bates, B. Bulteel, Massy*, Conyers, and Allen* Baker.

C—Ethel Colgrave, Janie, Nellie and Beatrice Crawford, Millicent and Cicely Craven, Beryl Calvert, Augusta Clark, David* and John Colville, Winnie Cox*, Ethel Craigie, Lydia Cleary, Mabel Candlin*, Richard Cornthwaite*, Henry Cheney*, Oscar Cross, Duncan Campbell*, Willie Charles, Walter Carter*.

D—Constance Devenish-Meares, Hilda Drayson, Harold Davis*, Cecil Harley, Dorothy* and Marjorie* Dyke, Marie Denizot, Mai and Violet Davidson, Catherine Darke.

E—Leonard Ewin.

F—Constance Furlong, Arthur and Richard Farmer, Marian Freegard*, Aileen and F. A. Figgis, Janet Fawkes, Bessie Freeman, Maggie*, Eva and Mabel* Fletcher, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Jeanne Faucon, Louise Filhol, Helen Forbes, Flossy, Agnes and Lewis Fullarton, Agnes and Augustine Fry.

G—Winnie Grove, Mary Glass, Thos. Groombridge, Minnie* and Evelyn* Giddings, Dorothy Garfit, Alice Goad*, Daisy Greenacre, Frank and Alfred Gibbs, Edith Grieve, W. Gordon Greenwood, Daisy George.

H—Willie Hopkins*, Edith Holms, Bessie Hope, Ethel Hutchings*, Jennie Holms, Dorothy Harris, Beatrice Hastings*, Ella Hake*, Sandy Handasyde, Florence* and Francie* Hoyte, Freda Haines Theodora*, M. J., and Eric Hill.

I—Ami Inglis.

J—Betty Jacobs*, Thomas Johnson, Lizzie Johnstone*, J. Sinclair Jackson.

K—Maurice Kalinsky, Jeanie Kyle*, Tessa Knowles, Helen Knight, T., Isa, Agnes*, and Alex* Kay, Lily Kinvig.

L—Harriet Lynham, Gertrude Lambert*, Linda, Edith, Harry and Willie Lowe, Bertie* and Gertie* Lockington, Mary Lindsay, Bernard and Arthur Lamb.

M—Margie Marston, Mabel Morris*, Grace and Arthur Morice, Annie Moule*, Barbara Maconchy*, Mabelle Mounstephen, Dorothy* and Margaret Morris, Harry Malaher, Charles* and G. Macdonald, Lewis MacGregor, Eliza MacGregor, Daisie and Tita Mackenzie, Christina Marshall*, Ethel* and Mildred Morgan, Nellie*, Annie* and Daisy* Mackenzie, Frank Medcalf, Abraham Mack, Arthur, Howard* and Gwendoline* Moir, Louis Maclachlan, Hedley Meader*.

N—George, Ernest and Edith Nash, Peter Nicholson*, Mary Neligan.

O—George O'Beirne*.

P—Vera and Daisy Petrides, John Pearce*, Ethel and Gladys Palmer, Myrtle Perry, Willie Petter, Katie* and Leonard* Picknell, Eva* Petter, Muriel Patten, Gladys Phipps.

R—Mary Rigby, Elmina Roe, Marion and Gussie Roach, Willie Rogers, Gwennie Ravenhill, Ivor Rickers, Herbert Rainey, Kathleen Remon.

S—Nellie Sery*, Violet Salvesen, Florrie Smith, E.* and Susie* Sutton, Joseph Stephens, Marjorie and Cicely Sherbrooke, Esther Simmons*, Nellie Skinner, Ivy Sherwin*, Cecil and Annette Stirling, Fred Stileman, Mabel Stembridge, Janey Sinclair, Sydney, Maudie, Arthur and Janet Speed, Flora Simmons*.

T—Alice Truelove*, Geo. Taylor, Peveril Turnbull, Eileen Tomlinson, Lucy Trotter.

U—Queenie Upton.

V—Kenneth Vining*, Rosetta Viccars*, Phyllis Vigers.

W—Winnie and Charles Williams, Violet Walker*, Annie Wood, Edith and Edward Wheeler, Dorothy White*, Connie Wood*, Bertie Walls, Leonard Wall, Kenrick Wakeford, Myra Webb, Helen and Frederick Webb, Digby Watson, Pringle Wilson*, Thomas and Robert Weddell.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 153—Alan Hogg (China). No. 160—Ethel Woodrow (Mexico). No. 161—Mary Pearson (Tasmania). No. 162—Louis Esra*, and Queenie Matthews (S. Africa), Theodora* Guinness, Mary and Graham* Pearson (Tasmania). No. 163—Alice Henderson* (Jamaica), Ruth Spriggs*. No. 165—Alice Henderson*. No. 166—Llewellyn* and Queenie* Dale (India), Lottie, Ivan and Rotha St. George (Canada), Olive Trench. No. 167—Vera Sjöström, Llewellyn and Queenie Dale, Ivan, Rotha and Lottie* St. George, Jean and Eliza Scott (Canada). No. 168—Frank and Vera Sjöström. No. 170—Olive Mellingen (Constantinople).

ANSWERS TO BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 172).

1. Charity. 1 Corinthians xiii.
2. One. Luke xvii. 15.
3. Merciful. Matthew v. 7.
4. Emmanuel. Matthew i. 23.
5. Unicorn. Psalm xcii. 10.
6. None. Romans iii. 10.
7. Temperance. Galatians v. 23.
8. Onyx. Exodus xxviii. 20.
9. My. John x. 14.
10. Enter. Matthew vii. 13.

Come unto Me. Matthew xi. 28.

Personal.

I am glad to welcome more new "Searchers," and hope they will continue as they have begun.

Winnie Page, Mary de Spiganovicz, Herbert Stuart.—I am very sorry to hear you have been ill, and trust you will soon be strong enough to resume your "Searcher." (Winnie) I am glad to see your paper again.

Emily Bridgewater.—Thank you very much for your efforts to interest others in the "Searcher."

Ibla Woodman.—You must do the whole as you are over thirteen. I am glad you are starting again.

Mary Beck.—Many thanks for the flowers.

Ernestine Buhl.—Thank you for your letter and for Lucie's address.

Marion Burton.—You may continue the "Searcher" as long as you like, but may not enter for the Prize Competition after twenty.

Maud Eddey, Eric Hill.—I am so sorry you are ill, and hope you will soon be quite well again. (Eric) You were just a few marks behind. You had given no chapter and verse for Question 3. Better success next time.

Many thanks for a box of primroses received.

In past years some of you have been good enough to send boxes of flowers for sick children in hospitals, &c. I hope this will be kindly remembered during this summer.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Winchester, May 3; Grantham, May 5; Hale, Altrincham, May 6-7; Liverpool, May 7-8; Bolton, May 9; Heaton Chapel, May 11; Manchester, May 12; Smithills, Bolton, May 13-14; Sheffield, May 15; Bradford, May 16; Hellifield, May 17-18; Clapham, near Ingleton, May 19; Pershore and neighbourhood, May 20-25; Leominster, May 26; Malvern, May 27-28; Mr. J. Spiers, Corn Exchange, York, May 4-19; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Norwich, May 3-17; Mr. W. H. Wilson, Workington, to April 29; Mr. W. H. Stentiford and Mr. Mont. Goodman, St. Peter's, Cricklewood, to April 30; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Liverpool, May 8; Manchester, May 10; Bolton, May 12; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Hemyock, Devon, from April 28.

Half-yearly Meetings and Conferences of Scripture Union Secretaries.—Hope Hall, Liverpool, May 8 (4 and 7.30); Central Hall, off Deansgate, Bolton, May 9 (7.30); Strangeways Hall, Manchester, May 12 (8 and 6.30); Y.M.C.A. Hall, Sheffield, May 15 (5 and 7.30); Church Institute, Bradford, May 16 (7.30).

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

A newly built church at Dalton, near Richmond, Yorks, has been consecrated by the Bishop of Ripon.

Bishop Tucker (Uganda) writes:—"The sale of Scriptures during the last six months has been nearly three times what it has ever been in any similar period."

The Duchess of York has just sent to the Church Army two women's garments, worked by Her Royal Highness, to be sold on behalf of the Army's work among the destitute and outcast.

Mr. Percy C. Causton, a son of the late Rev. T. L. N. Causton, vicar of St. Matthew's, Croydon, has sailed for Cape Town as a lay worker of the Missions to Seamen on board the shipping anchoring in Table Bay.

Rev. J. G. Holburn has been instituted to the living of Carbrook, Sheffield. The congregation of St. Jude's, Sheffield, where Mr. Holburn has been curate for fifteen years, took leave of him at a public meeting. Rev. G. W. Turner, vicar of St. Jude's, who presided, said that Mr. Holburn's strictly evangelical teaching and preaching, and his zeal and earnestness, had gained a warm place in their hearts.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe told the London Diocesan Conference last week that he feared that some preachers founded their sermons upon the daily papers, the novels, and the topics of the day. He had heard of one clergyman who said that a man who could not find three sermons in the Times of Saturday to preach on Sunday must be a bit of a fool, and not fit to preach to an educated congregation.

Preaching at Wimborne Minster the Archbishop of Canterbury alluded to the vast changes in the Church during the last sixty years. They sometimes thought, he said, of the time when many abuses prevailed, when the clergy were unfit for the work they were doing, when the services were slovenly, when there was little religious teaching given to children, and little or no visiting. That reproach had been taken away, and the gross abuses of non-residence had been entirely stopped. In mission work the call of the Church of England was imperative.

The Bishop of Durham recently remarked: "I endeavour to press on all who hear me the simple counsel, Guard your Sundays. I believe that England owes her stability and greatness to the general observance of the Day of Rest and the study of Holy Scripture. The two are bound together, and exactly in proportion as we neglect the one or the other we prepare our national ruin. In these times of reckless excitement and engrossing business, I do not see when we can reflect calmly on the greatest things—the things unseen and eternal—if the quiet of Sunday, 'the day of the rest of the heart,' is taken from us."

Congregational.

The anniversary meetings of the Liverpool auxiliary of the London Missionary Society have been held with conspicuous success.

Rev. Thomas Bagley (of Edmonton) conducted a very successful five days' mission last week at Melbourn, Cambridgeshire (Rev. G. P. Chapple).

Rev. R. B. Brindley, of Nottingham, has received a unanimous invitation from the Grafton Square Church, Clapham, to be co-pastor and successor to Dr. Guinness Rogers, who will retire next year.

Canadian Congregationalists are contemplating the inauguration of a Twentieth Century Fund with a view to bringing moral and spiritual help to the growing populations of the newer Canada, and to setting free the mortgage-burdened churches.

At the recent meeting of the Yorkshire Union a report was presented on special missions, showing that Rev. John Jameson, missioner, had visited twenty-two churches, and conducted 255 services. Gratifying reports had been received of the work accomplished.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne, of Kensington, at a meeting of the committee of the London Union on Monday intimated his acceptance of the office of vice-chairman of the union to which he was recently elected. This appointment carries with it the chairmanship of the union in 1900.

Yorkshire Union adopted a resolution declaring the recent Marriage Act as most unsatisfactory in principle and detail, and calling for "a measure containing efficient and impartial provision for the registration of all marriages by the appointed officer of the State." Thanks were voted to Rev. Bryan Dale.

Baptist.

The foundation-stones were laid of the new chapel at Kensal Rise. The new church will hold about 900 people, and will cost £4,000, towards which £1,400 has been raised.

Successful opening meetings have been held in connection with an iron chapel erected upon a prominent corner site at Haydon Park, near Wimbledon, which was purchased about two years ago, when the neighbourhood was commencing to develop.

The church in Derry of which Rev. E. T. Mateer is pastor has just celebrated its first anniversary. Special sermons were preached by the pastor, and at a public meeting, in which Pastors Marshall, Irvine, Gribbon, and Boyce took part, favourable accounts of the year's work were given. A number of persons have been baptised; two have entered mission work. A manse is being erected.

Methodist.

The Primitive Methodists are building a new church at Douglas.

To commemorate the fifty years' labours of Mr. Job Pennington at Fellside, in Kendal Primitive Methodist Circuit, it has been decided to erect a Memorial Mission Hall. Mr. Pennington was a working quarryman, and for fifty years conducted services.

Mr. Josiah Nix has visited North Ormesby (Middlesbrough) to inaugurate a scheme for the erection of New Wesleyan Sunday Schools, largely as the outcome of a mission conducted by Mr. Nix about a year since. Mr. Nix appealed for £200 as the nucleus of a fund, and that amount was raised.

At the monthly meeting of the Hull Wesleyan ministers, a strong resolution relating to the new Sunday newspapers was adopted. Over the tea table a subscription list was started for the widow and family of the late Rev. George Clutterbuck, and a sum of about £9 raised. Arrangements are being made with the other Methodist churches in the city to hold a large united lovefeast.

Great structural improvements have been made at St. John's Square Church (Wesleyan Central London Mission), Clerkenwell. Seating has been arranged for 400 more persons, and there is a fine block of premises for social work. The expenditure has been £10,500, the cost of the additional land being very heavy. Something like £6,000 has now been secured.

The Tuesday midday services at the Central Hall, Oldham Street, Manchester, are to be continued this year throughout the summer. Amongst the special preachers whose help Rev. S. F. Collier has secured for the next three months are Revs. John Thomas, Dr. Marcus Dods, J. Monro Gibson, J. G. Greenhough, W. L. Watkinson, G. Jackson, H. W. Horwill, and J. E. Roberts.

Presbyterian.

The total cost of Westminster College will be £38,000, and towards this £23,059 has been subscribed, leaving nearly £15,000 to be raised.

Principal Rainy, in an address to Divinity students, urged them to cultivate a manly sincerity of purpose and aim. A danger beset all speakers, which could gain ground until a man seemed earnest and fervent on the gravest topics, and yet was all the while merely cultivating his power of producing effects upon people by skilful expedients. Some men were so naturally dramatic that they could not help throwing themselves into parts.

Society of Friends.

Willesden Friends have purchased a plot of freehold land at Harlesden, with a view to building a meeting-house for the service of this populous district.

Alice A. Newson, of Spring Bank, Victoria Road, Worthing, with her husband and two other friends living in the town, for the past few weeks have together held a meeting for worship They now desire to make it known to friends visiting Worthing that such a meeting is held at the foregoing address at eleven o'clock on first-day mornings.

The Lake Superior sailed for Quebec on the 19th with all the Cyprus Dukhobors. On the same day the Lake Huron was to leave Avonmouth Docks for Batoum to take over 2,000 more of the Dukhobors from the Kars district to Canada. Wilson Sturge reports all well among the Cyprus emigrants. He will probably stay some two months longer in the island to arrange for the harvesting of the crops and the disposal of the farms.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. W. H. ELLIOT, deacon and secretary of the Clifton Congregational Church, Peckham, and superintendent of the Sunday school. Mr. Elliot, who was fifty-seven, was an indefatigable worker on behalf of the church.—Rev. T. K. EATON, vicar of Pilton, Shepton Mallet. He was ordained in 1871 to the curacy of St. Mark's, Gloucester. Later he was curate of Coleford, Gloucestershire, vicar of Oakridge, and he held the living of North Newton, Somersetshire, from 1879 to 1893, when he was appointed vicar of Pilton.—Archdeacon QUARRY, of Cork, one of the oldest and most learned dignitaries of the Irish Church. Born eighty-nine years ago, ordained in 1832, he has served the Church for sixty-seven years. He was a scholar of wide attainments, and was select preacher to the University of Dublin in 1879, and at Cambridge in 1882.—Mr. J. M. NICHOLSON, J.P., a leading Dublin Methodist, who had been several times circuit steward of two of the principal circuits, and was one of the chief promoters and supporters of the flourishing suburban church at Rathgar. His death occurred only four days subsequent to that of his wife.—Rev. GEORGE WARNER, who was for fifty years connected with the Primitive Methodist ministry. For many years he was Connexional Evangelist, and, as a rule, conducted three services per day. Methodism loses a notable figure by the death of Mr. GEORGE GELDER, of Huddersfield. One of the 200 members of Queen Street Church who were expelled at the time of the Disruption, he helped to found the United Methodist cause in Brunswick Street, was a trustee up to his death, and Sunday school superintendent 1862-77. Twelve years ago he returned to Queen Street, and at one time or another had held every office open to laymen, while he had been on a preacher's plan for over sixty years.—Rev. SAMUEL SMITH, one of the oldest ministers of the Methodist New Connexion, has died at Altrincham. He was ninety-two, and entered the ministry in 1834. He held appointments in Lancashire and Yorkshire until 1877, when he was placed on the superannuated list. He did not finally relinquish pulpit work until he had passed his eighty-fifth year.—Rev. DAVID JEHU, Congregationalist, has died at the age of seventy-three. He was trained at Bedford College, and commenced his ministry in 1858. For some years past he has lived in retirement at Coventry.—On the 20th inst., Rev. THOMAS LOXHAM, Rector of Great Lever in his eighty-first year.

"MAY" MEETINGS.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.		Place of Meeting.	Chairman.
APRIL.
Fri. 28	11.0 a.m.	Wesleyan Missionary Society	s	Great Queen-street Chapel	Rev. Dr. H. McMillan
"	11.0 a.m.	Spanish and Portuguese Ch. Aid Socy.	s	Holy Trinity Ch., Marylebone	Dean Farrar.
"	3.0 p.m.	South American Missionary Society	m	Lower Exeter Hall	Sir F. L. McClintock.
"	4.0 p.m.	Bishop of London's Fund	c	Sion College	Bishop of London.
"	5.0 p.m.	Anti-Slavery Society	m	London Inst., Finsbury Circus.	Sir T. F. Buxton.
"	6.30 p.m.	Dr. Stephenson's Homes	m	Wesley's Chapel, City Road	Ld. Mayor of Liverpool
"	7.0 p.m.	Sunday School Union	m	56, Old Bailey	Mr. F. F. Belsey.
"	7.0 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Soc. (Young People)	m	Exeter Hall	Mr. W. Payne.
Sat. 29	9.0 a.m.	Wesleyan Missionary Society	b	Lower Exeter Hall	Mr. T. H. Bainbridge.
Sun. 30.	11.0 a.m.	Church Association	s	N. Brixton Church	Rev. F. C. Ward.
MAY.
Mon. 1	11.0 a.m.	Wesleyan Missionary Society	m	Exeter Hall	Sir G. J. Smith.
"	3.0 p.m.	Church Army	m	130, Edgware Road	Rev. W. Carlile.
"	3.0 p.m.	Miss de Broen's Belleville Mission	m	Council Chamber, Exeter Hall	Mr. H. W. Maynard.
"	3.0 p.m.	Khalsa Prayer Union (for the Sikhs)	m	Lower Exeter Hall	Col. R. Williams, M.P.
"	4.0 p.m.	Bishop of London's Fund	m	Grosvenor House	Duke of Westminster.
"	5.0 p.m.	Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society	m	Mansion House	The Lord Mayor.
"	6.30 p.m.	Wesleyan Missionary Society	m	Wesley's Chapel, City Road	Mr. Jno. Gibbs.
"	6.30 p.m.	Church Missionary Society	s	St. Bride's, Fleet Street	Bishop of Worcester.
"	7.0 p.m.	Sunday School Union (young people)	m	City Temple	Mr. A. Pye Smith.
"	7.0 p.m.	National Temperance League	m	Exeter Hall	Archbp. of Canterbury
"	7.0 p.m.	Ragged School Union	m	Queen's Hall	Mrqs. of Northampton
"	7.30 p.m.	Church Association	m	St. James's Hall	Capt. A. W. Cobham.
Tues. 2	10.55 a.m.	Church Missionary Society	m	Exeter Hall	Sir J. H. Kennaway.
"	3.0 p.m.	" " (ladies)	m	King's Hall, Newton St., W.C.
"	7.0 p.m.	" "	m	Exeter Hall	Earl of Aberdeen.
"	3.0 p.m.	Miss Weston's Work for Sailors	m	Lower Exeter Hall	Miss Weston.
Wed. 3	11 a.m.	Church Army	s	Westminster Abbey	Bishop of Rochester.
"	3 p.m.	" "	m	St. James's Hall	Bishop of Bristol.
"	7.30 p.m.	" "	m	" "	Bishop of Salisbury.
"	9 a.m.	Colonial and Continental Church Society	b	Cannon Street Hotel	Mr. C. H. Bousfield.
"	3 p.m.	" "	m	Sion College	Mr. F. A. Bevan.
"	10 a.m.	Women's Total Abstinence Union	m	St. Martin's Town Hall	Hon. Miss Portman.
"	11 a.m.	" " " "	c	" "	Lady Eliz. Biddulph.
"	3 p.m.	" " " "	c	" "	Mrs. Hawkes.
"	7 p.m.	" " " "	m	" "	Miss M. E. Docwra.
"	11 a.m.	British and Foreign Bible Society	m	Exeter Hall	Sir T. F. Buxton.
"	2.30 p.m.	Society for Propagation of Gospel	m	St. James's Hall	Archbp. of Canterbury
"	3 p.m.	Missionary Leaves Association	m	Lower Exeter Hall	Bishop Royston.
Thurs. 4	11 a.m.	London City Mission	m	Exeter Hall	Mr. F. A. Bevan.
"	2.30 p.m.	Society for Propagation of the Gospel	m	St. James's Hall	Archbp. of Canterbury
"	3.15 p.m.	Factory Girls' Country Fund	m	Charterhouse, E.C.	Dr. Haig Brown.
"	3.30 p.m.	Female Preventive Institution	m	Exeter Hall	Sir George Williams.
"	6.30 p.m.	Sunday School Union	m	" "	Mr. A. J. Scrutton.
"	7 p.m.	London Jews' Society	s	All Souls', Langham Place	Bishop of Coventry.
"	8 p.m.	Church Association	c	Princes Hall	Capt. A. W. Cobham.
Fri. 5	9 a.m.	London Jews' Society	b	Lower Exeter Hall	Rev. G. W. Dalton.
"	11 a.m.	" "	m	Exeter Hall	Sir J. H. Kennaway.
"	3 p.m.	Ch. of Eng. Zenana Missionary Society	m	" "	Sir C. Elliott.
"	6.30 p.m.	Religious Tract Society	m	" "	Lord Overtoun.
"	3.30 p.m.	Moravian Missions	m	Lower Exeter Hall	Mr. T. A. Denny.
Mon. 8	3.0 p.m.	British and Foreign Sailors' Society	m	Mansion House	The Lord Mayor.
Tues. 9	11.0 a.m.	Irish Church Missions	m	Exeter Hall	Archdcn. of Liverpool.
"	12.0 a.m.	Home for Incurables	m	Cannon Street Hotel	Earl Amherst.
"	3.0 p.m.	China Inland Mission	m	Exeter Hall	Sir George Williams.
"	7.0 p.m.	Ch. of Eng. Sunday School Institute	m	Church House, Westminster	Bishop of Carlisle.
"	7.0 p.m.	British and Foreign Sailor's Society	m	Sailors' Institute, Shadwell
"	7.0 p.m.	China Inland Mission	m	Exeter Hall	Mr. Theo. Howard.
"	7.0 p.m.	Colonial Missionary Society	m	City Temple	Earl of Aberdeen.
"	7.30 p.m.	Anti-Sunday Travelling Union	m	Lower Exeter Hall	Maj.-Gen. Bruce.
Wed. 10	8.30 a.m.	Band of Hope Union	b	Lower Exeter Hall	Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P.
"	2.30 p.m.	" " "	c	" "	Mr. C. J. Whitehead.
"	6.0 p.m.	" " "	m	Exeter Hall	Sir Geo. Williams.
"	4.0 p.m.	Female Guardian Society	m	191, High St., Stoke Newington	Mr. F. A. Bevan.
"	7.0 p.m.	London Missionary Society	m	City Temple	Lord Reay.
Thurs. 11	11.30 a.m.	Daily Prayer Union	s	All Souls', Langham Place	Dean of Norwich.
"	11 a.m.	Moravian Missions	s	St. Paul's, Onslow Square	Rev. J. H. Faithfull.
"	4.0 p.m.	Colonial Missionary Society	c	Memorial Hall	Mr. W. M. Hitchcock
"	7.30 p.m.	"Help for Brazil"	m	Council Chamber, Exeter Hall	Mr. W. Hind Smith.
Fri. 12	11.0 a.m.	Ch. of Eng. Waifs and Strays Society	m	St. Paul's Chapter House	Lieut.-Gen. Lowry.
"	3.0 p.m.	" " "	m	Church House, Westminster	Bishop of London.
"	3.0 p.m.	Spanish & Portuguese Church Aid Soc.	m	Lower Exeter Hall	Sir R. Lighton.
"	7.30 p.m.	Young Abstainers' Union	m	" " "	Sir George Williams.
"	3.30 p.m.	Early Closing Association (women only)	m	St. Martin's Town Hall	Mrs. Creighton.
Sat. 13	12 a.m.	Royal Society Prev. Cruelty to Animals	m	Crystal Palace	H.R.H. Duke of York.
"	4.0 p.m.	Religious Tract Society (young people)	m	Exeter Hall	Earl of Aberdeen.

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; co.—Convention; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soiree.

☞ Later meetings will be announced in successive issues.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C. Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

IT is interesting that in the invitations sent out by the conveners of both the Mildmay and Keswick conventions a similar note should be struck. The subject of the former is "The Three Appearings of our Lord Jesus Christ;" of the latter Mr. Robert Wilson says:—

We again meet in the joyful anticipation of our Lord's return. May we ever seek to live in such hallowed communion with Him in our daily life that, when that blessed day comes, we shall be able to say—"Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him." "We will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

Here we have respectively doctrine and practice, the one the indispensable complement of the other, and each interpreting the true motive of Christian life and service—the "blessed hope" of the Lord's return.

The specific object of this year's Mildmay Conference is—

To confirm and brighten the faith of God's people in those grand, massive, foundation truths that neither the controversies of the past nor present time can shake or dim. We are confident that in proportion as these glorious truths are realised, will error be overcome, and the faith of Christ's own shine out bright and clear. We remember the apostolic admonition, "The Lord's servant must not strive, but be gentle towards all, apt to teach, forbearing, in meekness correcting them that oppose themselves" (2 Tim. ii. 24, 25, R.V.), and in the setting forth of high and momentous, and sometimes difficult themes, we need greatly and seek earnestly to make manifest the spirit of brotherly love. And it is possible to contend for great and vital truths without bitterness of controversy.

The Scriptures selected (see page 14) for the first two days form a well-compiled refutation of the claims of modern priestism.

The programme of the International Council of Congregational Churches, to be held in Boston in September, embraces topics of vital interest to the English-speaking race. The happy combination of English and American leaders of religious thought will give to the meetings a unity of sentiment that will do much to confirm the best traditions of Congregationalism. Not only England, however, but Canada, Australia, and other countries are to be represented. Such an assembly of ministers of Jesus Christ will surely exert an influence upon the religious community at Boston which must tend to the quickening of fraternal regard and the deepening of the faith-life. All sections of the one spiritual Church of Christ will share in the out-pouring of blessing which, it is confidently believed, will descend upon the gatherings.

The Cromwellian celebration organised by the Free Churches proved a great success, though it passed off amid the studious disregard of the High Church party, and of politicians of all degrees. It was possibly as well that the religious aspects of the commemoration should be almost exclusively emphasised. The greatest service wrought by the Protector was, in the words of a recent writer in the Standard, the "elevation of religious enthusiasm to the rank of statesmanship." Other aspects of his work were largely temporary; this was its vital feature; and in this we find his message for to-day. At present, the "intrusion" of religious principles, as such, into the realm of politics is bitterly resented by a large section of the population. The task of the future for Christian people is to see that the teachings of Christ are made operative and dominant in all their political and civil policy. Whatever "party" in the State they may belong to, this ideal may be followed by all true citizens.

In these days, when we are so frequently celebrating the centenaries of men and institutions, it is well to remember that the good men who witnessed for some great truth, or founded missionary societies, had only God to build their faith upon. They had no romantic stories to tell of the conversion of fierce enemies, or of the acceptance of the Gospel by whole tribes; their history had to be made; they could only say to their brethren that they believed missions to be according to the will of Christ, and that God would give them his blessing. And God honoured their faith. We may make the mistake of confounding an interest in the marvellous deeds wrought by faith, with the faith itself. Simon Magus was captivated by the wonders wrought by Peter at Samaria, but his "heart was not right in the sight of God." There is need for us all to go behind men and institutions and come into living contact with Him who worketh all in all.

How numerous and precious are the teachings of spring-time! We never hear the flow of the rising sap in trunk and branch to the bursting bud and the opening blossom. So the faith-life in man is silent, but equally as evident. In due season it is manifest in beauty of character and fruitful service. It cannot be hid. It is God's gracious influence to which nature yields, and by-and-by the desert blossoms as the rose. Similarly, the mighty power of the Spirit of God, submitted to by the heart of man, produces renewing as real as the glory of early spring. Spiritual transformation is the work of God alone. The direct action of the sun woos plant and shrub, tree and flower, and presently there is a wealth of life in garden, field, and forest, on sloping hill, in peaceful valley, by rushing river, and whispering brooklet. So, also, the Divine Sun of Righteousness wins man to live the true life. Without Him the soul is dark and dead. By his grace, spiritual life grows and develops, until it attains the fulness of the stature of the perfect man.

How difficult it is to hold the balance evenly in the statement of truth. The latest writer on Wycliffe ("England in the Age of Wycliffe," by G. M. Trevelyan) says that the reformer's assertion of the superiority of an active over a devotional life was in that age a daring rebellion. Yet surely he asserted no such thing, but rather that the observance of prayers and penances as a substitute for active service was evil. True prayer inevitably leads to sacrifice and effort, and these, again, as certainly bring the soul under a sense of its helplessness to God. There can be no such thing in the truly devout life as compounding with our Maker and Saviour. The freedom of the lives lived by the reformers, their naturalness and humanness, struck all observers; but this was rooted in earnest, importunate devotion. We have the same evils as they had to contend with in the Church, and we must assail them with the same weapons—the Word of God, prayer, and holy living.

The chairman of the Surrey Congregational Union (Rev. Bernard J. Snell) is reported to have urged his ministerial brethren to use their freedom of utterance in bringing their doctrinal teaching into harmony with the Christian consciousness, and the thought of the age; and this especially with regard to Bible inerrancy, everlasting punishment, and substitutionary atonement, all which, said Mr. Snell, are no longer tenable. This deliverance suggests a few questions:—1. Should our teaching be harmonised with our consciousness, or does our Christian consciousness depend upon our teaching? 2. Is the teacher of the Gospel to be subject to the thought of the age, or should he seek to permeate the thought of the age with the Gospel? 3. Is a preacher to spend his time in showing that the Bible is an unsafe guide, that punishment for sin is not so very serious, and that atonement for sin is not substitutionary, or should he insist that the Bible alone can guide man safely to immortality, that the wages of sin are unspeakably awful, and that Christ died as a sacrifice for our sins?

So far from the doctrines of everlasting punishment and substitutionary atonement being out of harmony with the Christian consciousness and no longer tenable, Dr. Orr, one of the ablest theologians of our day, says in "The Christian View of God and the World":—

Everything that would weaken the appeal of Scripture to repent and believe now, or lead men to throw over into a possible future what ought to be done now, is a distinct evil.

And with regard to the Atonement, he affirms that the judicial aspect of our Saviour's work is the one upon which the apostolic theology specially fastens, as the ground of the remission of sins, and the means by which the sinner is brought into a relation of peace with God—the ground, as Bunyan phrases it, on which God "justly justifies the sinner." We believe, Mr. Snell notwithstanding, that there is a distinct trend in the churches towards the old beliefs that our fathers firmly held.

At the annual meeting of a County Union of Congregational Churches held recently, the chairman called attention to the fact that whereas the trade of the district—one of the busiest in the county—had never been better than during the past three years, yet the income of the Union had declined. Are the two things cause and effect? Increase of wealth seldom means corresponding increase of giving to the cause of Christ; generally it does mean an increase of personal and family expenditure. Times of revival are more common when wealth is scarce than when it abounds. The early Church was born and nursed in poverty. It is said that a Cardinal of the Church of Rome, passing through a room where the Pope was counting over a large sum of money, was thus addressed: "You see, the Church cannot say now, 'Silver and gold have I none.'" "No," was the reply, "and she cannot say to the lame man, 'In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, rise up and walk.'" Money is not indispensable; the power of Jesus is. "Without Me ye can do nothing."

Mr. J. W. Mellor, M.P., put his finger upon the real danger of Ritualism when he said: "It was not Ritualism that they were met to complain of, it was the teaching and preaching of false doctrine of which ritualism was the symptom and the expression on this question." In other words, it is the root that must be destroyed, and then the tree and its fruits will perish. The evil began in false teaching; with false teaching it is strengthened and developed; and by means of false teaching it will be consummated, if the nation returns to Rome.

The remarks of Canon A. Robinson, of Westminster, at the recent London Diocesan Conference as to the deplorable dearth of expository preaching in the Church of England, were forcible and timely, and have a wider bearing than the immediate occasion. How popular expository discourses may be made has been recently seen in the large crowds that have gathered during week-days at Professor White's Bible-readings. There is a vast mine of expository wealth ready to be turned into current coin by any conscientious preacher. The Word of God has survived all hostile attack, and has turned the armoury of the enemy into a splendid equipment for the teacher and the evangelist.

One of the best guarantees yet given of the success of the coming Peace Congress is found in the "friendly agreement" on Chinese matters between this country and Russia, which has been concluded. There has not been a greater menace to the peace of nations than the mutual suspicions that have lasted for generations between these two great powers. As rivals they have helped to keep Europe in a perpetual state of unrest: as friends they are strong enough to maintain peace and progress throughout the world. With goodwill fully assured between Russia and Great Britain on all outstanding questions that have so long agitated their international relations, there would be real hope that the Congress will at least remove causes of irritation that have been a marked feature of recent Continental history, and so pave the way for better things.

The statements made last week in the House of Commons by Sir John Gorst, as to the employment after school hours of children in our elementary schools, made up what he well called "a sickening return." As the result of his inquiries, it was found that as many as 144,000 entered on the books as "full-time scholars" were engaged as labourers for wages or profit.

As to the ages of the children receiving wages, he found that under six years of age there were 131, between six and seven there were 1,120, seven and eight 4,211, between eight and nine 11,027, and between nine and ten 22,131. The educational attainments of these children were of course very low. There were 329 of them in no standard at all, 3,890 in the first standard, 11,686 in the second, 24,624 in the third, and 36,907 in the fourth.

This is a serious indictment against the parents of such children, who are made incapable of fruitful studies by the amount of physical labour laid upon them, and so unfitted for future success in life. It is clear that parental instinct is often quite inadequate in protection of the interest of the young.

We have sometimes to pay a dear price for originality and vigour, and three occurrences of the last week well illustrate the fact. (1) The German Emperor, as if in sheer scorn for the Conference at the Hague, has appointed one of the most warlike and most provocative of his subjects as a delegate to it. How he can be thought suitable, except for bringing it to nought, one cannot imagine. (2) Dr. Parker, who has just defended the extremest action in the case of Cromwell and the Puritans, counsels a milk-and-water policy in dealing with the shameless attempt to foist seven-day papers upon us. He pleads for rest, but on religious principles—so do we. He would not drive men into rest by cracking a whip over their heads and frightening them with boycott or with persecution—nor do we. We cannot drive men into rest, but we object to capitalists driving hard-worked men out of it. As to boycotting, he who takes their papers aids and abets them in evil-doing. (3) Mr. W. T. Stead goes down to the Cromwell celebrations at Huntingdon to plead for a Roman Catholic University in Ireland If Cromwell had heard him! The moral is, "Cease from man."

We are so often compelled to deplore the action of our Government or our countrymen with regard to the drink traffic that it is a peculiar pleasure to note how the British delegates at the anti-alcohol conference now sitting at Brussels proposed the adoption of a prohibitive customs tariff on the low-class spirits which are imported into Africa. Unfortunately, yet very naturally, it was warmly opposed on behalf of Germany and Holland, who hold the monopoly of this particular trade. We do not envy any nation the money gained in such a way. We trust that the British delegates will hold to their proposal, for to fail in carrying it will be an honour second only to that of succeeding.

In the Missionary Review, Rev. P. F. Mackay gives some striking facts relating to missionary work, and refers to the extreme need of more enterprise in South America, which he calls the "neglected continent" of missions. In spite of the fact that eighteen societies are now at work there, it is computed that there are 30,000,000 people on that continent who have never seen a Bible and who know nothing of saving truth. Many facts may be deduced to account for the slow evangelisation of South America, but it is high time the work were taken more seriously in hand. There are countries there which lie at the very bottom of the scale of civilisation, whose population needs the Gospel as the only means whereby they may ascend out of savagery into the "light of life."

The Italian police authorities have at last taken measures to stop a disgraceful traffic in children which has been going on in Italy for years. The surprise is that it has been disregarded for so long. Children of tender age —from seven to sixteen years—have recently been bought from their wretched parents at prices varying from 20 to 150 francs. These poor outcasts—worse than orphans—are taken to France, where they would have to earn their living by grinding organs or hawking trifles in the streets. This iniquitous slave trade has only to be named to be condemned, and those who engage in it should not be allowed by any subterfuge to escape swift and adequate punishment.

The temporary breakdown of evangelists and others owing to overwork illustrates the importance of adequate care being taken by all who make use of such willing Christian workers not to lay too heavy a burden on their energies. A correspondent thoughtfully points out that, not unfrequently those who have undertaken a mission, find drawing-room and other meetings arranged for without their previous consent, between the hours of more public gatherings. This involves a great extra strain, and the results are often serious. Those who have the management of these missions should consider the health and efficiency of those who take part in them, and safeguard them from thoughtless and impossible demands on their strength.

The choice between written and extempore sermons is one that has often been discussed. Dr. Clifford, whose effective power of reaching an audience is acknowledged even by those who would warmly dissent from some of his theological positions, thus describes his pulpit habits:—

I try to re-think my sermons before my congregation. I write them out, and write them fully; then I make a digest, but never attempt to remember words. My object is rather to re-think in public what I have carefully prepared in the study, which is to my mind the most effective means of bringing a man's personality into living contact with his audience, and of imparting to them that which he himself feels and believes and is most eager to give. This is most conducive to spiritual tone and emotional glow.

This method of combining the exactitude of the written with the force of the extemporaneous style is one that might be commended to those who follow either plan exclusively. The peril of reading from a manuscript is to lose fire: the peril of trusting too much to the inspiration of the moment is to become aimless and diffuse. A combination of both methods tends to retain both fire and force.

It is suggestive that St. Paul, in dealing with the factions that had arisen in Corinth, found the solution not in any ecclesiastical principle, not in any common philosophy of religion, not in any common acceptance of sacraments, but in loyalty to Jesus Christ as the basis of union among his followers, "bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. x. 5). It is the same principle which alone can reunite the broken fragments of Christendom to-day. To insist on any other basis is to fail. Common faith in Him as Redeemer and Lord, common service for the world in his name and for his sake—these are the conditions of reunion among the churches. These are essential; all else is subordinate.

The stir made about the increase of Sunday labour involved in the introduction of "seven-day journalism" into this country reopens the whole question of what and how much work is permissible on the Lord's Day. There is no doubt that in many Christian families a great deal of unnecessary work, as a correspondent points out, is laid on servants. With careful management much that is now left to Sunday mornings might be done on Saturdays instead, and the elaborate cooking indulged in might be avoided if a little self-denial were practised by those who should value the Sunday rest for their employés as much as they do for themselves.

"I shall soon be ninety," said a poor woman to her pastor when he visited her; "and," she added, "I cannot see to read now; my poor head troubles me, and I am all alone." She had been a widow fifty-seven years, and had had to fight her own and her children's battle. She is only one of many. It might be one of the best correctives of the tendency of young persons in these days to disparage the aged, to encourage them to befriend the aged. What a cheering effect it would have sometimes, at the close of a long, dreary, wet day, during which not a soul had called, if, at 7 or 8 p.m., a trio or a quartette of young persons looked in and sang a hymn before the old friend went to bed.

Christ's Testimony Regarding Judgment.

By Rev. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.
(Concluded.)

LET there be no misconception. Under this philosophy no room is left for the old-fashioned God of the Bible, and a new kind of God must be invented. Duty is a word without meaning; and, as for ourselves, we are but the clay that is being fashioned into vessels of honour or dishonour on the potter's wheel of "necessity," and baked into hardness in the fire of circumstances. My "will" is but the turning of the leaf sunward, or the search made by the tree-root for moisture: my conduct is determined for me.

Not by way of concession to materialistic philosophy, be it said, but freely and without burden, that we have inherited tendencies in virtue of our humanity which have descended to us through successive generations. They were in us potentially when we were born; we are no more responsible for having them than for birth itself. Farther, our powers are limited in all directions, which means liability to be misled or overborne. Farther still, we are influenced by conditions which we did not create or choose, and from which we cannot escape. Thus, one inherits a bright, joyous temperament, so that he is the favourite of all around him; another is constitutionally slow and dull. One is born into an atmosphere of virtue, another into society where purity, honesty, and truth seem all but impossibilities, where from his earliest childhood his conscience is darkened, his intellect dwarfed, his animal passions fostered, and his whole nature debauched. One is guarded by a wise thoughtfulness at the critical period of life when a lad is at the winning or losing, and another slips unwarned, or is pulled into the horrible pit and the miry clay ere he knows whither he is sliding. To overlook in the estimate of human conduct would obviously be unjust. But in affirming human responsibility, who ever suggested that the Judge of all would fail to take them into account? It is true that we cannot reckon them justly, but the Supreme Judge both can and will, knowing equally what is done, and why, and what is "resisted." In the judgment of this world, we shall find judgment in righteousness, and there may be publicans and harlots who are less vile in God's sight than some who wear the robe of sanctity or pride themselves on their stainless honour.

"HEREDITY" AND "ENVIRONMENT"

Christ's words set the doctrine of Divine judgment in the clearest light. He speaks of a Day of Judgment in which it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah than for Capernaum; of idle words of which men shall give account in the day of judgment; of authority given to Him to execute judgment because He is the Son of Man; of the sending of the Holy Spirit to convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment; and of a day in which the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, and "then shall He reward every man according to his works."

In one great, ever-memorable passage—Matt. xxv. 31-46—in metaphorical language, the hints and brief statements given elsewhere are broadened out into a wonderful and awesome parable. The Son of Man comes in his glory, and all the holy angels with Him. He takes his seat on the throne of his glory. For shame and spitting and the hatred and scoffs of crucifixion, He exchanges the Throne of Judgment. All his once-challenged claims of royalty are now admitted: He is owned to be King of kings and Lord of lords. All nations are gathered before Him. Just as an Eastern shepherd divides his flock into the sheep and the goats, so does the omniscient and unerring Judge divide men into two classes, according to their moral state—the righteous and the wicked—placing the former on his right hand and the latter on his left. There is no need of witnesses, and none are called. His

PROCEDURE VINDICATES ITSELF

to every man's consciousness as righteous. Every one will feel that Christ has given him his proper moral place on the right hand or the left. In this world, to our eye, class melts into class insensibly, as darkness melts into morning light, so that we cannot draw a line and say, On this side is the darkness and on that the light. To Christ externals are nothing. He sees men as they are in truth; and He separates them outwardly, as they are already separated inwardly, into the only two classes which God recognises, the righteous and the wicked. All affinities and relationships are set aside save these two.

Having separated them, the King pronounces his award, which is subject to no review. There is no Court of Appeal. He first turns to those on his right hand, and says, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave Me drink; I was a stranger and ye took Me in; naked, and ye clothed Me; I was sick, and ye visited Me; I was in prison, and ye came unto Me." The works named are they are such as indicate the state of the heart toward the King Himself, deeds of benevolence, self-forgetfulness, personal helpfulness.

NOT SPLENDID AND HEROIC,

In view of such deeds, they are invited to inherit a kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world. He views them as "the blessed of my Father," though their earthly lot may have been lowly and full of sorrow. He does not say, "Enter in; an open door is set before you." But, as if He Himself would lead them in, "Come, inherit the kingdom." They are surprised; in astonishment they ask, "When did we act so toward Thee? We cannot recollect these deeds of love with which we are credited." Pointing to Christ's little ones, and calling them "my brethren," He says, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto Me."

Having approved and blessed the righteous, He turns to the wicked with these awful words, "Depart from Me." They stand by, and hear from what they are missed out. They had said to Him in their hearts, "Depart from us;" and now their fulfilled desire is their punishment. The word rendered "punishment" is derived from a word belonging to the vineyard, meaning to lop off. The fruitless and withered branch is cut off by the pruning knife, and cast into the fire as useless rubbish. The fact indicated is the cutting of these men off—not, as is sometimes argued, the pruning of the men; but the pruning of the tree by cutting them off.

Sailors' Orphan Society.—The tenth annual report of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland is a record of steady progress. A larger number of children have been received during this year than in any previous one. Commencing with 472 on the roll, sixty-eight have since been admitted, making a total of 540 who have been provided, some for the whole year and others for a part thereof. New homes are being erected at Kilmalcolm, including a large central block, with a home for boys at either end, and a hall in the centre, with stores and executive buildings beneath. Communications may be addressed to Mr. R. H. Hunter, 2, Park Circus, Glasgow.

A Timely Utterance.

AT the annual meeting of the Protestant Alliance, Mr. T. A. Denny gave the following most weighty and timely utterance:—

We are allied together in the defence of the faith and in the interests of liberty and truth. We live in times of anxiety and excitement; but let us take heart. It is not long since there was no platform in London for Protestantism—when men who had the courage of their convictions were called bigots, uncharitable, and fomenters of discord.

It was said that in this nineteenth century Popery was not as of old, &c., in forgetfulness of the fact that Rome never changes, but pursues her system of sapping and mining, ceaselessly encroaching, and compassing sea and land to make new proselytes.

The conspiracy of more than half a century in the National Church has been exhumed and exposed by Mr. Walsh, and it is manifest that the citadel which was impregnable from without has been surrendered from within by the treachery of its sworn defenders.

John Kensit, a man whose works wrought with his faith, was raised up in the nick of time, and his courage and zeal set in motion a ball which we believe will roll on, and increase as it rolls in size and momentum, till Britain from north to south, and east to west, will wake up from the lethargy of years, and determine that lay men and women will not be the slaves of ecclesiastical and priestly rule.

There is a sharp contention nowadays over the Book of Common Prayer. Men are deeply concerned as to what their fellow-men wrote and said three centuries ago—fallible men like ourselves. Now if we want to find the truth, why not go to Headquarters? The nearer the fountain, the purer the stream! If God speaks, let man be silent. "Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherewith is he to be accounted of?" "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." The trouble in the present day is that men do not

STUDY THE WORD OF GOD.

If we were to make a clean sweep of all our traditions, and construct a Church from the teaching and example of our Lord and his apostles, we should omit many of the things which have been introduced into public worship.

If we search the Scriptures from cover to cover, we find no authority for the invocation of saints, for the Mass, for the eastward position, for candles in the sunshine, for purgatory, for holy water, for ordinances beyond two, for services in a dead language, nor in a living one so intoned and disguised as not to be understood by the people. We do not even find in Scripture the words so much used to-day—Sacrament and Eucharist—nor any precedent for the Lord's Supper in the morning, nor basis for the fiction of Apostolical Succession.

"Who is this that forgiveth sins also?" It was the Lord Himself. "And that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins, He saith to the sick of the palsy, 'Take up thy bed and walk.'" "Go, show again the things which ye do hear and see—the blind receive their sight, the deaf hear, the dead are raised up." So that when the Lord was challenged as to his right and power to forgive sins, He showed his credentials in reply.

Strange that A should pretend to cancel debts due from B to C—debts which A had no means of paying; more strange still, when an offended God is the creditor. What if, after all, the debt remains, and the remission is a mere delusion?

Men naturally love power; and ecclesiastics are not only no exception to, but are an illustration of, the rule. Hence the pretensions of the so-called priest. The Epistle to the Hebrews has completely disposed of all such pretensions, as if it had been written for that express purpose.

What are the "priests" going to do with that Epistle? It is pleasant to their natural heart to believe that they have a mission to go between their fellow-sinners and God, although it be contrary to Scripture and our prerogative.

This assumption culminates, and is at its worst in the confessional, with its ghastly history and all its unmentionable impurities; which abominable institution is being largely introduced in our midst in these days. Therein pure girls and children, to whom vice is unknown, are contaminated by questions and suggestions equally pernicious to confessor and confessed; and therein the penitent, losing all modesty and self-respect, becomes the abject slave of the confessor, and comes away from the ceremony under the awful delusion that this transaction with a sinful man effects the cleansing of the soul in the sight of a pure and Holy God.

Men and women, husbands and wives, brothers, are you going to tolerate this invasion of the purity and sanctity of your homes, and will you allow the man, whose duty it is to minister, to become your master?

The Church of Rome well knows that with the confessional and the keys it has the people at its feet. The people of Italy, oppressed for ages under this tyranny, are an object lesson for us. There the Church has lost its power, and the nation has risen to freedom and power.

But oh! wonder of wonders! to see England, whose greatness and growth for three centuries have been built upon Protestantism and the Bible, groping her way into the darkness; and, despite all experience and all warning, holding out the hand of fellowship to an apostate communion, drunken with the blood of the saints!

Day Schools for China.

I HAVE just returned from Wesley Chapel, where a young native minister, in his first year's ministry, was preaching. As I listened to his earnest words and his faithful Gospel preaching, I prayed that many more such men might be raised up to proclaim the truth in this needy land.

My thoughts went back a few years to the time when this young man was but a boy on the streets of a town 200 miles from here; when he, with others, was induced to attend a small day-school supported by the mission. Thence he passed into the high-school, and, in due time, he won a scholarship in Peking University, where he received offers which would have been tempting to many another man. But he placed the question before the Lord, and decided to enter the ministry at two-thirds the salary he was offered by a Government office.

This, to my mind, is true self-denial. Such men are invaluable to the great missionary cause we have so much at heart. Alas! the Church is either unable or unwilling to furnish the funds for the support of day-schools, which is the first place in which we meet the boys; and where we first gain an influence over them. Such schools form to my mind, after a missionary career of over sixteen years, the best kind of work for the young in China.

Having charge, for the Methodist Episcopal Mission, of the Tientsin district, which includes hundreds of towns and villages as yet untouched by the Gospel, and with only three day schools, I am anxious to open many more, and I beg to lay the following scheme before your readers:—(1) I will open ten new day schools in new places if friends will furnish me with £50. One school will cost £5 for the year; the remainder will be furnished by the people themselves. (2) None but Christian teachers will be employed, and each will be a centre of Christian light. (3) If a donor gives the amount needed for a school, he or she shall give the school a name by which it will be known in the future. Thus a dear departed one may be remembered in a Memorial Chinese School. I will undertake to keep the donor in touch with the scholars by letter writing, &c. I trust many will hear the call, and see the privilege of being "workers with Him" in seeking to bring the little ones to Christ, and training them for missionary service in their native land of China.

Frederick Brown.

Meth. Episcopal Mission, Tientsin, China.

Letters from America.

MR. MOODY—MACON—HILLSBORO'.

IN conversation at Detroit with Mr. Moody, he dwelt on subjects so well described in the following communication which appears in the Chicago Advance of April 13, that I gladly avail myself of it. Readers at home will sympathise with our 16,000 brethren in Australia, while hoping that the urgent invitation of Lord Overtoun on behalf of the United Evangelistic Association of Glasgow may have precedence, and that Mr. Moody may be constrained to devote the coming winter to the British Isles.

The following is the report of the interview:—

Mr. Moody made a flying visit to Chicago last week. He had just dismissed a great congregation from the Chicago Avenue Church, and was hurrying bareheaded over to the Institute. "You will catch cold in this sharp wind," I remarked. "I know I will," he replied, "but they sit down on my hat so much that I never take it along when I can leave it."

Of course, Mr. Moody is growing older, but he never seemed more active. He is life to the full, and tingling to the finger tips with interest in everything which concerns the kingdom. And I think I may say that there is no other man in America who is so badly wanted on all sides of the globe. On his table was a pile of letters and telegrams, and also a bulky volume which contained a huge petition.

SIXTEEN THOUSAND PEOPLE IN AUSTRALIA had signed it, all urging him to come across the Pacific and hold a series of evangelistic meetings.

"Look at it," he said. "That goes a long way to refute the story that the day of religious revivals is past. Revivals are not dying out, and I think that petition would be taken as evidence, not only in Australia, but also here in America. There are twenty-five revivalists in this country where there was one thirty years ago, and the people want them more than ever. Anybody can get a hearing who has something to say, and if he has nothing to say we do not want him to be heard. And here is of Scotland; they want me to hold another series of meetings over there. Lord Overtoun has established an institute like ours in Glasgow, only in a much finer building."

A LETTER FROM LORD OVERTOUN

Among other things in his letter Lord Overtoun said: "From the date of your first visit in 1874 the work has steadily gone on, and with a great blessing to Glasgow and Scotland. The United Evangelistic Association which was then formed has become a great Christian organisation, affording a platform on which all denominations can work, and conducting an endless variety of agencies for the conversion and amelioration of the people, both old and young. We have just completed the twenty-fifth year of the association's work, and held a great commemoration meeting to thank God for what He has done, and to plan for the future. Now we propose to conduct a six months' campaign, extending

FROM NEXT OCTOBER TO MARCH.

We are mapping out the city, as was done before, and expect to hold meetings in every district." Then followed an urgent invitation to Mr. Moody to come over and help them.

To my question as to whether he would go, Mr. Moody replied that he had not yet had time to consider the matter. Nor could he tell what his plans for the future would be. "I never make plans long ahead," he said. When I referred to the report in one of the daily papers that he was contemplating a series of meetings in Chicago after the Northfield plan, he seemed to know much less about the scheme than the reporter. Of where he had spent six months, Mr. Moody spoke enthusiastically. "I never had such crowds there before," he said; "the people seemed eager to hear the Gospel. But I do not think they are very eager to hear the Bible picked to pieces, on the Pacific Coast or on the Atlantic Coast. And that is one of the most effective checks on loose preaching. The man who preaches away the Bible and the faith of his people, soon preaches away the people themselves. There was Dr. ——. When he went to Boston some years ago, crowds came to hear him and cheered him to the echo. But his audience got down to a hundred and he left. Everywhere the audiences of these men are dwindling. And why shouldn't they? If there is nothing in it, why should the people be in it?"

HIS MEETINGS ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

Reaching down into the pile of papers on the table, Mr. Moody took up a fine photograph. His eye kindled as he handed it to me. "That is a picture of Colonel Sexton," he said, "our former postmaster and commander of the grand army of the Republic. When I first went to his house years ago, they put me out. There were thirteen Catholics in the house; afterwards they were all converted, and now the colonel is gone."

To a reporter, the great evangelist said: "Don't ask me if the world is getting better or worse, for I am always asked that. It must be answered yes and no. There are more good men and women in the world now than ever, and they are doing more active Christian work; but there is also another side presented by the people who deliberately close their eyes to the light."

MACON, GA.

We went to Macon, Georgia, in response to a letter from Rev. Mr. Maclean, pastor of the Congregational Coloured Church. He said they had from 8,000 to 12,000 soldiers stationed there all the winter, and the demoralising influence resulting from this large number of men—strangers, most of them irreligious, and many of them immoral—had set the morals of the people of the town back at least ten years.

We learned that some of the best people in the town, leaders in churches, and even some pastors, had given balls at which drinking and dancing proceeded all night. Many homes had been broken up, numbers of young people ruined, trouble brought into many of the churches, and many good people had become discouraged.

We commenced there on Sunday, March 26, by preaching in the Congregational Church in the morning and evening, in the Presbyterian in the afternoon, and on the two following evenings again in the Congregational. The Ballard Institute is near this church. It is under the auspices of the American Missionary Society. Professor Burridge and the teachers connected with the Institute threw themselves heartily and earnestly into the efforts, and Mr. Wintle conducted special meetings for the students. Altogether upwards of sixty professed conversion, most of them young. Mr. Wintle's experience enabled him to deal effectively with the particular circumstances at Macon. At the close of the brief mission, pastor and people expressed their appreciation, and also their deep regret at our inability to remain longer.

Revivals are being experienced in most of the coloured churches at this time of year. We conducted one meeting for Rev. S. Johnson in the large First Baptist Church; here we met Rev. Dr. Walker, of Augusta, a very able evangelist, who has just returned from Cuba, where he was chaplain to a coloured regiment. He is called by his brethren "The Black Spurgeon."

HILLSBORO', N.C.

We had hoped to return to Hillsboro' and to invite the converts together; but being unable to do so, Miss Bechan proposed to utilise the amount we placed at her disposal for the education of a fair-faced negro boy in whom we were much interested, and who is said to be a descendant from a former governor of the State. Miss Bechan wrote:

"We were much disappointed that we could not see you again. We were counting so much on your coming and the help the young Christians would receive. But we are very thankful for the time you were here and for the rich blessing we received. A man over forty years old, who teaches a school near Hillsboro', became a Christian since you left. He was very deeply convicted at your meetings, but would not give in to go forward. However, he would not teach till he finally gave in, and cried for mercy, and now he is a happy Christian. He was a hard-shell Baptist. Many of the converts are to be baptized in May."

Miss Curtis also writes of their Junior Endeavour meeting, in which the new Christians poured out their hearts in prayer.

This has been quite a case of one sowing and another reaping. These two sisters have been far more than school teachers. They have persistently, amid many obstacles, sought the salvation of their children, and for their encouragement, and that of others like them, I have written more than might otherwise be thought necessary.

R. Cope Morgan.

New York, April 18.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 7. Joshua ix.

THIS chapter might well be quoted as that of the Rash and Hasty Covenant. The key-verse is 14, where we learn that the elders of Israel ate with the ambassadors from Gibeon, without asking counsel of the Lord. Many a man has repented through long years a promise made, or engagement entered into, on the spur of the moment, without meditation, or heart-searching, or waiting quietly before God. If Israel had waited but three days, the whole secret would have been out. Wait on God before making your decisions. You need not be so quick to snatch at an apparent advantage, for if it is of God, He will give it you. "It is vain for you, that ye rise up early, and so late take rest, and eat the bread of toil: for so He giveth unto his beloved in sleep." (Psa. cxxvii. 2, R.V. marg.)

But how comforting it is to notice the strict fidelity with which that covenant was kept. Though it had been obtained by fraud, and the Gibeonites, with whom it had been struck, had shown themselves utterly unworthy of confidence, yet, because the princes had plighted their word in the name of Jehovah, it was agreed that it should be kept inviolate. Is there not comfort here? When God has entered into covenant with a man, He cannot and will not withdraw from his sacred engagements. Even though that soul should show itself less earnest and devoted than in past and happier days, the Almighty will ever be mindful of his covenant. Heaven and earth may pass, but his word cannot fail. (See also 2 Sam. xxi.)

Be it remembered also, that God can overrule the results of wrong-doing. Here was a double error; first, on the side of Gibeon, then of Israel; but there was blessing in the result, for as hewers of wood and drawers of water the Gibeonites were brought into close connection with the service of God, and as Nethinim are repeatedly referred to with respect in the sacred narrative.

MONDAY, May 8. Joshua x.

The story of the great Southern Coalition, as told in this chapter, is the background of a grand picture of God's deliverance. In all lives there are crises when troubles combine and the regiments of difficulty marshal themselves against us. But these are the days of the right hand of the Most High; and if in our experience the hours of daylight are not actually lengthened out, yet so much help is compressed into the ordinary hours that they are long with the crowded incidents of divine deliverance.

Words of Encouragement may be looked for as we enter the crisis and prepare to meet the formidable array of our foes. "Fear them not"—such is the Divine assurance on the eve of battle.

Deeds of Interposition may be confidently counted on, for the Lord will discomfit our foes. He will fight for us. His legions of angels wait in the dark shadows of the garden, ready at a signal to come to our help.

Nature herself will be on our side; for when we are Christ's, all things are ours, whether life and death, principalities and powers, things present and things to come. The stars in their courses fight on our side. The sun and moon, with the course of nature, befriend the man who is the friend of God. Every wind wafts him blessing; every wave bears him nearer his desired haven.

There must be no quarter shown to sin. Note the repetition of those words, "be utterly destroyed." There must be no compromise with evil. We must be separate, and not touch the unclean and accursed thing, if we would be received by the Father and know his innermost love.

TUESDAY, May 9. Joshua xi.

The story of the great Northern Coalition is also the background of a wonderful deliverance. There was the same combination (5), the same assurance (6), the same interposition (8), the same utter destruction (9, 12, 20).

How vast was the change wrought on the face of the country by this one great leader! That he was well-supported by his lieutenants and subordinates is clear, yet the successive steps which led to the subduing of the Canaanites and the settlement of Israel, are ascribed to him as though they were his alone (9, 12, 15, 16, 18, 23). It was through his faith, courage, and obedience to God that the mighty enterprise was brought to so successful a conclusion.

How often God has raised up men for similar work in the spiritual sphere. The counterpart of Joshua may be found in Luther, Latimer, Cromwell, Wesley, Spurgeon — men through whom God wrought, not always with sweet and gentle speech, but with words that fell like thunderbolts, and deeds that shook the world.

What may not one man do when God is with him! On one occasion John Elias went to preach in the open air on a Sunday, during which a fair was held to sell and buy implements for the harvest. Crowds of ungodly persons were present. He ascended some steps, and began to denounce their sin. The contagion of fear spread through the people; they hid their implements as though the Judge of the world had come to call them to account. Mirth and music were hushed. The people wended their way home in fear and trembling; and from that day no Sunday fair has been held at Rhuddlan. One man, when God is with him—what cannot he do?

WEDNESDAY, May 10. Joshua xii.

The chapter of the Smitten Kings. Will such a chapter as this be part of our biography, written, not by human hand, but by God's recording angel? There is no single Christian soul that has not to meet thirty-one kings, and more. Lo, they come upon us in their pride. The works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: fornication, uncleanness, strife, wrath, envyings, jealousies, and many more—these are the kings against whom we must fight, and from whom we must win the land. If we had kept a record from the first day we awoke to the meaning of life and the necessity of resistance, I wonder whether we might not have had just such a list as this.

But think of that list of conquered kings which shall one day be included in the story of Emmanuel! O my soul, thou shalt hear a recital which shall astonish thee, and fill thee with ecstasy. Thou shalt peruse a list like this:—The King of Gladiatorial Shows, one; the King of Infanticide, one; the King of Polygamy, one; the King of Drunkenness, one; the King of Impurity, one; the King of the Oppression and Demoralisation of Native Races, one; the King of Betting and Gambling, one; the King of Avarice and Greed, one; the King of Lord's Day Desecration, one; the King of Demonlike Cruelty, one. This is but part of the record which shall be made when the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our God and his Christ.

THURSDAY, May 11. Joshua xiii.

The chapter of the Unfulfilled Ideal. "Joshua was old and well stricken in years. . . . and there remained yet very much land to be possessed."

Was Joshua then an old man, according to the standard of those days? Not specially, for he was only 110 when he died. But the words "well stricken" mean that time had told upon him, and that the wear and tear of the conquest had made havoc of his strength. A man may be old at forty, well stricken in years at fifty, not because of anxiety, but by the intensity of his spiritual out-put. You cannot help people, without virtue going forth from you. We can work, it has been said truly, off-handedly—work that need not take much out of us; but if we think about it, ponder it, execute it with both hands, if it is the one thought of our soul, how soon the strongest may run out, and the youngest become a white-haired patriarch!

It was sad that Joshua should show signs of exhaustion, when his work was not yet done. There remained much land to be possessed. But is not this the law of all lives? Only the blessed Lord could say, "It is finished." We would like to finish the building; to conclude our treatise; to see the children educated. But we are "well stricken" on the threshold.

Yet be of good cheer; God keeps the record of the unoccupied territories, and they shall be possessed. Leave the map and plan. He will fill up its outlines. His work will appear unto thy children, and his glory to thy children's children. He will establish the work of thy hands, and it will appear a perfect whole.

FRIDAY, May 12. Joshua xiv.

If this chapter were entitled "Caleb's Claim" it would not be amiss. He was the wholehearted man. He dared to say of himself, and it was said of him, that the secret of his life was in "wholly following the Lord." It is said that the Hebrew word is equivalent to a ship in full sail and going straight on—not beating about the shore or clinging to the sheltered port, but following a bold course, even though storms threaten it.

Such a man is always buoyant. David was "very old" at seventy, but there is a resonance in Caleb's voice at eighty-five—a blitheness of spirit, a spring of enterprise and courage, a vigour of determination which inspire us and set the heart-pulse beating faster. They who are wholly devoted to God have learnt the secret of perennial youth and courage. "They bear fruit in old age, and are fat and flourishing."

Such a man is strong for the fight. "As my strength was then, even so is my strength now, for war, and to go out and to come in." He might have chosen some sheltered spot, where life would be easy. Instead of this, the doughty old chieftain chose Hebron, the metropolis of the Anakim, the citadel of the most warlike people in southern Canaan. Faith takes no account of difficulties. It looks not at them, but at the Almighty Lord, who is as able to help a man of eighty-five as one of forty.

Such a man may count absolutely on God. He will keep his word with them. He will not fail them in the hour of need, nor forsake them, world without end. He will bring them into the place of rest and fellowship. Such is the meaning of Hebron.

SATURDAY, May 13. Joshua xv.

The chapter of Apportioned Inheritances. To each one of us God assigns an inheritance. For one of poetry, for another of art, and for yet another of preaching, or organisation, or the direction of great affairs. It is not for us to compare our lot with our brother's, or to envy him, or to encroach upon his possessions. The true policy of life is to possess our possessions, to drive out the enemies that now hold them, and to push the limits of our cultivation outwards till they coincide with the furthest frontier of our inheritance.

Yes, and there are possessions in Christ which await our appropriation. God has given us all things in Him, and to each of us a peculiar and special share in the all things. There is a special portion of grace and strength, of patience and Holy Spirit filling for you in Jesus, which God has allotted to you, and which only you shall know; but you must by faith put down your foot on it, and say, This is mine by my Father's gift, and it shall be mine in actual enjoyment and use.

Find out what your special gifts are, since to each man some gift has been made, according to the measure of the gift of Christ (Eph. iv. 7; 1 Cor. xii. 4-11). Then be sure to trade with them, or put them out to usury by placing them at the disposal of the Church, that at last the Lord may receive his own, greatly increased and improved (Matt. xxv. 14-30). Even the land that flows with milk and honey can be cultivated to richer productiveness.

Mildmay Conference,

June 27-29.

SUBJECT:—"The Three Appearings of Our Lord Jesus Christ." Heb. ix. 26, 24, 28.

Perfect Propitiation for Sin. Priesthood that passeth not to another. Presence of the Prince of Peace.

TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1899.

I. "Once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself." Heb. ix. 26.

"God was manifest in the flesh." 1 Tim. iii. 16.

"This man . . . offered one sacrifice for sins for ever." Heb. x. 12.

1. The Perfection of Christ's Atonement.

"Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this He did once, when He offered up Himself." Heb. vii. 27.

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins." 1 Peter iii. 18.

"In that He died, He died unto sin once." Rom. vi. 10.

"It is finished." John xix. 30.

"By Him, all that believe are justified from all things." Acts xiii. 39.

"By one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." Heb. x. 12, 14.

2. Christ's propitiation for our sins having reconciled us to God, there needeth no more sacrifice for sin.

"That He might reconcile both unto God in one body by the Cross. Eph. ii. 16, 17.

"And having made peace through the blood of his Cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself." Col. i. 20.

"In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins." Eph. i. 7.

"Now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Rom. viii. 1.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28.

II. Christ is not entered into the holy place made with hands . . . but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Heb. ix. 24.

"The heavens opened, and the Son of Man . . on the right hand of God." Acts vii. 56.

"Even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us." Rom. viii. 34.

"He ever liveth to make intercession." Heb. vii. 25.

1. Our Lord continueth a priest for ever. There can, therefore, be no priesthood which passeth from one to another.

"After the similitude of Melchizedek there ariseth another priest, who is made . . . after the power of an endless life." Heb. vii. 15, 16.

"This man, because He continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Heb. vii. 23, 24.

"Him hath God exalted with his right hand." Acts. v. 31.

"I the Lord thy God am a jealous God." Ex. xx. 5.

"But Christ . . . through his own blood, entered in once for all into the Holy Place." Heb. ix. 11, 12. (R.V.).

2. Silence of the New Testament concerning any new order of priests: and its insistence on the ministry of the Word.

"And God hath set some in the Church—first, Apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers." 1 Cor. xii. 4-28.

"He gave . . . . for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Eph. iv. 10-16.

"Who also made us able ministers of the New Testament." 2 Cor. iii. 6-8.

"The ministry which I received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God." Acts xx. 24.

"We will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the Word." Acts vi. 4.

THURSDAY, JUNE 29.

III. "Unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. ix. 28.

"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into Heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into Heaven." Acts i. 11.

1. The blessed hope of our Lord's return the consolation of his Church, whilst He tarries within the veil.

"I go to prepare a place for you. . . . I will come again and receive you unto Myself." John xiv. 1-3.

"I will come to you." John xiv. 18.

"He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Heb. x. 37.

"Till He come." 1 Cor. xi. 26.

"Everlasting consolation and good hope through grace." 2 Thess. ii. 16, 17.

"Abide in Him; that when He shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before Him at his coming." 1 John ii. 28.

"A strong consolation." Heb. vi. 17-20.

2. The glory of the Church postponed until her Lord's return, and the manifestation of the sons of God.

"I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto Me." Luke xxii. 28-30.

"The manifestation of the sons of God." "The glorious liberty of the children of God." "Waiting for the adoption—to wit, the redemption of our body." Rom. viii. 19-23.

"Set your hope perfectly on the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." 1 Peter i. 3-5, 13 (R.V.)

"We know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." 1 John iii. 1-3.

"When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory."

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Ps. xxx. 5.

(Signed) Polwarth (Chairman)
Jas. E. Mathieson
Harry C. Nisbet
A. R. Pennefather
J. H. Tritton
E. Trotter
R. C. Hart Dyke
W. H. Dawson
} Trustees.

J. F. Morton (Supt.).

Keswick Convention.

JULY 24 to 29 is the period selected for the convention this year, "that, humbled under a deep sense of our nothingness, we may reverently worship our God and Father, and seek in the power of his Holy Spirit more conformity to his will, and more oneness with our Divine Master, and with one another in Him."

Particulars as to meetings, accommodation, &c., are to be had from Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin Place, Keswick. For special train arrangements from London and the south on Friday, July 21, apply to Mr. J. T. Budd, Ambleside, New Barnet, Herts.

Missionaries to the heathen (only) desirous of attending the convention and needing assistance in their expenses, should address Mr. A. A. Head (Keswick Convention), Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon, S.W., to whom also donations may be sent to the special fund for this purpose.

The Glasgow Home Mission Union, in which 192 congregations are associated, was able to report, at its annual meeting, that during the fourteen years in which it had been in force 10,725 persons have been added to the membership of the various churches, while 33,619 have been induced to attend church or mission services.

Cardiff Sailors' Rest.—One of the most vigorous of the many sailors' rests which are as spiritual lighthouses in the dark places of our chief ports, the Cardiff institution presents, in its annual report, a highly satisfactory account of good work. The foreign departments—Scandinavian, French, and Italian—continue to prosper; the hospital ship is visited weekly; meetings are held in the boarding house for coloured seamen, and open-air work maintained. Many of the workers in various departments give cheering news of spiritual advance.

Stornoway.—The herring-fishing season, which opens here early this month, will present a larger field for Christian work than on any previous occasion, for the fleet of fishing boats will be exceptionally large. I shall consider it a privilege to take charge of and personally distribute any religious periodicals, booklets, or tracts that may be sent to me. In past years I have been wonderfully helped to make such distribution on Sabbaths among the boats; and if Christian friends interested in this work could see the possibilities for good that lie in it, they would unite in seeking God's blessing upon this sowing of the seed in the hearts of the great multitude whose home these boats are. J. F. Macfarlane.

Parish Council Chambers, Stornoway, N.B.

Protestant Outlook.

THOUGH at home the outlook may not be encouraging, abroad there are many signs of discontent with Romish darkness and tyranny. The stir in Austria and the revulsion in France are becoming familiar. Now there are reports of an agitation in Spain. At Corunna an anti-clerical meeting was held recently, at which the evils afflicting the country were attributed to the Jesuits and the monks. The meeting decided to found a league to oppose the machinations of the clergy against liberty. Violent denunciations of the clergy are also reported from Barcelona. At a large meeting, the representatives of the prefect expostulated with several speakers, but his remarks were received with jeers. One orator bitterly attacked the Jesuits, and said that the Philippines had been lost to Spain through the monks.

At a private meeting held in London on Friday evening last, the Bishop of Hereford presiding, resolutions were adopted affirming Protestant principles and Reformation positions. Also, on the motion of Sir Edward Clarke, the meeting resolved that the true interests of the Established Church demand that the final determination of ecclesiastical causes should continue to rest with Her Majesty in Council. This means, as the formal resolution set forth in unequivocal terms, opposition to "the pretension put forward by a section of Churchmen that the law of the Church in spiritual matters is to be authoritatively interpreted by the clerical order alone."

In an account, which appears in the Record, of a church service at Freeland, an Oxfordshire village, it is stated that the vicar began his sermon by saying that "it was St. George's day. Just as Blessed Mary was the patron saint of Freeland Church, so St. George was the patron saint of England. What was a patron saint? Did they know what it was to have a friend at Court, or a friend with the squire—one who would plead their cause? St. George was the friend of this country of ours at the Court of Heaven." The preacher proceeded to tell the story of St. George, and, reverting to the subject of intercession, said that God sometimes heard the prayers of the saints when our own prayers were unavailing!

Mr. Charles McArthur, M.P., has addressed the following remarks on the Church Discipline Bill, which he is to propose on May 10, to a correspondent who had forwarded to him the report of the Liverpool Constitutional Association:—

The main purport of the Church Discipline Bill is to safeguard the constitutional rights of Churchmen by giving effective expression upon the Statute Book to three fundamental principles, viz.:—(1) The maintenance of the Royal supremacy by securing the obedience of the clergy to those Courts which represent the Crown in matters ecclesiastical; (2) free access to the Courts by the abolition of the episcopal veto; (3) the removal of an obsolete and objectionable penalty by the substitution of deprivation for imprisonment. It is evident that nothing but the most uncompromising opposition can be expected from those who deny the Royal supremacy, repudiate the ruling of the Bishops, excepting in so far as it is in accordance with their preconceived opinions, and the object of whose policy is, as Mr. Balfour has so well expressed it, to "revolutionise, transform, and destroy the Church of which they are members."

At a meeting of Churchmen at Liverpool, organised by the Laymen's League, Mr. Austin Taylor described the Church Discipline Bill as a serious attempt to deal with a serious scandal. The final court of appeal on this question was not the Government nor the bishops, but the ingrained Protestantism of the inhabitants of this country. Rev. G. Harford Battersby moved a resolution viewing with grave concern the continued lawlessness in the National Church, and calling upon the authorities in Church and State to secure a faithful obedience to the order and teaching of the Church of England as by law defined and set forth in the Book of Common Prayer. Mr. J. W. Mellor, M.P., in seconding the resolution (which was carried), said it was not Ritualism merely of which they complained; it was the teaching and preaching of false doctrine of which Ritualism was the symptom and the expression.

The Attack on the Sabbath.

SIR Hugh Gilzean-Reid, whose word may be taken as safe, writes to the Morning Herald, saying that the seven-day paper is the beginning of a huge Sunday business, which will greatly tend to the abolition of the Christian Sunday, and that he is aware that in at least four other daily newspaper offices the question is being practically considered whether they will not be at once compelled to enter on this unsought and uncertain race. And, at the bottom, all the pretensions and claims of the "pioneers" are a virtual sham. Had it not been for the hard competition—to put it mildly—between two morning papers on the week days, there would not have been a whisper of the Sunday issue.

He also hits the nail on the head when he says:—

It is all very well for the pioneers, at the outset, to allege that a separate staff will be employed, and that independent means of distribution will be devised. The end will be—as one sees all over the Continent and in America—that the ordinary workers will have to do seven days' work for six days' pay, without the possibility of any reliable mental refreshment or physical relaxation. This uncalled-for and needless addition to the burdens of journalists and newspaper vendors will become intolerable; and it is hopeful to see, all over the country, indications that they fully realise the mischief that must accrue.

But what is the use of bishops and clergy, Nonconformists and Pressmen crying out, unless they are prepared and ready to act? Let a National Union be formed for the specific purpose of saving the one day of rest, for which our race have successfully contended, from these and all other like wanton assaults.

Saturday's and Tuesday's Morning Leader devoted special supplements to scores of letters received from clergy and ministers, from the Archbishop of Canterbury downwards, written in strong protest. In the Upper House of Convocation the Bishop of Rochester moved a resolution, supported by the Primate and several bishops:—

That this House has observed with regret and apprehension the issue by certain daily newspapers of a Sunday edition, and trusts that this innovation, which puts a great pressure upon other journals to take a like course, and which, if allowed to spread, will lead to a great extension of Sunday labour, and an obliteration of the distinction between the Lord's Day and the other days of the week, may be emphatically and effectively discouraged by public opinion, and that churchmen will take an active part in this process.

By desire of the Annual Committee a circular to ministers has been issued by the president of the Methodist New Connexion, Rev. D. Heath, calling attention to the new "seven-days-a-week" newspapers, and urging them to use every possible means, in and out of the pulpit, to educate the public conscience and stir up enthusiasm to thwart the ventures.

The mother country has often been taught some important object-lessons in reform by her daughter-colonies, and in Victoria the question of Sunday newspapers has already been solved in a very practical way. Since 1889, when the "Sunday Newspaper Act" was passed, it has been a public offence to publish, distribute, sell, circulate, or dispose of any newspapers on Sunday. No one has attempted the repeal of this Act, which has worked to the entire satisfaction of the community for ten years. This fact justifies the right of the community to interfere with "private enterprise" in such matters, and shows the possibility and wisdom of legislating with a view to hindering the spread of the evil in this country. If, however, it can be stopped by the force of public opinion alone, it will afford an even more impressive object-lesson of the determination of the nation to refuse to be dragooned into further desecration of the Sunday.

An important statement has been issued for distribution to the editors of journals and to ministers throughout the country on the question of the seven-day newspaper. It is signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, nine other bishops, a large number of ministers representative of the leading Christian denominations and religious bodies, as well as by newspaper editors and others. We make the following quotations from the memorial:—

"We deeply regret the action of the proprietors of The Daily Telegraph and The Daily Mail in publishing their papers seven days in the week. This is not a matter which merely concerns the publishers; it involves consequences of profound importance to the public generally.

"It touches, in the first instance, journalists and printers, newsagents and newsboys. From newsagents there have come many pathetic protests. One writes:—

I and thousands of other newsagents already work more than 100 hours per week, and therefore our claim for a day of rest is both reasonable and human.

"Concerning journalists, Sir Hugh Gilzean-Reid, first president, and Fellow of the Institute of Journalists, and President of the Newspaper Society, says:—

If the two great experiments entered upon now are to succeed, or even be long persisted in, other daily papers will have to follow suit, and we shall gradually have, all over the country, a new and enormous Sunday business. The men who make the newspapers will have the worst of it. Whatever may happen to individuals in the heat of the conflict, it will ultimately be the same in England as it is in America and on the Continent—the average working journalist will have to toil seven days for six days' pay. Anyone acquainted with the conditions under which most editors, subeditors, and reporters pursue their arduous and too often ill-requited labours must look upon this new departure with dread.

"If this wanton attack on the day of rest prove successful, it would almost inevitably lead to a wide extension of Sunday trading; the floodgates of business life would be opened, and the day which for so many generations has brought its opportunities for rest and worship would be practically lost to our country. The probability, or even possibility, of such a grave national peril is a loud call for resolute action on the part of all who care for the welfare of the land we love.

"The men who publish these seven-day papers have immense resources, and if the people's Day of Rest is not to be trampled under foot by them the most resolute action is necessary; we therefore appeal to Christian ministers, to editors, and to Christian men and women generally to discourage the purchase of a single copy of these papers, or any other publication of these houses, so long as they persist in their unwarrantable attack on the rest of the Lord's Day."

Dear Sir,—The Daily Telegraph is said to have a great circulation, and to bring in an enormous revenue to its Jewish proprietor. The Sabbath is the oldest institution in existence, as old as Creation (Genesis ii. 2, 3), and in its spirit as one day of rest in seven is equally binding on Jew and Gentile. It is, moreover, an incalculable blessing to an overwrought world, so much so that those who infringe its sanctions would imperil one of the greatest blessings which the human race enjoys.

There is neither necessity nor excuse for the recent assault upon an institution which is so highly cherished by all the best Christian citizens in this country; and I hope I may be pardoned for thinking that it comes with especial bad grace from those whose religious persuasion is, unfortunately, the cause of persecution in most nations, and who in England not only find an asylum, but enjoy all the rights of the highest citizenship. It seems to be an ill return for exceptional privileges. Of course it is obvious that if this movement is not arrested it will provoke competition, deprive working men of their day of rest, and end in a week of seven days' labour for six days' pay.—Yours faithfully, T. A. Denny.

The Headquarters Committee of the Young Women's Christian Association, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, has resolved to exclude The Daily Telegraph and The Daily Mail from their reading room in consequence of the issue of Sunday editions.

In a recent letter, the Dean of Norwich writes to explain the circumstances under which he wrote the article that appeared in the first Sunday issue of The Daily Mail. He says:—"Let me say at once, without the least reserve, that I am and I have ever been opposed in principle to Sunday journals. You will say: 'How then came the article in the Mail from your pen?' The answer is this: I was asked by the editor 'to write a suitable article on The Aftermath of Easter, showing what non-worshippers miss by neglecting church. . . . . The manuscript to be forwarded by Thursday morning.'

"I regarded this suggestion as a great and rare opportunity of reaching thousands of souls, and of setting before them the Gospel of our Risen Lord. This I did. You will observe the editor fixed the time by which the article was to be in his hands. This proved to me that he was true to his word in avoiding the actual production of his journal on Sunday.

"An extraordinary opportunity was presented to me to tell thousands the blessing of the Gospel of Christ, and the loss incurred by neglecting it. I seized the opportunity. This is my only association with this development of a practice which has been in existence for years, during which the Church of Christ has been, on this point, sound asleep. Thus it began. There it shall end."

It Comes.

We said—when winter's dark eclipse
Had pressed on earth its icy lips,
When ocean yawned o'er sinking ships—
Will spring appear?
But now—the sunshine floods the sky,
The flowers bloom, the lark is high—
The valleys shout, the hills reply
The spring is here!

We said—ah, then! when we were young,
When life was jubilant with song,
Its future—oh! so bright, so long!—
Can we grow old?
But now—we shiver in the gale;
The eye gets dim, the cheek grows pale,
The hair turns grey—the same old tale
Is nearly told.

We said—when longing to be free,
When perishing in sin's wild sea,
When none on earth seemed bad as we—
Can Jesus save?
But now—the Master works his will,
The winds are calm, the sea is still—
We dwell in sunshine on the hill
Above the wave.

We said—(this shall we say in heaven)
When by earth's tempests rudely driven,
When tenderest ties of time were riven—
When shall we rest?
But now—'tis come! At last we stand
With Jesus in our Fatherland,
Hard by the Throne, at God's right hand,
For ever blest.

Donegal. J. K.

Mr. Gipsy Smith, we regret to learn, is suffering from overwork, and all his present engagements have been cancelled.

"The People's Day."—A correspondent, in ordering a quantity of this pamphlet, by Rev. William Arthur, writes: "These are for distribution at our P.S.A. Others of your readers would do immense good by putting this paper into the hands of the men who attend such meetings. By this means a wide circulation would be obtained of the pamphlet amongst those whom it would largely affect."

A Congo Pioneer.

Mr. BROOME P. SMITH.

THE other day there came to our office a very tall, lean Afro-Americo-Englishman, named Broome P. Smith. He came well-recommended by friends out on the Pacific coast, known to ourselves and to him. We soon discovered, however, that his most convincing credentials were himself and the story of his adventurous life, especially the later part of it. We listened to his tale and felt that he was a true man, not desiring to attract attention to himself, but most anxious to give glory to God; whom, indeed, he has good reason to praise and magnify for many signal instances of protecting and guiding care, in circumstances when all human help seemed out of the question. Daniel himself, at the mouth of the lions' den, could not have said, "My God is able to deliver me," with more emphatic confidence than our missionary friend uses the words in telling of the deliverances he has experienced in times of imminent peril.

Mr. Smith is only making a short stay in this country, as his face will soon again be set towards the foreign field. Before going he would be glad of the opportunity of addressing companies of his fellow Christians on the theme that is nearest to his heart; we therefore recite here in brief some of the facts he has communicated to us, that the reader's appetite may be whetted for hearing more of them, and at first hand.

As we have indicated, Mr. Smith is a Briton by birth, having been born in Wilts, and trained in a Christian household. As a young man he suffered from weak health, and a sojourn in South Africa was prescribed. There he recovered tone sufficient to enable him to engage in pioneer trading operations in Zululand, Matabeleland, and, later, in Madagascar. Twelve years were thus spent. Into the experiences of those years we cannot enter, but we understand they were lived without any serious thoughts of God or his claims on the human soul and life. But Mr. Smith fully believes now that, even in those rough, adventurous days, his heavenly Father was training him, and preparing him for after service among the ignorant and degraded dwellers on the dark and long-neglected continent. Even in his unregenerate days, Mr. Smith seems to have been much and painfully impressed with the ravages that are wrought in those parts of the world by the white man's liquor. He tells how, in Madagascar, he had a palaver with a native chief on this subject. He plainly told the dusky potentate that if he did not set himself by influence and example against the cursed drink, he would withdraw trading operations from the district. The chief was complaisant, and thereupon Mr. Smith emptied all the fire-water in his store into the sea, and confined his trading to less dangerous articles of commerce.

These days of free and roving business came to an end, and, after a visit to the old country, we next find Mr. Smith over in America, in the region of the great lakes. Here, as he himself expresses it, "the Lord won his heart." Under what special circumstances we know not; but the work was clearly thorough, judging from the results. By the guiding hand of his God, whom now he knew and loved and longed to serve, his steps were led to various places in Canada and the States, doing divers sorts of secular work, but in them all gaining knowledge and experience that were subsequently helpful in his career as a pioneer missionary in Central Africa. His spirit was all aflame to be there, so that he might help to carry the light of the Gospel into the darkness of which he had seen so much in his careless trading years.

From California he was ultimately directed to Dr. Simpson's Christian Missionary Alliance, New York. He had previously been induced to send an application to be received into the college there for a period of training. He quaintly describes, however, how, as every line of that missive was penned, he prayed God that his application might not be granted. He wanted to go to Africa at once, and felt sure the Lord could equip him for the work without years spent in acquiring human lore. Strangely enough, when he got to New York he found that his letter, written months before, had never reached its destination! The upshot of the matter was that he was despatched by the Alliance to Central Africa, leaving America in April, 1894.

At Bonny he attended a Christian Endeavour meeting in Archdeacon Crowther's church, and there, in the presence of 850 people, he told of his previous life and his present call. At the close, one of the audience, a young native woman caught hold of his hand and said, "God bless you for coming to declare the Gospel to us." That young girl had been bound to a stake by the witch doctors because she had given up heathen worship; but happily the Archdeacon had released her.

In due time Mr. Smith reached a station of the Alliance at Ngangila, where he set himself to learn the Fioti language, throwing aside what he already knew of the Malagasy, Zulu, and Matabele tongues. September of that year found him preaching sermons to the natives. Then he received his commission to begin the pioneering work to which he mainly devoted himself for the next four years or more.

Space would altogether fail us in attempting to reproduce the interesting incidents with which these years were crowded—going with his band of native carriers into villages where hitherto the foot of no Christian missionary had ever been; inviting the inhabitants to come and hear the Gospel message, and for the most part meeting with a wonderfully favourable response. The children took kindly to him, and through them a way was often found to the ears and the hearts of the elders. Thus he was compensated for the toilsome work of travelling day by day through the rank grass, fording the rivers, crossing the mountains, or threading his way through the forests. All these trials would be forgotten when he heard native chiefs say, "Yes, we do want to hear the white man's words about God." After staying some time in a village, building mission premises, preaching the Gospel, teaching the people various industries, he would go back to the Congo and return as soon as possible to the station with some fresh workers to settle there, receiving a boisterous and delighted welcome from the people. Then a new journey would be taken into an unknown region, and the same process would be repeated.

Of course our friend met with opposition, and was often in peril; but his faith in God carried him through, and he sometimes seemed to the natives to lead a charmed life. He gave himself the name of Malembi Nsi, the peaceful man, and for the most part the people were eager to hear "the white man's words about God." So the years passed, full of wearing toil, of many privations, and of strange experiences, but also full of happy testimony as to the love of God in Christ to all men, whether Zulu, Hottentot, or Soudanese, and of the glad reception into dark hearts of the good, blessed news. Through all there was the clear and constant sense of God's immediate presence, unerring guidance, and protecting power, sometimes shown in a very remarkable way.

All this expenditure of body, and heart, and brain brought its usual result in depleted strength, and in the beginning of April last year Mr. Smith had to be carried down the river for shipment to England, with his temperature on one occasion standing at 106 for a whole day. No one expected that he could reach the old country alive. At Boma, a native woman, whom he had nursed in sickness during his first year on the Congo, came on board, in spite of officers and seamen, and said "God bless you. Come back to us." Mr. Smith believes in his soul that God raised him up in answer to that woman's prayer, and that there is more work for him to do in Central Africa. A year of furlough has been spent in America and England, and, as we have said, he hopes in a month or two to be on his way back. We hope that during the two or three weeks that elapse before he says good-bye to London, Mr. Smith will be granted many opportunities of telling Christian audiences what God has enabled him to see and to do, that the faith of the churches may be strengthened and their zeal increased for the evangelisation of Africa's millions. Mr. Smith may be addressed, care of Exeter Hall, Strand.

International Bible-Reading Association.

THE annual meetings of this association, held on Tuesday, 18th ult., in the Lecture Hall of the Sunday School Union, were of a stimulating character. At the conference of district and branch secretaries, messages of greeting from foreign countries were read, and the home workers brought many cheery reports of progress. The necessity for efforts to bring about an increase of systematic Bible reading seemed, it was pointed out, to increase rather than to diminish. The ever-increasing stream of literature of all kinds which flows through the land threatened to absorb the attention of the people, and to thrust out of sight the things which are more important.

In the evening Rev. G. Howard James, of Derby, presided. A review of the work showed that the past year has been one of steady work and growth. Substantial additions have been made to the membership, which now totals half a million in the United Kingdom alone, beside many others in various parts of the world. The Sunday School Missionary maintained in India has been heartily welcomed by Christian workers of all denominations, who have found his presence and labours a stimulus to greater effort on behalf of the children of India.

Strangers' Rest.—A very interesting gathering of supporters of the excellent work among sailors and others in Ratcliff Highway took place on Friday afternoon, April 28, at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, when an illuminated address, accompanied by a purse of 100 guineas, was presented to Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Isaac, in recognition of their indefatigable services for twenty years during which Mr. Isaac has acted as honorary secretary.

The May Meetings.

Baptist Missionary Society.

THE anniversary of the Baptist Missionary Society was last week celebrated by a series of meetings held in various metropolitan centres, and attracting different classes of the great body of friends and supporters. There were gatherings for subscribing members, women, and young people; and on Thursday evening there was a general meeting for all orders and ages held at Exeter Hall. At all the meetings stimulating addresses were delivered; and at the one most distinctively public, encouraging and rousing words were spoken by well-known leaders in work and organisation.

The general secretary of the Society, Mr. A. H. Baynes, spoke very briefly on the work in its progress and extension. He presented for adoption a resolution congratulating the Church Missionary Society upon its century of conspicuous service, rejoicing in its labours in many departments and fields, and praying that the past may be the earnest of still more fruitful and extended effort in the years to come. Having been seconded by Mr. W. R. Rickett (treasurer), the resolution was cordially adopted. The report told of opportunities unexampled and responsibilities stupendous. Among the details, special interest attached to the Congo Mission, only twenty years old, but full of promise. In Congoland an elementary literature has been created in five languages, which were before without written character, and supported by the contributions of the converts —more than an few of whom were previously cannibals—are now engaged in pioneer and aggressive evangelisation. Mr. Rickett's financial statement was also encouraging. The income reached a total of about £75,000, and the new year had begun without debt.

NATIVE EVANGELISTS,

Mr. G. W. Palmer, M.P., who presided, enlarged upon the responsibility of Christian people in these days of wide opportunity. He was followed by Rev. W. T. A. Barber, principal of the Leys School, Cambridge, who spoke with great power of work in China, where he was formerly a missionary. He had witnessed the operations of men of various societies, and he spoke of the great hopefulness of Christian testimony in the Flowery Land. That mighty country is at present a terrible responsibility, having an awful claim upon those who would show faith and love in Christ. The prejudices of the people and their self-satisfaction were described; and it was shown that the predominant wisdom and ethics have one great lack—God. Hence Confucianism is sterile; men of the type of the Sadducee, believing neither in angel nor spirit, and having no sense of a future life, RULE CHINA TO-DAY.

There is likewise a sound of all manner of righteousness, but the heart of morality is eaten out; men of the type of the Pharisee, supremely self-satisfied, the elect of the elect nation of the whole earth, rule in China to-day, and have done for a thousand years. To a nation with these feelings and sentiments the Gospel is sent from the West. "Miserable foreign barbarians" go among the people, talking about a foreigner, Jesus, representing a God of whom nothing is known! The scholar passes the chapel with indignation and contempt, though he may set the commonalty to insult the missionary in his behalf. Yet to such the Gospel is taken; the mightiest and proudest and most self-complacent are those that need the Saviour most, and while the Gospel has to be preached to the poor, the ruling classes have also to be reached.

In passages of great descriptive power, the speaker told of the triumphs of the Gospel in China to the reclamation of the most helpless victims of the opium habit; even mandarins have been baptized in the presence of despised coolies, and rulers have set out upon their visiting cards the designation, "Disciple of Jesus!" Coming to the crisis of to-day, Mr. Barber said that, after the war with Japan, there came a sense of want never known before in China.

THE WORK OF REV. TIMOTHY RICHARD was spoken of in terms of high commendation. Recognising the need of the day, that well-known missionary had sought to influence the general community as well as the individual, with marvellous results among students and ruling classes. The publications of the Society for the Diffusion of Christian Knowledge have been read by men who, a few years ago, would not have touched them, and no one can prescribe limitations to the outcome. The outer "barbarian," instead of being held in contempt, is now held in great honour, and, as will be remembered, the young Emperor last year spoke boldly for reform on western lines. What followed is also well known; the Emperor, the young "Son of Heaven," was pushed into the background, and the Empress annulled the edicts for reform. It was obvious that there was no moral preparedness in the country. Even the intensely anti-foreign province, Hunan, has altered its attitude; with a sense of need, following on the humiliation of the war, there has come marvellous opportunity which the Church of Christ must readily and faithfully embrace. Marked attention was accorded to Mr. Barber's striking address.

Rev. Charles Williams, speaking of financial matters, said that all the difficulties of recent years originated in success, that is, through the blessing that God had given upon the work.

THE FRUIT GATHERED

on various fields compares remarkably with home prosperity. Though statistics altogether fail to afford any adequate idea of the good done, the percentage of members received, both in India and on the Congo, was double that recorded by the home churches. The work in Chou-ping is done, not so much by the missionaries as by the members—each one bringing another; and at the church meetings the members discuss what is to be done to evangelise new streets and remoter districts. The speaker marvelled at the steadfastness of the converts; and the great present need is for the further instruction of these, in order that they may go forth to evangelise distant regions. The men required to take up such work should be the best the Church could provide, after the model of the Spirit's demand in the early Church—"Separate Me Barnabas and Saul"—Barnabas a man of wealth and a prince of consolation; Saul, a man of learning and great power in witnessing for Christ. In conclusion, Mr. Williams pleaded for greater generosity, so that the annual income of the Society may speedily be raised to £100,000, the amount resolved upon at the centenary seven years ago.

The last speaker was Rev. Leonard Tucker, of the Calabar College, Kingston, Jamaica, who began missionary work seventeen years ago at Serampore, and during recent years has laboured in the West Indies. He devoted his attention to answering the question, How goes as the fruit of the planting of years long past? Passing by the oft-told tale of the combat with slavery, and the events of emancipation, he spoke of the danger in which early missionaries did their work. The schools that were then founded have proved a great blessing, and the economic arrangements made for the settlement of people on the land, after liberty had been secured, were fruitful of important results in many directions. There is not only a Union of the churches but also a Jamaica Missionary Society. Brave men and women administer the work and shepherd the flocks, and Englishmen sadly needing furlough have to go without through lack of means in the present time of commercial depression in the West Indies.

THE WORK IN JAMAICA,

The Protestant Alliance.

POWERFUL and many-sided testimony against error, with evident disposition to determined and united action against Romish inroads, present and prospective, were marked characteristics of the meetings of the Protestant Alliance held in Queen's Hall on Wednesday of last week. Mr. B. Nicholson presided at the afternoon gathering. On behalf of those then assembled, Colonel Sandys, M.P., voiced thanks to God that so many people in this country are awakening to the importance of maintaining an earnest and vigorous protest against idolatry, sacerdotalism, and superstition in the Established Church. Mr. John Kensit urged Christian electors to sign in large numbers the Alliance pledge subordinating party politics to the interests of pure religion.

Various political opinions and religious denominations were represented on a full platform and a crowded auditorium at the evening meeting, with Mr. T. A. Denny in the chair. He declared, in opposition to those who would keep things as they are by smoothing over difficulties, that there can be no peace until God's Word secures more attention than the Prayer Book (see p. 11).

Pastor W. Cuff called upon ministers of the Gospel to organise lectures and meetings for contrasting the teaching of the Church of Rome with that of the Bible. We are not of those who find fault with the great instrument whereby Luther and Cromwell secured our liberties. While bishops will not and the laity cannot do anything, we call upon the sleeping giant of Protestantism to arise and lead the armies of the living God to the battle, that our sons may not have cause to curse the fetters which bound their fathers.

An impassioned speech followed by Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Brixton. He said he had just returned from a visit to Ireland, and the poverty there was strongly confirmatory of the statement that Protestant countries prosper, while those lands where Rome is influential decline. He said his hearers must use their personal influence with ministers, in order to maintain a regular weekly Protestant educational class. He had seen splendid results in school examinations upon the "one hundred texts" issued by the Irish Church Missions. It is, he said, well to bear in mind that personal knowledge of Christ is essential to true Protestant witnessing.

Another branch of the great controversy was dealt with by Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P.—namely, the apparent willingness of some leading statesmen to favour the endowment, at the national expense, of an Irish university under Romish management. He expressed determination to employ all lawful means to frustrate a design so detrimental to the interests of a Protestant kingdom. The more educated Ireland becomes, the more Protestant will she be; but it is a cardinal doctrine with many of us that no public money should be given for sectarian purposes. Happily, the Free Churches of this country have nothing in common with Romanism, which is a political system; and if negotiations are pending between our Government and the Vatican, the people will assuredly rise to declare that there can be no national recognition of the temporal authority of the head of the Romish Church.

Rev. C. Fenwick Ward (Manchester) said that primary and intermediate education in Ireland is at so low a level that there would be few students for the proposed university. Let in the light of the Gospel, and we shall hear no more about "the Irish Question," which is—Popery.

In view of the determined lawlessness of a section of the clergy, Rev. H. Lindsay Young, vicar of St. John's, Portsea, urged the support of legislation for securing immediate obedience to the law as defined by the Supreme Courts. Mr. John Kensit related some of his stirring experiences in contending for Protestant truth and practice, and suggested that the outcome of such a meeting as that should be a large accession of members to the Alliance.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

THE sixty-eighth annual meeting of this society, held in Exeter Hall on the evening of Tuesday last week, was presided over by Mr. James E. Mathieson.

The distinctively Protestant character of the society was described by the secretary, Rev. Dr. Bullinger. When Rome failed to keep the Bible from the people or to destroy it, her last great and temporarily successful design was, like an angel of light, to put forth counterfeit Bibles of her own, intended to make God appear to teach the very errors He most severely condemns, and to sanction that for which He has reserved his most solemn denunciations. The work of the Reformers was to combat all three of these Satanic designs against the Word of God. Their Protestantism began with the Bible. They contended for its authenticity and its integrity; and while they did this, God looked after the State and the Church, delivering them from all their enemies. But much of the Protestantism of the present day stops short at the Scriptures, and no longer contends for their purity. The consequence is that, while God looks after his own truth, and sees that none of his sheep are poisoned by the error which Rome has mixed with it, there is plenty of Popery for modern neo-pseudo-Protestants to protest against in Church and State.

A new work undertaken and carried out during the past year, has been the printing of the book of Genesis in the Basque language, spoken by about a million people on either side of the Pyrenees and in the colonies of Basques formed in America. Pastor Lecoat says:—"In spite of numerous difficulties and the general excitement in the country, we have been able to continue to distribute the Bible in our departments of Brittany. We have had many reasons for uneasiness, caused, firstly, by the Dreyfus affair, which is nothing more than a machination of the Jesuits; and, secondly, by rumours of war between France and England, which the Breton clergy did their best to turn to account against us; but the Lord has been with us." Pastor and Madame Rodriguez, who act as honorary agents of the society in Spain, report that the present sad position of that country, with "all her spiritual nourishment falsified," calls loudly for compassion, sympathy, and help. Other calls come from new fields in South America, Argentina, Brazil, and Peru; and if the thousands thirsting for the pure Word of God are to be satisfied, the society must be adequately furnished with the necessary funds.

The Chairman's speech covered a wide field, in deprecation of any approach in Biblical or religious literature to the latitudinarian principle of doing evil that good may come.

True Protestantism, based upon the Word of God, and drawing all its vitality therefrom, was the principle contended for by Rev. F. Cecil Lovely (St. John the Baptist, Bexley), who showed that, according to Psa. xix., the law of the Lord is perfect, sure, right, and pure, and needs no "improvement," on the score of expediency, in the circulation of corrupt versions of the Scriptures.

Rev. G. D. Hooper (Bournemouth) declared that there is a "crisis" not only in one Church but in all Christendom to-day, and to this society it has been given to hold a great "fort" in the heart of the battle. There is an indissoluble union between the living Word and the written Word; therefore it is impossible to tamper with the latter, without robbing the Lord Jesus Christ of his glory, and taking the crown from his redemptive work. If a society or church is to do the work of God efficiently and faithfully, there must be jealous guarding of the accuracy and purity of the written Word. Even the late revered Father Chiniquy, with his corrupted Bible in his hand, seduced souls into the Roman pale as long as he himself remained within it.

Testimony was borne by Rev. G. Handler (London Jews' Society) to the excellency and purity of Hebrew translations of the Scriptures extensively circulated by the society. On this ground, and that of the faithful course of action so successfully adopted, he warmly advocated increased support.

Rev. Richard Roberts, a Wesleyan friend of the society, rejoiced in the opening of new fields for its labours, and heartily approved of its active Protestant regard for the spiritual needs of the people.

The closing word was by Rev. Dr. F. J. Hamilton (Homerton), who urged his hearers to boldness in testimony against error, in the spirit of Cromwell. If that great man "made" England, in some sense, it was the unadulterated Bible which made the man what he was.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

BY kind permission, the tenth anniversary meeting of this mission was held on the afternoon of April 25, in St. Paul's Church Room, Onslow Square, S.W. Rev. Dr. Bullinger opened the proceedings by reading a passage of Scripture, and prayer was offered by Rev. A. Bernstein (London Jews' Society).

A note of thanksgiving to God began an interesting abstract of report read by the secretary, Prediger C. T. Lipshytz. His tour on the Continent has been attended with many evidences of the Holy Spirit's presence and guidance. The work has been removed from its old quarters in Finsbury Square to the new temporary premises at 262, Commercial Road, E., and the Converts' Home in Wood Street, Walthamstow. As to finance, the whole of the increased expenditure due to the growth of the work has, through God's mercy, been fully supplied. The home work of the mission has been graciously prospered, and there is no department of operations into which the element of evangelistic effort does not enter. This is the guiding feature of the work. "We have always studiously refrained," says Mr. Lipshytz, "from tabulating conversions and baptisms, although many times we have been pressed to do this. Nevertheless, we cannot withhold expression of our gratitude to God that at no time during the year have we been without evidences of Divine grace working on the hearts of Jews, and the months of April, May, July, December, and March were marked by the baptism of those whose firm convictions and careful preparation made it clearly evident that the rite should be administered." During the year twenty-three young men passed through the Converts' and Inquirers' Home, making a total of 206 since it was opened in 1891.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe, president of the Mission, was in the chair, and said he had taken that position because he was the son of parents who continually taught him to feel a deep personal interest in everything connected with God's ancient people. The Jew of to-day is very much to the front, but he lacks a knowledge of the great salvation which Christ brings. The Zionist movement is not affecting the people in a spiritual sense as yet, but if we use our powers, as God may enable us, good results must be secured in this direction. A certain movement is on foot for reaching Continental Jews by letter-writing; but with 150,000 of this race around us in London our Christian responsibility toward them becomes great. The work of the Mission really dates back some twenty years. The term Barbican Mission is simply a distinguishing title, covering a widespread work with great blessing resting upon it.

Personal acquaintance with the developments of the work was referred to by Rev. Joseph Kahn, himself a convert from Judaism. He pleaded that the "middle wall of partition" was broken down, not to let the Jew out, but to let the Gentile in; while both Scripture and experience go to prove that they who do not believe in Jewish conversions are not Christian but infidel. With two sons devoted to the Christian ministry, the speaker considered himself a living proof of God's grace towards Israel.

Mr. Percival Etheridge earnestly asked those present to translate their thankfulness into action and prayer in support of a work which is evidently bringing men to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ.

Sympathy with the work was expressed by Rev. Dr. Ginsburg, because he believed that it made much of preaching the Gospel and bearing testimony to Christ rather than in spending effort to make a show of external success in conversions. His knowledge of Jews in continental cities showed that they have an intuitive horror of image worship; and the prevalence of Romish ornamentation in so-called Christian churches is a serious stumbling-block to these people. As to rationalistic expositors, it would appear more necessary to convert Christians than Jews to faith in ancient prophecy. Dr. Ginsburg hoped that the scheme for providing the mission with permanent headquarters, as a memorial to the late Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, might soon be accomplished; and this desire was echoed by Rev. R. W. Colquhoun. Through the kindness of some friends, and the President's appeal, there is now in hand about £1,600 for this undertaking—an increase of £500 during the year.

The Baptist Union.

THE meetings of the Baptist Union, held in London last week, were largely attended. The presidential address, which Dr. Spurgeon had prepared just prior to his lamented death, was read by Rev. James Owen, of Swansea. The subject was "The Faith Once for All Delivered to the Saints." It was held that more than ever is there need to assert the authority of the Bible as the charter of our Christian liberty and the sole source of our Christian faith. The Bible, and the Bible alone, is our creed book, and we will acknowledge no other revealer of the Divine thought than that Holy Spirit who guides us into all truth. We preach Christ crucified—even Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. Christ is the Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and end, all and in all to us. Crucified with Him, and buried with Him, we are now risen with Him, and sit with Him in the heavenlies. In conclusion, the address called for consecrated giving, as under the eye of Him who sits over against the treasury and sees what is cast therein.

At the first session, and subsequently, the Twentieth Century Fund was described, and although the hope was expressed that the churches would receive blessing through sacrifice and self-denial, emphasis was laid upon of personal holiness and evangelistic fidelity. The report concluded: "We rejoice in the abundant signs on every hand of new life, energy, and hopefulness, but in the last resort the true equipment for entrance upon the new century is to be found—not in any successful enterprise, but in constant and humble dependence upon God, in the faithful preaching of Christ, and in the revival of spiritual religion."

THE SUPREME NEED

At Wednesday afternoon's session a resolution was adopted congratulating the Religious Tract Society and the Church Missionary Society on the attainment of their century of service. It was decided to unite with the Evangelical Alliance in sending a deputation to the Czar of Russia to plead for a mitigation of the sufferings of the persecuted Stundists, and another deputation to the Minister of Religion in Royal Saxony to pray for the removal of the disabilities under which Baptists labour in that country. Other resolutions were against the establishment of a Roman Catholic University in Ireland, and in opposition to the seven-day newspaper aggression.

On Thursday, Mr. Cuff presiding, there was some discussion on the Twentieth Century Fund. At the suggestion of Rev. T. W. Medhurst, it was decided that the committee should devote to Ireland, Scotland, and Wales at least the full amounts contributed from those countries, for use within their own borders, due regard in the allocation being given to the wishes of the respective unions. Rev. J. H. Shakespeare was able to announce promises towards the fund amounting in the aggregate to £32,000, about one-eighth of the whole Christian Evidence Society.

AT the annual meeting of this society, held last Thursday at Stafford House, Sir Richard Temple emphasised the value and importance of the work, and warmly commended the works of Bishop Westcott to those who desired to be thoroughly furnished for the difficult task of convincing the sceptic concerning the authenticity of the Divine revelation.

The Secretary (Rev. T. T. Waterman) read extracts from the report. Methods have been much the same as in former years—public lecturing, followed by questions and discussion; private interviews and correspondence, circulation of literature, and examination of students in appointed text-books. In London, from Acton to Forest Gate, and from Wood Green to Norwood, the society's work has been continuously carried on, as well as in many important provincial cities and towns. Where arrangements can be made, conferences on current topics are useful. Lecturing in the open-air is still a most important department of operations. The success of Mr. Waldron's lectures in Hyde Park shows the necessity for permanent occupation of a station there, week evenings as well as Sundays.

Rev. C. J. Ridgeway remarked upon the necessity of distinguishing between the honest doubter and the one who loved the darkness and revelled in his doubts. The last-named we must fight, but with the former we must be sympathetic and seek to lead them back into the light of truth.

Rev. Mr. Chapman said his sympathies went strongly with the workers of such a society. They deserve the Victoria Cross among Christian warriors; it is a most thankless task, and requires a vast amount of pluck.

Mr. Lee, one of the society's workers, was able, from his own experience, to give many remarkable cases of men and women, once unbelieving and atheistic, but now convinced that Jesus is the Christ. Such instances, he declared, could be easily multiplied by the hundreds.

Christian Colportage Association.

IT is customary once a year to gather a number of colporteurs to meet friends of the society in London. This break in the useful labours of the men is thoroughly enjoyed, and it gives opportunity for them to renew their spiritual strength through the words of Christian counsel and cheer addressed to them. On the other hand, supporters of the association get accounts of work fresh from the various fields of operation.

The twenty-fifth anniversary was celebrated last Thursday in Exeter Hall. There was a conference for an hour and a half in the afternoon, upon the spiritual needs of our English villages, and the suitability of this colportage agency for meeting such needs. Lord Kinnaird was chairman, and among other speakers were Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Sir Geo. Williams, Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. W. R. Moore, and Mr. W. H. Seagram.

Very bright and interesting was the evening meeting, presided over by Mr. John Colville, M.P. The Secretary (Mr. H. D. Brown) gave some particulars of what has been done. An enormous number of Scriptures, books, and tracts have been distributed since the association was started. There is now a staff of 132 colporteurs, who visit from door to door among rich and poor. These men are not simply book hawkers: they are evangelists, who, by printed page and living voice, preach the Gospel from house to house. God has so greatly blessed the operations that the committee are anxious to extend them greatly, and they desire to mark this year by a considerable extension of the work in the villages.

From many poor country districts where the need is greatest, funds are not forthcoming to maintain a colporteur; but in not a few cases the lack is supplied by supporters resident in London. It is hoped that many more friends may follow this example, so that at least ten additional colporteurs may this year be sent to village districts. Toward the maintenance of each worker £50 a year is required.

The Chairman having briefly spoken, a number of the colporteurs in a lively manner told how they go about their work, and the cheering results that come of it. These stories indicated watchfulness for opportunities of serving the Master, indomitable perseverance under discouragement, and much confidence in the power of the truth.

Rev. Gregory Mantle said the circulation of sound Christian literature is doubly important in the face of recent attempts to rob us of the sanctity of the Lord's Day. Rev. G. Everard sought to encourage the colporteurs in their endeavours. Mr. John Evans described the useful work that goes on in the Training Home of the association—a department which stands in need of increased support. Then Mr. T. A. Denny presented handsome copies of the Bible to colporteurs and others who had seen long service.

British Syrian Mission.

THE annual meeting of this mission was held in the Lower Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, April 25, under the presidency of Rev. F. Paynter. He said he had twice visited the Mission Schools in Syria, and had been deeply impressed by the reality and solidity of the work.

Miss Werner, missionary from Beyrout, speaking of work among Moslem, Druses, and the Bedouin, said it was difficult to represent the deadness, sinfulness, and degradation outside the schools, that the B.S.M. workers had to fight against with so few to help. Miss Bazett remarked that the great hope for the land was to train the children to know Christ as their personal Saviour.

Mr. Stuart Holden said he loved the British Syrian Mission, because the personal and definite salvation of the children is sought, and because of its strategic value. The girls of these schools will be the mothers of the country. In a recent tour through the land, he had been struck by the mental receptivity of the children and their interest in the Gospel.

Miss Walker, missionary from Tyre, gave some touching incidents, illustrating the darkness and superstition of the people. Miss Bryden, in the absence of Mr. Sellwood (hon. treas. pro tem.), read the financial report, and alluded to an impending deficit of £300.

Dr. Stephenson's Homes.

THE annual meeting of the Children's Home and Orphanage, held in Wesley's Chapel last Friday evening, was presided over by the Lord Mayor of Liverpool. The full choir of the home enlivened the proceedings with sweet devotional song.

Dr. Stephenson's report acknowledged the loyal devotion of colleagues during his absence from the work through ill-health. The hopes and aims for 1899-1900 included £1,000 increase in income, 100 more children, and the abolition of debt by the end of the century. Of the £5,000 required for the latter purpose, close upon £4,000 has been gathered; while the increase of ordinary income has exceeded the sum named. During the thirty years of the Home's existence hundreds of children have been saved from the workhouse; and financial aid is now accepted from boards of guardians and other authorities chargeable with support of the children, the aim being to save every Nonconformist child from the union.

The Chairman felt sure he might join with the meeting in congratulating Dr. Stephenson upon his comparative recovery. Such work as this is the most important that the Church or the State can be engaged in.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes spoke of the great work which the founder of these homes has done for destitute children; it is too little known. Dr. Stephenson secures for the destitute boys and girls of the streets, as distinguished from what may be called "hereditary paupers," the atmosphere of a true home. From this time forward, by the aid of a contribution of £50,000 from the Twentieth Century Fund, no child of deceased Methodist parents should ever be sent into the workhouse; and this beneficent provision is to extend to the offspring of soldiers and sailors who have fallen in the service of their country. The speaker went on to refer to the abomination of seven-day journalism, which tempts boys to turn their back upon all that is good in order to minister to the greed of gold. In the name of God and humanity, the boycott of papers concerned must grow until the iniquity be killed; and he rejoiced to hear that one man had, in this connection, withdrawn advertisements to the value of £1,000.

Dr. Townsend having borne his testimony, Sister Dora Stephenson said that the loving watchfulness maintained over boys and girls who had left the Home had found some reward in the fact that within eighteen months £100 had been contributed by former inmates towards a building to be called the Old Boys' and Girls' House.

Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

A NUMBER of influential people were invited by Sir Gerald and Lady Fitzgerald to attend the annual meeting of the N.S.P.C.C.'s Kensington, Chelsea, and West London branch, held at their house in Cadogan Gardens. Lord Ripon presided. Mr. Herbert Paul and Rev. Benjamin Waugh spoke, and, as usual, not the faintest room was left for doubt as to the beneficent character of the work which is being done by the society. For though it was nominally a meeting of its West London branch, the work of the society as a whole was chiefly dealt with by the speakers.

The society exists, Mr. Paul explained, to put down the mischievous doctrine that a man might do what he liked with his own, and that an Englishman's house was his castle, neither of which was true in law or fact. As to the work of the West London branch of the society, the most eloquent comment was contained in the fact that of the seventy-seven prosecutions undertaken seventy-five had resulted in convictions. Mr. Waugh, in the course of his address, referred particularly to the splendid work which had been done on behalf of the cause by Mrs. Stephen Coleridge, and gave numerous striking illustrations of the good which was being accomplished through the society's operations.

The Railway Mission.

THE annual gathering of this mission was held at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evening last week, Mr. A. Hubbard, Deputy Chairman of the G.W.R., presiding. Madame Annie Ryall rendered some very pleasing solos during the course of the proceedings.

Mr. R. Nixon, the secretary, in presenting his report, said that in England alone the railway constituency amounted to some half a million. The aim of the mission is not only to get these men sober and temperate, but soundly converted and witnessing for the Master. The operations of the Mission are by no means confined to this country, and the work is continually expanding. Twenty-one new branches were added last year; eleven new workers were enrolled, one of whom had been appointed for India and another for South Africa. Kindly reference was also made to Miss Dolby's work at the Convalescent Home, St. Leonard's. It is hoped in the near future to see another home established in the North of England. The spiritual work of the mission is most encouraging, and many interesting cases of blessing were cited.

The treasurer, Mr. Gurney Sheppard, reported that the annual income entrusted to him was only £3,000, and they could to great advantage use more than ten times that amount.

The Chairman reminded the railway men that there are something like a thousand million passengers travelling along their lines every year, and urged the importance of living joyful Christian lives before the travelling public. He rejoiced at the splendid lot of men which the G.W.R. had in its employ, and he believed that at least 10,000 of them were members of the Temperance Union.

In a stirring and helpful address, Rev. F. S. Webster referred in pleasing terms to a young railway porter who had laboured with him at Oxford, and who had now settled in the United States as pastor of a church.

A few hearty testimonies having been given by Christian railway men, Rev. Thos. Cook pointed out to the men the secret of victory. He remarked that he was himself converted through a railway man. He urged upon Christians to cultivate a spirit of prayer and a deeper realisation of the presence of Christ within.

South American Missionary Society.

THE annual meeting of the South American Missionary Society was held at Exeter Hall on Friday last.

The secretary, Captain E. Poulden, R.N., presented the report, which described the society's operations as of four kinds—direct missions to the heathen, evangelistic work for the native population, the work of the chaplaincies, and work among sailors. The society's income had been £16,253, including £2,076 drawn from various available funds; and the expenditure £16,185, included £500 invested.

Sir Leopold McClintock, who presided, describing the society's operations, pointed out that it started in the extreme south among the wretched people of Tierra del Fuego. He had himself been there before the time of Allen Gardiner, and well remembered the degraded savagery of the people who came off to the ship in their canoes—one woman actually holding up her own child for barter. The society had progressed steadily northwards into the semi-civilised countries of the South American continent. It was with very great pleasure that he saw the way in which missionary effort was being extended all over the world. Rev. R. B. Ransford and General Sir William Stirling also spoke.

Presbyterian Synod.

THE Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England met last week at Regent Square Church. The opening sermon was preached on Monday night by the retiring Moderator, Rev. W. Hutton, of Birkenhead, who then gave place to his successor, Rev. Dr. Charles Moinet. Dr. Moinet, in his inaugural address, referred to the Ritualist movement as possessing two elements of strength—in the place assigned in it to the Incarnation and the prominence it gave to the idea of mediation. The greatest danger was indifference, not Ritualism.

On Tuesday the committee on religion and public morals presented its report. Adopting the committee's recommendation, the Synod expressed regret at the increasing laxity of Sunday observance, urged all who loved the Sabbath to discourage by all means in their power the publications of those who issued Sunday editions, expressed gratification at the Czar's peace proposal, and condemned the retrograde policy of the Government in regard to the State regulation of vice in India. In the evening a crowded missionary meeting was held, and Rev. A. Connell gave an account of a six months' tour of inspection he had just made among the missions in China. The solid character of the results obtained were, he said, beyond his expectations.

At Thursday morning's session it was resolved to hold the next meeting of the Synod at Grosvenor Square Church, Manchester, in April, 1900. In the evening a resolution was adopted, on the motion of Mr. S. Smith, M.P., expressing deep sympathy with the Evangelical members of the Church of England in view of the deliberate attempts of many to bring back doctrines and usages of the Church of Rome, in open defiance of the existing compact with the State. At the final session on Friday, Dr. McEwan suggested the raising of a Twentieth Century Fund of £100,000, following the example of the Wesleyans, Congregationalists, and Baptists. The matter was referred to a committee, to report to the Synod next year.

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

THE general muster of friends and supporters of the Wesleyan Missionary Society is always a gathering hearty in character and fruitful in evangelistic stimulus. The meeting on Monday morning was a worthy one in the long line of succession; there was an enthusiastic audience, and the speakers laid themselves out to do justice to the great interests that had brought together, with one accord and with such noble purpose, so many of "the people called Methodists."

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, general secretary, was enabled to present an encouraging report. While Divine blessing had rested upon the work as a whole, in certain directions a special measure of prosperity had been realised. Early in the year sixteen additional missionaries were sent into the field, and a hope was expressed that this movement in advance would be maintained. Under the head of statistics, whether in members, persons under instruction, or children in Sunday schools, steady, and in some cases was reported; and the same applies to the amount of money given by converts in support of the work in and beyond their own fields. Spiritual influence, however, cannot be tabulated, and in the midst of hoary systems of heathenism, Christian sentiment has spread and deepened in a manner rich in promise for future reaping. Amidst the horrors of pestilence and famine in India, eloquent testimony had been borne by native Christians, who had proved loyal to the Gospel and truly devoted in labours for the care and consolation of their distressed and panic-stricken neighbours.

REMARKABLE, PROGRESS

Pointing out that the opportunity for the spread of the Gospel is steadily assuming the character of an imperative summons, the committee called upon the supporters of the mission to realise the great significance of this fact. From China, Burma, and India urgent appeals are received; and quite recently Cairo has put in a claim for like consideration. The mission in Mashonaland forms a door of approach to the Zambesi country. From Lisbon also has come a cry for the Gospel, and that city is not alone in showing impatience of Papal darkness and oppression. These calls show that nothing less than will give expression to Christian duty at the beginning of the new century. The income of the year met the expenditure, and the society was free from debt. The committee called upon rich and poor alike to resolve upon more liberal support in order to meet enlarged responsibilities.

A FORWARD POLICY

Sir George J. Smith, who occupied the chair, in the course of a thoughtful address, asked whether the sacrifices and efforts of Christian people bear any rational proportion to the needs of the world and the wealth of the Church at home? In earnest passages, waiving for the moment the teaching of Scripture regarding the future life, he spoke of sin and its awful consequences as making a present hell from which only the Gospel can deliver the heathen millions. Reason demands a remedy for the abounding evil; and even without the scriptural command to evangelise the world, elementary philanthropy demands a missionary zeal. He uttered a word of solemn warning against that selfish materialism which results in a gift to missions amounting to less than one-fiftieth of the cost of summer holidays. Thanking God for the means given to the Methodist people, he appealed for stimulation, education, and consistent maintenance of the disposition to give. Speaking of of our day, Sir George remarked upon the dominance of the Anglo-Saxon race. Is the purpose of this merely that more and more material prosperity may flow into this land? Is it not rather that the Imperialism of Britain shall be merged in the higher patriotism of the kingdom of heaven? The speaker rejoiced that no conscription is needed for the armies of the Cross, as the Student Volunteer Movement shows; so that those who are ready to send their deputies, and "hold the ropes" at home, need not wait long for opportunities to do their part.

THE EXIGENT RESPONSIBILITIES

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, president of the Conference, opened a vigorous address with two general remarks. First, he assured the Evangelical section of the Church of England of the "incorrigible Protestantism" of the Methodist people; and secondly, he called for a united protest against the pestiferous innovation of seven-day newspapers. Coming to the subject of mission work, Mr. Hughes spoke in particular of France. A cordial understanding with our neighbours across the Channel will do much to ensure the peace of the world; and the way to do that will be to replace every Jesuit by a Christian minister. This led to a brief account of the revolt among and the work now in progress under the direction of ex-Abbé Bourrier—a work of which accounts have from time to time appeared in The Christian. France is no longer a Roman Catholic country in any effective sense, and there is readiness on the part of the people to see the distinction between Romanism and Evangelical Christianity, and to declare a preference for the latter. Since the Reformation, France has given to Popery more men and women and money than any other country; and to strike Romanism in that country will mean to cripple it in a manner not otherwise possible. A new revolution is dawning in France, to end, not as that a century ago, in a reign of terror, but in a reign of love and peace.

THE PRIESTS OF FRANCE,

Rev. C. W. Mowson, of the Transvaal, told a story of great progress. The churches there are touching the heathen races at many points, the expansion of the work being largely due to native agency. Great as is the curse of the gold-fields, through the deadly drink traffic, many natives have found Christ while engaged on the fields, and they take the Gospel back far into the interior. As a result, many appeals have been received from unevangelised regions. Only last year messengers came from a distant country, requesting that teachers should be sent among them; but unfortunately such appeals cannot for the present be satisfied.

The concluding address was by Rev. B. Pratt, of Hyderabad, who spoke of work in a population of over two millions, living in rural conditions. There are no other missionaries in that part, but have been gathered from Hinduism. Though the mission knows nothing of class distinctions, the work has chiefly succeeded among the Pariahs, who live outside the villages, as they have done for thousands of years. These people are ignorant, superstitious, and poor; but the Gospel has succeeded among them in a marvellous manner.

NEARLY FIVE THOUSAND CONVERTS

Though the mission includes social and industrial operations, it is from first to last evangelistic. The speaker gave an interesting outline of his method of work, describing a typical meeting, with its native organisation and ministerial catechising; the children repeating Scripture stories and the grown-ups delivering testimonies before the assembled church. A remarkable evidence of the character developed in the converts was afforded by a simple fact. A railway being in course of construction, advances of money were made to the men engaged, security being demanded in return. From this security, however, the Christian converts were exempted, the Mohammedan contractor explaining that their religion was a sufficient guarantee! Another interesting fact is that the Pariah children are learning to read and write, and promising to rise above the caste community. When, in due course, the missionaries pass on to other regions, the natives will take the tiller and carry on the work in Hyderabad.

R.S.U. and Shaftesbury Society.

THE fifty-fifth annual festival of this evangelistic and philanthropic institution was held at the Queen's Hall on Monday last, when the MARQUIS OF NORTHAMPTON presided over a large and enthusiastic gathering.

The report shows that, in addition to the Christ-like efforts among London cripples and the numerous agencies at work for the improvement, temporal and spiritual, of the poor children of the Metropolis, there are 153 affiliated schools and missions. The finance shows a decrease on the gross total, though the dependable sources of income are slightly in excess of last year. The report concludes with an earnest appeal for larger resources, and grateful recognition of the devotion of the 5,000 voluntary helpers, by whose aid, through the blessing of God, so much has been accomplished.

The PRESIDENT remarked that the immense gathering of ragged-school workers before him was a proof of the necessity of the society. A great deal had been done in the past for the uplifting of the vast numbers of poor children of the metropolis; but much yet remained to be done—and should be done—in the future. He deplored the horrible system of overcrowding, and said it was time that our statesmen should be told that something must be done to sweep away this evil, so that the poor may live in some measure of decency and comfort. The Government knew well the evils which attend child-labour in the present day, and those interested in the welfare of the children should declare that this state of things shall cease. The key-word of the Ragged School Union is love—love for little ones huddled together in alleys and courts; love for them in their tatters; love for them in their hunger; love for them in their ignorance; love for them in their sin; love going out to them—the reflection of the Divine love in which we all believe. The weapon used in the battle against ignorance and sin has been one, and one alone—the Bible; love giving forth the Gospel message to the children, by which alone the little ones will be won for God. The pure truth of the Gospel of Christ had been preached throughout the year, and would continue to be preached, with the blessing of God.

Canon WILBERFORCE said that the hope of every nation, and the danger of every nation, lay with the children. In the city in which we live there were a great number of children who, but for the workers assembled, were destined to fill the ranks of the felon, the harlot, and the pauper; but it was the duty of those assembled to see that this should not be the case. The work of this admirable society resembled that of Him who came forth from the Father, and who loved and cared for the children. He referred pathetically to the seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, whose heart was bound up with the children of the East End of London and other great cities. He cared for them intensely. All through his political life many positions of honour had been offered to the noble earl by the various Ministers, but he had refused them all for the sake of the working classes. In his public life he had throughout acted as the servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. The speaker exhorted the workers present to carry on by every means in their power, by their intercessory prayer, their sacrifice of time, and their gifts, the work for which the noble earl had given his life.

Other addresses were delivered, and an original recitation, entitled "Following His Footprints," was given by Mr. W. A. Eaton.

Lady Margaret Graham gracefully distributed the faithful-service prizes, which were awarded to scholars of affiliated schools who had held one situation for one, three, or five years, each prize being accompanied by a certificate bearing the autograph of the Queen.

Solos were sweetly rendered by Miss Adelaide Burton, and the proceedings of the evening were enlivened by the cheerful singing of the red-clad members of the cripples' choir.

National Temperance League.

PROGRESS all along the many lines of influence commanded by this League was the order of the report presented at the annual meeting in Exeter Hall, on Monday night. The ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY, president, faced a large audience from his position in the chair.

In the absence of Mr. Robert Rae, who had not sufficiently recovered his health, his son, the acting secretary, gave a brief review of extensive operations during the past year. Attention was called to the World's Temperance Congress. The report concluded with an earnest affirmation of the conviction that the persistent presentation to the intelligence and conscience of the community of the principle and practice of total abstinence must inevitably produce that change in public opinion regarding the use of alcoholic liquors which would presage a final victory over the national intemperance.

Appreciation of Mr. Rae's long and devoted labours was feelingly expressed by the CHAIRMAN, who proposed that a message of sympathy be sent to the absent secretary. The educative work of the society, said the Archbishop, is gradually unsealing the eyes of our countrymen. He looked forward to an ultimate victory for the cause such as the world has never dreamed of. The battle is to be fought by the rank and file in persevering individual effort.

Miss AGNES WESTON told the interesting story of the inception and progress of the League's work in the important field of the navy, and mentioned that 1,033 honours had been issued during the past year to men keeping the total abstinence pledge during varying periods. That the adherents thus represented are at work was shown by the year's issue of 14,291 pledge cards. The cause is growing and extending right through the service, and is worthy of increasing Christian effort.

Speaking of governmental provision of inebriates homes, Dr. GEO. HANSON submitted that it would be far better to deal with the manufactories than with the manufactured article. Mr. T. W. RUSSELL, M.P., also spoke, and in a special appeal to the chairman urged that the members of the Church of England in the House of Commons should stand shoulder to shoulder on this subject.

The Belleville Mission.

IN the Council Chamber at Exeter Hall, on Monday afternoon, Miss de Broen gave an account of the progress of her Gospel work among some of the 300,000 souls of Belleville, Paris. Mr. H. W. MAYNARD, who presided, spoke from personal experience of the worthy character of the mission, having had part in some of its meetings; and he strongly pressed its claims upon the increased support of those who sympathise with poverty aggravated by spiritual destitution.

Pastor W. FULLER GOOCH said there could not possibly be two opinions as to the need of the work. Very simply but with real eloquence did Miss DE BROEN plead that the Lord had need of the love and sympathy of English Christians for this quiet sowing of the seed of God's Word in a corner of the poor East End of Paris. The Romish priests' mercenary presentation of Christianity appears to be a serious hindrance to some of the people, in regard to having anything to do with workers who bring them the Gospel. The medical missionary work, which once occupied four days in the week, had to be practically abandoned for want of means; but as long as this department of work lasted the people came from far and near, even from Normandy and beyond, waiting from five in the morning for admittance. This fruitful and necessary work is to be reopened as soon as funds will permit. Before these patients came to the door, faith had laid their cases before God for bodily and spiritual healing. While practical commonsense is prominent in the work, all its concerns and difficulties are laid at the feet of the Master. Under discouragement, the Lord had plainly shown that his servant holds this many-sided work for Him; and in its fruit-bearing He gives signs of his favour. A week ago five precious souls were brought to God, including a father, mother, and daughter of one family.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

THE ninety-second annual meeting of this society was held in the Mansion House on Monday, Sheriff ALLISTON presiding.

The aim of the organisation is the welfare of aged Christian poor, by means of life pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas per annum, given through the personal visits of Christian friends; a second branch of the work consists in the maintenance of four homes for those of the pensioners to whom such dwellings are a benefit; and in each sphere of its operations it is desired that the perfume of the love of Christ may permeate every gift with its sweet savour. In the pension department there are to-day 1,524 recipients, and their pensions reach to upwards of £10,600 per annum. The expenses of the four institutions amount to another £2,000 every year.

The CHAIRMAN said all could appreciate the fact that the pensions given to these aged ones constitute the difference between penury and some degree of comfort; and enable the recipients to live in the midst of their little circle of friends instead of ending their days within a workhouse. Christian sympathy and personal relations, in active operation form the objects of the society. This was one of the points of commendation mentioned by the Hon. EVELYN ASHLEY; which, as he pointed out, secures that only suitable persons are placed upon the books. The undenominational basis of the society should give it wide acceptance.

ARCHDEACON MADDEN, of Liverpool, was impressed with the fact that the society has, from its beginning, been saturated with prayer to Almighty God. Such an organisation must last and be a blessing. Its record is one to make us thank God, take courage, and stand by it in our liberal support. The connecting of the aged and the poor by the word Christian is a unique feature. Rev. J. H. HALLETT and other speakers followed.

Wild Oats.

Sown—in many a sunny field
Where flaunting poppies wave;
Reaped—where solemn yew trees shield
A mother's lonely grave!

Sown—around a happy home
And near its sheltering door;
Reaped—where weary exiles roam
Upon a foreign shore.

Sown—in morning's golden light
A full and heaped-up measure;
Reaped—amid the shades of night,
Like an ill-gotten treasure.

Sown—in wild and reckless joy,
'Midst boyhood's laughing years;
Reaped—in bitterest alloy
With manhood's burning tears.

Sown—a light wind's idle tale
So witty and so droll;
Reaped—the whirlwind's stormy wail
Over a ruined soul!

Sown—along life's broad highway
In summer's merry hours;
Reaped—in age's wintry day—
Sharp thorns instead of flowers!

Sown—while Heaven's open gate
Stood wide the soul to win;
Reaped—the dreadful words "Too late!
"Ye cannot enter in."

The sowing time all bright and fair,
With Hope behind the plough;
But oh! the harvest of Despair
That some are reaping now!

Tewkesbury. E. A. SCOTT.

In Eastern Europe.

MY last journey of over five months in the eastern parts of Europe has brought me in touch with many nationalities and many conditions of men. It has been my happy privilege to sow the seed of the Gospel in many places and in many hearts.

In Budapest and in Klausenburg I met students and others, professors offering their services as interpreters. Thence I went to Bucharest, Constanta, Rustchuk, where Germans, Russians, and Armenians congregated together to hear the joyful sound. Constantinople, Smyrna, Broussa, and Samsoon were visited, where many nationalities are scattered, and where the Gospel is proclaimed to Armenians, Turks, Greeks, and Germans. The Strangers' Rests at Constantinople and Smyrna and the orphan-houses and schools established by American missionaries and by Germans form an encouraging feature in missionary efforts. Constantinople and Smyrna are especially centres of missionary activity. The Bible House in Stamboul is the connecting link of the various branches. One cannot over-estimate the many-sided services of the American Board of Missions.

FORM A VALUABLE LINK,

Leaving Constantinople in the middle of December, I arrived in Batoum, and at Tiflis had the joy of fellowship in prayer during the first week of January, when many Russians, Germans, Armenians, and Swedes met together with one accord in many languages. The praises and prayers were very sweet, and banished brethren had a large share of interest in our prayers.

Brethren in banishment (Stundists) are not easily approachable; the police

WATCHING VERY CLOSELY

my movements as well as theirs. In some places one had to meet them at midnight in order to minister relief to them. A visit to the places of banishment was thought unadvisable, because they would be more severely dealt with after such a visit, and one had for their sake to abstain from seeing many of them. Suspicion, and in consequence close surveillance by police officials, is the rule in Russia, and has a painful effect on any stranger. One can sympathise with those who are continually watched and suspected of evil designs. Surely the Russian Government might save many of their police force if they would allow Christians the liberty of worship in their own way according to the light they have gathered from the Word of God.

From the Caucasus my tour went to South Russia, where I spent about two weeks in happy, restful service with Mennonite brethren. German is their language, and they enjoy the freedom of worship which to their Russian fellow subjects is denied, and on account of which many are suffering imprisonment and banishment.

There is great liberty enjoyed in St. Petersburg and some of the Northern provinces of Russia, and it is a joy to see the crowded assemblies and the eager for the Gospel. Some meetings amongst Esthonian, Finnish, Lettish and German, as well as Russian peoples, will not soon be forgotten; the Word of God is not unfruitful, and at times immediate results may be seen, which will multiply more and more. From Riga and Liban I returned viâ Berlin to England in the beginning of April, having found a ready entrance of the Word in very many places and in various languages, praise the Lord!

RECEPTIVENESS OF THE PEOPLE

Now the cry from many parts of the Austrian empire, "Free from Rome," touches one's heart and claims one's sympathy. What will the Lord have one to do? Even if the movement amongst Roman Catholics is somewhat political, connected with the strife of nationalities, there will be a great gain if the people are brought under scriptural teaching, the Roman Catholics having forbidden the Bible and having ruled them by priestcraft contrary to the New Testament teaching. It would be well if evangelists and teachers would go over and help the people who seek after the truth. The labours of the American Board of Missions in Bohemia and other parts of the Austrian Empire have borne much fruit and are most encouraging in their results, especially amongst the Roman Catholic populations; but there is room for many more labourers, who will go forth, in the name of the Lord, with hearts full of love to the souls of men.

I shall be grateful for the prayers of God's children for guidance as to my movements. "There is much land to be possessed!"

F. W. BAEDEKER.

Weston-super-Mare, April 28.

Among Roman Poor.

THE poverty of Rome is specially acute during the winter months; and this seems all the more sad in view of the beautiful climate and various surrounding charms. The work of Mrs. E. J. Wall, in alleviating the distress and taking the Gospel to the downtrodden people, is well known. In her report for last year Mrs. Wall says:

"My heart is stirred within me when I think of so many who come to enjoy this beautiful climate and visit the interesting ruins of this city, but never, I fear, think of the thousands who are unable to find work, and obliged to endure the sight of their poor wives and little ones starving for want of bread. Each day many of these are threatened to be turned out into the street because they cannot pay for the bit of a room, which, in numberless cases, is occupied by two or three other families as needy and miserable as themselves.

"When I reach the hall in Trastevere, where my meeting is held on Friday mornings, I see a crowd of poor old men round the door. Their sad faces brighten a little as they see me, for they know if there is half a yard of space in the hall I shall not refuse to let them in. It would require a harder heart than mine to refuse their pleading eyes. Look at them, so ragged and so dirty; many of them have no second shirt, and can you blame them for not being clean and tidy?

"It may be the last and only time they will ever listen to the sweet invitation of our blessed Lord, 'Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy-laden.' We pass the first half-hour in singing; this is what they enjoy. I always let them repeat some of their sweet verses from the Gospels, and if I find that they can remain a little longer, I read them some part in the life of Jesus.

"These meetings are held twice a week, on Wednesdays for the women and on Fridays for the men. About a hundred come to the former and over a hundred and sixty to the latter meeting. Before leaving the hall each one receives a loaf worth four sous. The poor are usually admitted by tickets, and the cases are inquired into to ascertain that they are really deserving. These poor people are visited in their homes, when they have any, but the majority sleep at the public dormitories. They frequently send us word if they go to the hospitals, and this has enabled us to comfort many of them in their dying hours. Each week the bread for the men and women costs about fifty francs."

The medical missions are an important branch of the work; and there are crèches for the little ones. The six Bible women are engaged in visitation and the distribution of sacred Scriptures. Letters to Mrs. Wall should be addressed to 35, Piazza in Lucina, Rome.

Black and White.—Another negro, who had used inflammatory expressions against the whites, was lynched in Georgia last week. Rev. Alexander Williams, the negro Methodist bishop, as president of a Methodist Conference at Jersey City, made a remarkable prediction that the continued lynchings of coloured men will lead to another bloody struggle, in which the northern whites will be called on to give their best blood to pay the penalties and crimes of the South. "Nothing," he says, "but the manly resistance of the negroes themselves will stop the atrocities. In the name of the Almighty, what are we to do but fight and die?"

International S.S. Lessons.

May 14.

"Christ betrayed and arrested."—John xviii. 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Isa. liii. 3.

LESSON CONNECTION.

WHEN Jesus had finished his last long talk with the eleven disciples, and had offered the wonderful prayer, in John xvii., He led them through the city. The streets would still be busy with preparations for the great festival; lights streaming from the doors of many houses. It was about midnight, when the Temple gates were thrown open. Let the scholars turn to the parallel accounts, Matt. xxvi. 30-56, Mark xiv. 26-50, Luke xxii. 39-54, and keep their Bibles open at these places for reference.

In the meantime Judas had been busy with his arrangements (Luke xxii. 3-6). Some think that Judas never conceived that Jesus would submit to be taken, but would manifest to all then who He was.

EXPLANATORY.

Verse 1. KEDRON means "black" and "cedar trees;" it was a winter torrent dashing through a dark ravine. "Gethsemane" means "an oil-press;" it was a gentleman's olive-garden; doubtless a press was in it, in which the oil was extracted from the olives. Jesus left eight disciples to watch near the gate, three He took with Him further into the garden; then asking them to keep praying for Him, He retired to fight the great battle alone, to bear the darkness and agony indescribable, alone. Refer to the other three Gospels, and gather all the sad story.

Verses 2, 3. One of the Lord's favourite resorts for quiet and prayer. Most probably Judas and his company went to the upper room first. There would be, probably, at least 200 soldiers, besides all the officers or Jewish policemen from the Temple, and a great crowd of people; torches, lanterns, swords, clubs, bludgeons; all come to take the gentle loving Jesus. (Picture the scene, and Judas' kisses).

Verses 4, 5. Jesus was strong now. Why? (Luke xxii. 43). His prayer was answered, and the great victory gained; He could go calmly on to the death. Picture his calm, fearless majesty as He asks the question. "I AM" to the Jewish ears was the name for Jehovah.

Verses 6 and 7. Something in the look of the Saviour which overawed them; they all knew what wonderful things He could do, and perhaps feared He would strike them all dead. Judas and all fell backwards. (Refer to Matt. xxvi. 53, 54.)

Verses 8 and 9. They had no warrant to take the disciples. Their lives were needed afterwards to testify to Christ. Where do we find this saying? (John xvii. 12.)

Verses 10 and 11. Peter, rash and hasty, not really courageous. How do we know this? This act compromised the Lord, would make Him appear the rebel they pretended He was. He asked the soldiers to delay binding Him for a minute while He restored the ear.

Note the Saviour's perfect submission to his Father's will.

Verses 12-14. Annas was the old High Priest who had been deposed from his office by the Romans. He had great influence. It is most likely that Annas and Caiaphas lived in different parts of the same palace. (See John xi. 47-53.)

LESSONS TO BE EMPHASISED.

1. Contrast the transactions in the two gardens, Eden and Gethsemane, and their great results.

2. Jesus was not obliged to suffer and die. 'Twas "out of pity Jesus said, He'd bear the punishment instead."

3. The punishment of sin is separation from the Heavenly Father. Christ's agony was bearing the weight of our sins with God hiding his face from Him.

4. All this was for me. His suffering was caused by my sin.

5. The tender love and kindness of Jesus, healing the ear of his enemy, and he only a slave.

6. Christ's care for his disciples. His thought for others in the time of peril.

7. Contrast the characters, Jesus, Judas, Disciples.

8. We can trust this Saviour, for He never lost one who truly trusted in Him.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Spring Tongues.

BY REV. JOHN MITCHELL,
Author of "Silver Tongues," &c.

"I SPRING up," said the tiny blade of grass, as it peeped on the world for the first time in its life, "and how delightful it is to enjoy the warmth of the sun, and to breathe the fresh air from heaven! God is good even to little things like me. He is very great, and therefore is careful of what others would overlook. Who but God would number the hairs of your heads? Men often measure the greatness of things by their size, but God measures according to their real value and usefulness. A soul which is not reckoned of so much value as the body in which it dwells is considered very precious in the sight of God. Out of his vast riches He gave the highest possible price that it might be redeemed. Men often sell it for a few simple pleasures, and will not think of the misery that is sure to follow so wicked a deed. I hope the young people who hear my voice will commit their souls to the Saviour who loves them, and who gave his life for them. And then joy will spring up in their hearts.

"Now look at my colour, and remember that green speaks of hope and peace. Spring is the brightest season of the year, and seems to say to the sorrowful ones, 'Hope for happier days; weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. Trust God and you shall yet praise Him.' The rainbow of which you read in the last book of the New Testament was green, 'like unto an emerald.' Not only was there hope for a blessed future, but an assurance that all storms of temptation and sorrow were over and eternal peace begun. The Christian has a foretaste of that peace on earth.

Peace, perfect peace, in this dark world of sin
The blood of Jesus whispers peace within."

"I spring up," said the sweet-scented violet, "to do my best to give a little extra joy to mankind. I really lose nothing by doing so, and even if I did, that would be no good reason why I should not do my duty. We flowers are never selfish.

"I am a humble flower, and do not hold my head so high as one of my neighbours, but then he has no fragrance to send forth; and, therefore, his way of cheering men is to be pleasing to the eye. You see there are differences of gifts in flowers, as in men."

"And I spring up, too," said the water as it bubbled up and rolled down the hill. "I spring up to give drink to man and beast. You think I am small and scarcely worth noticing, but I am the source of that great river which fertilises the country, and on which big vessels sail out to the open sea. And is it not true of men that when they drink of the Living Stream which Jesus gives, it becomes in them a well of water springing up into everlasting life? The life consecrated to Christ, and springing up with heavenly love, like a mighty river, rolls on to be a blessing to untold multitudes."

"I spring up above you all," said the butterfly, as he arose from his winter's sleep; "and, oh, how changed I am! A few months ago, I could only crawl on the ground, and had no respect from girls or boys. Girls jumped and screamed when they saw me, and some boys were not much better. Now I have wings, and am happy in flying above the earth; and children are delighted to see me, and clap their hands for joy. Preachers say that a new and more glorious life awaits all people who have given their hearts to the Lord Jesus, and that one day they shall soar beyond the fogs of earth until they reach a land of pure and perfect joy, where they will be changed into the image of Christ, and be like Him for ever. How foolish are those people who prefer to have their minds taken up with the things of earth, and set their affections on a world which will soon pass away! There is no glorious change for them. All they have to look for is the blackness of darkness! But you do not want a long sermon from a butterfly, so I will say 'Good-bye! and fly away to kiss the lovely flowers on the hillside."

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Grantham, May 5; Hale, Altrincham, May 6-7; Liverpool, May 7-8; Bolton, May 9; Heaton Chapel, May 11; Manchester, May 12; Smithills, Bolton, May 13-14; Sheffield, May 15; Bradford, May 16; Hellifield, May 17-18; Clapham, near Ingleton, May 19; Pershore and neighbourhood, May 20-25; Leominster, May 26; Malvern, May 27-28; Mr. J. Spiers, Cora Exchange, York, May 4-19; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Norwich, to May 17; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Liverpool, May 8; Manchester, May 10; Bolton, May 12; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Hemyock, Devon, from April 28; Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Staplehurst, Kent, from May 7.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 174).

Fill in the missing words, giving chapter and verse. The initials of these words read downwards form the name of one of the Apostles.

1. To ——— he gave five changes of raiment (Gen. xliv.-xlvi.).
2. Five kings of the ——— encamped before Gibeon (Josh. ix.-xi.).
3. Abigail made haste and took five sheep ——— dressed (1 Sam. xxiv.-xxvi.).
4. Five kings gathered ——— together (Josh. ix.-xi.).
5. Five of you shall chase an ——— (Lev. xxiv.-xxvi.).
6. Five smooth stones ——— (1 Sam. xvi.-xviii.).
7. There is a ——— here with five barley loaves (John iv.-viii.).
8. I have bought five yoke of ——— (Luke xii.-xv.).
9. He was five years old when tidings came of Saul and Jonathan. His name was ——— (2 Sam. iii.-vi.).
10. Benaiah slew an ——— five cubits high (1 Chron. ix.-xi.).
11. Five of them were ——— (Matt. xxiii.-xxvi.).

[Children under ten do any four; between ten and thirteen, any seven.]

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S SEARCHER (No. 173).

1. Hebrews vi. 18.
2. Hebrews xi. 6.
3. Luke xvii. 1.
4. Acts ii. 24.
5. Hebrews x. 4.
6. Luke xvi. 13.
7. "The things which are impossible with men are possible with God" (Luke xviii. 27). "Who then can be saved?" (Luke xviii. 26).

No. 173.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Violet Ashworth*, Ralph and Dora Aldwinckle, Owen* and Arnold* Akers, Jennie Almond*, Gladys Allan*, Zeldah Albert*, Enderby Anderson*.
B—Lily* and Florence* Blackman, Phyllis Boyd, Ella Berryman*, Rose Butler*, Eleanor Bennett, M. and Ella Burton, Charlie Banks*, Alan Banks, Dorothy Billings, Herbert Braddon*, Mabel Birney, Evelyn*, Dorothy and Sylvia Barrett, Gordon* and May* Bligh, Gertrude and Edith* Badham, William Berwick.
C—Nora Clarke, J. A. Chamberlain, Dorothy Cooper, David* and John* Colville, Lydia Cleary* Charlotte Crowe, Edith Clarence, Edie Chevallier*, Lily Church*, Lois Craven*, Brereton and Kathleen Code, Augusta Clark, Bertha Courtenay, Anna Chanyen, Ida* and Mabel Cole*, Kathleen Carey-Brenton*.
D—John Davies, D. Daintree, Mary Driscoll*, Cecil Davis, Kitty*, Ivy*, and Violet Donaldson-Selby, Willie Davies, Lucy Davidson*, Violet Dodsworth, Stanley Drew*, Constance, Hilda, Elizabeth and G. Drayson, Nellie Dowsett*, Margaret Duke, Polognia Daws*.
E—Muriel and Miriam Ecroyd.
F—Temperance Foskett*, Mabel* and Vincent* Fleet.
G—Irene and Olive* Grandy, Alice Goad, Clarice* and Bertie* Gale, Gracie Grout, Irene and Kathleen* Gough, William Gale*.
H—Ruth Hinder*, Beatrice Hastings*, Beatrice Harland, Edith Holms, Eric and M. T. Hill*, Elsie Hanson*, Jennie Holmes*, Hetty Hill*, Elsie Hatcher*, John Harkess*, Nellie Hatchett*, Theodora Hill*.
J—Thomas Johnson, Conrad Jones, Betty Jacobs.
K—Helen and Elsie* Knight, Nellie Keeley, Lily Kinvig*, Eva* and Max* Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky.
L—Blanche Lindup*, Sidney, May, Edward and Henry Law, Margaret Lee*, Gertrude Lambert*.
M—Charles and G. Macdonald, Marie Meek, Mabelle Mountstephen*, May Mills, A. B., O. L., Lewis* and Grace* Morice, Annie Moule*, Marion Maran*, Dorothy and Elsie* McMullin, Winifred and Daisy Martin, Hedley Meader*, Mabel Mackay.
N—Mary and H. Neligan, Valerie Noel, George Nash.
P—Leonard, Kate* and Walter Picknell, Eva* and Lillie Petter, Alice Palmer, W. and Louie Penny, John Pearce*, Gladys* and Grace Palmer, Lizzie Pratt*, Lilian Pearson*, Ruth Patient*, Hattie and Evelyn Peters, Kathleen Pincott, Myrtle and Melbourne Perry.
R—Winifred Roberts, Joan and James Ready, Ivor Rickers, Kate Rosenbloom*, Harry Robinson, Alice Reid.
S—Betty Stocks, Jessie* and Ada* Snowball, Alan Symon, Daisy Stanger*, Joseph Stephens, Flora Simmons*, Edgar Stocker, Dryll, Fred, and Amy Stileman, Laura Standen*, Annie Shelley, Margery Smart, Mabel Sharp, Mary Seed, Douglas and Kathleen* Shepherd, Dorothy and Bertha Symons, Cicely Sherbrooke, Esther Simmons*, Solomon Stockfish, Philip Southam, Bessie Shepherd*, Douglas Stevens.
T—Olive Taylor*, A. P., Peverill, and Derwent Turnbull, Theodora Thorn*, Frank Tomkins, Ethel Taylor.
U—Queenie Upton*.
V—Rosetta Viccars*, Edwin and May Vickers.
W—Sydney Wallace, Emily Warton*, Cecile*, Noel*, and Phillis* Wright, Sydney Wisdom, Dorothy White*, Ibia Woodman, Digby and Greta* Watson, Florence Wild, Sarah and Annie Wood, Robert and Thomas Weddell, Edward and Edith Wheeler.
Y—Eva* and Gladys Young.

No. 172.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Percy Allen, Victor Armstrong, John Adams, George Arthur, William and Frances Allen, W. Aldous*.
B—Mabel Bailey, Stanley and Lily* Boxer, Leonard*, Corbet* and Lindsay Browne, Henriette Bardot, Ernestine Buhl, Lucienne Brabandes, Alcina* and Leonard* Bentall, Ashley Bowker*, Albert Baker, Clara Barnes, Ralph Browne, Lilian Bowman*, Mabel Birney Eva Browne*, Gordon Boxer, Colin and George Brown, Ruth and Rhoda Braithwaite, Cyril and Rex Bultcel, Dorothy Berry, Hannah Bridgman, Ethel and John Benger.
C—Ethel Craigie, Gladys Calvert, Charles, Mabel* and Isabel* Candlin, Edith* and Dora* Corrie, Joan Clarke, Beryl Calvert, Henry Cheney*, Maggie*, Jessie* and Walter* Carter, Richard Cornthwaite*, Mary and Willie Charles, Susie Cumbers, Bessie Cheale*, Dorothy Clarke*, Alice Crang*, Bertha Courtenay, Nora Clarke, Nellie and Janie Crawford.
D—Cecil Darley, Ivy, Violet and Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Blossom Davis, Mai Davidson, Gordon Duncan*, Mary Denisot, Dorothy and Marjory* Dyke, Faith and Phyllis Duncan, Harold Davis, William Dilly*, Constance Devenish-Meares*, Hattie Disney*.
E—Muriel* and Miriam Ecroyd, Muriel Edwards*, Maud Eddey*.
F—Hyacinth FitzSimons*, Elsie Forbes* Louise Filhol, Jeanne Faucon, Janet Fawkes, Flossy*, Maggie*, Agnes* and Lewis* Fullarton, Maggie*, Mabel*, Kate* and Eva* Fletcher, Marian Freegard*, Agnes and Muriel Fry, Richard and Lawrence Farmer, Helen Forbes, Blanche*, Bessie* and Mary* Freeman, Ernest, Arthur* and Reginald Findlay, James Freegard.
G—Mary Ginson, R. Gifford*, Margaret*, Edith*, Stuart*, Jack*, and Dorothy Gray, Evelyn and Minnie Giddings, Edith Grieve, Alfred and Frank Gibbs, Maude Gresham*, Nancy* and Dorothy* Grove, Harry Gribble, Dorothy Garfit, Agnes Grierson*, Gordon and Mildred* Greenwood, David Gardiner*, Aileen Gardner, Mary Glass*, Thos. Groombridge, Ernest, Daisy, and Hedley George.
H—Edith and Winifred* Harvey, Kathleen Hughes*, Sandy and May* Handasyde, Helen* and Harcourt Hunter, Ella Hake, Marjorie Hogge, Freda and Mary Haines, Georgette Hoffmann, Violet Holford, Rosie Hamilton*, Francie* and Florence* Hoyte, John Harkess*, Freda Hunton, Ruth Harrison*, Ethel Hutchings*, Gladys and Netta Hussey.
I—John Ireland*, Ami* and Isabel Inglis.
J—Agnes* and Conrad Jones, Thomas Johnson, Lizzie Johnstone*, Norman* and Kate* Johns, Emily Joynes*.
K—Jeanie Kyle, Tessa Knowles*, Philippa*, Grace* and Dorothy* Kerr, Willie*, Alex*, Agnes*, Thomas* and Isa* Kay, Flossie Key*.
L—Edith, Linda, Harry, James and Norah Lowe, Murray and Grahame Lloyd, Mary Lindsay, Henry Laing*, Harriet Lynham*, Carrie Learmouth, Hannah Lovell*, Bertie and Gertie Lockington.
M—Olive* and Lois* Mewburn, Dora Muir, Barbara* and J.* Maconchy, Bessie and Charlotte* Millar, W. C. Mallinson*, Ethel*, F., Dalsie and Tita Mackenzie, Christina Marshall, Louisa Merritt, Kathleen McClure, Margaret Macphee, Dora Marples, Edith Marnham, Edith Monet*, Abraham and Bella Mack, Mabelle Mountstephen, Lewis McGregor*, Margaret and Dorothy* Morris, Charlie and Frank Medcalf, Howard* and Arthur* Moir, John and Ella MacMurray, Mildred* and Ethel Morgan, Daisy*, Nellie* and Annie* Mackenzie, Annie Macnair*, Mary* and Valerie* Maitland-Kirwan, L. Mace, Hilda Medill*, Margie Marston, Harry and Bruce Malaher.
N—Maude and Amy Nottage, Cissy, Peter and John Nicholson, Herbert Newton*.
O—George O'Beirne* Sidney and Katie* Oliver, Maude and Eve Oakes, Lottie*, Harriette* and Mina Orr.
P—Willie Petter, Clarice* and Percy Peach, Elsie Parnell* Edith Purkiss, Daisy Phillips*, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Walter Perryman, Winnie Page*, M. and W. Penny, Violet Phillips*, Laura Percy*, Daisy, May, and Vera Petrides, Ada, Jessie, Winnie*, and Willie* Palmer.
R—Gwennie Ravenhill, Ivor Rickers*, Nora Road, Evelyn Rashley, Harry Robinson, Marjorie and Herbert Rainey, A. M., Cyril, and Gordon Roberts, May Reed, Marion and Gussie* Roach.
S—Bessie Symes*, Margery Smart, Amy* and Fred Stileman, Bertha Stocker, Violet Salvesen, Neil Saylor*, Marie Sleigh*, Gwendoline*, Undine*, Wilfred, Mervyn, Gladys and Eric Shaw, Muriel*, Rosetta and Ivy* Sherwin, Herbert Stocker, T.M. and D.D. Stanier, Annette and Cecil Stirling, Elsie Slark*, Florrie Smith*, Edith Saunderson*, Hilda Schaeffer, Bessie Scantlebury*, Susie* and Emma* Sutton, Violet Shaw, Effie* and Nellie* Sery, Dorothy Shaw*, Ronald Studd, Dollie Salt.
T—Alice Truelove*, Annie Taylor, Ethel Taylor*, Herbert and Laurence Turnbull, John Thomson*, Olive Trench, Olive Tritton*, Herbert and Frank Tomkins, Sarah Tyson*, Marjorie Tracey, Louie Tibbits*.
U—Queenie Upton*.
V—Dorothy Vigers.
W—Leonard Wall, Myra Webb, Connie Wood*, Amy* and Charles* Wingrave, Bertie Walls, Georgina and James Wilson, Ella Williamson*, Evelyn Wood, Dorothy Woodforde, Lissa*, Violet*, and Arthur Walker, Annie Watkinson*, Pringle Wilson*, Ernest and Kenrick Wakeford, Helen and Fred Webb, Edith and Edward Wheeler, Elsie and Gladys Willoughby, Winnie and Charles Williams.

FOREIGN LIST.

PRIZE COMPETITION.—Katie T. Thomson, 1st Prize, Div. II. Ina F. W. Thomson, 1st Cert., Div. I. Nettie E. Thomson, 1st Cert., Div. III. Willie D. Thomson, 2nd Cert., Div. IV.

Nos. 153, 157, 159—E. Selby Little (China). No. 163—Mary, Graham and Christine Pearson. No. 165—Maria and Cuckoo Lister. No. 166—Daisy McArthur, Launcelot Knight. No. 167—Launcelot Knight. No. 168—Rotha, Lottie and Ivan St. George. No. 170—Willie, Nettie and Kate Thomson.

Personal.

MANY thanks for box of primroses and leaflets received. Please do not enclose papers with flowers again,; they absorbed the moisture from the flowers, which arrived withered.

EVELYN MOIR.—Many thanks for your lovely flowers. You had given the wrong Psalm in question 5.

DOROTHY GROVE.—Thank you for your letter, and for letting me know your new address.

J. W. NELIGAN had three references incorrect in No. 172.

KATIE OLIVER, NELLIE KNIGHT.—Many happy returns of your birthday.

GLADYS CALVERT.—Your answer to the last question was wrong.

FRANCES ALLSOP.—Thank you for your letter. You gave no chapter to No. 7, John gave no chapter to No. 3, and Henry gave the wrong chapter to No. 9 in 170.

VERA SJÖSTRÖM.—Both of you had wrong answers to the "Searchers" you name.

ADELE EVEREST.—Many thanks for the pincushions sent. They will be forwarded to Miss Weston.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending May 13.

Sun.,	May	7	Eph.	ii.	1-10	Thurs.,	May	11	Eph. iv. 1-16
Mon.,	,,	8	,,	ii.	11-22	Fri.,	,,	12	,, iv. 17-32
Tues.,	,,	9	,,	iii.	1-12	Sat.,	,,	13	,, v. 1-16
Wed.,	,,	10	,,	iii.	13-21

HALF-YEARLY MEETINGS AND CONFERENCES OF SCRIPTURE UNION SECRETARIES.—Hope Hall, Liverpool, May 8 (4 and 7.30); Central Hall, off Deansgate, Bolton, May 9 (7.30); Strangeways Hall, Manchester, May 12 (3 and 6.30); Y.M.C.A. Hall, Sheffield, May 15 (5 and 7.30); Church Institute, Bradford, May 16 (7.30).

Blind and Crippled Children.

AMONG the multitudes of slum children who are every year sent to the seaside and inland holiday homes, none have a stronger claim upon the practical sympathy of the charitable public than the blind and crippled who are found in incredible numbers huddled away in the pestilential courts and alleys of our great city. Their pitiable condition, added to their extreme poverty and destitution, renders their case sad in the extreme, and anything that can be done to send but a ray of sunshine into the dreary lives of these sightless and helpless little ones is a boon indeed.

We have erected at our village orphanage at Clacton-on-Sea a suitable holiday retreat for these suffering children. It is specially fitted up, with a due regard to their safety and comfort. They are sent down in batches of twenty or more all through the fine weather, and it would be extremely difficult to exaggerate the great benefits derived even from a short stay at this bracing seaside resort. Ten shillings will defray the entire cost of each child for a fortnight, including railway fare. I feel satisfied that many readers will count it a joy to participate in this good work.

JOHN ALFRED GROOM,
Secretary Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission,
8, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

	£	s.	d.
Uncle Tom's Cot—C.A.R., 3s.; M.J., £1; E.P.P., 1s.; Miss B.G., 3s; M.D., 2s. 6d.; Grandma and V.A., 2s. 6d.; Dora, 5s.; L.C., 2s.; M.E. and D.V., 1s.; Children, Kingsdown Orphanage, 3s.; Dorothy C., 1s.; K.L. and W.P., 1s.	2	5	0

Evangelistic.

MR. JAMES WHARTON continues to witness blessing accompanying the preaching of the Word in the Southern States. Upon young and old the Spirit of the Lord has been poured out, especially in the coloured churches, souls having been blessed at each place visited.

A very helpful ten days' mission has been concluded by Mr. HENRY THORNE at Brunswick Congregational Chapel, Bristol (pastor, Rev. Alexander Wilson). The meetings were of growing interest and power, and the best were the last. Several scores of young people entered the inquiry rooms.

Mr. HENRY BRAY, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a three weeks' mission in Bramblebury Hall, Wandsworth. Many unconverted have professed to receive the truth with joy; and Christians have been stirred by the earnest appeals of the preacher. The work at the hall, though only seven weeks old, has been owned of God in a wonderful way.

The BROTHERS WEAVER have concluded a most helpful mission in Dumbarton in connection with the Free High Church. The meetings grew in attendance and in interest every night, and on the Sabbaths the church was crowded to its utmost capacity. Mr. Bewley Weaver's straight, earnest appeals were used in the arresting and quickening of many, and the singing of Mr. Frank Weaver was a great attraction. He is possessed of a beautiful voice, which he uses with telling power. A goodly number professed decision in the course of the ten days, and many have been round to a new interest and activity. Altogether the mission has proved a great blessing to the town.

Woodford Green Congregational Church and Woodford Union Church have been richly blessed by a mission, conducted by Mr. R. W. Lane, from April 15 to 24. The common feeling is one of praise to God for his great mercy and goodness. The enthusiasm which Mr. Lane evoked seemed to increase meeting by meeting and day by day. On Sunday morning he preached in the Union Church. In the afternoon a mass meeting for men only was held at the Congregational Church in connection with the P.S.A., and it is estimated that some 600 men must have been present to listen to what was, perhaps, the most forceful and impressive address Mr. Lane has given in the course of his mission at Woodford. Mr. Lane will re-visit Woodford in the course of the next month.

Evangelists' Engagements.

MR. W. R. LANE.—Till May 8, Bishop's Stortford; 13-21, Sidcup: 27-June 5, Brockley.

MR. E. P. TELFORD.—May 21-28, Bromley. During June, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End.

MRS. E. L. BAEYERTZ.—May 7-22, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

MR. JAS. SPRUNT.—Till May 14, Pulborough; 21-28, Billinghurst.

MR. NEWTON JONES.—May 7, 8, Chester; 14, 15, Huntingdon; 21, Oxford; 27-29, Bedford.

REV. F. C. SPURR (Missioner of the Baptist Union).—Till May 7, Onslow Chapel, Brompton, S.W., daily at 3.15 and 8.

MR. W. D. DUNN.—Till May 12, Banchory.

MR. HENRY THORNE.—Till May 8, Sunderland; 13 and 21, South Croydon; 27-June 5, Ramsden Road, Balham; 11 and 12, Wimbledon.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday, May 7, at 7, and Thursday, May 11, at 8, Mr. P. H. Thompson; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sunday, May 7, at 7, and Thursday, May 11, at 8, Mr. J. G. McVicker.

MR. J. J. SCROGGIE.—Till May 15, Park Hall, Barking.

MR. W. R. BRADLAUGH.—May 7-12, Longton, Staffs.

BROTHERS WEAVER.—May 7-13, Langholm; 14-26, Paisley.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. GEORGE FRANCE, for over fifty years rector of Brockdish, Norfolk, at the age of eighty-three.—Rev. P. S. WRIGHT, emeritus-minister of the United Presbyterian Church, Forfar.—MRS. JANE MASON, one of the original members of Amble Congregational Church, has died at the age of eighty-two.—Mr. DAVID EVANS, of Tabernacle Congregational Church, Haverfordwest, aged seventy-one. He was from his childhood to his death connected with the Sunday school, and for many years its treasurer.—Dr. WM. FRAZER, of Dublin, for thirty-two years an elder in the church at Ormond Quay. He was mainly the instrument in establishing a home for poor Presbyterian women, and was associated with the late Dr. Johnston in founding the Orphan Society.—Mr. DANIEL PEIRSON, of Hertford, has died at the age of eighty-two. He was a minister among Friends, and founded the Hertford Town Mission.—Mr. JOHN RENNISON, of Darlington, in his seventy-fourth year. Not only as a local preacher, but also as an active philanthropist in many directions Mr. Rennison had earned a high reputation.—At Sixmilecross, co. Tyrone, Rev. THOS. W. JUNE, Presbyterian minister. He took an active part in the great revival of 1859.—At Ballycastle, co. Antrim, Mr. THOS. MCCALL, a native of Scotland, and a devoted Presbyterian elder.—At Tobermore, co. Derry, Mr. RICHARD WILKINSON, an earnest and liberal member of the Presbyterian Church.—At Ballynine, co. Antrim, Mr. ROBERT BEATTY, for many years an earnest Methodist class leader and Christian worker.—Rev. R. J. KNIGHT, vicar of Throwley, Kent, aged seventy-five. He was an uncompromising Evangelical, and the Church Missionary Society loses in him a very earnest supporter.—MRS. RANDALL, wife of the Bishop Suffragan of Reading, died at her residence, Christ Church, Oxford, on Saturday last.—The Established Church of Scotland has lost a well-known and scholarly minister in Rev. Dr. MILROY, who has been minister of Moneydie since 1858.

About Books.

AN attractive poem on a sublime theme is Waiting for the King, by Richard Hayes McCartney. (50cents. Fleming H. Revell, Chicago.)

Messrs. Partridge & Co. are issuing some stories specially timely in these days of Romish activity and tendencies—the first two being St. Mary's Convent; or, Chapters in the Life of a Nun, by Jeanie Selina Dammast; and The Last Look: a Tale of the Spanish Inquisition, by W. H. G. Kingston (1s. each).

The inaugural Lees and Raper Memorial Lecture, delivered in November last by Dean Farrar, has been issued in volume form by Nisbet & Co. It is entitled Temperance Reform; as required by National Righteousness and Patriotism. (1s. 6d.) The pages are at once informing and fervent, and we trust they will do much to advance the good cause.

Fifty years ago Sir J. William Dawson gave a very useful course of lectures on temperance in Nova Scotia. The substance of the lectures was embodied in a pamphlet, Testimony of the Scriptures respecting Wine and Strong Drink, which has gone through two editions, and is now reissued in revised form. Temperance reformers will find the pages of special service. (1s. Montreal: F. E. Grafton & Sons.)

A capital work in its line, and in every way suited to promote intelligent interest in the celebration of the tercentenary of the birth of the Lord Protector of the Commonwealth, is—Oliver Cromwell and His Times; Social, Religious, and Political Life in the Seventeenth Century. By G. Holden Pike. (6s. T. Fisher Unwin.) Amply illustrated, and written by one in full sympathy with Puritan ideals, this sketch should have many readers.

A manual which will be welcome to many is—Pain Quotidien pour le Peuple de Dieu: Textes Tirés des Saintes Ecritures—Ancien Testament. (1fr. 50c. Geneva and Basle: Librairie Georg & Co.) There are three or more texts for each day, the first in the original Hebrew as well as French. Designed in particular for Christian Israelites, the passages selected deal largely with the glory of the latter days. For mission purposes, the book may be had on special terms from M. Dardier, Société Evangélique, rue Tabazan, Geneva.

The Church Association has issued a searching pamphlet from the pen of that authority on Reformed Church history, Mr. J. T. Tomlinson, entitled Lay Judges in Church Courts. (1s. J. F. Shaw & Co.) It examines the Primates' Ecclesiastical Procedure Bill, and declares it to be subversive of the Reformation. There is also a very useful analysis of the report of the Ecclesiastical Courts Commission of 1883. The pages are the result of much research, and characterised by acute reasoning throughout.

A publication which will have special interest for members of the Free Churches is Proceedings of the Fourth National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches, held at Liverpool March 14 to 18, 1899. Giving addresses and discussions in full, this report of combined and varied deliberations on the part of Christians representing several communions, should do something to promote continued and enlarging intercourse on an interdenominational basis. (2s. net. Thomas Law, Memorial Hall, E.C.)

Anything from the pen of Rev. Thomas Champness is sure of a hearty welcome. His little book, How the Flail Became a Sword, derives its title from a lively and instructive discourse on Gideon. The book also contains other "Tales of Adventure from the Old Book," some treated at length and some with brevity, but all of them with point and to excellent practical purpose. Evangelists and others will find helpful material in these pages. (1s. Rochdale: "Joyful News" Depôt; London: Wesleyan Sunday School Union.)

Thoughts of God and the Soul, by Agnes Threlfall, is a volume of fragments, which originally saw the light in "The King's Highway" and "Joyful News." They are from the heart of one who for thirty years has been visiting the sick and dying, and who well says in the introduction: "I knew what God was to me as a little child—that his gentleness was wonderful. But for our joy to be complete, we must know what He is to others." Whether in verse or not, these pages are all poetry—spiritually beautiful. (Rochdale: "Joyful News" Book Depôt.)

The Memoir of Rev. William Rogers, M.A., LL.D., minister of Whiteabbey Presbyterian Church, Ireland, has been prepared by his intimate friend, Rev. Robert Barron, of Whitehouse, Belfast. (2s. 6d. Belfast: Religious Tract & Book Depôt.) The book is chiefly a history of the spiritual life of Dr. Rogers, who was an exemplary Christian man and an earnest Gospel minister. The pages not only unfold a story full of interest and profit, but include a number of choice addresses and sermons. "Thoughts on the Spiritual Life" is a deeply instructive section of the book.

Students of missions will find much that is interesting in Founders and Pioneers of Modern Missions, a series of sketches of Carey and his friends and helpers. These men either arose in or were associated with the county of Northampton; and in addition to portraits this book gives many engravings of places of historic interest. To such as are acquainted with the promoters of the Baptist Missionary Society and early workers in India, Jamaica, and other fields, this book will have a special attraction. The sketches are from the pen of Rev. Dr. Culross and Mr. John Taylor, a Northampton antiquary. (3s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell & Co., 17, Paternoster Row.)

Messrs. Clay & Sons have issued from the Cambridge University Press Warehouse a facsimile edition of the Codex Bezae Cantabrigiensis (in two volumes, containing 830 pages. Price 12gs. net). As is well known, this codex contains the four Gospels and Acts of the Apostles in Greek and Latin, and is preserved in the Cambridge University Library, being generally known as Codex Bezae or Codex D. M. Paul Dujardin, of Paris, has reproduced the manuscript, with marvellous precision, by the process known as "heliogravure." It is believed that this process has not yet been used for the reproduction entire of so large a volume.

Dr. H. Grattan Guinness has made an important contribution to Biblical study in his latest work, Key to the Apocalypse; or, The Seven Interpretations of Symbolic Prophecy. (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). The Apocalypse is regarded as the New Testament sequel to the Book of Daniel, the introductory vision in which—that of the image, the stone, and the mountain—is a grand outline or framework, in which the details of all subsequent prophecies find a place. Five Divinely-given interpretations are found in Daniel and two in the Revelation; and these, as Dr. Guinness shows, open up the entire volume of prophecy as given in the closing book of the New Testament. It would be difficult to name a more useful introduction to prophetic study.

Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have issued a new and cheap edition of Coulson Kernahan's GOD AND THE ANT (1d.) and A DEAD MAN'S DIARY (6d.)

A brightly-written story free from the affectation and flightiness that characterise so many tale books, is IN SELF DEFENCE, by Julia Hack. (1s. 6d. Partridge & Co.)

JOB: AN APPRECIATION, by Rev. J. Hunt Cooke, is a pamphlet full of thought and power. (2d. S. H. Burrows & Co., 21 and 22, Furnival Street, E.C.)

IN UNPAINTED PICTURES (1s. Eliot Stock) Mr. H. N. Burgh gives us a small number of fragments in blank verse, spiritual, and polished, but slight even to fragility.

Messrs. Newnes have issued as new volumes in their "penny library," Rev. C. M. Sheldon's HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER, RICHARD BRUCE, and WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

HOW TO TEACH CHILDREN, a stirring discourse by Pastor Archibald G. Brown, based on Deut. vi. 6-9, has been issued in booklet form by R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet-st. (1d.)

A penny pamphlet on a subject of urgent present day importance is THE LORD'S SUPPER: What it is and for Whom it is. By Rev. F. C. Spurr. (1d. Baptist Tract and Book Society, 16, Gray's Inn Road, W.C.)

SACRED SONGS OF THE WORLD, translated from 120 languages, and edited by the late Rev. Henry C. Leonard, M.A., is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock as ready for immediate publication. This collection is the fruit of many years' study, ethnological, literary, and theological.

Mr. E. Kaufman, 5 and 6, Paternoster Square, has published intaglio cards, the one with morning lines, ANOTHER DAY FOR JESUS, and the other with evening lines, ANOTHER DAY WITH JESUS (3d. each). To say that the poet is Miss Mercedes Rivolta is a sufficient indication of the beauty and spirituality of the thought and expression.

Bishop Thoburn has a new book in the press, entitled THE CHURCH OF PENTECOST. Among its twenty-three chapters are found thoughtful discussions of such topics as Christian Communism, the Gifts of Pentecost, the Baptism of the Spirit, New Testament Prophecy, Church Polity, Social Life and Worship, Evangelists, the Bible of Pentecost, and other themes of kindred importance.

Midland Free Churches.—Some very interesting and helpful village conventions have been recently held in connection with the West Midland Federation of Evangelical Free Churches. These gatherings have tended to strengthen and unite the little companies of Free Church Christians scattered among the villages, and to help on all good efforts for the evangelisation and uplifting of the people.

London Medical Mission.—This energetic organisation, which has its headquarters in Short's Gardens, St. Giles', one of the most squalid districts of the metropolis, presents an annual report full of interest. A more interested and attentive spirit of hearing has been manifested; Christians have had their spiritual life quickened, and unsaved ones have been aroused, and in some instances blessed. Gospel Mission, Sunday School, the invalid kitchen, Bible classes, and many other departments have been much owned. During the past year many young ladies have joined for practical instruction in nursing and visiting. They are taught bandaging, first aid to the wounded, how to treat ulcers and simple diseases. Communications should be addressed to Dr. Henry Soltau, Superintendent, 33 and 34, Short's Gardens, Endell Street, St. Giles', W.C.

Obituary.

MRS. REGINALD RADCLIFFE

WITH much sorrow we have to announce the death of Mrs. Radcliffe at her residence in Waterloo, Liverpool, on Sunday evening. As we intimated last week, she had been suffering for some months past, and had taken a serious turn for the worse. Hopes and prayers that she might recover were destined to be disappointed, and now she has passed away to rejoin her beloved husband, whose memory she did so much to perpetuate, through her delightfully written biography of him. Mrs. Radcliffe was herself a devoted and experienced worker, and many good causes will miss her earnest help and counsel. Her surviving family, especially her daughter, will have the sincere sympathy of a large circle of friends.

MRS. DOROTHEA AGNES HILL.

Dorothea Agnes, the beloved wife of Richard Harris Hill, fell asleep in Jesus, after a very brief illness, on Thursday, April 20, at St. Keverne, Bromley, Kent. She was laid to rest in Bromley Cemetery on April 24.

Unseen by mortal sight, there came a hand
To touch her eyes.
She slept; and now upon the Golden Strand
Beyond the skies,
An unclothed spirit bows before the Throne
And joins the throng
Of myriad blood-washed ones God calls his own,
'Midst seas of song.
So, Saviour, 'twas thy will that she should rest
And with Thee dwell.
We bow to Thee—it is, it must be best—
Farewell, farewell. S. T. F.

The Shaftesbury Institute.

WRITING from the Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson Grove, W., Miss Meredith Brown says: "For long it has been our heart's desire to provide better accommodation for our deaconesses, who are giving their lives to the work, and whose rest is continually disturbed by street fights after the public-houses are closed; and for long we have asked the Giver that the means might be sent. In January last a pencil letter was received from an old lady inquiring whether the amount for the Deaconess House had been got, and, after visiting the lady at her request, we returned with a cheque for £1,000! One week from that date the lady died. It was the last work she did, and, therefore, we feel the gift to be peculiarly sacred.

"We have purchased property adjoining the Institute, but at the quiet side, where there is no public-house. The alterations will be considerable. Not only will the shop on the ground floor have to be adapted to a sitting-room, but money has been given to enlarge the house by building an additional storey. At our annual meeting, to be held at the residence of the Speaker of the House of Commons, on Friday, June 23, the Duchess of Albany has consented to receive purses of not less than £5 on behalf of the Deaconess House, and we trust if not finished, the house may be so far advanced that Her Royal Highness may declare it open. The chair will be taken by Lord Reay."

For details regarding the arrangements for this interesting function, readers are advised to apply without delay to Miss Meredith Brown, at the address given. The new premises will be named "Barclay House," in memory of the kind donor.

Working Lads in Whitechapel.—The second anniversary of the re-opening of the Working Lads' Institute and Home was held on Tuesday evening, April 25. A large company assembled, presided over by Viscount Horncastle. The report, submitted by Rev. Thos. Jackson, showed that forty-seven lads have resided in the home, and 480 become members during the past two years. Numerous spiritual agencies are actively at work. Mr. Henry Hill, who originally started the work, spoke of the need of such institutions and the benefits they conferred. The other speakers were Mr. Geo. Nokes and Mr. E. C. Rawlings.

Letter to the Editor.

"Modern Preaching."

DEAR SIR,—My experience fully corroborates the statements in the article on Modern Preaching in your issue of 20th ult. I am an old minister, and, not being in active service, I hear many sermons, and I am much within the truth when I say that dozens of them do not contain saving truth. They are all excellent in their way, but a sinking soul would never learn the way of life. Sin and atonement are not there.

It seems to be assumed that all the hearers are converted persons. There is no speaking to the conscience; nothing to convince of sin and danger; nothing to lead souls to Christ. Repentance and conversion are not preached and pressed home as they ought to be.

"It is the Spirit that quickeneth;" but it is the Gospel of Christ Crucified that He uses to convert and save, and that is not held forth. The consequence is that in many congregations a conversion is very seldom heard of. People sit at ease in Zion, with nothing to make them afraid, hastening on to the eternal world.

This surely is a matter of the utmost importance and urgency. The everlasting welfare of multitudes is involved in it. The great clamant want of our day is a revival of earnest Gospel preaching; and what we need in the church is "fishers of men," soul-winners, men "filled with the Spirit" and burning with zeal to save souls by preaching to them "the unsearchable riches of Christ."—Yours faithfully,

A. B. C.

Temperance Notes.

The congregation of a Baptist church in Louisville, the principal city, has, after a long debate, voted a resolution for the expulsion from the church of all connected in any respect with the whisky trade, unless they abjure connection with it within a year. Several of the wealthiest distillers in the State are members of this congregation. The question has long been agitating Louisville, and some other Churches are taking steps to follow the action of the Baptists.

* * * *

Leaders in Christian work are becoming more and more impressed with the increasing evil of intemperance in Scottish cities and towns. Of 1,300 cases dealt with by the Dumbarton police last year, close upon 80 per cent. are declared to have been directly attributable to drink. The President of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. Temperance Society has declared that among the first indications of a recent increase of prosperity on some parts of the Clyde had been increased trade to the publicans.

The Race-Course Mission.

IN a communication received from Mr. O. L. Heatley (King's Own Mission, St. James's Hall, Royal Road, Kennington Park, S.E.), secretary of the Race-Course Mission, he says: "We want the help of a hundred live Christian men who will value the grand opportunities of witnessing for Christ in a variety of ways during the coming carnival at Epsom from May 30 to June 2. If those who can help in this important work will send me name and address, full particulars will be sent. If any cannot spare the whole week, let them come for a part of it, particularly on the Wednesday, Derby Day.

"We also require some 20,000 Gospels during the four days. As to tracts, great care is needed in the selection. In past years many have been sent that were most unsuitable. We therefore would suggest that friends should send us the money, so that we can make the selection most adapted to this particular work. Parcels of Gospels, &c., should be sent to Mr. W. Hodson, North Ladworth Farm, Epsom.

"This year we are to celebrate our anniversary on Monday afternoon, May 29, at Exeter Hall. We shall be glad if London friends will help to make this meeting known."

British Columbia.—Mr. H. Pillar, of The Woodlands, French Creek, B.C., writes concerning the influx of people into this province in search of gold. Many new districts are being opened up by immigrants from all over the world—many of them indifferent and godless. An evangelist is greatly needed. One eminently suitable for the work is known, and can be secured if his salary can be guaranteed. Some of our readers interested in these needy regions may like to communicate with Mr. Pillar to this end.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE New York Association has received a gift of 50,000dols. to establish Sailors' Homes.

A well attended District Conference was held at Oxford on April 26. A conference was held in the evening when representatives of Oxford and Cambridge Universities spoke and suggested means of furthering the work of the Y.M.C.A. by University men.

Mr. John McAuliffe, of Tunbridge Wells, has held a nine days' mission at the Y.M.C.A., 396, Clapham Road. The results were most gratifying.

A social room for senior members is being added to the building of the Ipswich Y.M.C.A., the cost of which, including furnishing, will be about £600.

The annual report of the Blackburn Young Men's Christian Association records a year of great activity. It is hoped soon to erect a new building for the Association.

The Prudential Assurance Prayer Union, numbering over two hundred members, has become affiliated as an auxiliary with the National Union of Young Men's Christian Associations.

Mr. Frank Anderson, who is working on behalf of the English National Council of Y.M.C.A's. among native students in the Bombay Presidency, has arrived in London with a view to spending a few months in this country, presenting to friends the claims for a forward movement in the work in India.

The Spring Conference of the Western District of Y.M.C.A's. took place at Malmesbury on Thursday, April 27. The attendance was very satisfactory, and reports given at the morning session showed an increase of membership for every association represented, and that generally the work of the past winter had been most successful.

The thirty-sixth conference of the Liverpool and North Wales District Union of Young Men's Christian Associations was held in the Liverpool Central Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant, on Saturday afternoon, the 22nd ult. There was a good attendance of delegates from Liverpool, North Liverpool, St. Helens, Birkenhead, and Chester. After an address upon "The Missionary Character and Work of the Y.M.C.A." by Mr. W. Hind Smith, an open conference was held on "Seven-Day Journalism."

A meeting took place at Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Mr. Alfred C. Furse, to consider the subject of Bible-class work in London and the possibility of increasing its efficiency among the various metropolitan associations. There was a good attendance of class leaders and others particularly interested in this department of work, and many useful suggestions were made, which it was resolved to formulate and submit for consideration at a larger meeting of the general body of London members in order to their adoption, if possible, by all the associations.

Notices.

Communications Received with Thanks from.—F.J.R. H.W.W.P. F.J.H. Dr.R. J.W.C. E.P. J.W.D. A.E.S. G.N.K. W.M.S. A.W. F.L. H.F.W. W.E.P. H.J.E. J.H.K. W.T.S. J.O. C.M. H.A. E.L.D.B. W.C. J.S. M.C.H. E.P.L. H.T. W.D. E.A.N. A.M. A.S.J. W.H. R.H.P. M.E.K. F.W.P. H.W. R.W. J.A.G. M.S. R.S. F.M.S. W.L. M.H.F. J.T. H.J. A.F.S. C.W.M. G.S. J.F.M. W.H. D.J.E. J.C.R. A.G.F. L.L. T.J. J.C. L.L. J.C.P. R.H. S.S.M. J.C. J.M.H. J.M.C. T.M.N. T.N. F.W. N.L. D.S. T.C.W. H.N. F.W.B. F.E.W.

Applications for Tracts.—Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Clarcmont, Cawley Road, South Hackney, London, N.E.; Miss H. Clark, c/o Mrs. Hodges, Oak Cottage, Downside, Shepton Mallet; Mr. Metheval, Fore Street, Camelford, Cornwall; Mr. G. E. Pearce, Free Lending Library, Camelford, Cornwall; Rev. T. C. Jacobs, Bible Christian Minister, Camelford, Cornwall; Mr. R. Elford, Penrose Farm, St. Tudy R.S.O., Cornwall; Z. Spare, St. Breward, Bodmin; Joseph Aggis, 10, Storers Buildings, Exmouth Street, Stepney, E.; E. Bing, 25, Frederick Road, New Brompton; James Jackson, 23, North King Street, North Shields; James Allen, Refreshment House, Pengelley, Delabole R.S.O., Cornwall.

Hebron Medical Mission.—Much good work continues to be done by the Mildmay Medical Mission at Hebron. The Jews attend in considerable numbers, but often with the fixed determination to accept nothing but the bodily relief they are in need of; while the Moslems, more ignorant, are more unprejudiced in regard to New Testament teaching. The pleasure that some of them take in listening to simple Bible stories, often heard for the first time, is very touching; but the difficulty of persuading them that religion has anything to do with life and conduct is incredible. Many of the men and boys who can read beg for portions of Scripture, but not all of the latter are allowed by their parents to keep them. The number of attendances registered during the past year was over 11,000. A large sum is required to replenish the stock of drugs. Communications should be addressed to Colonel Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.; or to Mrs. Bowie, Mildmay Medical Mission, Hebron.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Monday, May 1st, 1899.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque, Postal or Money Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of THE CHRISTIAN.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank, Ltd."; this will effectually prevent loss.

Friends of Armenia—C.F.	2	0	0
Armenian Sufferers' Relief—H.H.H., 1s.; W.E.T., 10s.	0	11	0
Armenian Relief Fund—Daisy, 10s.; S., £1	1	10	0
Figueras Mission—C.F.	0	10	0
Mission to Lepers of India—S.L.R., £1 1s.; L.M.H., £1	2	1	0
Ch. of Eng. Zenana Missionary Society—T.S., St. Albans, 10s.; G Bros., £10	10	10	0
Cantonment Rescue Work, India—T.F.	0	5	0
North Africa Mission—L.M.H., £1; E.J.P., £1 ...	2	0	0
China Inland Mission—L.M.H., £1; E. and W.B., 12s.; G. Bros., £20; E.J.P., £2; Daisy, 10s.; First Fruits, Greenock, £5	29	2	0
Moravian Missions—L.M.H., £1; L.B.R., 10s. ...	1	10	0
McAll Mission—Memorandum	3	0	0
Church Missionary Society—M.J.E., 5s.; S.S., 2s. 6d.; G. Bros., £5; Mede, £1 10s.; C.F.C., 4s.; (Uganda), L.B.R., 10s.; (Centenary)— W.H., 5s.; M.A.H., 5s.	6	1	6
S. American Missionary Society—G. Bros, £10; (Mr. Morris)—Miss W., sen., 10s.	10	10	0
London Missionary Society—S.S., 2s. 6d.; G. Bros., £10	10	2	6
Work among Priests in France—C.M.S	1	0	0
British and Foreign Bible Society—G. Bros., £10; P.N.Z., £10	20	0	0
Miss de Broen's Work, Paris—Daisy	0	10	0
Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., Paris (Extension Scheme)—W.F.C.S.C.	0	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Innes Wright's Work, Nepaul—J.J.G.	0	2	6
Mr. Fegan's Homes—C.F., £2; Gratitude, E.J.T., 5s.; Memorandum, £2 10s.; (Southwark Home Mission)—Memorandum, £2 10s.	7	5	0
R. N. Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—C.F., £2; L.M.H., £1	3	0	0
Church Pastoral Aid Society—C.F., £1; G. Bros., £5; Anon, £2	8	0	0
Barbican Mission to the Jews—M.A.T.	0	2	6
Homes Aged Blind, Crouch Hill—M.A.T., 2s. 6d.; L.B.R., 5s.	0	7	6
Ned Wright's Gospel Tent—For Jesus' Sake—E.L.,	0	2	6
Mr. Charles Cook's Work—(Prison), S.L.R.... ...	1	1	0
Salvation Army—(Rescue Work)—J.L., 10s.; Gratitude, E.J.T., 5s.; Mede, £1 10s.	2	5	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—J.McC., 2s. 6d.; Daisy, 10s.	0	12	6
St. Giles' Christian Mission—Gratitude, E.J.T., 5s.; Mede, £1 10s.; Reader of THE CHRISTIAN, 10s.; (Prison), Diana, £5	7	5	0
Flower Girls' Mission—Gratitude, E.J.T.	0	5	0
Destitute Childrens' Dinner Society—N.	0	5	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—A.A.N., 10s.; L.B.R., 5s....	0	15	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—W.C.F., £2; Mede, £1 10s.; Daisy, 10s.	4	0	0
Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland—Miss W., sen....	0	10	0
Religious Tract Society (Centenary)—W.H., 5s; M.A.H., 5s.	0	10	0
Professor White's Bible Lectures—A Working Man.	0	0	6
Uncle Tom's Cot, see page 23	2	5	0
Field Lane Institutions—Mede...	1	10	0
George Yard Mission—Mede	1	10	0
Dock Labourers' Mission—Mede	1	10	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—Mede	1	10	0
Friendless and Fallen—Mede	1	10	0
Medland Hall Mission—Mede	1	10	0
Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society—L. B. R.	0	5	0
Miss Sharman's Orphan Homes—L. B. R.	0	5	0
Church Association—Anon	2	0	0
Kensit Campaign—Anon	1	0	0
London City Mission—Daisy	0	10	0
Scripture Gift Mission—Heb, iv 12	0	15	6
Spurgeon Orphanage—A Reader of "THE CHRISTIAN"	0	10	0
Royal Alfred Aged Seamen's Institution—M. S. ...	1	1	0
Home and School for Children of Missionaries, Blackheath—M. S.	2	2	0
Seamen's Christian Friend Society—M. S.	2	2	0
Total	£161	17	6

(ADVERTISEMENTS.)

Barbican Mission to the Jews.—H.G., 10s.; A Reader of THE CHRISTIAN, 2s. 6d.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission, 98, High Street, Homerton, London, N.E., beg to gratefully acknowledge the following donations for Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent, and for the relief of the poor:—D., 5s.; L. and L., 2s.; L., 10s.; B., 10s. 6d.; G., £3 3s.; J.G., 2s.; D.M., 14s.; M.A.C., 4s. W.R.P., 10s.

Lydd, Kent.—During the summer over 2,000 troops will be stationed here. A house, suitable to supply the need of a Soldiers' Home, stands vacant which can be had on a seven years' lease for £38 per annum. Another much better can be purchased for £1,600, but there are no funds in hand. Friends desiring to help may communicate to Mr. Frank E. Wootton, hon. sec. Y.M. and S.C.A., Ness Villa, Lydd, Kent.

Sheffield Public-Houses.—At a meeting of the Sheffield Temperance Association, the Lord Mayor said it had been computed that if the 1,804 licensed houses in the town were fairly assessed, the rates would benefit to the extentof over £27,000 a year. It was bad enough, he said, to have these houses in their midst, but it was worse if they did not pay their quota, amongst other things, for the maintenance of the police force, which existed very largely to counteract the work of the public-houses.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY, 1899.

ANNIVERSARY ARRANGEMENTS.

The following Arrangements have been made for the forthcoming Anniversary of the Society, May 6 to 12.

MAY 6.—3.30 P.M.

CHILDREN'S DEMONSTRATION IN EXETER HALL. President: Rev. C. SILVESTER HORNE, M.A. Speakers: Rev. JOHN KNOX, of Vizagapatam, and Rev. F. P. JOSELAND, of Amoy.

MAY 8.—10 A.M.

PRAYER MEETING IN THE MISSION HOUSE. President: Rev. W. BOLTON, M.A.

MAY 8.—2 P.M.

GENERAL BUSINESS MEETING OF MEMBERS IN THE MISSION HOUSE. President: F. H. HAWKINS, Esq., L.L.B.

MAY 9.—3 P.M.

LADIES' MEETING AT FALCON SQUARE CHAPEL. President: Mrs. WYCLIFFE WILSON. Speakers: Miss TUCK, of Berhampur; Mrs. SEWELL McFARLANE, of Chi Chou; Miss SCHULTZE, of Samoa; and Miss JESSIE M. BALGARNIE, Secretary of the Watchers' Band.

MAY 10.—11 A.M.

SERMON IN THE CITY TEMPLE. Preacher: Rev. J. SMITH, D.D., of Broughton Place, Edinburgh.

MAY 10.—3 P.M.

WATCHERS' BAND MEETING IN THE CITY TEMPLE. President: Rev. H. ARNOLD THOMAS, M.A. Speakers: Rev. R. FOTHERINGHAM, M.A.; Miss THEOBALD, of Mangari; Rev. A. PEARSE, of New Guinea; and Rev. JOHN PARKER, of Mongolia.

MAY 10.—5.30 P.M.

CONVERSAZIONE IN THE CITY TEMPLE (Schoolroom). Tickets, 1s. each.

MAY 10.—7 P.M.

ANNUAL MEETING IN THE CITY TEMPLE. President: LORD REAY. Speakers: Rev. R. WARDLAW THOMPSON, Rev. A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D., and Rev. W. C. WILLOUGHBY, of South Africa.

MAY 11.—10 A.M.

SESSION OF THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION IN THE MEMORIAL HALL (for C.U. delegates only). President: Rev. H. ARNOLD THOMAS, M.A. Speakers: Rev. T. E. SLATER, of Bangalore; Rev. G. OWEN, of Peking; Rev. C. JUKES, of Madagascar.

MAY 12.—6.30 P.M.

MEETING FOR YOUNG MEN AND YOUNG WOMEN IN THE CITY TEMPLE. President: SAMUEL D. WILLS, Esq. Speakers: Rev. H. M. DAUNCEY, of New Guinea; Mr. J. N. FARQUHAR, M.A., of Calcutta; Mr. LEWIS H. GAUNT, M.A. (L.M.S. Editor); and Rev. W. B. SELBIE, M.A.

SUNDAYS, MAY 7, 14, 21 AND 28.

ANNUAL SERMONS IN LONDON CHURCHES.

Tickets on Application to the Mission House, 14, Blomfield Street, E.C.; or Messrs. John Snow and Co., 2, Ivy Lane, E.C.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS (LONDON ASSOCIATION).

THE ANNUAL MEETING

Will (D.V.) be held on Friday, May 5th, in the Lower Exeter Hall.

The Chair will (D.V.) be taken at 3.30 p.m., by T. ANTHONY DENNY, Esq., Vice-president.

Speakers:—The Rev. H. E. FOX, M.A., C.M.S.; The Rev. W. R. MOWLL, M.A., Vicar of Christ Church North Brixton; The Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY, M.A., late of Melbourne; W. COLDSTREAM, Esq., Benga Civil Service, retired, and acquainted with the work in Tibet.

THE ANNUAL SERMON on behalf of the Missions will (D.V.) be preached in St. Paul's Church, Onslow Sq., S.W., on Ascension Day, May 11, By the Rev. J. A. FAITHFULL, M.A., Rector of Whitechapel. SERVICE at 11 a.m.

ATTENDANCE IS EARNESTLY REQUESTED.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

Thirty-Third Anniversary

EXETER HALL, STRAND, TUESDAY, 9th MAY, 1899.

AFTERNOON, AT 3 O'CLOCK.

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS will Preside.

Addresses will be given by

Rev. W. E. BURROUGHS (C.M.S.),
Miss SOLTAU (just returned from China), and Missionaries from the Field.

EVENING, AT 7 O'CLOCK.

THEODORE HOWARD, ESQ., in the Chair.

Speakers:

Rev. GEORGE HUNTER, of Hu-nan, and other Missionaries.
Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN, of New Court Chapel, will give the Closing Address.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

DR. PIERSON has just published through Messrs. Nisbet & Co. his "Life of Mr. George Müller," which forms a fitting memorial of that great and good man. A notice appears on page 33.

Mr. D. L. Moody's weighty utterance on the Sabbath, which form one of the chapters in "Weighed in the Balances: Addresses on the Ten Commandments," has been reprinted as a penny booklet, under the title of "Remember the Sabbath Day." (London: Morgan & Scott.) Is would be difficult to find a more appropriate tractate for distribution among all classes of the community in these days, when such havoc is being made of the Day of Rest and Worship.

The article we inserted recently upon Undenominationalism has led to its republication in more complete and elaborated pamphlet form, which may be obtained (price 1d.) from the author, Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, "Lansdowne," West Dulwich. Those who are interested in the subject will find in this little treatise a fair presentation of "Undenominationalism, its Basis, Objects, and Claims."

The Local Veto Bill for Scotland deserved a better fate than it met with at the hands of the House of Commons. By a majority of 217 votes against 143 it was rejected. Whatever English opinion on the question may be, Scotland is overwhelmingly in favour of such a measure. To this Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, who knows Scottish views well, added his personal testimony. Had this matter been before a Scottish Parliament, there can hardly be two opinions as to what the issue would have been. But the English House of Commons at the present time is not given to philanthropic legislation. Much less does it spend itself in considering the great religious questions of the age.

Where were the bishops when the Seats for Shop Assistants (Scotland) Bill was rejected by the House of Lords? The measure was one of common humanity. It had passed the Commons without opposition. The simple provision was—

> That every shopkeeper who employed female assistants should give them seats behind the counter and in the show-room in proportion of at least one seat for every two assistants.

We have again and again alluded to the long hours and hardships of many shop assistants. To have granted the relief the Bill was framed to secure would have been a boon to hundreds whose health is impaired by the wearisome standing that their duties render obligatory.

Following on our recent note on the mutual duties of mistresses and maids, certain additional grievances on the part of the latter have been pointed out by correspondents. One of these refers to domestic service in circles where the mistress delegates the management of her household to the "housekeeper." In cases where the latter is unsympathetic or selfish, the position is at times a very hard one for those under her. Delicate girls are sometimes under a cruel disadvantage as to food and treatment, and an instance has been brought under our notice where the death of one was accelerated by insufficient feeding. Complaint may lead to dismissal, and a character is often withheld under such circumstances, on trifling pretexts. The remedy seems to be that every mistress should make it her personal care to safeguard the interests of every employée in her household—a responsibility that cannot be properly delegated to another.

The crusade against the Mail and Telegraph in their endeavour to force Sunday journalism on an unwilling community is steadily gathering strength. The bishops in convocation have unanimously denounced the movement, and have called upon all loyal churchmen to "take an active part" in defeating it. All the large newsagents have declined to help in the circulation of the Sunday editions of these papers, and many of the smaller dealers are steadily refusing too. The editors of The Sunday Mail are men who have been trained on the staff of the New York Journal, a paper which "has carried sensationalism and every kind of villainy that is practised in newspapers to the last possible degree." So that we know what to expect, if once the movement takes firm root in this country. But the signs are most hopeful that this attack on the liberties of the people and the sanctity of the Lord's Day will fail, if only Christian people stand firm.

We are glad to welcome into the cause of Church reform the Ladies' League, just inaugurated. The promoters say:

> Believing that there exists all over the country a vast body of women who, from the deepest religious convictions, are deploring this departure from a pure and simple faith, and are longing to know in what way they can help to arrest the evil, we have after much thought and consultation decided to form and organise a Ladies' League. The objects of the League are to promote the principles of the Reformation as set forth in the Prayer Book and Articles of the Church of England, and to protect the Church against the revival of the mass and the system of the confessional. In our opinion the chief danger of the present time lies not so much in excesses of ritual—which may and probably will be restrained by episcopal or legal authority—as in the teaching which has for years been permeating large sections of society, and which has been especially addressed to the young. We desire that the League should in no sense partake of the character of a party or political organisation, that it should approach the great questions at issue from the religious side, that it should aim by educational methods to convince others of the disastrous consequences of any departure from the primitive truths of Christianity.

The memorandum is signed by Lady Wimborne (president), the Duchess of Grafton, the Duchess of Wellington, the Marchioness of Northampton, Lady Caroline Grenville, the Countess of Tankerville, the Countess of Bessborough, the Countess of Ilchester, the Countess of Leitrim, the Countess of Chichester, Lady Frederick Fitzroy, the Viscountess Wolseley, the Viscountess Duncannon, Lady Edith Ashley, Lady Barnard, Lady Templemore, Lady Hood of Avalon, Lady De Ramsey, Lady Hope, Mrs. Wingfield Digby, Mrs. Hope Morley, and Miss Marsh. Information as to membership, &c., will be given by the hon. secretary, 6, Grosvenor Mansions, Victoria Street, London.

The present Church crisis is giving opportunity to discontented members of the Catholic fold to speak out their minds. The Contemporary, the Nineteenth Century, and the National all contain important articles on the evils of the Papacy, looked at from an intellectual, a political, and a religious point of view. "Voces Catholicæ" describe, in the Contemporary, the failure of the Catholic universities at Washington and Freiburg, and say that the scholars who were connected with them, and who believed in scientific progress, "have disappeared as completely as if the Angel of Death had spread his wings on the blast." Their testimony supports the experience of the world, that Rome is an enemy of truth, and offers the strongest inducements to promulgate falsehoods which shall be to her interests. Thus:—

> There is hardly a field of study which does not contain pales beyond which the true believer must not stray. Opinions, theories, and well-established scientific facts are being yearly condemned, many of our best writers censured and punished; and there is hardly one Catholic thinker among the few courageous enough to give their thoughts to the world whose works do not figure in the Index of Forbidden Books.

The fewer seats of learning in this country that are under this baleful power, the more will learning flourish—and religion too.

It is gratifying to note that in the opinion of at least one clergyman of the Established Church, the Board Schools of England may yet be regarded as a bulwark of Protestantism. Canon Page Roberts has always been a supporter of voluntary schools, but latterly he has begun to see that the National Schools were in danger of becoming the nursing grounds of Romanism in the hands of the Anglican clergy. In a sermon recently preached, the Canon has said in effect that—

> So long as the Board Schools read the Bible, it might eventually become more prudent to encourage them than the National Church Schools.

He has specially condemned the children's eucharists and juvenile confession. Such plain words coming from within the camp of the Establishment have special weight, and there is a great deal of solid truth in them. The pure Bible is a mighty safeguard against sacerdotal heresy.

When men begin to speak of certain anticipated changes in religious belief, or of some changes they themselves have passed through, it puts us on our guard. We are told that, with the incoming of democracy—

> The conception of God's government and God will be found not outside of the world but inside of it. He is seen to be, not an absentee God, but a very present God. His throne is not in some far-off island in the skies, but in the hearts and minds and consciences of his people. This is the revolutionising conception of God which is coming into the world, not only as the result of the study of physical science, but unconsciously as the result of the change in our political life itself.

But surely Christian believers never conceived of God as a far-away being, but always as one nigh at hand. Is it so difficult to interpret the words—"Lo, I am with you alway"? Let us not sacrifice faith to a desire to propitiate science or politics or sociology.

Dr. Sanday is the writer of the article on Jesus Christ in the New Bible Dictionary, and expresses in it the belief that the historian who should try to construct a reasoned picture of the life of Christ would find that he could not dispense with miracles. He would be confronted with the fact that no sooner had the life of Jesus ended in apparent failure and shame than the great body of Christians passed over at once to the fixed belief that He was God.

"By what conceivable process," inquires Dr. Sanday, "could the men of that day have arrived at such a conclusion if there had been really nothing in his life to distinguish it from that of ordinary men?"

It is not every man who can construct a reasoned picture of the Perfect Life, and thus see how necessary miracles are to it; but every one can take his New Testament, and, by cutting out the miracles, see what that life is like without them. It is like the human body with the bones taken out.

It is one of the seeming paradoxes of Christian history that no sooner did the life of Jesus end in apparent shame and ruin, than his followers sprang into the faith that He was God incarnate. Rationalists have in vain tried to explain this extraordinary phenomenon which so flatly contracts the "probabilities" of the case. Only the Christian solution can be called truly "rational." The resurrection transformed the situation, and in the presence and power of the risen Christ, acting on the infant church through the ministrations of the Spirit, is to be found the explanation of the mystery. Christ is his own witness in the hearts and lives of his people. To the natural man and to the intellectual unbeliever this is "foolishness;" but to the Christian the Cross is vindicated as the "power of God" and the "wisdom of God."

In Professor Alfred Russel Wallace's new work on "The Wonderful Century" there is a graphic account of the extraordinary advances made in knowledge and in practical control over the forces of nature since the beginning of the century, coupled with a very pessimistic picture of the results as regards social well-being. According to this authority, during this period there has been a greater advance in many directions than in the whole previous history of the race. At the same time there has been no real improvement in general happiness. The problems of poverty have become accentuated owing to the concentration of the population in great centres; the relations between employers and employés have become increasingly strained; there is an increasing unrest and discontent with the conditions of life; the old simplicity has given place to a widespread longing for the dubious blessings of wealth.

This book presses home the lesson, taught in so many other ways, that civilisation in itself is no guarantee either of happiness or of moral well-being. It deals only with the outward conditions of life. It cannot touch the springs of motive, or develop the higher functions of the soul. For these essential aspects of life nothing but religion will suffice. Men's hearts must be touched by the Divine love, and their better nature lifted into activity by faith and hope, if the advances made in science and mechanics are to result in permanent additions to the progress of the race. Ancient civilisations passed away for lack of religious impulse and guidance. Our modern civilisation, unless permeated with the purifying and ennobling forces of Christianity, would speedily show signs of decay. Its future is bound up with a more earnest faith in God, which is the one guarantee of love and goodwill between man and man.

Substantial fines were inflicted last week upon defendants for allowing a lad under eleven years of age to "perform for profit." The magistrate expressed himself strongly on the case, and in reference to the immediate employer of the lad said "it was disgraceful that young boys should be working to keep a strong young man." We agree with him, and would protest even more strongly against little girls being taken about the streets by able-bodied, irresponsible youths to dance to their organs. Is not this also "performing for profit?" If so, why do not the police interfere?

The following story, from the Lucerne Tageblatt, points its own moral as regards the tyrannical attitude of the priesthood over their flocks. A subscriber to that paper recently went to confess his sins to his father confessor, and was asked, among other questions, these:—

"Do you read any Lucerne newspaper?" "Yes."
"Which one?" "The Lucerne Tageblatt."
"Do you subscribe for the paper, or do you receive it gratis?" "I am a subscriber."
"Then let me tell you that you are not to read this paper any more. You are to take in the Volksblatt. Your gain will be double. In the first place, you save seven francs a year; secondly, you save your immortal soul."

The point of the story is clear when we add that the Tageblatt is a Protestant, while the Volksblatt is a Roman Catholic paper.

We learn with pleasure that arrangements are being made to organise special evangelistic services in Paris during the Exhibition of 1900. The proposal originated with the Mission Populaire. It has also the full adhesion of M. Appia, the new president of the Evangelical Alliance, and the Société Centrale is expected to join in the effort. At the opening of the exhibition, it is proposed to hold a great thanksgiving meeting to bless God for all his gifts to men. A general conference of pasteurs is to be convened to arrange details. At the present crisis of morals and religion in France, the exhibition will present a unique opportunity to press home the great truths of the Gospel upon the multitudes who will throng the city.

The American custom of Bible circles—a modification of the Bible-class—is being introduced with much acceptance into this country. The plan is for every member of the class to contribute his or her share towards the elucidation of the passage under consideration, the leader's duty being rather to guide and supplement than to monopolise the discussion. This deepens and extends the interest, and forces each member of the class to think for himself. In various ways it is clear that the study of the Bible is destined to a widespread revival. Among all classes there is growing up a deep desire for first-hand mastery of its saving truths. A more cheering symptom could not be asked for. It is bound to lead to a revival of Bible doctrine and Christian life in our churches. There is no doubt that a neglect of the Scriptures accounts for much of the religious indifference and shallow views of life and doctrine which we have lately had to deplore.

Africa is much in the mind and on the lips of thousands just now, but probably very few realise what has gone on there during the last twenty years. Gold and diamonds have been found, we all know; immense quantities of land have been annexed, we know; but, for all that, our Empire is growing in the same unconscious, unplanned manner as Professor Seeley says it has always grown. North and South Africa almost touch under the British flag, and in twenty more years we may have a larger empire than India. The method by which we are to rule the millions of people who will come under our sway is unknown We go for the gold, the diamonds, and the land; and the people—why we shall have to get on with them some way, or they will have to get on with us, or go! In the Soudan we are said to be exacting forced labour from them—practically reducing them to slavery. We did the same with the Bechuanas, and we have slaves under our flag on the East Coast. Empire extension is apt to become a demoralising process. Rome found it to be so, and we are finding the same.

Although all the evidence obtainable favours the conclusion that grocers' licences are the cause of a great deal of drunkenness, especially among women, the Licensing Commission has made no suggestion for doing away with or modifying them. Drunkenness in a woman may not be more culpable than drunkenness in a man—the moral standard is the same for all—but it is more repulsive, and the extent of its increase is alarming. While the Mother Country is droning over reform, it is pleasant to read that the proportion of liquor drunk throughout the Colonies has steadily diminished during the last twenty-five years, and that in Canada, New South Wales and New Zealand the amount consumed is considerably less than it is at home. So far as the evil on the West Coast of Africa is concerned, we have the good news of an action-at-law to be brought against Bishop Tugwell for his exposure of it. The exposure will be a good deal worse when that action comes off.

The real "white man's burden" is to carry the blessings of the Gospel to the lower races of the world, and not to shame it in the act. Impurity and drunkenness are the two scourges which he usually introduces on the heels of the Bible, and which often more than counteract all the results of missionary teaching. The "burden" of introducing Western civilisation into the South and East weighs more heavily on the coloured races than on the white, because where it is not counterbalanced by the introduction of the Gospel, which has alone preserved it from decay, the contamination of its vices speedily ruins those whose weak moral will has no power to resist temptation. For this reason every effort should be directed by the friends of the native peoples to bring the forthcoming Brussels Conference on the Regulation of the Drink Traffic in Africa to a practical issue. The fate of not a few of the "Hinterland" tribes depends on the issue.

Meanwhile the Americans, who have assumed "imperialist" responsibilities abroad, are being confronted with a problem of ever-increasing seriousness at home in the condition of the coloured races of the Southern States. Mr. Goldwin Smith in the current Contemporary, brings a severe indictment against the race hatred which is rampant. There is hardly an issue of an American paper which does not contain an account of the lynching of negroes, accompanied with circumstances of cruelty such as reveal the depth of this hatred and contempt. No lyncher, it is believed, has yet been punished. The grave peril which this situation reveals in one of the most civilised Christian nations is a strange commentary on the progress of the world. Unless we awake to a higher sense of our own responsibilities in South Africa we may in time be face to face with a similar problem.

Above all—the Holy Spirit.

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

THERE are times when God's people are fenced in, and cannot move a step without God's interposing power. The children of Israel reach the shore of the Red Sea, and cannot advance one rod until He parts the waves before them. The land of Israel is parched with drought, and Elijah summons God by prayer to send the indispensable showers. Peter is locked up in a dungeon awaiting death on the morrow, and the praying band in John Mark's house realise that a divine arm only can unloose the prison doors.

These cases illustrate the condition in which our churches find themselves to-day. The wheels seem to drag; the conversions are few; the question that many pastors and people are asking is—What shall we do? For one I can see no other deliverance except by a descent of the power from on high! Our churches are fenced right up to this fact—we must have the Holy Spirit, or all our machinery is at a standstill. The most powerful sermons cannot move a single sinner one inch towards the Cross, without the agency of the Holy Spirit. The New Testament teaches us that the two agents that are to bring sin-smitten souls to Christ are the Christian Church and the Holy Spirit. The Church without the Spirit is as powerless to move itself, or to draw others Christ-ward, as a locomotive is to propel a railway-train until a fire is kindled under its boiler. Here is the secret of the failure of a vast amount of elaborate sermonising, and a vast amount of church-going, and of a vast number of prayer-meetings. The Holy Spirit is not in the Sabbath assembly; the propelling and penetrating power of the Spirit is not behind the sermons, and the prayer-meetings are not converged to the vital point of pleading for the power from on high. Long, formal, stereotyped petitions are repeated in the meetings, and people go home

WELL NIGH AS EMPTY AS THEY CAME.

In a certain church in Philadelphia the pastor and his half dozen church officers met together every evening for a week, confessed their sins and their weakness, and besought the gift of the Holy Spirit. A fire was kindled in that church that resulted in the conversion of a large number of souls. That pastor and his staff did not send for any human aid; they went right up to heaven for help. And I do not believe that any Christian, or body of Christians, ever undertook a good work for the glory of God, and, having sent for the Holy Spirit, were turned empty away. The trouble in too many cases is that Christians are now resisting the Divine Spirit and grieving Him away! How can they expect any blessing?

Of all the promises in the Bible none is so explicit as the promise of the Holy Spirit. This is the gift of gifts. God is more ready to bestow this immeasurably precious gift than an earthly parent to feed a hungry child. But Christians have got to hunger for the Spirit, and be ready to work for the Spirit and with the Spirit, or else He will not come. With Him everything; without Him nothing! Unless He descend with his enlightening, warming, melting, purifying, and life-giving power, all preaching, praying, and working will be as useless as an attempt to light a lamp in a vacuum, or to heat up an ice-cold room without fire. A blessing is held out by a loving God to every church in this land which is willing to confess its sins, and to co-operate with the Holy Spirit. Above all things—the Holy Spirit!

Should China be Divided?—I.

A Serious Missionary Question.

By Rev. J. SADLER, L.M.S., Amoy.

THOSE who know the power of prayer are earnestly requested to consider the following. We have this week seen flaming announcements thus:—"China Divided." "Arrangements between Russia and Britain!"

What does this mean? An immediate outcry comes from France that her share may not be interfered with.

It is all very well to say "the arrangement merely affects the making of railways." Politicians know what is behind. The following questions may help to clear our vision:—

To whom does China belong?

China's sovereign rights are often referred to. Are they being observed? Did China look for good faith when she opened her country (more or less) to foreigners? Is it a fair advantage now being taken of her? This question is agitating the mind of the most serious-minded Chinese. They come to us and ask, "How is it that Christians can steal our country?" The question thus raised is by Chinese, who are and this makes the question all the stronger.

TRUE FRIENDS TO THE WEST,

China is waking up. Why not give her fifty years more to attend to her own business? If only half a dozen able men are produced by her, interlopers may have a hard time! If partition be not prevented, trouble to foreigners of many kinds will arise, even amongst themselves. Is the opinion of Lord Charles Beresford valueless? Does he advocate partition? Has not the boast of Britain been "The open door and not partition?"

What would be the result of the proposed changes?

We have seen the treatment meted out by Russia to Jews and Stundists. We have seen the havoc to Protestant mission work in Madagascar under French control. We have seen how even Germany will not be slow to put forth amazing claims for her Roman Catholic subjects. Now, supposing (e.g.) that France should slice off the South of China of the present prosperous Protestant missions?

WHAT WILL BECOME

Let lovers of the Chinese and of fair play consider! We are defeating our own ends, even as regards trade, by unfairness. The Chinese are more and more inclined to be friendly if we will encourage them. Was ever such a sight witnessed as last year when the Emperor issued a strong appeal for Western aid to sustain him in his vigorous reforms?

Let all these matters be taken before God, as Hezekiah took the letter he had received from a formidable foe.

To us, as Christians, China is now bound by many thousands of ties through the multitudes of Chinese Christians.

What are they worth? we are asked. A tu quoque question might be put to many of us!

Foreigners sometimes allow themselves to be taken in by counterfeit Christians. Sometimes again they fail to consider that when a native learns to read and write he begins to think; thinking leads to action. And a Chinaman is only like another man if he comes to the conclusion that he too has rights, and need not be treated as if might were right. Many proofs might be adduced, and from foreign official quarters, as to the importance of missions and their converts, even from a point of view of conciliation and opening ways for trade. The native Christians are worth much as patriots. Patriotism is a new virtue marvellously developed. As hope is inspired and they see themselves in kindly touch with Christians of the Great West, they are led to wake up to all forms of good for their own and for other countries. They never cease talking of the goodness shown them from the west.

Chinese Christians also are worth much as the pioneers in education. Further, they are rendering great service to their country in seeking to put down many evil customs, and to work for all forms of righteousness. Those who wish to see the value of even ordinary Chinese in relation to the British Empire, may study our Straits Settlements and other parts of the world where Chinese-British subjects reside.

In the next paper I hope to deal with the question, "How far is it possible for China, as a nation, to establish a permanent position for herself?"

Young China and Opium.

SIR,—Allow me to relate an incident which I think cannot fail to interest those of your readers who are watching the course of history in China at the present time, and who are asking what are the causes of China's decay.

I arrived at Hong Kong on February 17, on my return to China. On that day, or a day or two previously, a competitive examination had been held under Government auspices for a Government clerkship of the value of 40dols. per month. The candidates were to be English-speaking Chinamen, and as a part of their examination they had to write an English essay on a subject chosen by the Government examiner. The theme he selected was "The Effects of Opium-Smoking." It will not be supposed that the candidates thought that they were expected to denounce a habit from which the Colonial Government derives a considerable revenue, yet everyone of these young men spoke in terms of unmeasured disapproval of the habit and of its effects upon the smoker. By the kindness of a friend I was permitted to make extracts from each of these essays, five in all, and I now transcribe them verbatim for the benefit of your readers. The halting English in which the essays are written gives piquancy to the ideas which the writers endeavour to express.

Extract 1. "No matter how diligent or capable a man is, he would, after getting into the habit of opium smoking, gradually become lazy—so lazy that he would not attend to his duties. . . . As there is not one of the officials of China who does not smoke opium, and consequently every and all of them have neglected to attend to their duties, the effects have done so much as to have ruined the Chinese Empire, which, though not actually smokes opium itself, has been ruined through opium smoking."

2. "It is a bad habit of smoking opium. . . . When you are walking in the street you can observe a great number of miserable statutes lying in street corners; they simply become poor and useless through smoking opium. . . . Take it as your enemy, then you will be free from touching or suffering this kind of disease. Laziness, which brings him into ruin, comes from the same effect. Chinese officers or mandarins are suffering the same thing which dishonour them, and very likely bring the whole Empire into ruin."

3. "When a person once has the habit of smoking opium, he cannot leave it until he died. . . . Many persons have persuaded the Government to stop trade but failed."

4. "With regards to the opium-smoking specily the Chinese, I should say it is the very point which ruins the Chinese Empire. . . . Now I should say something about it. It is a great devil. It robs away plenty money from China. . . . Some years ago some kind-hearted white gentlemen tried many times to stop the growing of the opium, but sorry to say in vain at last."

5. "The effect of smoking opium is dangerous matter to think of. It is also chiefly employed among Chinese Mandarines. To smoke opium is easily to weaken any one who was in the habit of smoking it. Oonce about several scores of years passed the Governor of Quangtung wished to forbid the importation of opium, and to prohabit the people smoking it."

From the above extracts it will be seen that three out of the five young men whose essays I have quoted attribute the ruin of China directly to the spread of opium smoking, and the language of the other two is scarcely less strong. Of course, I do not quote these young men as if they spoke with any special authority. The value of their testimony consists in the fact that when asked to express an opinion they promptly, naturally and spontaneously utter the opinion which they always heard expressed and never disputed in the society in which they have moved—an opinion universally held amongst respectable and even non-respectable people in the Chinese Empire.—Yours truly,

ARNOLD FOSTER.

L.M.S., Hankow, March 16.

The Crisis in China.

IT is difficult for Christian people at home to understand the bearings of the political question in China on the cause of missions. I therefore offer a few suggestions, which are the expression of my firm convictions.

Negatively it is frequently stated that China will fall to pieces; positively it is stated that China will be divided up. There is, therefore, a great deal of hopelessness as to the future of China as a nation and as a Government. If China falls to pieces, it will be due to the unwillingness of the Government to accept reforms. If China is divided up, it will be due to the action of foreign Powers in favour of what is termed "spheres of influence" as opposed to "the open door." Is there then any hope for bringing reforms into China under the present régime? and is there, secondly, any hope for maintaining the sentiment at home in favour of the traditional policy of the open door, and helping to maintain the autonomy of China as a nation? Have the Christian people of England, as well as the Confucianists of China, left out God and righteousness in the consideration of the question, and so lost all hope?

Those who fail to take a serious view of the question will not be satisfied with any small degree of hope that may be pointed out. This lack of seriousness, as well as this lack of hope, is leading to the growing sentiment in the country—first, for "spheres of influence," and finally for actual partition.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN TO MISSIONS?

It means that in the three Southern Provinces of China the German Protestant missionaries, the London Mission, the Church Missionary Society, the China Inland Mission, the American Presbyterian Mission, the English Presbyterian Mission and the American Baptist Mission will be placed under the supervision and control of France. Already several of the Protestant missionaries and their converts in that section have been handicapped in securing the protection of the Chinese authorities owing to the interference of France. It means that in Manchuria the Scotch and Irish Presbyterian Mission will be placed under the control of Russia. It means that in Shantung the Church of England Mission, the English Methodists, the American Presbyterians, the American Methodists, the English Baptists and the American Baptists, and the American Board missionaries will be placed under the control of Germany; and this in a province where the German missionaries, zealously defended by the German Government, are all Roman Catholics. We need say nothing of the other provinces whose location in the proposed division of spheres has not yet been determined.

I, for one, if labouring as a missionary in connection with any of these societies, would prefer to look for favour and protection from the Chinese authorities. At present, in this country, owing to the lack of grasp of the situation, there is not a single man in Parliament who has risen to plead for the rights of China, or to consider the rights of the missionaries.

It should also be noted that if this crusade continues, and China is actually partitioned, even though it be into spheres of influence, the Chinese will not be favourably impressed with the character of the Christianity that these interlopers have exhibited. There cannot possibly be any assistance given to the cause of missions by any such policy or any such achievement.

Therefore I, for one, am ready to use all my strength, here at home, to cultivate the sentiment, which has not altogether died out, of in the political autonomy of China. I am also ready, on my return to China, to use all my strength for helping to bring about reforms under the present régime. China has a government de facto, and certainly if the Roman Government could have been declared to be the powers ordained of God, there is at least a degree of sacredness to be attached to the Chinese Government.

REFUSING TO INTERFERE

As already referred to in the columns of your paper, I have been seeking to secure the support of the International Institute of China. From letters which I have received from different sources in Pekin, it is regarded as one attempt, and, I may add, the only attempt from the outside, in favour of reform likely to be appreciated by the present régime. It is also an attempt to arouse a sentiment among the different nations in favour of generous treatment of the Chinese, and of a willingness to co-operate in trying to strengthen the Chinese Government.

Whether the Christian people of England will see the significance of such an enterprise, or even the importance of the present movements concerning the future of China, I cannot say. I have had eight months' experience in the country, but I have detected a large amount of apathy and unconcern. The Christian people are certainly zealous to promote the cause of missions, but they do not care very much about the outcome of present discussion in determining the future of China as a nation. The general feeling is, "It does not matter whether China remains or falls to pieces. The Chinese can still be saved, and the Kingdom of God go on."

I acknowledge that God's great plan for evangelising the world is not thwarted by any amount of human scheming; nevertheless, I cannot but see that there is a moral element, nay, even Christian principle, in all these political and international problems that are rising up in all parts of the world. May the recognition of true practical Christianity in harmony with the spirit of Christ be given to the problems of China! GILBERT REID.

c/o. Hong Kong Bank, 31, Lombard St., E.C.

Marseilles Sailors' Rest.

FOR twenty years a Sailors' Rest has been carried on at Marseilles, and the workers have been much encouraged by the attendance of sailors at the reading-room. During last year over 7,000 sailors visited the house, 38, Quai du Port, and Mdlle. Merz, the directress, was kept constantly busy. Inmates of the hospital are cared for, and Scripture and tract distribution is never neglected.

The loan libraries, one for ships and another for the reading-room, need to be renewed. Miss A. Malpas, who has for the past two years had a hand in the work, replacing Mdlle. Merz almost daily in the reading-room, emphasises the importance of that adjunct. The work of Mdlle. Merz has been greatly blessed in the past; there have been many conversions, and she is also quite a mother to the young men, taking care of their money, and giving them good advice, both spiritual and temporal. The work is now suffering from lack of funds. Communications may be addressed to Miss Malpas, 29, Rue Montaux, Marseilles.

The Plague in India.

DEAR SIR,—As your readers helped us so liberally a year ago by subscribing towards our Indian Famine Fund, they will learn with regret that some of the districts so terribly afflicted by the famine have now been visited by the plague. These districts include several places in the Bombay Presidency—e.g., Bombay, Poona, and Nasik. Now we learn by the last mail that Ratnagiri, one of our stations in the south, has fallen under the scourge.

Our ladies have taken and are taking part in the work of relieving the sufferings of the people, and have in some cases completely abandoned their usual avocations to devote themselves entirely to this work. Residents have been loud in their praises of the self-sacrificing efforts of our missionaries during these times of anxiety and trial. One missionary had to be invalided home in a very serious state of health, having completely broken down owing to the extra strain in the relief work.

Rev. W. G. Peel, Bishop-designate of Mombasa, who has lately arrived in England, says: "I have come from the white faces and worn forms of your missionaries; I have but lately seen them on the verge of breaking down, and you have none to take their places. At least five more ladies are needed for stations in Western India, and the reply of your committee is that they have no means! But, though the supply is so limited, my heart rejoices when I think of the kind of missionaries you have. I cannot speak too highly of that little band; they are doing real work for Christ. Miss Campbell and Miss Trott, who were in charge of the Beni-Israel work, were breaking down through overwork, and if three ladies could be sent out for these schools they could commence work at once. One sentence in the report touched my heart: 'Village work in Allahabad is languishing for want of workers. At Nasik, a centre for village work, Miss Harvey had been out fifteen years without taking a rest, because there was no one to relieve her.'"

Testimony such as this shows the crying needs of the work more than any words of ours can do, and the responsibility of us all in this matter is very great indeed. The committee are making their arrangements for the autumn reinforcements, and are anxious to receive contributions towards the passages and outfits of the new and returning missionaries, which amount to several hundred pounds, as well as annual subscriptions for the upkeep and extension of the present work.—Yours faithfully,

GERTRUDE M. KINNAIRD, Hon. Sec.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, 2, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

The New Hebrides.

THINKING you would like some further tidings of Mr. Houlton Forlong, in the New Hebrides, I send you an extract from a letter written at Tanna:—

"I am now living some five miles from where I used to be, so as to be near fresh people, and going backwards and forwards to the old. God is already working in hearts out here. They all wish to be taught, and come out well on Sundays, and all are very good to me. The old friends at Loanbukel have twice come on Sundays, thirty strong, to help in teaching these people, and some of the women have taken meetings for the women. After a baptism of four men and four women, at Loanbukel, three women testified. Things are going on wonderfully now, the heathen almost everywhere are giving up opposition, and asking to be taught."

I would ask the prayers of your readers for this work, and also for the work among the Maoris; there seems a revival of the Lord's work begun among them. Prayer is greatly needed, too, for the settlers in New Zealand, those in the bush are in a most deadening position from their loneliness.

MARIAN MINCHIN.

Fielding, New Zealand.

Letters from America.

REV. SAM JONES.—AN EDUCATED SLAVE AND HIS MASTERS.—LYNCHING LAWLESSNESS.—DR. CUYLER AND DR. HILLIS.—IN HIS STEPS.

REV. SAM JONES, in his interview with Dr. Macrae (see THE CHRISTIAN, April 20), deprecated the education of the coloured people. We learn, however, that there is much scope for doctors, dentists, surgeons, lawyers, &c., among their own race. Impartial observers say that the poor Negro as a rule makes more of the opportunity of educating his children than the poor white man does. To enable her daughter to study, the Negro widow will stand at the wash-tub from morning till night. Students who have no means of their own, generally earn their school-fees by working during their holidays. We met with a British subject from the West Indies, who is preparing himself for the legal profession. He is a skilful blacksmith, and quite gentlemanly in manners. He meets his expenses at the university by what he earns during vacation, sometimes as clerk, sometimes as head waiter. Surely such men deserve the esteem of right-thinking people.

Referring to another blacksmith, and reverting to Rev. Sam Jones's view that an educated Negro has before him only preaching, teaching, or the chain-gang, we were told the following incident by one who knew.

In the days of slavery a Virginian blacksmith bought a slave at Richmond. After awhile, a neighbour told the purchaser that the Negro could read and write well, and urged that he should be got rid of, because of the harm and discontent he would work among other slaves. The owner spoke to the offender, and found the allegation only too true. He talked it over with his neighbours, and was influenced by them to send him back to Richmond, where he sold him for 1,400dols. Then the neighbour who had first taken such interest in his welfare as to urge him to sell his educated slave, took two of his own slaves to Richmond, sold them, and bought for 1,600dols. the reading and writing Negro blacksmith, whom he had considered so dangerous as the property of his friend, declaring that he was worth six other darkies. Then this disinterested man set up in the same business, and by the skill and ability of his learned and capable chattel diverted the trade from his neighbour to himself.

In South Africa, similarly, the "Mission Kaffir" is denounced; yet he is found worth four times as much as the verbally appreciated "raw Kaffir."

At Brooklyn, spending an evening with Mr. and Mrs. Sankey, called in, and, in course of conversation, spoke of THE CHRISTIAN as "a weekly breeze from Zion!" Dr. Cuyler is well known to our readers as one of the faithful and sturdy adherents to the Bible and the Gospel. He had, a few days before our interview, made a pronouncement as to the kind of preaching which the people need. It arose in this way. Dr. Hillis, an able and popular preacher, who had made his mark in Chicago, recently accepted the pastorage of Plymouth Church, in succession to Dr. Lyman Abbott, resigned.

OUR OLD FRIEND DR. CUYLER

Dr. Hillis commenced his ministry in April. On the Sunday evenings he preaches from a text illustrated by references to great novelists, poets, &c. We heard him on Browning's "Saul." His first chief point was the tragedies in the lives of ten-talent men—e.g., Napoleon, Burns, Byron, Shelley, Keats, Coleridge. This introduced the subject—Browning's poem on "King Saul."

Sometimes a preacher so elaborates an illustration and works up the interest in it, both in himself and in his audience, that the subject illustrated is almost lost sight of. Something of this kind characterised Dr. Hillis's sermon, which was, in fact, an able lecture on Browning's "Saul," supplemented by an appeal, feeble by comparison, to seek salvation in Jesus Christ, to obey God, and to live a holy life.

Dr. Cuyler objected to a minister taking his texts from novels, Dr. Hillis having previously made "George Eliot" the subject of his discourse. I cannot but think the objection was timely and called for. There can be little doubt that the congregation was largely attracted by the desire to hear Dr. Hillis's views on George Eliot's novels, Browning's "Saul," &c., rather than about Christ and the salvation of their souls. Let us hope that Dr. Hillis will apply his undoubted gifts to putting the first thing first.

A WORD ABOUT RECENT LYNCHINGS

that have disgraced the Southern States. It does not seem to be known in England, nor generally even in the States, that Cranford, the white man whom the Negro, Sam Hose, murdered with an axe (for which he was tortured and burnt by a mob), was one of their chief actors in the murder, in cold blood, of five negroes, a very few weeks previously, under a charge of arson, of which there was not a tittle of proof—a charge which it is believed by many on the spot was only brought to cover the guilt of some of the lynchers themselves.

Some of the wisest men in America think that there is no greater peril to their country than the lawlessness of these lynching murderers, and the general sentiment which makes their punishment impossible. One of the newspapers gave the portrait of a lady who has made herself conspicuous as an advocate of lynching in cases of outrage on women. But it is easy to give a negro a bad name and then hang him, torture him, burn him, having cut away and preserved parts of his body as souvenirs!

It is earnestly to be hoped that the means adopted by the U.S. Supreme Court to stop these lynching outrages will prove successful. The following has been telegraphed:—

Washington, May 5.

The State Legislature of South Carolina inserted a new provision into its constitution, which the Supreme Court has finally upheld as legal. It makes the counties in which lynchings take place liable to the heirs of the men so killed in not less than 2,000 dollars damages.

The Supreme Court, in sustaining this decision, declares that lynching is a form of murder, for which the county in which it is committed should be made liable without admitting any extenuating circumstances.

The prospect of further lynchings in the disturbed counties is thereby greatly reduced.

This remedy is all the more important as having been suggested by the Hon. W. G. Atkinson, the humane and brave governor of the state of Georgia, in his message to the General Assembly so long ago as October 27, 1897.

"IN HIS STEPS."

One evening a party of brethren, whose names are known and honoured as wise and faithful men, were talking in our hotel, and "IN HIS STEPS" became their subject of conversation. The severe criticism passed upon it on both sides of the sea was endorsed by some and dissented from by others. For my own part I think there is much to regret both as to what is said in the book and as to what is not said, in relation to the One Foundation; but it must in fairness be admitted that the author was not writing the Gospel to sinners, but presenting to professing Christians their obligation to follow Christ, who "suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps." I should have thought it essential to dwell upon His having "suffered for us," before exhorting to "follow his steps." But before censuring an author for not doing so, the warning comes, "Who art thou that judgest Another's servant? Yea, he shall be holden up, for God is able to make him stand."

Is it not the first duty of a critic to place himself at the point of view of the writer, and seek to apprehend the purpose of his book? The evident object in this case was to press professing Christians to follow Christ. I read the book when it first appeared, and it did me good.

It has been said that it would stumble unconverted people. The same might be said of the Sermon on the Mount; or of the parable of the Good Samaritan; or of the Lord's reply, "This do and thou shalt live," to the young man who summarised the commandments into two. Every endeavour to do right, on the part of an unconverted man, has the effect of law; it makes the offence abound and proves his helplessness. This was the purpose of the legal dispensation. It is the duty of every man to follow the steps of Christ; and the attempt to do so is used by the Spirit to convict him of sin and lead him to the Cross.

It is probable that the extensive opposition to the attempt to fasten upon us the curse of Sunday newspapers is largely due to the effect produced upon the public mind by the exposure of the evil in the book before us.

Would it not be candid to defer our utter condemnation of the book until we have asked ourselves whether it lays its finger upon some dereliction of our own duty to do likewise—to follow his steps? Is it impossible that it may have a message from God to us? What means the avidity with which a million readers devour a book which, like Zechariah's flying roll, curses everyone who continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them, and rebukes every reader? Could anyone have anticipated such a fact? Is not the secret that it touches every one to the quick?

Some one says it is fiction? Yes; the same kind of fiction as "Uncle Tom's Cabin," since which no book has so moved the reading world. Another says it is blasphemous. But if a blasphemer convicts me of disobeying or neglecting the commands of God, it will be my wisdom to mend my ways before denouncing him.

If a foe have kenn'd,
Or, worse than foe, an alienated friend,
Some rib of dry rot in thy ship's stout side,
Think it God's message, and with humble pride
With heart of oak replace it: thine the gains:
Give him the rotten timber for his pains.

R. COPE MORGAN.

The Knowledge of God.

IF any people should have known God, it was Israel, for whom He had done so great things, and who had seen his wondrous works; and yet He says in Hosea v. 4, "They know not the Lord;" and in Psalm xcv. 10, "They have not known my ways." (See also Isa. i. 3.)

"He made known his ways unto Moses" (Psa. ciii. 7)—those ways which are past finding out (Rom. xi. 33). But Moses had been led by the Spirit to pray, "Show me now thy ways, that I may know Thee" (Exodus xxxiii. 13). It was knowing God that made Moses the mighty prophet he was, and enabled him to do what he did. The same may be said of all the worthies whose faith and works are recorded in Heb. xi. Refer to Psa. ix. 10, "They that know thy name will put their trust in Thee;" and Dan. xi. 32, "The people that know their God shall be strong, and do exploits."

God desired to bring Israel to the state of heart which would lead to their knowing Him. Hos. vi. 6, "I desire . . . the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings." And revival created a corresponding longing for the knowledge of God on their part. Hos. vi. 3, "Let us know, let us follow on to know the Lord;" and Hos. viii. 3, "My God, we, Israel, know Thee."

On the contrary the wicked and hardened cannot know Him (Ex. v. 2; Rom. i. 28; Tit. i. 16).

To know God is eternal life (John xvii. 3). The only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, hath declared Him (John i. 18).

Those who really know God are never satisfied with their attainments (2 Peter iii. 18; Col. i. 10). Philippians iii. shows the path to more perfect knowledge and the results.

To know God more and more should be the our aim, and will be the blessing of the believer (Eph. i. 17, iii. 19; Col. i. 10; 2 Peter i. 2, 3. 8; 1 John).

A. DE ST. D.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 14. Joshua xvi.

IN this chapter, in the first four verses, we have a general account of the rich pasture lands in the midst of Canaan, which were allotted to the children of Joseph; the remainder of the chapter defines more particularly the limits of Ephraim.

This wealthy territory reminds us of the blessing of Jacob, in which he compared Joseph to a fruitful bough whose roots struck into a perennial fountain, and whose branches ran over the wall. He who was separate from his brethren came in for the richest tracts of country, which lay between the Jordan and the great sea. We recall the words of the "Imitation:" "They that willingly and freely serve Me shall receive grace for grace. But he who desires to glory in things outside Me, or to take pleasure in some private good, shall not be grounded in true joy, nor be enlarged in his heart, but shall in many ways be encumbered and straitened. . . . If heavenly grace enter in and true charity, there will be no envy nor narrowness of heart, neither will self-love busy itself. For Divine charity overcometh all things and enlargeth all the powers of the soul."

Where God gives vast possessions, He waits to furnish the power by which they can be appropriated. He would have empowered Ephraim against all the Canaanites of his border; but alas! the people of this tribe were content to reduce the Canaanites to task-work. This compromise laid the seeds of endless misery and failure. The only safe and peaceful policy of the soul-life is a refusal to compromise with evil.

MONDAY, May 15. Joshua xvii.

The portion west of the Jordan given to Manasseh was divided into ten parts, five for his male descendants, and five for the daughters of Zelophehad. But the Manassites failed to make the most of their land, for they lacked faith. The antithesis of the two verbs is extremely remarkable. "The children of Manasseh could not drive out the inhabitants of the strongholds, but the Canaanites would dwell in that land." What a striking illustration of the wrestle in the regenerate heart! "The flesh lusteth against the spirit." "The evil which I would not, that I do." Child of God, are you sure that this is not the condition of the inner kingdom of your soul? There are strong Canaanites there, whose persistent antagonism to your best life has been the cause of failure and misery. You say, "They will dwell in the land, and the most I can do is to reduce them." Nay, but there is something better. The Spirit of God yearns with jealous envy to drive them forth, and to fill the inner realm with righteousness and peace and joy in Himself.

There were vast tracts of forest land within the frontiers of Joseph, and when it was complained to Joshua that the land was too scant for an increasing population, he bade the people appropriate the hill country, though it were forest. Many, says Matthew Henry, wish for larger possessions who do not make the best of what they have; and think they should have more talents given to them, when they do not trade with those with which they are entrusted. Let us cease then to bemoan the scantiness of our privileges and opportunities, and resolve in the strength of God to bring into use and cultivation those which have seemed utterly beyond our reach. Our limitations in the valley are intended to drive us to cultivate the hills.

TUESDAY, May 16. Joshua xviii.

In a rugged and romantic glen, twenty or twenty-five miles north of Jerusalem, the tabernacle was set up, to remain there for more than three centuries and a half. The choice of this spot for the sanctuary was probably suggested by its accessibility from all parts of the land, and pious Israelites went up out of their cities, from year to year, unto the house of the Lord in Shiloh, to worship and sacrifice unto the Lord of Hosts (1 Sam. i. 3, 24).

At a great convocation held here under the presidency of Joshua, the noble leader complained of the slackness of the people to possess the land. They had been too prone to preserve the manners of their pilgrim wilderness life, dwelling in tents, and pasturing their flocks upon the luxuriant wolds, instead of acquiring their respective portions at the hand of the Canaanite. It was therefore resolved to compile a Domesday Book, in which the land was described into seven portions, for which lots were to be afterwards cast. Josephus says that this survey was performed by experts in geometry and mensuration, arts derived from the long sojourn in Egypt.

It is necessary from time to time to make a survey of the possibilities of the Christian life. We are, the Apostle says, very short-sighted. We are content with what we have already attained. We lack the ambition which leaves that which is behind and presses on. The true life can never be a standstill one.

WEDNESDAY, May 17. Joshua xix.

This chapter contains an account of the completion of the distribution of the land among the remaining tribes; and again the lesson is impressed upon us that we do not possess our possessions, nor appropriate the possibilities of life in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus. There are four directions in which that life is capable of enlargement.

First.—In length. Let us go further back, beyond our conversion, our parentage, to the death of the Cross, and beyond, to the eternal purpose of God, which He purposed in Christ Jesus for our redemption, and beyond this again to the eternal love from which it sprang. Base your lives upon the eternity and infinity of God's loving purpose.

Second.—In breadth. The true church is always the broad church. Not in the sense in which that word is commonly used, in laxity of doctrine, but in its breadth of sympathy, and in the love which goes out to all mankind, and which hates nothing which God has made. Let us set ourselves to a greater catholicity of love.

Third.—In depth. The best life is marked by the greatest humility. It wists not. It lies at the feet of Christ in helpless nothingness. It esteems all others better. Is there not room for us to make progress downward? The sage said that his garden extended upward to all the atmosphere that was based on its few yards, and downwards to the antipodes.

Fourth.—In height. One of the most striking passages in Dr. Dale's biography, is that in which he tells how in writing an Easter sermon the words "Christ lives" laid hold on him. It was as though some struggling plant had suddenly caught sight of the sun above its narrow bed.

THURSDAY, May 18. Joshua xx.

What the refuge cities were to the manslayer, beneath whose hand some brother Israelite had fallen dead to the ground, and who found safety within the walls of the refuge city, that the nature of God is to the soul of man. In the covert of his wings, in the secret place of his tabernacle, we find refuge until our calamities be overpast.

There are two sweet sentences in the Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family which will cast a light here. "I feel an atom—but an atom in a solemn God-governed world, where truth is mightiest; insignificant in myself as the little mosses which flutter on these ancient stones, but yet a little moss on a great rock which cannot be shaken—the rock of God's providence and love."

"God's common gifts are his most precious; and his most precious gifts, even life itself, have no root in themselves; not that they are without root; they are better rooted in the depths of his unchangeable love. Henceforth let me be content with the only security, Dr. Luther says, God will ever give us—the security of his presence and care."

God Himself is the one refuge of the soul, not sermons about Him, not prayers, meditations, or reveries, but that environing presence of which Jesus spoke when He said, "He that sent Me is with Me; the Father hath not left Me alone." Beloved friend, hide in God; make your refuge in the wounds which Calvary opened for the hiding of tempest-driven, sin-convicted men.

Hide me, O my Saviour, hide,
Till the storms of life be past.

FRIDAY, May 19. Joshua xxi.

The venerable representatives of the three great divisions of the Levites came near Eleazar and Joshua, with the request that the cities which Moses had promised them in lieu of territorial possession should be now assigned. And the people, conscious of the importance and value of their services, did not hesitate to acquiesce in their request. Forty-eight cities in all were assigned to them by the commissioners who had already allotted the country. In the case of the family of Aaron, which supplied the priests who ministered by their courses in the sacred tent, these cities were assigned in the tribes of Benjamin and Judah, a provision which had the greatest consequences in after years, when the northern and southern kingdoms were divided.

The strain of joy and triumph with which this chapter closes anticipates the song of Moses and the Lamb. One day the Lord will give his people rest, not only from the inward war, but from the outward brunt of sin and hostile demon power. There shall not stand a man of all our enemies; the Lord will have delivered all of them into our hand, and there will not fail aught of any good thing which the Lord hath spoken. All will have come to pass.

We do not simply say with Buddha (I quote from Dr. Rendel Harris) "that sorrow drops off from him who has finished the path, as water drops from a lotus leaf." We are not sure whether sorrow always disappears like that. But the drop is turned to honey in the cup of the flower, and is really the richer for the burden which it carried, almost to heart-breaking. We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us.

SATURDAY, May 20. Joshua xxii.

Seven years had passed since the two and a half tribes had crossed the Jordan in company with their brethren to aid in the conquest of Canaan. That enterprise was now well concluded, and there was no further need for their assistance. Joshua therefore dismissed them to the land of their possession. They went off with a handsome share in the spoil of Canaan. Alliance with our brethren always enriches.

On the western bank of the Jordan they erected a vast altar as the outward and visible sign of their unity with Israel. There would have been no need for this, however, if they had regularly fulfilled the Divine command, that all the males of Israel should appear three times in the year before God. The substitution of our human expressions of unity, which generally consist in the formal and outward, for the spiritual unity, begotten by a common relationship to God, has always been the cause of misunderstanding and strife.

It was a sign, however, of the religious earnestness that was in vogue at that time amongst the people, that the remaining tribes should take so seriously to heart the least symptoms of apostasy and idolatry which showed themselves in their midst. The remonstrance they addressed to their brethren evinces a high degree of spiritual fervour. But their inquiry as to whether the facts of the case justified their armed interposition was very commendable, and might well be copied by those amongst us who are apt to arrive at hasty and ill-considered decisions, landing themselves in precipitate and intolerant behaviour. (See Deut. xiii. 14.)

The Attack on the Sabbath.

THE true character of the seven-days-a week newspaper innovation is well understood, and has reasonably caused real alarm. Representative men of all sections of the Christian Church declare that the success of these publications would be the prelude to the general secularisation of the Lord's Day.

Professor Handley Moule says that the issue of these papers is "the boldest and most cynical outrage yet inflicted on the Lord's Day in England. Canon Ainger remarks:—"It is a distinct and overt challenge of the Divine origin of the Sabbath Day, and of its necessity or advisability."

Newsagents vehemently protest. Working ninety or more hours during six days of the week, they view with dismay the prospect of being robbed of their one day of rest. Many of our readers may not be aware that the Daily Telegraph, in its first announcement of a Sunday issue, said the paper would carry on "the week's doings in an unbroken fashion."

Among other details it said, "Particular attention will be given to sporting topics." Novelties in dress and millinery were to be described, full reports of racing and other sports were promised, and also particulars of "Stock Exchange Transactions." In short, so far as the news given could make it, the Day of Rest was to be as other days.

Despite all excuses, what the issue of seven-day papers would mean from a trade point of view has been powerfully stated by the Birmingham Daily Gazette, which says:—

Above all, there is the tendency of the Sunday newspaper to act as a vigorous advance agent for every form of secularising. If newsagents dispose of their wares seven days per week, why not bakers, drapers, shoemakers, tobacconists, and all the rest? And if journalists may supply the secular cravings of the masses, and make a profit thereby, who shall deny like privileges to the actor, the music-hall artiste, or the dancing saloon keeper? We risk the loss of what wise men look upon as one of our greatest possessions, and can only hope to get in return for it the curse of a continental Sunday.

That there has been during recent years a growing laxity in the observance of the Lord's Day must be sorrowfully admitted. We need to study afresh the blessings the day brings when rightly spent. In words strikingly forceful and true the late Lord Selborne described the physical and moral benefits of the day. He said:—

The physical advantages are that each seventh day is withdrawn from that arduous labour of body and of brain which would otherwise wear out the physical and mental powers; that man is rescued from his toil for the purpose of refreshing and husbanding his powers, so that every week he may recommence his work with renewed and invigorated energy. This is the physical benefit; and no man can venture to say how much of the successful industry, how much of the wealth, how much even of the greatness of this country is due to the continual supply of strength which is chiefly maintained by this important institution.

But the moral benefit is infinitely greater. The consecration of this day to God withdraws man once a week from the contemplations of secular and earthly things, and invites him, with a call which every man must hear, though all may not regard, to remember his eternal interests—to recollect that he is a spiritual being with an immortal soul; and that this world, its pleasures, its labours, its objects, and its gains are not the only things for the sake of which he has been born into the universe.

Monday's papers gave the text of a protest against seven-day journalism. It embodies the testimonies of newsagents and others as to the need and value of the weekly rest day, and concludes:

Momentous issues are involved. The men who publish these seven-day papers have immense resources, and if the people's day of rest is not to be trampled underfoot by them, the most resolute action is necessary; we therefore appeal to Christian ministers, to editors, and to Christian men and women generally, to discourage the purchase of a single copy of these papers, or any other publication of these houses, so long as they persist in their unwarrantable attack on the rest of the Lord's Day.

The protest was influentially signed by bishops, peers, members of Parliament, presidents of Nonconformist organisations, and other men of position in Church and State.

Yet another move in the secularisation of the Lord's Day! The Crystal Palace Company has announced the intention shortly to provide Sunday afternoon concerts of sacred music. For this purpose a Choral Society is being organised, under the direction of Mr. August Manns.

A valued correspondent writes to us:—

Is it not at such a time as this that the bishops should justify their position in the House of Lords? I know prejudice and ignorance are telling us this would be "persecution," and sophistry is confusing the issue, but have we not abundant precedent for our warrant? Bankers have secured their seventh day rest; the post office the same; and no one thinks of persecution. Sir John Lubbock obtained legislation for his "Bank Holidays," and why not a weekly holiday?

Again, since 1889, when the Sunday Newspaper Act was passed in Victoria, it has been a public offence to publish any newspaper on Sunday, and, in the face of the benefits secured, no one thinks of calling it "coercion," or dreams of cavilling about it as "a restraint upon trade." I put it to the leaders of all religious denominations, especially to the bishops in the House of Lords, whether they are not called upon to make an earnest attempt to legislate for the prevention of so serious an evil as this on all hands is admitted to be.

The Sabbath Day.

'Tis Sabbath Day! Delightful thought!
This day may I by Christ be taught;
The glory of his light divine
Shall on my waiting spirit shine.

How shall it make my heart rejoice,
To hear once more that "still small voice,"
To pour my soul in pleading prayer
To Him who doth our burdens bear!

God's message from his sacred page
My heart shall blessedly engage;
How bright our heavenly visions seem,
As Christ is our unfailing theme!

As we, upon his fulness dwell,
Our doubts and fears doth He dispel,
Till, finding Him our strength and stay,
We learn to trust Him all the way.

No Comforter like Him we find,
Who can renew the wounded mind,
The oil of joy for mourning give
And bid us in his sunshine live.

He gently breathes our spirits o'er,
As Him we worship and adore;
Hence to our souls how sweetly blest
These Sabbath Days of peaceful rest!

We lay our worldly cares aside
With Christ our Saviour to abide,
That all we read and all we do
May bear his impress thro' and thro'!

With gladsome voice our praises rise,
And, as we Heavenward lift our eyes,
The sunbeams that around us play
With glory gild our Sabbath Day!

When dawns the morn and shadows flee,
Dear Saviour! may we rise to Thee;
Then, all life's weary conflicts o'er,
The Sabbath sun shall set no more!

WM. KITCHING.

Clevedon. Somerset.

The Sabbath a Delight.

A SABBATH well spent
Brings a week of content
And health for the toils of to-morrow;
But a Sabbath profaned,
Whate'er may be gained,
Is the certain forerunner of sorrow.

AN URGENT DUTY.

The religious observance of Sunday is a main prop of the religious character of the country. From a moral, social, and physical point of view the observance of Sunday is a duty of absolute consequence.

W. E. Gladstone.

THE LESSON OF THE DAY.

The consecration of one day in seven implies that all our time belongs to God. And the public setting apart of a certain measure of time to God's service, as a witness to God's claims before the world, is calculated to strike the imaginations of men.

Anon.

A POET'S COUNSEL.

Restore to God his due in tithe and time:
A tithe purloined cankers the whole estate.
Sundays observe—think, when the bells do chime,
'Tis angels' music; therefore come not late.

Herbert.

A PHYSICAL AND SOCIAL NECESSITY.

It is certain that the observance of a weekly day of rest is written in God's physical and social laws for man as plainly as in the Decalogue. Nor can we escape the conclusion that the fourth commandment is but a reminder of a previous institution, so that those who contend that the whole Mosaic law is abrogated, as a guide to Christian life, do not escape this enactment. Lange.

A SERIOUS APPEAL.

You cannot find in your hearts to keep from your shops or sports, to lay aside your worldly business and diversions, one day in seven. How then will you persuade yourselves willingly to quit all at death, which yet you must do, whether you will or no? We must forsake these things shortly, to prepare us for which it is good for us, at least as often as God hath appointed us, to forget them now, and lay aside the thoughts of them. If we would make a virtue of the necessity we shall be under of leaving the world when we die, let us make a necessity of the virtue of retiring from the world, and putting off the care and business of it, every Lord's Day. Matthew Henry.

THE ATTACK ON THE SABBATH.

We need not be surprised that the Sabbath—an institution crossing fallen man's self-interest at such a variety of points—should come in for its full share of hostility and repudiation. Avarice grudges it, and would be glad to buy it up. Selfishness covets it, and waits only for a plausible pretext to seize upon and annex it to its domains. Sensuality gloats upon it, and, scorning its alleged sanctity, would spend it in a carnival of folly and voluptuousness. Infidelity would raise its shouts of triumph on beholding it trampled down by worldliness. Whilst religious lukewarmness holds its entreasured blessings with such a relaxing grasp, that it would not require a very powerful effort to wrench them from its custody.

Quinton's Prize Essay.

Shaftesbury Institute.—In order definitely to identify the new Deaconess House with the donor, it has been decided to name it, in memory of her, "The Jane Barclay House."

Bible School.—Professor Newell writes:—"My five classes, during this last winter, in Chicago, averaged about 5,000 members at their close. Our largest class has about 1,500 members, and the two smallest about 700 each. Of these somewhat over 500 are non-church members; the remainder come from about 460 different churches and missions. The interest in Bible study is on the increase. I believe our classes next fall will be larger than ever. Many of the ministers are beginning to see the folly of going outside the Bible for their themes, and are beginning to form classes in their churches." Professor Newell begins his six weeks' courses in London in Whit-week.

Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe,

LIVERPOOL.

IT is given to few to possess so many of the Christian graces as did Mrs. Radcliffe, and yet never was one more sweetly unconscious that grace had made her to differ.

From the earliest days of her married life she joined heart and soul in all her husband's zealous plans for winning souls to Christ; placing her home at the disposal of miners and others for their meetings for prayer and conference. Notwithstanding the cares of her family—which have been amply rewarded—she accompanied her husband on many of his evangelistic tours in Great Britain and Ireland. In later years, with enthusiastic sympathy, she journeyed with him in France, Germany, Switzerland, Russia, Finland, Sweden and Norway, and more recently in the United States and Canada. With inimitable skill she adapted herself to the exigencies of each fresh situation, caring most tenderly for her husband's physical welfare, seeking to anticipate and fulfil his every wish for the advancement of the Redeemer's cause, bravely enduring hardship and fatigue; cheering and encouraging him in the face of difficulties and opposition, and rejoicing with joy unspeakable as together they witnessed the working of God's mighty hand.

As tendrils, in their delicate frailness, find an entrance into the rock to which they cling, so her gentle grace won for her ready access to the hearts of wise and simple, noble and peasant, saint and sinner at home and abroad. Like her husband, she was a mighty winner of souls. During Mr. Radcliffe's lifetime, and afterwards, as long as her physical powers would permit, she regularly visited the Strangers' Rest in Liverpool, and wrought hard amongst the sailors of various nationalities.

In the later years of their married life, when Mr. Radcliffe's strength commenced to fail and God called him from the more active life of frequent journeyings to the quiet contemplation of the fields he formerly occupied, his great heart was on fire with intense desire that all the world should know the Lord. He laboured mightily in prayer, and his beloved wife shared to the full all his desires and supplications. During these quiet days, with much wisdom and assiduity, Mrs. Radcliffe compiled out of a great mass of material a volume of brief "Recollections of Reginald Radcliffe"—a memorial greatly valued by all who loved him.

After his removal to glory, Mrs. Radcliffe, for three and a half years, has sought with all her heart to carry forward the objects so dear to his heart. She was instrumental in forming a Prayer Union for world-wide evangelisation, and had enrolled some hundreds of suppliants throughout the world.

Her gentle, loving nature, however, never recovered from the pain of the severance from her life-long companion. While accepting her Lord's will with absolute submission, she could not be comforted. Ere long the Master Himself has graciously called her into his own presence to rejoin her beloved husband. When, in the midst of great suffering, she realised that "the home-call" had come, her peace was unbroken; her only concern was for the loved ones she was leaving: A daughter, Miss Catherine Radcliffe, herself an earnest and honoured evangelist; and a son, Mr. R. Heber Radcliffe, who, with his wife, has long laboured successfully in the Gospel in Liverpool, its suburbs and elsewhere.

Mrs. Radcliffe was in her seventy-third year, and was connected with St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, taking an active part in all the ladies' gatherings and operations. While greatly beloved in her own and other lands, she was best beloved by those who knew her best. One small token of this was manifested in the large and varied concourse of friends who gathered round the grave on the day of her funeral—Wednesday last week.

The interment took place at Smithdown Road Cemetery, Liverpool, amid every manifestation of mourning. Prior to the departure of the funeral party, a brief and impressive service was conducted in the house by Mr Robert Glasgow, of Bootle, Rev. John Mackintosh, of St. Andrew's, being also present. At the cemetery, Canon Woodward officiated, being assisted by Mr. Glasgow.

In words of chastened sorrow, Canon Woodward recalled the meeting, some three and a half years ago, when many of those present had gathered together to lay in their last resting-place the mortal remains of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who would never be forgotten as a philanthropist, a devoted Christian, and a great missionary enthusiast. Truly it might be said of those two who had gone that "they were lovely and pleasant in their lives." Death had taken Mr. Reginald Radcliffe away first; but in preparedness for the Lord, in holiness, in unlimited faith in Christ, and in the power and presence of the Holy Ghost they were never divided; they were but one life. Now they would have met again, and would have received the divine recognition of their fidelity and service in this world. All who knew Mrs. Radcliffe must have been impressed by the beauty of her life, her modesty, her gentleness, her feminine grace and sweetness, her kindness, her overflowing sympathy, her readiness to help at any cost to herself, and the thoroughness of her glorification of the Saviour. The same resources were open to all. They had but to plead and God was willing and ready to respond to earnest prayer.

Mr. Radcliffe's last desire was that all Christians should be inflamed with a divine enthusiasm for the conversion of the world, that they should make it the object of their lives to spread the message of the Lord everywhere, and give to the heathen in the uttermost corners of the earth the opportunity of hearing of Christ. All who had known Mr. and Mrs Radcliffe had a great responsibility resting upon them, and it was for them to endeavour to love, to serve, to labour for their fellow creatures, and to glorify God like those two saints who were now before the Throne.

Mr. R. J. Glasgow said that it had been one of the sweetest privileges of his life to know Mrs. Radcliffe, and he counted it a privilege to be allowed to pay some tribute to her sacred memory. He could not find words to express his appreciation of their departed sister. Truly hers was a holy life, devoted in an exceptional manner to the service of her God. He thought it would be difficult to find, in all the records of Christian service, an instance where there was a more marked fitness between husband and wife than in the case of their beloved friends; she was truly a fit helpmeet for her husband in all that was dear to his heart on earth and in heaven. The speaker had first met her some forty years ago, and ever since that time, until they parted a few days ago, she had been to him a bright witness for Christ. He pointed out the wisdom and prudence always shown by Mrs. Radcliffe in her Christian efforts, which he had never known to fail on any single occasion.

During the service the hymns "Jesus, the very thought of Thee," and "Thy will be done" were sung.

Oxford Letter.

AT a meeting in connection with the Walton Street Wesleyan Anniversary we had a glimpse of Methodism as it was intended to be by its founder, and as we believe it is capable of being still. Rev. W. Spiers said he believed in Methodism, because it was a church for all kinds of work, and every kind of talent could find full scope for exercise. He would not say they were perfect, but it was a Church with a heart. Their mission was to go into the world and make Christ known to the poor people. Surely a test of a standing or falling church is just this: its love for souls, and its evangelisation of the poor.

The subject of the confessional has been before us in the local papers for some time, and on Friday a lecture on the subject was given in St. Clement's Mission Room by Rev. F. J. Horsefield, vicar of St. Silas', Bristol. There was a rather stormy meeting, as besides a company of Evangelical clergy, Rev. S. V. Coles, principal of Pusey House, "Father" Fuller, and Rev. W. Scott, vicar of Cowley St. John, were present. The latter made objection to some of the statements. The chairman stated that in the parish of St. Clement's the wife of a working-man was pressed first by the clergy and then by some Sisters of Mercy to attend confession. She refused, alleging as her reason that her husband objected. The Sister's answer was, "Oh, but your husband need never know." The Vicar of Cowley replied that such advice was given without his sanction.

In reply to the statement of a working man, who told the meeting that he had attended a mission at Cowley Church, and was told that unless he went to confession he would go to hell, Mr Scott said that the man must be mistaken, as he never could have committed himself to such a statement. The moral is plain. The arguments for confession, if they prove anything, prove too much. If it is necessary for salvation, and is a part of God's plan, then a woman would be warranted in disobeying her husband, and a priest would be obliged to say, "Confess or be condemned." A lady at the meeting also stated that she knew a girl who was refused communion at Cowley St. John because she would not go to confession. It is time the doings at this nest of Ritualism should be made public.

The Bishop of Oxford, speaking on the crisis in the Church at his triennial visitation on Thursday, said: "He did not mean to say it was not a crisis, for every day's work involved a crisis, every moment a trial, every morning a visit of judgment. He did not think it was essentially a crisis determining the defeat or victory of parties or the relations of Church and State, but it certainly was a crisis for victory between the moral forces of charity and intolerant assumption, the spirit of controversy and the spirit of peace, Christian civilisation and un-Christian savagery. He evidently felt the indictment brought against the bishops for not using their authority to enforce obedience.

The Y.M.C.A.

The fifteenth anniversary of the Hackney Y.M.C.A. was celebrated on the 2nd inst. A meeting in the capacious lecture hall, presided over by Mr. J. H. Tritton, was addressed by the Archdeacon of London, Revs. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Harry Guinness, and Dr. John Gritton.

Negotiations are now on foot for the acquisition, for the Mile End Artisans' Y.M.C.A., of large premises in the Cambridge Road, Mile End, at a yearly rental of £200. The premises include two houses and shops and two large halls. A splendid work may be done at this centre amongst a class of men unreached be any existing agency.

A reunion of old members of the Hammersmith Y.M.C.A. was recently held in the new rooms. An effort had been made to bring together many of the workers who, since this branch was started about seventeen years ago, had from time to time worked heart to heart for the good of young men. A most interesting gathering resulted.

At the spring conference of the Manchester district union of Y.M.C.A.'s, recently held at Preston, the proceedings were marked by great enthusiasm. The Mayor of Preston, who is president of the local Y.M.C.A., occupied the chair. There was a large attendance at a public meeting held at the Guildhall, and a hundred of the delegates took part in a vigorous open-air gathering.

By invitation of Sir George and Lady Williams, a large number of friends assembled at Exeter Hall a few days ago, to welcome Mr. Frank Anderson, B.A., the National Council's student-worker in the Bombay Presidency. Mr. Anderson, after two and a half years in India, is spending a few months in this country, advocating the claims of the English Council's foreign work, and endeavouring to raise, if possible, funds for a new building for student work in Bombay City.

"The Christian"
Special May Meeting Supplement.

THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1899.

Missionary Sermons.

IN last week's issue of the Christian World Pulpit there were reported three missionary sermons, delivered in London in connection with the spring meetings of the societies. One of these was preached by Dr. Hugh Macmillan, of Greenock, the poet-preacher, to the Wesleyans; his subject being "The Waiting Islands" (Isa. xlii. 4). It is full of beautiful and suggestive thoughts, touching on the prominent part that the islands of the sea have played in the history of Christian missions, from the case of Cyprus in the first century of the era down to Japan and Madagascar in modern days. In the following paragraphs he makes a keen and close

APPLICATION OF HIS THEME:—

"Christ has given to our island the empire of the seas, the light and liberty which the truth as it is in Jesus imparts, and He is preparing his own way upon the earth by the wonderful discoveries and inventions and commercial relations of modern times which unite all the ends of the earth to each other. The teeming populations of the earth have been made our neighbours by the great facilities of travel which the resources of modern science have provided. The vision of the man of Macedonia is familiar to us. We see constantly with our own eyes on these London streets strangers from the remotest parts of the earth. We thus realise in a way unknown before that, however outlandish their dress or speech may be, they are of the same human nature with ourselves. We feel that God has made of one blood all the races of the earth, and that they have the claim of blood-relationship upon our sympathy and help.

"We cannot suppose that it is for purposes of trade and commerce alone that the most remote regions are thus brought closer to one another. What profit that China should be opened up to European enterprise if it is only to find a wider market for opium? What profit that New Guinea should be explored if it is only to corrupt its ignorant inhabitants with the vices of our civilisation? The isles are waiting till our island has freely given to them the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, which it freely received itself. How long must they wait? Is there no higher than a mere political meaning in the acquisition by England of the island of Cyprus, the very island where the first missionary enterprise of the Christian Church began? Should it not be used as a fulcrum for preaching the Gospel to the regions from which it was first diffused, and for greater and more extensive operations than Paul or Barnabas ever dreamt of?"

More important still, because more in touch with the special needs and circumstances of the hour, were the other two sermons—one by Rev. R. J. Campbell, of Brighton; and the other by Rev. J. H. Jowett, of Birmingham. Mr. Campbell's topic, descanted on at Herne Hill, before an audience of members of the United Methodist Free Churches, was

MISSIONS AND THE NEW THEOLOGY.

While admitting, he said, that in many quarters there has of late been rather an advance than a decline of missionary zeal, he was disposed to assert that this is not true of all quarters of Evangelical Christendom. The decline in mission enthusiasm is not the fault of the missionaries on the field, but may be attributed to various causes. An important cause, Mr. Campbell contended, is what may be called "the new theology."

"The new theology has little about the Christ who is a Redeemer; it says much and says it nobly about the Christ who is a Saviour. It places emphasis upon conduct rather than opinion, and declares noble character to be the best orthodoxy. Far be it from me to say a single word against a position which the conscience of every man in this building must approve. But there is a point at which we must say to ourselves, 'How do I stand with God?' and at which our first duty is to make

DR. S. G. GREEN,
Editorial Secretary Religious Tract Society (see p. 24).
Photo by E. Smorthwaite, 174, Regent Street, W.

our peace with God. The old theology, which made much of the injunction to save your own soul, contained a truth that is eternal—the truth with which the ministry of Jesus began, a message to the individual to repent.

"The new theology preaches earnestly the revelation of the love of God; but that message has sometimes been preached so as to obscure the inflexible righteousness of God; and anything that tends to belittle the righteousness of the Father, who, because He is love, is goodness, is a mistaken theology, for it is not the theology of Christ."

The preacher proceeded to point out that the prominence given in the teaching of the new theology to the doctrine of "the larger hope," laying little stress upon the doctrine of the wrath of God and on retribution because of iniquity, helps to diminish our anxiety to save the heathen. He went on to urge that the modern theology errs by what it excludes rather than by what it asserts. Added to this there is the increasing attention given to heathen systems of religion and their favourable points; and the idea sometimes entertained that if our civilised vices are to follow the missionary it would be better to leave the heathen alone.

In the later part of his discourse, Mr. Campbell said the churches must do their utmost to recover the Evangel by preaching Christ as a Redeemer before setting Him up as an Exemplar; by insisting on the need of confession of sin, and repentance, as well as by believing in the salvability of human nature at its very worst, while recognising the impossibility of human nature saving itself. Finally, we must remember that we have not to give to the world a religion that has much in common with ancient systems of faith, but one that supplies something that the world never had or knew before the advent of Jesus Christ.

Mr. Jowett's sermon to the Baptist Missionary Society was on

"THE TRUE IMPERIALISM."

One or two brief quotations will indicate the nature of his telling argument.

"Acquisition and expansion are the primary notes of modern life. The lust of gold and the lust of empire are the twin ambitions of our time. But is there no thirst, no disquietude of spirit, no drooping leaf, no weary feet? Our novels and our poetry are full of the drooping leaf. Behind the droop there is the thirst. . . . What we need is the infinitely gracious ministry of an unveiled and redeeming Christ.

"The vulgar imperialism of to-day is empire by grab; aggrandisement by the power of the sword. The imperialism which I covet for my nation is empire, not by the aid of Maxim guns, but by great and heartening evangels proceeding from a redeemed and glorified people."

The May Meetings.

Slavery Under Britain's Flag.

THAT ancient institution, the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, celebrated its anniversary last Friday at a meeting held at the London Institution. The new president of the society, Sir T. FOWELL BUXTON, Bart., presided. He sketched the history of the society, and said the progress had not been such as their fathers could have expected. Even after the Queen's Proclamation in 1897 there was slavery in the Zanzibar Protectorate, Pemba, and elsewhere.

Mr. J. R. ELLIS, M.P., moved a resolution deeply regretting the great amount of slavery which still exists, and in particular the slow progress made in carrying out the Abolition Decree of 1897 in the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, which are under British protectorate. He said that one of the fundamental bases of the society was to obtain the unequivocal recognition of the principle that the slave, of whatever clime or colour, entering any portion of the British dominions, shall be free, the same as upon the shores of the United Kingdom. During the sixty years that had elapsed since the society was formed there had been an enormous increase in the area and population of the British Empire. There had been great difficulties in Africa. He considered, however, that they had a right, with regard to Zanzibar and Pemba, not only to express their disappointment, but to urge that the Government should have carried out what they knew to have been the aim of the Queen's proclamation.

Sir JOSEPH PEASE, Bart., said he was one of those who were ready to support, with his colleagues in the House of Commons, the Anti-Slavery Question—which was not a party, but a moral question. He believed that it was a thoroughly honest and sound commercial question too. He hoped the society would persevere until the English flag ceased to wave over a slave. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Mr. Thomas Bayley, M.P., Mr. A. E. Pease, M.P., and Mr. E. W. Brooks also spoke.

The Bible Society.

IN the absence, through illness, of the president, the Earl of Harrowby, the chair of the Bible Society meeting, on Wednesday last week, was occupied by Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, Bart. The meeting was held, as usual, in Exeter Hall, and there was a large muster of friends and supporters.

The abstract report, presented on the occasion, had the usual characteristics of interest and instruction, and was listened to with marked attention, as read by Rev. T. H. Darlow. We make brief extracts from this document:—"Christ's parting command, to preach the Gospel to every creature, applies not only to the Church but also to the Bible. As his apostles and witnesses go forth to make disciples of all nations, they must carry his missionary Book, or they lack their weapon with which to conquer. And not only must the preacher in foreign lands frame his lips to new and uncouth languages, the Scriptures must learn them too. The immortal truth must borrow fresh raiment, and clothe itself in many a strange garb, before it can enter as a friend into the huts and tents of far-off tribes, and bring home the message of redemption to every man in his own tongue wherein he was born.

"The Bible Society has been the great instrument in modern times by which God's providence is accomplishing this wonderful work of translating and circulating the Scriptures. Already it has helped the Gospel to speak in some 350 languages and dialects. So that the Book, which a century ago was a sealed book to four men out of every five, to-day lies open, more or less completely, to seven men out of every ten in the world. Such a result, partial though it be, bears the manifest

SEAL OF A DIVINE VOCATION.

"If we count in each agency and auxiliary a year's figures onward from those incorporated in the totals of a year ago, we find that the issues by the society now to be reported have been as follow:—Bibles, 803,236; Testaments, 1,218,348; portions, 2,457,855; total, 4,479,439. The total announced at the last anniversary was the highest ever attained by the society, but this year has surpassed it by 92,287 copies. It will be noticed that for every two Bibles issued there are sent out three Testaments and six Scripture portions, chiefly single Gospels or Psalters.

"This splendid result represents increased effort and corresponding expenditure, especially in some of the foreign fields. The total payments amounted to £224,736, and the receipts to £219,966, showing a deficiency for the year of £4,769 18s. 1d. The society includes, at the present time, over 7,600 auxiliaries, branches, and associations in different parts of the world; of these nearly 5,700 are in England and Wales. During last year the society supported an average number of 725 colporteurs at work for the whole twelve months. These are employed in selling the Scriptures from door to door, chiefly on the Continent of Europe and in the great Asiatic countries. The society also maintained 552 native Christian Bible women, who laboured mainly in India and Ceylon."

In the course of some hearty words, the Chairman referred to the great encouragement to be gathered from the extended circulation of the Scriptures. He also spoke of the broad platform of the society, which brings together many who in other matters are separated. Bishop Mitchinson followed. He dwelt on the greatness of the society as shown by the many-sidedness in its benefits. He believed that there were very few who had strong Christian sympathies and interests who had not, at some time or other, personally experienced the usefulness of the society, which is constantly stepping in at the right juncture, and under the right circumstances, to spread the Divine Word.

Rev. Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, traced our national greatness to the influence of the Holy Scriptures. Moreover, he pointed out, as a fact of present day relevance, that it is to the Bible we owe the blessing of Lord's Day rest. Rev. T. S. Wynkoop, from India, declared that there were more copies of the Bible in India than any other book; and Dean Howell enlarged on the obligations of Wales to the Bible.

Church Missionary Society.

THE meetings in connection with the Centenary Celebration of the Church Missionary Society might well be expected to overshadow the ordinary annual gathering. Yet the latter fixture was faithfully observed on Tuesday last week, when friends and supporters assembled in Exeter Hall.

Rev. H. E. Fox read the report, which was full of interest. Up to March 31 the gross income was £379,827, including £53,260 for centenary and jubilee contributions, which by Tuesday morning had reached £70,000; £18,906 for special funds, not available for ordinary purposes; and £61,315 for appropriated contributions and interest, including Three Year Enterprise gifts. Yet in spite of this large revenue, is carried forward to 1899-1900 of £30,110, irrespective, however, of centenary funds. This adverse balance includes £20,013 adverse balance of 1897-98. The year's payments on general account have been £325,223. No fewer than 107 men and 127 women offered their services as missionaries during the year, and 43 men and 43 women were accepted. The following are the summarised statistics of the missions for 1898-99: Stations, 496. European missionaries: ordained, 403; lay, 128; wives, 314; ladies, 273; total, 1,118. Native clergy, 303; native lay teachers, 5,708; native Christian adherents (including Catechumens), 245,769; native communicants, 65,387; baptisms during the year, 16,047; schools, 2,107; scholars, 86,798. Medical work: Beds, 1,325; in-patients, 10,747; visits of out-patients, 612,080.

AN ADVERSE BALANCE

Sir John Kennaway, who presided, announced that about £70,000 had been paid or promised to the Centenary Fund, and that £30,000 of that sum would be used to defray the accumulated deficit of £30,000. At the centenary meetings £1,005 had been received in the collection boxes, and £700 from other meetings. Looking to the future, he expected the society's bankers would desire the reserve fund raised from £60,000 to £100,000. He expressed his thankfulness for the testimonies which had been borne in various quarters to the work of the society.

In the course of a hearty address, the Bishop of Hereford spoke of the marvellous succession of consecrated lives devoted to the work of the society. They were especially thankful for the 250,000 native Christian adherents, and 6,000 consecrated native workers. After mentioning many of the society's fields of labour, he especially referred to

THE WORK OF MEDICAL MISSIONS.

He had been up the Nile to the second cataract, and was impressed with the thought that the most useful form of missionary labour was in medical missions. The great growth of the Empire was at once a warning and a challenge. Referring to the centenary celebration, the Bishop said: It is impossible for us to have thought of the girdle of praise and thanksgiving, passing from land to land, and from continent to continent all round the Christian world, in the name of the C.M.S., without feeling that we have before us, as members of the British Empire, an opportunity which has never been put before any Christian people in the whole history of Christianity. The circumstances of the present moment remind us indeed of the time of the birth of Christianity itself. When our Lord came in the fulness of time He found the Roman Empire the great leveller of barriers, the great road-maker, having prepared the way for the free passage of the ministers of the Gospel of peace from end to end of it. And so within this expanse of the Roman Empire, Paul and his companions and all other carriers of the Gospel of the Lord went freely from city to city. It is just the same within all the bounds of the British Empire and all her spheres of influence. What a great call is involved in this!

The other speakers were: Rev. J. P. Haythornthwaite, N.W.P., India; Mr. J. Inskip, of Bristol; Dr. Duncan Main, of the Mid-China Mission; Mr. C. R. Walsh, hon. sec. of the New South Wales C.M. Association; and the Right Rev. W. G. Peel, Bishop Designate of Mombasa. All the addresses were pitched in the key of thankfulness to God for open doors; and workers and helpers in every way were urged to rise to the great opportunities of our day.

Missionary Leaves Association.

THIS most useful handmaid of the C.M.S. held its annual meeting on Wednesday week in the Lower Room of Exeter Hall. The Bishop of Athabasca (Dr. Young) presided.

Rev. R. B. Ransford read the report, which was of an exceedingly interesting character. It began with a thankful reference to the C.M.S. Centenary, but went on to warn its supporters against the danger lest "the shouts of praise" should "drown the more ordinary voice of duty." The financial aspect of the year is on the whole encouraging.

A number of interesting statements from missionary workers in various parts of the world—Africa, India, Baghdad, Jerusalem, Cairo, China, Japan, and North-West Canada—proved that the services rendered by Missionary Leaves are most highly appreciated by their recipients.

The Chairman devoted most of his attention to Canada. He remarked that though the centenary might have unfavourably affected some other streams of offerings, none regretted it. We must double our efforts, and, where possible, our subscriptions to prevent any injury to Missionary Leaves. As the representative of North-West America, he was anxious to make known the great benefits received from this Society. At present the Women's Auxiliary of the C.M.S. in Canada was sending bales of gifts of a most useful nature.

Dr. Lankester defined the place occupied by the society as that of

A "SUNDRY MAN."

There were a hundred and one things which a missionary wanted to do his work properly, besides his salary supplied by the C.M.S. If he were connected with a popular church, or had a large number of friends at home, he easily got what he wanted. But many missionaries had no friends who could help them, and without Missionary Leaves they would be badly off indeed. The Medical Mission, to which he belonged, did send out these sundries to their members; forty-one cases had recently gone out to fifty-three missionaries. But what about the hundreds of non-medical missionaries to whom no cases were sent? Dr. Lankester highly commended missionary exhibitions. They helped people to realise the accounts in the missionary magazines. Missionaries should not shrink from describing the horrors of heathenism. It ought to be understood that home and foreign workers were equally missionaries—soldiers of the same great army.

Rev. B. Harcourt said Mauritius was the key to our Indian Empire, our coaling station if the Suez Canal were closed and we had to round the Cape. He proceeeed to give an animated description of the delight and excitement caused by the arrival of the beautifully packed dolls, books, clothes, and other items utilised for boarding-school inmates and Christmas sales.

Dr. Duncan Main, of Hangchow, gave graphic details of the surprises and difficulties of every-day life in China. The many phases of hospital work, the opium wards, the leper patients, the lectures to Chinese students, the work among children, were lucidly explained; and the graver side of the case brightened by lively anecdotes and humorous allusions.

Rev. W. D. Clarke, of Madras, spoke, and was followed by Archdeacon Tims, of Calgary and Saskatchewan. The latter was greatly indebted to the society. His work had been among the Blackfoot Indians. They wanted warm clothing now more than sixteen years ago. There were 150 Indian children in boarding schools, which meant 300 shirts and 300 pairs of trousers, to keep them going in Calgary alone. It was impossible to train children in day schools, because of the life both boys and girls led among their heathen relatives in camp.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.

A BUSY day was spent at St. Martin's Town Hall on the 3rd inst. by members and delegates of the W.T.A. Union. Public conferences were held, presided over by Lady Biddulph in the morning, and by Mrs. Hawkes in the afternoon; papers bearing upon "Inebriety" and "Junior Work" were read and discussed; and motions were adopted in favour of Sunday closing, against grocers' licences, and against any scheme by which municipalities or public bodies should undertake the sale of intoxicants.

In the evening a well-attended public meeting was held. The review of the year's work, presented by Mrs. Brooks, hon. sec., showed that the operations of the Union cover a wide field of public influence, embracing Nurses and Deaconesses' National Total Abstinence Leagues, Metropolitan Conferences, provincial gatherings, autumn and other annual meetings, deputation work, lectures, and the issue of a monthly magazine and other publications. The directly federated societies now number 288, and many of them show increased membership. In order that income may cover yearly expenditure some special effort has in the past been necessary, and it is hoped that the list of annual subscribers may be so augmented each year, so that the increasing demands of a growing National Union may be met with less frequent recourse to special efforts.

Miss M. E. Docwra, president of the Union, occupied the chair, and spoke of steady growth and progress in the organisation of women as a collective force for uncompromising opposition to the drink curse. The Union is not merely a moral suasion society, but recognises as an essential the use of women's influence in the direction of

INCREASED LEGISLATIVE RESTRICTION.

The importance of sustaining the union's work among young women of the middle class, was urged by Rev. J. H. Horsley. He declared that the extent of evil fruitage from drink, discovered among women in prisons, is double that among male prisoners; while reclamations among inebriate men generally far outnumber results in that respect among women.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson attended after a hard hard fight in "the House," realising that the words of earnest and good women were the greatest encouragement a man could have with a tough task before him. Mr. Chamberlain is horrified at results of the sale of drink to negroes; but "an uncontaminated zone" is as much a necessity to the "natives" of London as to those of Africa. Sir Wilfrid exhorted members of this Union to persevere in contending for the sound principle of self-protection.

Some experiences mentioned by Sister Lillian (Deaconesses' League) tended to show how drink degrades and ruins those whom Christian workers are trying to uplift. A sick man under her care crawled out of bed to a publican who gave him liquor, well knowing that it meant death to the man; and one Christmas time she found boys, some no more than seven years old, drawn away from the good influences of a mission-hall to a public-house shed, where they were ministering to the amusement of besotted men.

Reference was made by Mr. Leif Jones to the threefold aim of the Union—to rescue the perishing, educate the young, and promote legislative reform. The painful and obvious facts of the drink question call for governmental action rather than commissions of inquiry. Miss A. W. Richardson added earnest words of cheer regarding a reasonable and hopeful cause.

London City Mission.

WHAT can be more important than that London, containing some 6,000,000 of human souls, and exercising such an influence as it does morally, spiritually, and intellectually upon the country and the world, should be thoroughly evangelised? In the Christian effort which promotes the present and eternal welfare of individuals and the well-being of the nation, the London City Mission has a large share. It was stated by Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, one of the secretaries, at the crowded annual meeting, held in Exeter Hall last Thursday morning, that the expenditure during the past year was £58,502. But while this is less than the amount spent during the preceding year, owing to the employment of fewer missionaries, yet it is £4,457 in excess of receipts during the past twelve months. This serious fact shows that, notwithstanding retrenchment effected, a further reduction in the number of missionaries may be necessary in the near future, unless enlarged support is received.

Of the 454 missionaries now employed, 336 are engaged in domiciliary visitation; 101 in the visitation of special classes, chiefly working men; and 17 in visitation of the Welsh, Jews, and foreigners who reside in London or visit its docks.

Christian responsibility with regard to the spiritual needs of a great city was the opening point of Mr. F. A. Bevan's speech from the chair. Doubtless the need was being met, to some extent, by other agencies; for clergy, ministers, and various workers are labouring harder than ever. But it is sad to find a mission which has so long occupied the van of Christian effort going backward instead of forward as regards support. Leaving out of consideration the enormous annual increase in the population,

THE SINS OF THE PEOPLE ARE NO LESS;

rather, drunkenness, gambling, and Sabbath desecration seem to be on the increase. The recent development in seven-day newspapers is a public calamity, and should be discountenanced by all Christians. It is well that Christian opposition to this new evil should take organised shape. Theatrical pictorial posters upon the walls of the City, and critiques in the press, show that the drama of to-day, instead of elevating the people, must have the contrary effect. Secular education, art, and literature cannot take the place of the Gospel, preached by a body of hard-working men who have themselves felt its power. In view of their labours, we may hope for increase of regular annual contributions in support of this mission, while we thank God for its past, and take courage for its future.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe said the day has gone when any apology was needed for Christian missions, home or foreign, as an agency for the real advancement of mankind. To neglect the mission or force others to do so, would be suicidal in a national sense, for London has been kept, to some degree, in a wholesome condition morally and spiritually by the aid of this and kindred societies. The work which lies before the mission is solemnly great, and has received small attention from the Christian public, compared with what it deserves. The income has been overspent by £35,000 within the last five years. On this account Christians should take shame to themselves, and determine that, by the grace of God and the moving of the Holy Ghost, there should be no further depleting of the coffers in the year to come. Special offers, individually or in combination, for the support of one missionary, would encourage the executive, and would come back tenfold in holy joy at results accomplished thereby. It is deplorable to find that our drink bill amounts to one-tenth of the national income; while the combined Protestant denominations of the land contribute only a thousandth part of that amount to the work of spreading the Gospel throughout the whole earth. If Christians could feel what it is to come into really close contact with their Lord, their souls would yearn for fulness of blessing to the world, in hastening the time when He shall take possession of his kingdom. Suffering humanity cares not for ecclesiastical distinctions, but it does want Christ and heaven; therefore, let us act upon the Divine injunction, "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Love to the people among whom he works seemed to inhere in every word uttered by Mr. Rowland Bamber, missionary to canal boatmen. He said that there are about 40,000 of these people upon the tidal rivers of the country. While there is among them, they must be regarded as men and women with souls, and he had found them accessible to Christian kindness. There are also some 4,000 children on our canals, and some effort had been made to reach them with Christianising influences; Miss Bevan having, three years ago, opened for their benefit a room into which some 400 are occasionally gathered. Provision for their inclusion in certain Board schools is a dead letter, inasmuch as they are never long in one place; but the little effort for their good made by this mission is bearing gratifying fruit. There is full scope for Christian sympathy towards the women on the boats, who start at three or four in the morning, and, while carrying or nursing their little ones, steer the boats or drive the horses. A maternity room has been provided for these poor women. Interesting details given by Mr. Bamber, discovered how God has blessed him in gaining the hearts and ears of these humble folk, and has made him wise in the ready use of opportunities for personal dealing with them to their spiritual profit.

MUCH SPIRITUAL DARKNESS

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of the Congregational Church, Tollington Park, said that after a little more than two years' labour in London he stood in greater perplexity than ever before the enormous problem which waits at the door of the churches for solution. The history of our cities is, for the most part, a record of sin and unrighteousness. Wherever man has attempted to mass himself, there has come, sooner or later, development of all the vices that characterise our London of to-day. A great city is the worst foe of that true socialism which results from the aggregation into a society of individual men living in the will of God. But as the city is a fact, what is our duty toward it and our true service therein? This can only be discovered in a life which closely touches the Divine heart. God's attitude has never been that of aloofness from sin, in the spirit of those who thank Him that they are not as other men. God is where sinners are with their wounds and woe; and He is there in pity. From the history of Jonah at Nineveh, and of Christ weeping over Jerusalem, we may learn God's attitude toward cities. God understands London, as we cannot—the west as well as the east; the one with its tawdry splendour, its cultured indifference, and its

VENEERED ROTTENNESS;

the other, with its grim fight with poverty, unhealthy dwellings, open shame, and smothered agony. These things are more present to the heart of God than to civic authority; and it must be ours, as Christian men, to make easier the conditions of work for our missionaries. As to the Church, here we have no continuing city. When we cease to be "other-worldly," we lose power forcefully to touch the present age. The Gospel of full salvation is against the doctrine of the survival of the fittest. We seek a city, but its principles we are to seek here. Godly men and women must contribute to Christian service by taking some part in the government of this city, securing the appointment to office of men who believe in God; for no man believes in man, save as he believes in God. We are here to claim this city for Christ, seeing that it shall be his by and bye; and we must press forward all the time with our distinctive work of getting men and women into personal contact with Him. Here in this mission is machinery for doing work for which the churches are responsible, but which they cannot do for themselves. Therefore, let the mission directors feel that behind them is the heart and means of the Christian Church.

Work Among Bluejackets.

THERE can be no doubt that, whether on board a man-o'-war, with bluejackets for an audience, or on the platform of Exeter Hall, telling of her work, Miss Agnes Weston is the right person in the right place. There is about her speech a breeziness and an absence of starchiness and formality that accord well with the situation. As the sea song says, "We all love Jack," and we fancy there are few Jacks of the "bluejacket" species that would not vow the same about their true and tried friend Miss Weston.

We felt it was good to be at her annual meeting in Exeter (Lower) Hall last week, and so we imagine did every individual in the crowd that crammed the hall, those who had to stand not excepted. Miss Weston is her own chairwoman, her own secretary and treasurer, and her own advocate-in-general; and the arrangement works splendidly, in her case at any rate. She knows exactly what the public want to know, which is more than can always be said of chairmen and speakers at anniversaries.

At the meeting last week our friend, in nautical phrase, on different phases of the work, and at the close of her talk we seemed to be quite posted up in all that is being done through the agency of this institution, which well deserves the title of "Royal." First of all, she spoke of the growing scope of the work; there are now 116,000 men and boys in the navy, as compared with 60,000 when she began to care for the welfare of bluejackets.

"TURNED ON THE SEARCHLIGHT"

The searchlight was thrown on the Biblical aspects of the mission, and the saying quoted of a royal princess who, when she saw a well-thumbed copy of the Scriptures in one of the rooms, said "This Book is the Crown of the Work." There is a quiet room in each of the Rests for study and meditation, and the Royal Naval Christian Union is now a thousand strong. As to the correspondence department, Miss Weston declared that nothing would induce her to let that pass out of her own hands, so long as she is able to see to it, though she has to employ several private secretaries in connection with it. These letters keep her in personal touch with the men, and there are many blessed results. The printed Monthly Letters continue to go forth in increasing numbers, and so does Ashore and Afloat, the organ of the mission, which is ably conducted by Miss Wintz. As many as 1,145,580 copies of these serials were scattered last year, not only in the Royal Navy, but in the merchant service and among fishermen as well as in the Returning off Service: Bound for the Sailors' Rest.

American Navy. Printers' bills and postages make a heavy item in the yearly expenditure, and friends can help materially by becoming annual subscribers.

The revolving searchlight next rested on the two Royal Sailors' Rests at Devonport and Portsmouth. They each represent an outlay of £100,000, but happily when in good going order they are self-supporting, with something over for the furtherance of the work in other directions, such as caring for the widows and orphans, temperance work, &c., and a small reserve fund. It would be impossible here to go into the many details of the helpful agencies in connection with these Rests; but to show how popular they are with bluejackets ashore, it may be stated that last year there were very nearly 200,000 sleepers—an increase of over 20,000 on the figures of the previous year. From the figures given as to food consumed at the Rests at certain periods of special stress, it is clear that the British bluejacket, man or boy, is gifted with a healthy appetite. Here is a little from the pen of Miss Weston herself:—

PICTURE OF CONTRAST

"Where was Jack ashore before adequate provision was made for him? Ask our pensioners who served in past years. Ask senior naval officers. 'Homeless mid a thousand homes' was the bluejacket, only cared for by the vilest harpies, while his money lasted, then cast aside in a gutter a miserable wreck. The Royal Sailors' Rests are bright lights to encourage others to start in the same way. No intoxicating drink is ever allowed on the premises, and their remarkable success has shown that strong drink is not necessary to ensure popularity or success."

Passing on from this enticing theme, Miss Weston, with some pardonable pride, threw the revealing light on her memorable at Windsor, in response to a special command. The details given were very interesting, and must have turned any red Republican present into a leal-hearted supporter of the Monarchy as at present represented on the British throne. In the words of a bluejacket, who had inspected Her Majesty's cabin in the Rest at Devonport, we were constrained to regard this august lady not merely as a Queen but as a friend, and to say "God bless her." That half hour's interview at Windsor Castle was evidently a time of remarkable interest, creditable alike to guest and to host. Her Majesty's parting words were "I must bid you good-bye; God bless you, and prosper more and more the work amongst my brave men that you are carrying on, and for many years to come."

VISIT TO THE QUEEN

Before closing her story, Miss Weston naturally made seme references to the future. The Empress Frederick of Germany recently opened the Diamond Jubilee block of the Portsmouth Rest, and it was actually full before it was opened. It is now greatly desired that the old part of the Devonport Rest, which is really dangerous, should be pulled down and replaced by a new block. The proposed addition is shown in the illustration on page 20. Miss Weston wants £10,000 for this extension, "a small sum indeed for England to give for the good of her magnificent navy."

Proposed Additional Buildings.

We can but mention in brief the work of the "Needlework Guild," in which the Duchess of York takes a deep and personal interest, and the "Naval Brigade," which specially interests young people in the work among bluejackets, giving them the opportunity of helping. All that we have written, and a great deal more, will be found embodied in a most attractively got up and profusely illustrated booklet by Miss Weston, which she has issued with the title, "Under the Searchlight." We strongly advise our readers to write to Miss Weston, Royal Sailors' Rest, Devonport, for a copy. Let it be read (as it is sure to be), and then handed on to a friend for perusal.

Moravian Missions.

THE annual meeting of the London Association in Aid of Moravian Missions was held in Exeter Hall last Friday afternoon, Mr. T. A. DENNY in the chair. Rev. W. WETTON COX, clerical secretary, stated that the large deficiency caused by widespread misapprehension as to the terms of the Morton legacy, which can only be used for commencing new work and not to help existing missions, has been, by God's providence and in answer to prayer, nearly met without serious diminution of the ordinary income. But unless the regular income be now not only steadily maintained but largely increased, withdrawal from some mission fields, urgently calling for extension, seems inevitable.

In last year's report, allusion was made to the long-time of trial through which the mission in Central America had been passing; from this it appeared to be emerging triumphantly, and appearances have not proved deceptive. For, notwithstanding seeming hindrances and opposition, the spiritual character of the work has suffered neither in stability nor development. "We can record," writes the Mission Board of this field, "with thankful hearts that the prominent political events which have transpired during the past year in Central America have not in the end materially affected our Mission work.

ON THE MOSKITO COAST

"Neither the internal revolutions in Nicaragua, nor the brief breaking out of hostilities between Nicaragua and Costa Rica, caused any difficulty beyond pecuniary loss and temporary discomfort. As a rule our brethren have been permitted to carry on their work in comparative peace and quietness, and with trustful, thankful hearts to the Lord for his protecting care and mercy. Occasional difficulties still arise, especially in the interior.

"Visits to the heathen in the interior have been paid with encouraging results; especially has this been the case in connection with the Indians living near Cape Gracias a Dios and on the Wanks River, also amongst the Sumus up the Prince Apolca River. Traces of the working of the Spirit of the Lord among these heathen are not wanting."

Speaking of the decline of income which the Association is thought to have suffered on account of recent centenary celebrations by another organisation,

THE GENIAL CHAIRMAN

said he believed God would maintain and encourage every work built upon the rock of the Divine name.

Rev. H. E. FOX said it is not numbers or a large balance that constitutes a good society, but consecration to God, so that He may work freely; and he loved this Society because it sets all others such a good example in this respect. His prayer was that centenary celebrations might stimulate general missionary interest throughout the country. God has been struggling with his Church ever since Pentecost, that it may put first things first. Domestic organisation took too large a place, and internal quarrelling followed; but persecution scattered members of the early church so that they went everywhere preaching the Word. Our first business is to let the Gospel be known throughout the world. What magnificent audacity on the part of a little church, with no resources and only just out of the fires of persecution, is seen in the history of Moravian Missions from the yea 1732! What magnificent faith our fathers had! Faith and obedience are going to tell in the end. That is why men honour and love the Moravians, who are to be measured by their faith, hope, and charity.

MR. T. A. DENNY.
Photo by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, Baker Street, W.

The great indebtedness of the Church Missionary Society to Moravian example was touched upon by Rev. W. R. MOWLL. The Missions have gloriously carried out the "musts" of Scripture, in their doctrinal and practical aspects. The Word of God is read but is not preached in the Church of England after the manner of the Moravian Church; and the latter has never drifted back, or sailed near to the Church of Rome. Moravian Missions have always been the work of a separated Church.

ONE IN SIXTY

of its members go out to the foreign field. Self-denial has also characterised the work. The way in which Moravians have inaugurated and supported their Missions deserves our full practical recognition.

Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY, late of Melbourne, loved the Moravian Missions because of the examples of practical and wise Christianity among their disciples and converts as described in the report. For instance, one who wanted to come to the Lord's Table says, "It is our experience that if we do not at once do or leave undone anything with regard to which Jesus has given a command, we lose a certain amount of power, and are not able to do other things." As to his own experience, Moravian faith and practice was a memory of his childhood. The people are not afraid to go to the lowest, the most degraded and the worst of mankind. Fragrant memories of missionary workers in various Australian districts were detailed. The Moravians have penetrated among a cannibal people, and are found in all parts of the world, providing lovingly for the wants of peoples rendered homeless and houseless. They have even crept up the high mountains that overlook Tibet, only awaiting the Government's word to fall upon that country and win it for Christ. If Moravian missionaries have not entered Tibet, they have reached the Tibetans by loving words in intercourse with that race. While the Moravians owe much to Wycliffe, we are greatly indebted to them for their influence upon our own country in days gone by.

Further testimony came from Mr. W. COLDSTREAM, retired from the Bengal Civil Service, and acquainted with the work in Tibet. Several instances of Moravian missionary devotion in isolated spots and amid physical suffering were mentioned. Tibet soil is hard, but it must not remain untilled. Our brethren have seized the standard and are waiting for the dawn. They must have a full measure of our moral and material support.

SUMU INDIANS, MOSKITO COAST.

Slum Work. — For many weeks an effort has been sustained in connection with the "Lighthouse," Bow Common, E., to reach a class of men of the most hopeless description, humanly speaking. A substantial supper is provided week by week, which is attended by a large number of these men, the aim being to secure as far as possible the attendance of the same men each week. The Gospel has been faithfully proclaimed by Miss Keighley, who has kindly undertaken this part of the work. It is hoped to follow up the impressions already produced upon some of the men by visiting them in their homes and seeking to win them to Christ. Friends wishing to help may send their contributions to Pastor Hazzard, 52, Addington Road, Bow, E.

London Jews' Society.

THE ninety-first anniversary of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews was held on Friday morning in Exeter Hall. From a statement made by the secretary, Rev. W. Fleming, it appears that one of the most encouraging features of the work is the large increase in the number of missionary agents within the past year or two. Two years ago their number was 154; it now is 184. If missionaries' wives are included, and they should be, as they are as much engaged in the work as their husbands, the relative numbers are 185 and 203. These figures tell of great progress. The increase of fifty agents in ten years has, however, led to the present adverse balance of £11,087 on the General Mission Account.

The report on "Missions to Israelites," issued by the Lower House of the Convocation of Canterbury, will doubtless give a great impulse to missionary activity on behalf of the Jews. In alluding to the work of this Society, the report contained these weighty words: "If the field of operations is to continue to cover four continents, its income and its agents ought to be multiplied four-fold."

Varied home mission work carried on in the Society's mission house in Goulston Street continues, under God's blessing, to attract large numbers of Jews. During the year 235 Jews and Jewesses have been instructed, as compared with 107 in the previous year. Twenty baptisms took place, not counting children. The colporteurs have steadily pursued their work of visiting Jewish families, distributing Bibles and Christian literature.

The chairman, Sir John Kennaway, president of the Society, said that this work, second in importance to none, and taken in hand in obedience to the Divine command, s

EXPANDING AND ENCOURAGING.

The Jewish problem in the east end of London is being favourably affected by our mission operations. The industrial work in Jerusalem reached its jubilee on December 21, and during its existence 462 inmates have been accommodated in the House of Industry, of whom rather more than half have been baptized, while twenty-five have become missionaries. Baptisms in the city have numbered 565 during those fifty years. The hospital work is also flourishing. "We may go forward in the work with the confidence that God's blessing must rest upon it. The Jew is the key to the working out of God's will and way in the world. If we gain the Jew for Christianity, we shall have won the world for Christ."

In commending the report to the meeting, Rev. Canon Brenan, vicar of Emmanuel Church, Clifton, said that this is a cause very dear to the heart of Christ, and should be so to his people generally. The possession of the Old Testament by itself must lead Jews to sceptical views connected with their future. Our duty is to give them the New Testament which is the complement of the Old. Our singular and unique debt to the Jewish people increases, so that their evangelisation should be the most popular Christian work in this country. If there is one nation in Christendom where Jewish missions should find favour it is England, which has given to the Jew civil and religious liberty; and, consequently, emissaries of this Society go to the people with a certain claim and influence. Various Jewish movements which loom largely before us to-day have been promoted by the circulation of God's truth. The attractions of new forms of Christian enterprise should not be allowed to divert support from a Society which is the true sympathetic exponent of the church of our fathers in Jewish evangelisation. Let us, in God's name, pray and work for this Society, for the future of the Jew is a noble one, and the present opportunity is a blessed and a real one.

Rev. A. C. Adler, missionary at Amsterdam, declared there will be no peace among the nations of the earth before Jesus is crowned King of the Jews. It is glorious to work for the peace of souls, and, through that, for the peace of the world. In the Dutch city where he has been working for twenty-six years, there is a great field for Christian work among 50,000 Jews; but operations are crippled for lack of means. New Testaments, sold by hundreds among these Jews, produce evidence that the books are read and bear fruit; and this is also the case with other ministry carried on in connection with this Society.

Testimony to the genuineness of the work in Jerusalem was borne by Sir Wm. T. Charley, Q.C., late Common Serjeant, who has lately returned from the Holy City, and who stated that Jewish parents themselves conduct their children to the schools.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence had learned that the Jew is the key to the Old and New Testaments; for the people in exile to-day are still God's witnesses to the unity of the Godhead. Not only do we owe that doctrine to the Jew, but he has ever been a witness to the necessity of God's salvation; and Leviticus—with the sin-offering, which has nothing analogous to itself in antiquity or in the nations once surrounding Israel—is one of the most important books of the Bible in these days of false teaching and ritual. The Jew is also a witness to the ultimate triumph of good over evil, of God over sin, of the Lord Jesus Christ over all that is opposed to Him to-day.

THE ZIONIST ENTERPRISE

is not life, but it is movement. The leaves are beginning to shoot forth on the old stem of Jesse. "If the casting away of them be the salvation of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?"

It was only four weeks since Dr. W. H. Anderson, medical missionary, had left the work at Safed, Galilee. God is, indeed, working there, and results are seen, although that point is left in the Divine hand. Among many instances which might be mentioned was the case of an opponent of the work when it first began, a chief man among the people. Conversation with him two years after, contrasting Christians with Judaism, issued in a letter from him, in which he said, "I am fully convinced of the truth of Christianity. If I be a Jew in the flesh, I am a Christian in heart, and some time I hope to confess it fully." The work is handicapped by the need of better hospital premises, and for want of means for helping poor Jewish converts.

Colonial and Continental Church Society.

THE seventy-fifth annual meeting of this Society was held last week at Sion College, Victoria Embankment. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and said the attention of Churchmen in this country had lately been especially directed towards the heathen abroad, and hearts had been stirred when they heard how the Word of God had been extended among the heathen. This Society deals with missions in Greater Britain, and they would agree that the first claim upon them is that which comes from their sons who have gone out to other corners of our Empire, and who are, in numberless cases, deprived of the public services in which they were wont to engage. The mother's heart went out naturally to the son in a distant land, and she should therefore support the teaching of the Gospel in all parts of

THIS EXTENDED EMPIRE.

We hear much just now concerning our great Empire. It was our duty to minister to spiritual wants, and give our countrymen who have left their homes the same teaching that they had in this country. The Continental work of the Society was more familiar to them than the Colonial. All of them had been on the Continent, and valued deeply the services of the Colonial and Continental Church Society. He was in the south of Spain a short time ago, and missed the services of the Church very much. "We have got so accustomed to the Society's chaplaincies that we cannot do without them." He congratulated Canon Hurst on the selection of chaplains which he had made.

The Secretary (Canon Hurst) read the annual report, which stated that the Society's educational work in Newfoundland, the oldest of British Colonies, continued, as for many years past, with undiminished activity. The local committee maintained twenty schools, and were educating some 2,000 children in Newfoundland, but were greatly in want of funds for the repair of school buildings and the salaries of teachers. In the dioceses of Montreal, Rupertsland, and Saskatchewan and Calgary, and Athabasca and Mackenzie River the work was flourishing. In the diocese of Goulburn, Australia, eleven of the clergy were aided by the Society. In the diocese of Ballarat four of the clergy were on the Society's list labouring in a region but from what was formerly believed to be utterly irreclaimable. In Central America, East India, South Africa, and West Indies the work is also continued. In the diocese of Jamaica arrangements were made some years ago for the gradual withdrawal of the Society's grant, but in the present distressed condition of the colony the committee have responded to the wish of the bishop, and increased instead of reducing it. On the Continent the chief event of the present year was the erection and dedication of the new church at Lucerne. The work was also exceedingly satisfactory at other chaplaincies. In conclusion, whilst the Society had made considerable progress both at home and abroad, it was not accomplishing what was expected from it. Its funds ought to be doubled, and it should be enabled to assist more effectually in providing an evangelical ministry in every good opening presented to it.

RECENTLY RECLAIMED

The Bishop of Newfoundland said that country was the birthplace of the Society. In the early days it was able to stem the tide of Roman Catholicism. During the last quarter of a century 200 teachers have passed through their training school. Sixteen have become clergymen, and others were in responsible positions, taking their place in Church and State very creditably.

The Bishop of New Westminster said that he stood in a somewhat different position from the Bishop of Newfoundland, because he had no history to speak of. Last year was the first time that the Society had given a grant to his diocese. There were many other points in which his diocese could be contrasted with that of nearly every other diocese. He could not speak of the terrible disadvantages which they had to undergo. The climate was like that of the most favoured parts of England. That was all the more reason why the Society should support his diocese, for Englishmen were now flocking to it by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The size of the province was far larger than that of the United Kingdom.

The Bishop of North Queensland emphasised what all the other speakers had said, that England did not recognise her duties to her sons and daughters.

ENGLAND MUST RECOGNISE

them. Imperialism! Yes, because the great God of nations is directing it. Not the Imperialism that simply gloats over the numbers of its soldiers and sailors, and the amount of its imports, but Imperialism that may give openings for spreading the Word of God. Pearl miners, gold miners, coal miners, and sugar refiners were some of the men that he had in his diocese. He had been amused to hear one of the speakers say this diocese was the size of England and Wales. He could show him a parish that size.

Rev. A. Murphy said he had seen something of the work of the Society at Kingsville, Essex-centre, and Dresden in Canada. He doubted very much whether there would be any churches there if it had not been for the Society. The Canadians had to look across the ocean to the mothe country for help. England was sending out to them about 28,000 people a year, who brought no money with them. The returns from farming were, moreover, slow, and if it were not for the assistance of the Society the work among them could not be continued. Other societies were withdrawing their grants; some were reducing them on a sliding scale. Therefore they had to rely on the Colonial and Continental Church Society. All could not go out to the Colonies, but they could give money and support by their prayers those that did.

The West London Mission.

THE vigour and enthusiasm which usually characterise the efforts of the West London Mission were very much in evidence at the anniversary gatherings held on Thursday last.

In the morning Rev. Chas. Garrett preached in St. James's Hall, to a large congregation, on "Doing Good." The annual luncheon followed at the King's Hall, the Lord Mayor of London presiding, supported by the Sheriffs and a large number of friends of the Mission. In the course of an interesting address, the Lord Mayor referred to early association with Wesleyan Methodism in Lincolnshire.

Rev. H. Price Hughes said they had now a Mission Church in West London of some 1,600 members, gathered within twelve years, from the which was entirely self-supporting. In regard to Evangelistic work they were without any sectarian object, trying to reach the hitherto unreached with considerable success. He detailed the social side of the work, and pleaded for increased support to carry forward the varied labours of the Mission amid a vast and needy population.

NON-CHURCH-GOING POPULATION,

Subsequently a dense audience assembled in St. James's Hall to bear tidings of the work of the Sisters of the People, those devoted and spiritually minded women who labour in season and out of season on behalf of the poor and suffering of the plague spots of the west.

Rev. H. P. Hughes, in a few well-chosen words, introduced Miss Wyburn as president of the meeting. That lady, in spirited terms, referred to the increasing extent to which women were answering the call to work for the Master. In former years the chief business of woman was to work green cats on a yellow ground, but under altered and improved circumstances, and by the blessing of God, she was taking her proper position of usefulness in carrying the Gospel to those who sat in darkness. The many-sided character of the work, and the extent of its God-given success in reclaiming the sinful and degraded was remarkable. The Sisters were welcomed in the dark homes of metropolitan squalor, not because of culture or doles, but because they went about their work in a spirit of Christlike compassion.

Sister Agatha gave a vivid picture of the mission outpost at Somers Town. Remarking on the enormous local supply of imported second-hand goods of every imaginable kind, she traced their existence to the fact that people could not afford to pay first-hand prices, since the major part of their income was TRANSFERRED TO THE PUBLICAN'S TILL.

The open-air work had been greatly blessed, and numbers of wild characters had been led to Christ. Visitation afforded of course the best means of personal dealing. Amid sights and scenes sometimes grimly humorous, others tragic, and generally of a deeply pathetic character, much opportunity of good work was found among the sick and dying. Sister Agatha went on to give a touching description of a slum home with a stony-hearted father and mother looking on while their dying lad listened to words of invitation and comfort and peace. "Some of us in this room," the Sister had said, "have never known Him, never thanked Him for his goodness to us." The stricken youth had eagerly interrupted even with the death rattle in his throat—'I—I thank Him, Sister,' was his last whisper as he fell back dead.

Sister Margaret, representing the Piccadilly Midnight Rescue Work, forcibly described the loneliness and difficulty of the lives of young women who come to London from country homes in the anticipation of finding an Eldorado. Many of these poor creatures were led astray under appalling circumstances. Relating some sad instances of betrayal and abandonment, and indicating some of the hindrances which barred the way back to a virtuous life, Sister Margaret was yet able to point to some glorious cases in which repentant women had been turned from the lavish life and gilded riot of wicked splendour into the paths of righteousness.

MRS. HUGH PRICE HUGHES,

in a graphic review of the work, briefly referred to some branches of the work, which during the year had proved a conspicuous blessing. The Crèche, where the children of the poor were cared for while their mothers sought to earn a few coppers by charing or flower-selling; the Relief department, which enabled families in temporary distress to tide over the crucial period, and so remain free of the workhouse; the clubs for boys and girls; and a variety of guilds and institutions were one and all conducted, the speaker contended, with deep feeling, with the one end in view, to the feet of Christ. Dealing with the mission work at St. James's Hall itself, Mrs. Hughes emphasised the importance of dealing, as they did, with the indifferent frivolous masses of respectability. People in widely different phases of spiritual experience, and people of no spiritual experience whatever, had been blessed, and converts unconnected with any religious body had been linked on to that stimulating organisation—the Methodist class. Their converts testified to a thorough conversion by self-sacrificing devotion in such work as workhouse meetings, public-house and lodging-house visitation, and the like. The speaker concluded with an appeal for more workers and general public support.

THE ATTRACTION OF SINNERS

The Boys' Brigade.

WHATEVER may be the objections to the "militarism" of the Boys' Brigade, certainly the annual meeting and demonstration, at the Queen's Hall on Friday last testified to the popularity of the movement. The report, too, proves its power; and the spiritual work accomplished shows that there is in our midst a mighty force, the object of which is the advancement of Christ's kingdom among boys, and the promotion of habits of obedience, reverence, discipline, self-respect, and all that tends towards a true Christian manliness.

The Earl of Aberdeen said that there are now nearly 800 companies, with over 2,800 officers, and 35,000 boys in the United Kingdom, besides at least 30,000 more in the United States, Canada, South Africa, Australia, West Indies, India, and Ceylon, so that the increase during the year proved that the movement was a living and growing institution. He spoke of the adaptability and the catholicity of the Boys' Brigade, for it was not limited to any part of the world, and it embraces the various denominations of the Church of Christ. Having addressed the boys, the noble Chairman commended the officers for their great self-denial. They were engaged in a good cause in every sense of the word. He hoped they would induce others to join in this truly Christian effort, and assured them that they would certainly experience the blessings which are to be expected from a fulfilment of their duty.

Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, as a member of the 7th London Company, having delivered a helpful address to the boys,

Major W. A. Smith, the founder of the movement, congratulated the various companies who had so ably contributed to the proceedings of the evening, and the numerous officers, through whose zeal and devotion such marvellous result had been achieved. He spoke of the evils which attended boys of twelve years of age and upwards, and their tendency to fall into groups or gangs which often resulted in stealing, lying, and fighting; while the various agencies at work in the numerous companies of the Brigade met this tendency, and directed the love of physical exercise and deeds of bravery which characterised boys into a proper channel. Anyone could see for himself the results of the work in the hearts of the boys and their officers. There always would be objectors; to them he said, in the words of John Bunyan:—

Let him that liketh it profit by it; let him that liketh it not, himself produce a better.

The addresses were interspersed by various displays, which reflected great credit upon all concerned, while bands of the 1st Enfield and 1st Greenock Companies rendered selections during the evening, the notes of "God be with you till we meet again" resounding through the building as the meeting dispersed.

Friendless and Fallen.

DURING the past year no less than 346 young women and girls, of honest, respectable character, but who were found to be in circumstances of great moral peril, were succoured in various ways by the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution, which held its forty-second anniversary in Exeter Hall last Thursday afternoon. The Rescue Homes have continued their good work, with the happy results—some cases being very remarkable in their various particulars, and all deeply interesting.

The doors of "the Open-All-Night Refuge" are open day and night to receive the erring, penitent woman, when weariness with a wanderer's despised and cruel life, or the call of mercy, bids her sin no more. Equally welcome is any homeless girl, alone and friendless in the streets, overtaken by unexpected or sudden destitution, and having nowhere to lay her head. In either case, the troubled woman or the helpless respectable girl is taken in, and the return of morning brings with it inquiry, counsel, or help—sometimes all three—to enable her to begin life afresh.

Spiritual work in the Homes is the primary object constantly kept in view, and whatever temporal assistance is given may be regarded as of secondary importance, and contributary to the other. The finances of the year are of a hopeful and promising character; though the raising of funds never fails to be a source of anxiety and unremitting labour.

All this and more was told at the meeting by the secretary, Mr. Wm. J. Taylor; and then the ever-genial Sir Geo. Williams, who was chairman on this occasion, expressed his appreciation of of the Institution, by saying that he would build a rail, even of gold, at the top edge of a precipice rather than a grand hospital at the bottom.

THE PREVENTIVE WORK

Rev. W. R. Mowll said that ministers of the Gospel well know what a good work has been done these many years by this excellent institution. After dealing in a very searching manner with some of the public evils which render that work necessary, the speaker strongly commended it as pre-eminently Christlike, although it is sadly neglected by God's Church as a whole. A large number of Christian women will not look at the evil, although the work which mercifully deals with it is one particularly suited to women, calling, as it does, for loving personal dealing with the erring. He traced the blessings which rest upon the work of this Institution to the spiritual aims which it represents, and he called for prayer and earnest effort in furtherance of its interests.

Declaring himself to be in love with all such broad, undenominational platforms as that upon which he stood, Rev. Ossian Davies said that none were so friendless as the lonely girls of our city, many of them writing their shame in the blood of a mother's heart. The magnificent work of prevention and rescue must send a thrill of joy through the once wounded heart of our dear Redeemer. Mohammedanism sets woman too low; Popery elevates her too high; but Christianity gives her the right place, and is her best friend.

Mr. Thomas Salt, treasurer, urged that funds are much needed not only for extension of operations, but for expensive but very necessary sanitary improvements in the Homes. He mentioned that since the beginning of the work 16,000 women have been received into the Homes, and 20,000 have passed through the "All-Night" Refuge. Colonel Douglas Jones expressed sympathy with the work, and added a warm commendation of its methods.

Religious Tract Society.

AN occasion of much thanksgiving to God was found in the hundredth annual meeting of the Religious Tract Society, which drew together many friends in Exeter Hall last Friday evening.

In his review of the past year, the Secretary, Rev. Dr. Borrett White, opened with a grateful acknowledgment of the Divine favour which continues to rest upon the labours of this Society. The Centenary Fund has reached in payments and promises the sum of £45,300. Among the many interesting points with which the report abounds, it may be mentioned that the Council have decided to suspend the series of "Present Day Tracts," with the hope, however, that these valuable papers may be renewed at no distant date. They will issue shortly a series of tracts bearing the title, "Present Day Papers on the Romish Controversy," by able writers.

The Society has always considered it an important part of its work to issue from time to time tracts and books on the controversy with sacerdotalism and the Papacy. The list of publications bearing upon the various phases of this great controversy is already very large, but in view of the amount of attention recently directed afresh to this question, the committee have felt it advisable to offer a prize of £100 for the best book on the subject of "Protestant Belief: a Popular and Thorough Vindication of Evangelical Protestantism against Romanism and the Romanist Tendencies of the Day;" and three prizes of £50, £35, and £21 for the best stories dealing with the present-day aspect of

THE CONTROVERSY WITH ROME.

The award in this competition will be made in the course of the summer, and the books, should any be found suitable, will be published in the course of the autumn.

Mingled with encouragements are many causes for anxiety. While openings abound on every hand, and applications for increased help come from every quarter, the resources at the disposal of the Committee, so far from showing a corresponding increase, are far less than they were some years ago. Unbounded competition in fields which at first the Society occupied almost alone, the continued depression in the bookselling trade, and the reduction in profits which the circumstances of the present day have caused, have largely diminished the funds available for supplementing the Society's missionary income.

Let, therefore, the new stage of existence on which the Society is now entering be marked by more earnestness in its cause, by more earnest prayer for the Lord's blessing, and by more hearty support given to its work by those who value evangelical truth.

In the absence of Lord Overtoun, Mr. Edward Rawlings took the chair, and expressed enthusiasm for the work of the Society, a feeling which he had maintained for some fifty years. Increased issue of religious works by various publishers besides this Society is a good sign of growing interest in that direction. The Society is the helper of every missionary society throughout the world; and it is believed that the reform party in China got their idea from its literature. There are some eleven different missionary societies which the R.T.S. helps in China, and nineteen in India. Increased means are necessary for the ordinary work of the Society; while it is also needful to complete the Centenary Fund, so that the organisation may have means to meet its ever-increasing opportunities of usefulness. Let us help to the utmost of our ability, and get others to do the same. Besides money, sympathy and prayer are much needed. The Society earnestly desires to of the blessed Gospel of our Lord and Saviour. Divine strength is also needed in order to respond to all the claims made upon this Society in the spirit of love to our Master and to our fellow men. Above all, there must be dependence upon God for guidance, in view of the diversified needs of the present day. May that guidance be graciously vouchsafed, "lest we forget!"

BE KEPT UPON THE RIGHT LINES

(300)

Mr. Archibald Campbell considered it a great privilege to speak upon this auspicious occasion—to stand there as a representative of that "elder sister" of this great Society, the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland. They in Scotland were deeply sensible of the service rendered by this Society to the cause of religion and pure literature throughout the world.

Earnestly hoping that what had been accomplished in the past was but the beginning of greater things from this Society, Rev. Dr. Butler, Trinity College, Cambridge, said it is only by the Spirit of God that increase is to be looked for. In early days the Society was the subject of much obloquy, but this has long been surmounted. The characteristics of a good tract are opposed to dryness, shallowness, and what is called the "goody" quality, although the cause of piety embraces everything that is good. One special service of the Society is what may be called its antiseptic power in literature. That which cannot be destroyed may be dispossessed. The value of every branch of literature which tends to expel evil cannot be over-estimated. Believing that this Society has borne its part in stemming the tide of all that is defiling and polluting in literature, he felt grateful to those who have had a part in so good a work. A hundred years hence, when men look back upon the virtuous reign of good Queen Victoria, these halycon days

Prebendary Borrett White,
General Secretary Religious Tract Society.
Photo by W. & A. H. Fry, 68, East Street, Brighton.

of British history, may they who follow us be found, with even greater success than has been granted to us or to our fathers, still contending earnestly, faithfully, and unweariedly, for whatsoever things are pure, noble, lovely, and of good report.

Rev. W. T. A. Barber bore testimony to the great usefulness of the R.T.S. as the handmaid of missionary societies. An enthusiasm for literature has been begotten in China, where only the aristocracy of mind is recognised. Our holy religion comes to men who believe that truth of a high order can only be presented through their own hoary literary channels, but by Bible translation, Christianity is giving a new dignity to the language which is spoken by the common people. How is the demand thus created for Christian literature to be supplied? Missionaries have their hands full, yet they feel the necessity of suitable books for the education of the people. There are in China a dozen different Tract Societies supported and helped by this great central world-wide organisation of ours. The currents of reform in China have been begotten by this agency; while Christians are helped, souls are converted, and the scholars of the land are influenced. Many little sketchy glimpses of the work thus done were given by the speaker, accompanied by the declaration that but for the assistance of this Society in London the work of missionaries in distant China would be shorn of half its power.

A message of congratulation from the Evangelical Society of Geneva was read by Rev. Dr. White, acknowledging that ever since that society was founded, seventy years ago, it had always received from the Religious Tract Society continual proofs of the affection and support which the latter had delighted to give; also intimating that Professor Appia has been deputed to be present from Geneva at the Centenary Celebration. At this stage of the meeting a written suggestion was handed up that a prize be offered for an essay on

THE VALUE OF THE SABBATH.

It was also announced that an anonymous donor, who had already contributed to the Centenary Fund, would give a further donation of £500.

Canon Fleming favoured a hopeful view of the present opportunities of Christian literature. All writers, good and bad, are in earnest; but where one man will attack the truth, a hundred are ready to defend it. It is the same with regard to the seven-day newspaper question; and Lord Rosebery's appeal respecting a truce of God would not die. Sunday reading for rich and poor was long ago provided by this Society, which has never departed a hair's breadth from the principles of its founders, namely, ruin by sin, redemption by Christ, and regeneration by the Holy Spirit. The great and grave problem of the day is not how to buy books, but how to choose them. In another generation all will read; let us hope that all will think. Every Christian now is a reader; we aim at making every reader a Christian. England to-day holds the same love for an open Bible as that which caused Wycliffe and Tyndale to give it to this country; and all things are consciously or unconsciously moving towards an eternal jubilee. Therefore, "Christian men of thought and action, lead the way."

A note of thanksgiving was voiced by Rev. Dr. Geo. Hanson that, in the present crisis, the Society is projecting a defence which should stand against Romanism, and is nobly responding to the necessities of the situation.

Sunday School Union.

YEAR by year the work of the Sunday School Union grows in scope and in power. A most enthusiastic gathering was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday last, the occasion of its ninety-sixth anniversary. Both before and during the meeting much pleasure was afforded by the excellent singing of the senior and junior choirs.

The chairman of the council, Mr. F. F. Belsey, in presenting the report, referred to the great necessity for funds to enable them to carry on and extend the good work. Mr. Scrutton who presided at the meeting, mentioned the many useful agencies at work in connection with the Union—country holiday homes, International Bible-reading Association, continental work, normal class, choirs, lecture department, benevolent fund, teachers' and scholars' examinations. Opportunities are opening up on every hand, and there is great need for earnest, faithful workers.

Rev. Eynon Davies spoke of the growing necessity for teachers to keep pace with the demands of the time. Great care is needed in the preparation of the lesson. We must have not only a clear head, but a warm heart. The lesson, like the sermon, is all the better when the chill has been taken off, and when it travels from heart to heart. We must try and understand the children, but most of all we must love them. They may not be bright and intelligent, but it is largely in our power to make them useful men and women, and these are the men and women who are the mainstay and hope of our nation. We must treat childhood as sacred, for when we lay our hand on the head of a child, we are placing it, so to speak, on the heart of Christ.

In speaking of the qualifications of a Sunday school teacher, Rev. Justin Evans asked for sincerity, intelligence, honesty, and courage. We must speak out what we believe, and only that. The great need is for men and women to preach positive truths rather than abstract facts; it is only when we put our whole life into our belief that we can touch the heart of the children. Our Sunday schools are not sanatoriums for invalids, but gymnasiums where strong men and women are to be trained. We must make the lessons fresh, and bright, and living; and not only should we teach but live out the lessons in our daily lives, so that the children may know our religion is not a sham. Let us teach the children that true godliness means true manliness and womanliness.

Rev. E. A. Stuart gave an address on "The Commands of Christ to His Disciples during the Time between the Resurrection and the Ascension;" as, for instance, "Go and tell," "Handle Me and see," "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," and "Tarry ye . . . until ye be endued with power from on high." Christian work must not be done with feverish haste; it must depend upon the guidance of the Holy Spirit, Who will enable us to overcome the difficulties that meet us in our work for Christ.

During the evening several references were made to the seven-day newspapers. A resolution was passed expressing strong disapproval of the action taken by the offending journals, and resolving to leave no stone unturned to frustrate the aims of the proprietors.

The Church Army.

THE platform of St. James' Hall presented a varied and interesting spectacle on the occasion of the annual gatherings of the Church Army. To the left of the speakers were large numbers of mission nurses and rescue workers, in addition to the kindly women whose special labours are devoted to the spiritual care of metropolitan barmaids; while on the right were van evangelists, prison missioners, workhouse visitors, and labour home managers from various parts of the country each group being marked by large distinguishing label.

The audiences were large and enthusiastic. In the afternoon the Bishop of Bristol, who presided, sketched in the course of a vigorous address the efforts made by the Church in ages past in the interests of the very poor. Coming to the present day, he pointed out that the Church Army was strenuously endeavouring to alleviate the miseries of the destitute and suffering. Mere philanthropy was, however, powerless in itself to reach the source of social ills. It could tinker with the symptoms, but it was reserved for Christianity to deal with root causes. The great strength of the Church Army was that its methods were all based on the principles of religion. It did more than set a man to chop wood. It was all the time trying to lift him. As a guardian recently said: "The poor law might provide a homeless, helpless creature with a meal and a shelter, but only the spiritual workers could put backbone into him." Thousands of formerly had gone forth from the labour homes to earn their living by honest toil, and the small number of failures recorded was a subject for thanksgiving and hope. Turning to the mission van and tent work, the Bishop related in vivacious terms his own experiences of a diocesan van. The evangelists reached a section of the populace entirely beyond the reach of the clergy. Concluding with a fervent recognition of the self-sacrificing spirit of the officers, and an encouragement to increased faith in Divine help and guidance, the speaker next called upon a number of workers for brief departmental reports.

WEAK OR DEPRAVED PEOPLE

Captain Hardy, prison missioner, forcibly described a day's spiritual toil in gaol, and after remarking on the blessing which had attended the many missions, adduced, among other interesting instances, the case of a repentant felon who disgorged a large sum of money to its rightful owners. The speaker read with strong feeling a letter written in which a convict pleaded that a fellow-prisoner might be met on discharge. That request had been complied with, and the young fellow in question, met by a Church Army officer at the gaol gate, was now restored to the paths of honesty, and led to Christ.

FROM A DARTMOOR CELL,

Among other experiences eagerly followed by the attentive audience, were those of a parochial evangelist in a Durham colliery district, a Labour Home "mother" from Gateshead, a mission nurse, and a group of workers among inebriate women. The cheery character of the testimonies, and their agreeable rendering in homely, unstilted terms, helped the meeting greatly. Then Dean Hole gave a characteristic address, contending that although in the past many had joined the Church from mundane motives, and the consequence was that the organisation had been called "the Church of the rich and not of the poor," yet they had on that platform a cloud of witnesses to the fact that the Church was endeavouring to remove the accusation.

Church Army—Waste Paper Department.

Old people, like himself, continued the Dean, could remember the time when the local squire and his retinue alone occupied the church which was intended to be the people's temple of prayer; when foreign and home missions were in a most backward condition; and when a clergyman, if he went, like Paul, to preach in the market-place, would be regarded as a subject for inquiry into the state of his mind. They had remembered the remedy, "Go out into the highways and hedges, and and as a result the condition of things had been entirely changed. No more Christ-like work could be found than that of these evangelists and social officers. The speaker instanced, as a sample of the people dealt with, a ragged individual, who, when urged to doff his coat and wash himself, pleaded to be excused on the ground that he "had nothing on underneath except a Daily Telegraph." A telling reminder of the only source of inspiration for true work, and an appeal for continued effort, concluded a spiritual and forcible address.

COMPEL THEM TO COME IN,"

Rev. W. Carlile, hon. sec., appealed for aid to maintain and extend the work, and particularly to erect a new headquarters and mission hall near the Marble Arch.

An interesting financial point was that the proceeds of work, done chiefly in the wood-chopping and paper sorting sections, amounted during the year to £23,000. Our illustration affords a glimpse of the paper-sorters at work, placing the various kinds of waste, brown, news, card, or what not, into baskets, and then baling the goods ready for transport.

An evening meeting was subsequently held under the presidency of the Bishop of Salisbury. The proceeding at both gatherings were marked by a spirit of deep and prayerful earnestness.

The Pentecostal League.

THE eighth annual meetings of the Pentecostal League, of which Mr. Reader Harris, Q.C., is the founder, took place on Wednesday last week, when large and enthusiastic audiences gathered in Exeter Hall. In the morning a conference was held, when delegates from different parts of the country gave reports of the work of the League in the churches.

A large and representative audience gathered for the afternoon meeting, when Mr. Reader Harris spoke of the wonder-working power of prayer, and mentioned the fact that two years and a half ago the Pentecostal League unitedly prayed for the Sultan of Turkey. "We still pray for him," said Mr. Harris, who proceeded to suggest that a telegram should be sent to the Sultan saying that the Pentecostal League was praying for him.

At the evening meeting, Mr. Harris said that the following telegram had been sent in French: "The Pentecostal League, assembled in London, prays to God for your Majesty." Five-minute addresses were given by several clergy and ministers. Mr. Reader Harris has since received, through the Turkish Ambassador, the hearty thanks of the Sultan for the prayers of the Pentecostal League.

Protestant Reformation Society.

FOUNDED in the midst of the political storms which brought about the Roman Catholic Emancipation Act of 1828, and led to the Oxford Movement, the Protestant Reformation Society still maintains its work, and has to prepare for a larger and more difficult struggle, after more than seventy years of work.

At the annual meeting held in Exeter Hall on Monday night, the chair was occupied by Colonel Sandys, M.P. Rev. Dr. Wright, clerical superintendent, in a sketch of the Society's work, pleaded for an increase of aggressive Protestant effort in the spirit of love. There is need for far more rousing controversial work than ever before, and for Gospel and Christian propaganda among Roman Catholics. He hoped the movement in these directions was only at its commencement.

The Chairman spoke of the need for recalling the attention of the mass of our countrymen to where England stood at the time of the Reformation. The wave of Romish aggression has arisen again, in spite of the concessions made in the Roman Catholic Emancipation Act. The Protestant law of the land must, however, be obeyed by all, whether "spiritual persons" or others; and it is cause for thankfulness that this principle is likely to be emphasised by the legislature. Otherwise the voice of the country will make itself felt at the general election.

Valuable labours by the Society in lovingly bringing the Gospel to bear upon our Roman Catholic countrymen, was made a strong point by Rev. Canon Christopher. He also described the useful labours of Rev. Dr. Wright in the successful "reply" lectures at Kensington Town Hall, permeated as they were by the spirit of Christ. There is plenty of scope for personal support of such missionaries in connection with this Protestant organisation.

Rev. H. J. R. Marston, Belgrave Chapel, considering that it is absolutely necessary to contend for the truth, condemned the conduct of clergymen who adopt practices and teach doctrines contrary to the laws of the Church of England as expressed in her Articles and endorsed by the Supreme Courts of the realm; maintaining that the spread of auricular confession constitutes a danger to family life, individual character, and national interests. This latter practice is the final expression of the lordship of an unwarranted and unwarrantable sacerdotal caste over the free-born and blood-bought people of God. So long as the Church is connected with the State, we must call upon Parliament to remove all hindrances in the way of enforcing the law.

Archdeacon Taylor followed in able confirmation of the views just expressed. He would rather see the country invaded by a foreign foe than by the black brigade of the confessor. He hoped Parliament would not only remove hindrances, but would take measures to retain the Protestant character of this kingdom. There are thousands of men in the Church who are determined to put the principles of the Reformation before all other considerations touching the establishment.

In some closing words, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., said men of religious conviction are required in the legislature, to oppose time-serving politicians in this time of national awakening.

British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

On Monday afternoon the British and Foreign Sailors' Society was privileged to hold this year's annual meeting in the Mansion House. Among letters referred to by the secretary, Rev. E. W. Matthews, was one from the President of the United States, expressing hearty appreciation of the Society's good work.

Last year the Society was associated with 102 ports, in which there were 108 stations, having ninety-nine Bethels, Institutions, Homes, Rests, Reading-rooms, Mission Houses, forty-four Mission steam launches, sail and row boats, and floating Bethels. Since 1867 no less than 1,123 Christian shipmasters have joined the Bethel Union and hoisted their distinguishing burgee—white with blue star; eighty-eight Christian officers and men have also recently joined. In London stations alone there have been 120 missionaries and helpers, with a host of friends who have been encouraged to give their services freely in various ways for the men of the sea. While all this indicates the mere machinery, where and how the work is done, it does not tell of the hundreds of thousands of seamen who during the eighty-one years of the Society's existence have come under the influence of the various Missions to be blessed in body and soul: some saved from drunkenness, debauchery and blasphemy; young fellows saved from going wrong, some becoming Christians in character and conduct, bright and shining light. Some, from the highest admiral of the fleet to the lowliest cabin boy and the trimmer in the stoke-hole, have become the most courageous followers of Christ, worthy representatives of their nation and Church. While no appeal has been issued for a big century fund, the needs of the work for the coming century are great. New buildings are required in various places, and a growing work at home and abroad demands at least £1,000 a year additional income.

The Lord Mayor, who presided, referred to the necessity for extension as a special reason for liberal support. The Duke of Fife warmly welcomed one of America's most distinguished sons, the United States Ambassador. This world-wide work having our common Christianity as its active principle, has completely transformed the sailor of to-day from what he was eighty years ago. The speaker presented to the ambassador a copy of "Chart and Compass," inscribed with the names of the Duke and Duchess of Fife.

Rev. Dr. Barrett, in the course of a vigorous address, said that the present Bethel at Yarmouth was utterly inadequate to the needs of seafaring men who love their Sunday, but cannot all get in to hear the Word of God. It is here that one of the seven new buildings is to be erected, as soon as the necessary £3,000 is subscribed.

Mr. Joseph H. Choate, the United States Ambassador, said that while he was neither "British" nor "foreign," but "only an American," he felt entirely at home, and in sympathy with the objects of the Society, which had for its first president Admiral Lord Gambier, one of the British Commissioners who signed the treaty of peace with the United States—a peace which, from that day to this, has never been broken, and which, the speaker hoped and believed, never could be broken.

Rev. W. J. Fleming, of Buenos Ayres, described the valuable help which his Harbour Mission and similar enterprises derive from the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon added "a breezy word" about the catholic and costly work which the organisation is ever maintaining, and the necessity for prayerful and material support.

The Congregational Union.

At the assembly of the Congregational Union, held on Tuesday morning in the City Temple, a devotional service was conducted by Rev. Dr. Horton, followed by the chairman's address, delivered by Rev. H. Arnold Thomas, of Bristol, upon

THE END OF THE COMMANDMENT.

The dying words of Sir Walter Scott showed him to be absolutely in the right when he said: "Lockhart, I may have but a few minutes to speak to you. My dear, be a good man, be virtuous, be religious, be a good man; nothing else will give you comfort when you come to lie here." But it is not only because of the comfort they may bring when a man is broken down and worn out, that goodness and religion are of such value. They are always the best things. "Ah, sir," said an old woman, who had been speaking to me once with a quivering lip of sad things that she had known in her long experience of life—"ah, sir, it is good to be good." And I felt that she had succeeded in packing into a small parcel a great deal of sound philosophy.

It is in the light of their effect upon goodness and religion that the value of all other things is to be estimated. There is the Church, for instance; what is it? What is its use and end? We may easily go wrong here. The Church is not a pretty plaything for the amusement of people with time on their hands; nor is it an ornament to be decked out and admired; nor a venerable relic to be jealously preserved; nor an idol to be worshipped; nor an attractive field for those who have a fancy for antiquarian research; nor an institution to be maintained for the glory of those who hold office in it. The Church is none of these things. It is an instrument for purifying and perfecting human souls. It is a nursery and school for the saints. Like the Sabbath, it was made for man; and the true test of its worth is the measure in which it serves to make men good and to make them religious. What are the bairns like that the Church is bringing up? Are they all coming, through its influence and training, to a perfect man, to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ?

Then, too, the essential purpose of the doctrines and sacraments of the Church is a practical one. Why did Christ die? That He might provide material for Divinity lectures, or themes for theological debate? No, but that He might bring us to God. I do not think He would have endured the Cross in order to create a philosophy of redemption. But it was worth while, even to die, to make us good. So He thought at least, though to us perhaps the thing may not seem to be of quite so much importance. And the Sacraments. Why, on that last night that He spent with his friends, did He break bread and give it to them, and pour out the cup? Why did He say that the bread was his body, and that the wine was his blood? Was it his purpose to propound a riddle for metaphysicians? Do you think He was inviting us to exercise our ingenuity on the question dear to Schoolmen of the relation between substance and accidents? Was He concerned to multiply mysteries? Surely his purpose rather was that we might remember his dying love, and that we might walk in love even as He loved us, and gave Himself up for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God, for a sweet-smelling savour.

A word may be said on the Christian relation to questions of public policy, domestic and foreign. While "the Nonconformist conscience" has not been slow to make itself heard, there may be a doubt whether a little more vigilance in some directions would not be beneficial. Most governments require looking after more or less closely; and it is the duty of the Church to know what is being done in the name of the people. We may surely join with Mr. Sidgwick in calling for the "morally emancipated statesman" of whatever party, "who, when circumstances drive him to cruelty, rapacity, breach of faith, or falsehood, will not waver and whine about the painful necessity, but with simple decision, unhampered by scruples, will take the course that leads straightest to the next stage of the everlasting progress."

After tracing the application of the principle of practical godliness to the ministry, the school, and to woman in her social and business relationships, Mr. Arnold Thomas concluded: "We know now that many early ambitions and hopes can never be fulfilled. But here is one high privilege and glorious achievement of which no power on earth can defraud us if we will be true to the voice within. It is difficult to be good; but, thank God, with Him all things are possible. By his almighty help it lies within our reach to be honest, pure of heart, loving, gentle, magnanimous, brave, in all things like our Lord, which is the best that any child of man can ever hope for or desire."

Scottish Notes.

At the Wesleyan Methodist Synod Meetings held last week in Glasgow, a special minute was recorded, expressing thankfulness for the cheering accounts of spiritual revival in various circuits. The belief was expressed that the prospects of Methodism are brighter to-day than ever before.

The Wesleyan congregations in Glasgow district have pledged themselves so to arrange their work for next winter that they shall be free to devote their entire energy into the great evangelistic campaign now being arranged by the United Evangelistic Association.

In her presidential address at the Church of Scotland Women's Guild on "Modern Christian Light Literature," Mrs. Charteris called attention to the great change which has recently come over the trend of popular religious literature, and expressed the opinion that Christian people are being led by altruistic books back to the simple directions of Christ in conduct and service. Naming as examples of books in which the unselfish nature of a Christian's duty is enforced, "In his Steps," "Enter Thou," and "The Ministry of Intercession," she expressed the opinion that the first-named had met with much unfair criticism, but it has taken the popular heart by storm because it is an honest endeavour to interpret and satisfy the longing after a higher ideal.

Reduction of Crime.—Major Evered Poole speaking at a meeting at Slough under the auspices of the Young Helpers' League, said one of the warders at Dartmoor the other day told a gentleman visitor that the supply of criminals was each year becoming less. The warder expressed it as his opinion that Dr. Barnardo and other philanthropists were mainly responsible for this happy state of affairs, adding that eleven convict prisons had been done away with in as many years, thanks to the great amount of rescue work that has been accomplished.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings. London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

ONE of the features of the May Meetings has been the increased prominence and splendid success of the gatherings for young people. There is a clear indication that when the principles of Puritanism are lucidly and adequately expounded, there is an abundant response on the part of the young. The spirit of Cromwell and his Ironsides is not dead, but sleeping, and it only needs awakening. The time is ripe for careful tuition on the part of ministers, Bible-class leaders, and Sunday school teachers on the great religious questions of the day. In this direction, Sacerdotalists have shown how much can be done to spread their views. It is clear that those who desire their children and young folk to grow up with a firm grasp of the Evangelical faith must begin earlier to train them. Judicious knowledge and ardent faith are the greatest bulwarks against Popery and worldliness.

The Peace Conference meets at the Hague to-day (Thursday). We have repeatedly urged the necessity of earnest prayer to God for his over-ruling providence throughout the several sessions. We believe in prudent diplomacy; but we have far more faith in God. Rulers and their representatives are in the hands of God; but praying souls reach his ear and move his heart. This conference will mark an epoch in the history of nations, whatever the issue. We trust that it will promote the cause of peace for many years to come.

It would be difficult to point to a conference more pathetic than that which met last week to consider the question of obtaining employment for men who are growing old. It was the men themselves—who had reached the age of forty and upwards—who assembled to discuss their own hard lot. There must be something wrong in the commercial principle which condemns a man as incapable when he has reached what we have been wont to consider the prime of life. It seems as though nowadays experience is of no value in business affairs. Shop assistants and clerks who happen to have the tell-tale grey hair find it almost impossible to secure a re-engagement. Years of service count for nothing, testimonials notwithstanding. We trust that the association about to be formed, to help these classes to obtain work, will meet with active support.

One of the most impressive portions of Rev. Arnold Thomas's address from the chair of the Congregational Union was that in which he referred to the temptations of ministerial life. It is one of the shallow commonplaces in which business men are prone to indulge, that preachers are free from the difficulties which they have to meet and master day by day. Mr. Thomas's searching remarks on the spiritual perils that beset the occupant of the pulpit were thus timely in two senses. These temptations are subtle and hard to realise in their true character; they attack the soul in its highest qualities; and they often arise out of the very success of the work. In some measure similar perils assail all workers in the Lord's vineyard. There is need for occasional self-examination and for constant prayer on the part of all who have to do with sacred things. The very steps of the altar are slippery at times.

When the London Missionary Society celebrated its Centenary, in 1895, regret was felt that the standard history of the organisation was not ready for publication. At length this great work is completed; and while reading the two handsome volumes, with the view of giving a detailed account of them in a future issue, we have pleasure in pronouncing an anticipatory judgment. In a word, we rejoice to say that this is a great work that was well worth waiting for. It is entitled The History of the London Missionary Society, 1795-1895, by Richard Lovett, M.A. (21s. nett. Henry Frowde.) The result of years of research, by one fully in sympathy with the subject, these volumes should excite renewed interest in foreign missions. To be taken back to the times of Henry Nott and Dr. Morrison, John Williams and Dr. Moffat does us good; while to see that less prominent workers and the men of to-day are not left out of account, is an assurance that the history is as comprehensive as it is reliable, and calculated to help the good cause of world-wide evangelisation.

Her Majesty's visit to London in celebration of her eightieth birthday is a record visit. Memorable indeed must have been the scenes of her childhood and youth as she was wheeled from room to room in Kensington Palace. Play-room, reception-room, lesson-room, bedroom—each must have awakened memories which would make the home of other days and its once familiar faces full of the deepest interest. God has graciously preserved to the country its good Queen during a long and chequered life. The nation will mingle with its prayers for Her Majesty's safety, sincere praise to God for the manifold blessings from heaven which have accompanied this eventful period.

No prince or princess of the Royal Family ever had a warmer place in the hearts of the English people than the late Princess Alice, mother of the Czarina of Russia, and it is gratifying to come again and again upon testimonies to her goodness and beauty of spirit. At one time she was much under the influence of the opinions of Dr. Buechner, who died the other day at Darmstadt, but this changed. She never was a disciple of his, and "after afflictions crowded upon her, she lost touch with his rationalism." It was a saying of his that "her life was a hymn." After all, the religion that gives most courage and comfort in sickness, and has the strange influence of changing "life" into "a hymn," is the religion that is based on the supernaturalism of the Word of God.

In view of the race going on between some of the great European Powers to obtain a paramount influence in China, the series of short articles we are now publishing by Rev. J. Sadler, of Amoy, are worthy of serious study. His plea that China should be left to work out her own national salvation and destiny, without any aggrandising interference from Russia, France, or even Great Britain, is one that must carry much weight with it. In his comprehensive book on the commercial aspects of the Chinese problem, which has just been published by Lord Charles Beresford, all the weight of the argument is in the same direction. What China really needs is an honest and upright governing class. We may well pray that God in his gracious providence will raise up such men, to serve the best interests of this great and remarkable people.

The recent change in the international relationships of the Transvaal has given edge to the claims of the Uitlanders, and there is some hope that the long-drawn strife between them and the Boer Government may soon be adjusted. There is, however, a great danger against which the English people should now be warned. The desire for vengeance for past humiliations has never been quite suppressed on our side, and it is showing itself in many a subtle hint and innuendo in the public press. A boys' paper has recently published a picture by way of supplement entitled "General Colley's Last Stand at Majuba Hill," and in a note at the bottom the hope is expressed that President Kruger may yet live to see him avenged. This is nothing less than an appeal to the brute passions of the young; and it is doubly reprehensible because it is a token of the secret attitude of not a few public men and of a large number of journalists who have the ear of the people.

From Uganda comes the intelligence of the defeat and capture of the two leaders, M'Wanga and Kabarega, who have been hindrances to the best progress of the people for many years. These men removed, or prevented from doing more mischief, will leave the way largely open for the missionary to pursue his Christianising and elevating work. In the capture of Kabarega the slave trade in Africa will receive a decided check. This evil traffic has not only been a curse to Africa in the oppression and wrong it has caused, but also in its moral effect upon the African himself. The entire region will now, it is hoped, be less subject to influences that impede the advance of civilisation and religion.

Governor Rollins, of New Hampshire, made use of the following words in his Fast Day proclamation:—

> The decline of the Christian religion, particularly in our rural communities, is a marked feature of the times, and steps should be taken to remedy it. No matter what our belief may be in religious matters, every good citizen knows that when the restraining influences of religion are withdrawn from a community, its decay, moral, mental, and financial, is swift and sure. To me this is one of the strongest evidences of the truth of Christianity. There are towns where no church bell sends forth its solemn call from January to January; there are villages where children grow to manhood unchristened; there are communities where the dead are laid away without the benison of the name of Christ, and where marriages are solemnised only by Justices of the Peace.

The Christian Advocate of New York states that all New England is like New Hampshire, and hundreds of religious societies have died out in New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania; yet these States in the north and in the middle were the home of the purest, strongest, and intensest religious life in the last and preceding centuries. This is a terrible indictment if true; but it constitutes a call to Christians in our own land to fight every encroachment of the enemy upon the religious institutions that they hold dear.

The London County Council have laid temperance reformers under an obligation by the resolution passed by a substantial majority last week to continue the policy of extinguishing public-house licences falling into their possession. The decision of the Council years ago "not to go into the drink traffic," has received the support of the public. If only Lord Carrington's suggestion that the Council ought to be made the licensing authority for the metropolis could be carried out, some radical progress in temperance reform might reasonably be expected. Till licences are brought under popular control, no decisive step is likely to be taken in this direction.

The Church Times, in a curiously vindictive note, suggests that the reason why Nonconformist ministers have joined so warmly in the crusade against seven-day journalism is their fear of the "dangerous competition" of Sunday newspapers.

They are in an evident fright lest the Sunday newspaper should prove a greater attraction than their own Sunday sermons and their P.S.A. entertainments.

The writer at the same time disclaims any sympathy with the proprietors of the two offending journals. It is clear, however, on which side this organ of High Churchism leans. The Sunday papers have shown a more tolerant attitude towards Ritualism than their denouncers have done, and for this favour its exponents are singularly half-hearted in their defence of the Lord's Day against the Sabbath-breakers. It is clear that we shall gain no whole-hearted help from the Ritualists in this battle. Popery in every form is no advocate of a Spiritual Sunday.

The strange inquiry into some of the charges against Ritualism before the two Archbishops last week is one of the signs of the times. The two authorities who have been receiving evidence disclaim the suggestion that they constitute "a court;" they have no legislative function, and no power to enforce their decisions on the offending parties. The issue of the inquiry is not likely to be of real value to anyone. It is really an object-lesson of the impasse to which the situation is drifting in the Church of England. The anomalous condition of things inside the Church, and the impotence of the State to control the movement which has assumed such immense proportions, are painfully evident. What the immediate issue is likely to be it is impossible to say. "Recommendations" are not likely to be of much use just now.

Meanwhile, Mr. McArthur's Church Discipline Bill was rejected in the House of Commons in favour of an amendment which amounted to a simple warning that unless matters improved Parliament would have to legislate on the question in the near future. This was practically a victory, by a large majority, for the Ritualists. Their one object is to be left alone, and every device is resorted to to shirk all responsibility on the part of the Church to the State. This postponement of the problem into the future is a policy of procrastination, which cannot go on for ever. The lawlessness which has become so rampant in the Church must be checked somehow, and before long. It is a standing peril to the cause of true religion, and a hindrance to progress in a dozen directions. While Christians are disunited and litigious, the world, the flesh, and the devil are in possession of the field.

(626)

The May Meetings.

Some Prominent Features.

By Dr. JOHN GRITTO N.

THE United States Ambassador, speaking recently at the Mansion House, expressed his admiration of the far-reaching benevolence of London—benevolence which dealt with every possible need and suffering of the body, every phase of calamity, every cry of need—physical, social, moral, and spiritual. This activity in well-doing—this ingenuity of Christian love—finds some expression in the nearly 400 "May" Meetings which now spread themselves over four months of the year. From so many meetings it would be easy to select very many prominent features; but there are some eight points which stand out conspicuously, and which have shone forth at all kinds of meetings for countless objects.

The Sabbath Question stands to the very front. Times without number, references to recent aggressions on the rest and sanctity of the Lord's Day have elicited enthusiastic response. Particular acts of anti-Sabbath aggression have, in other years, called forth general remark; but this year the love of England for the Divinely-given Rest Day has broken forth in almost universal reprobation of recent efforts to deprive the churches and the whole community of the blessings which flow from obedience to the Sabbath Law of God.

The Protestant Question has been almost as prominent. It has been made clear that the heart of England, as represented by the scores of thousands at different meetings, is sound in attachment to Reformation principles, and in detestation of Romeward declension. Friends of Protestant Truth—another word for the Gospel of the Grace of God—will return to their homes and their churches full of courage and of patient hopefulness.

The Evangelisation of the World in this Generation has been very generally enunciated, and the phrase has been more than ever commended to thoughtful men by the difference of Evangelisation and Conversion being emphasised, and by the absence of exaggeration and of numerical and mechanical illustrations. The seed of the Kingdom grows night and day, not according to laws of progression—whether arithmetical or geometrical—but according to the will of God; and his will in this matter is more and more clearly manifested.

The World and the Dispensation.—Many times, and at many meetings, have been heard heart-moving statements, that the "World" of the Missionary Commission is the whole world of every creature, and that the period covered by the Commission reaches from the Ascension to the destruction of Jerusalem, and reaches thence onwards to the Coming Again of our Lord Jesus Christ. His people are to "go into all the world," are to "preach the Gospel to every creature," are to "teach all nations," and, in doing this, are to enjoy the presence of the Master "unto the end of the Age." It is well that these terms should have been so often defined at recent meetings, for the narrow conceptions of exclusives and the dispensational utterances of systematisers have been seriously endangering missionary enterprise.

Brotherliness of Heart and Comity in Operation have never been more evident or more strenuously asserted that in recent gatherings. Men of many societies, on many platforms, have spoken in worthy terms of other men and other societies. The waste of overlapping has been discouraged: heart-burning, springing from aggressive rivalry and from selfish limitation of interest, affection, and co-operation, has been mourned and confessed. Christian men and women, workers in home fields and in lands beyond, in Christendom and heathendom, have come nearer to appreciative recognition of the great principle, One is our Master, and all we are brethren.

The Relation of Opportunity and Responsibility has been clearly seen and distinctly enunciated. An open world demands an open purse. Opportunities which are world-wide call for offerings of our best in men and money. The greatness of opportunity encourages to great efforts. The probable shortness of opportunity stirs to immediate action. The world of "every creature" is brought into the field of practical religious politics, and is laid on the conscience of the Christian Church as a responsibility to be met and welcomed.

Human Inability and Divine Sufficiency have been humbly confessed and fruitfully illustrated. Men—even the greatest—have been less applauded, and the Lord—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit — more magnified. Meetings for prayer, confession, and praise—where man has been nothing and Jesus Christ the All and in All—have marked our May meetings, and obtained from the Giver of every good and perfect gift exceeding grace and wisdom for the work and the workers.

Pessimism, which is of Satan, has been mightily rebuked. It has been made clear that the living Head of the Church is better—not only than the fears of his servants, but better also than their hopes. The Lord's people go forth with quickened faith and more buoyant hope to the conflicts and the victories which lie before them.

"In Meekness Instructing."

A REMARK of Mr. Moody's touching controversial expressions is worth remembering and acting upon. Speaking of one term in particular, he said, "I never use it. I don't contradict these men. I try to win them." And he mentioned more than one case in which this endeavour had not been without success.

Many false opinions are the result of men's circumstances and surroundings, and instead of scolding them it would surely be wiser and more effectual to seek to discover the cause of their aberration. An unsympathetic orthodoxy is quite likely to drive men into a sympathetic heterodoxy.

The affections and the will have very much to do with one's beliefs. College friendships with men of superior intellect, at a time when opinions are being formed and convictions are being received, lead the weaker to say ditto to the views of the stronger, and influence them long after the immediate personal contact has ceased.

Kindness, courtesy, and forbearance will win a brother to the truth when a different course would drive him further from it and confirm him in his error. There are men whose career has been blighted by a mischievous error, from which they might have been won by a kind and patient treatment, but into which they were driven by a rough and censorious demeanour.

We are to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints;" yet "the servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing them that oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them change of mind to the acknowledging of the truth, and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the Devil who are taken captive by him at his will." M.

"My Lord and My God."

By Rev. Dr. CULROSS.

JESUS appeared to his disciples on the evening of the Resurrection Day, and saluted them with the benediction, "Peace be unto you." But Thomas was not with them. Where he was, and why he was absent, we are not told; but it does not seem probable that his absence was accidental; and though we are not in a position to censure him, yet somehow we cannot help connecting his absence with his condition and temper of mind, and attributing it to the man rather than to his circumstances.

They tell him all that had occurred at their evening gathering. Thomas will not believe them. He stands in the centre of a rejoicing circle; hears the undoubting assurance from every tongue, "The Lord is risen indeed, and we have seen Him;" and yet no admission that it may be so escapes his lips. He does not even express astonishment; his only reply is, "Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." Their story seems incredible to him. He must examine and receive satisfaction for himself. I must see—I myself, and not another for me; I must not only see, but handle; not only handle, but probe; and he does not say that he will believe even then, but only that he will not believe sooner.

It was right that he should require full proof of the fact. If he had said, "Except I shall see, I cannot testify," we might have approved his word. A man who is to bear witness, and, if necessary, lay down his life in confirmation of his testimony, had needs be very sure of his facts. And I would not say that Thomas was guilty of treason against Christ by doubting the ten; but has he not forgotten something—the prophetic intimations in Messianic prophecy, the reiterated foretelling of Jesus, the whole impression of his Personality?

The week passes, a week of joy to all but Thomas. He continues to wear his mourning robes, while

THEY ARE GIRDED WITH GLADNESS.

The first day of the week comes round again, and again the disciples are met within closed doors. This time Thomas is with them. Perhaps he was not so utterly incredulous as his words made out. At all events, if Jesus should again appear he would like to be present. Suddenly Jesus stands in the midst as aforetime. Looking Thomas in the face, he says, "Reach hither thy finger and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side, and be* not faithless, but believing."

Jesus takes up the very words of Thomas, spoken a week before; and it signifies, "I heard thee." There is the well-known countenance, with the light of immortality upon it; there is the beloved voice; it is Jesus Himself; and instantly, in awful joy, Thomas cries out "My Lord and my God!" He does not put his finger into the nail prints, nor thrust his hand into Jesu's side; he cannot—he knows without a doubt It is my Lord; and not only my Lord, but also my God! I cannot look on this as a kind of profane exclamation into which Thomas is surprised and startled; nor can I believe that he means to call Jesus "my God" in some inferior sense. He confesses more than the resurrection of Jesus from the dead; in faith he has leaped to the front, and recognises Him as Divine. Not that as yet he knows the full significance of his own confession; he has that still to learn, under the teaching of the Holy Spirit, even as we have to do after the lapse of so many centuries.

How does Jesus receive this confession of his disciple? He accepts the homage, and thereby endorses the truth of it. When Paul and Barnabas were supposed to be gods by the people of Lystra, they ran in among them, crying out, "We are men of like passions with you." When John in the Apocalypse fell down before the angel to worship, he refused the homage, saying, "See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow servant." But Jesus accepts the homage without a hint of its impropriety. It is not merely that he does not reject it, but he accepts it as the utterance of faith, "Thou hast believed." And I do not see how we can escape the conclusion, that

HE CLAIMS TO BE DIVINE.

It is not difficult to understand how Thomas was led to recognise our Lord's higher nature. He had been silently, unconsciously preparing for it all through his career of discipleship. And now that look which searched his inmost being, those words which showed that the Lord had heard him, that heart-reproving, heart-winning love which now broke forth, along with the nowr-ecognised fact that He has overcome death and the grave, like a lightning flash revealed and illumined the whole world of truth that had been lying in darkness to him before; revealed it as by a lightning flash, only with this difference, that the truth could never lie in darkness to him again; henceforth Jesus would be "my Lord and my God" to him for ever; "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead."

When Peter made his great confession, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus said to him, "Blessed are thou, Simon Bar-Jona." No such word is spoken to Thomas. On the contrary, Jesus says, "Because thou hast seen Me, thou hast believed. Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." Could a more emphatic endorsement of the confession of Thomas be conceived? It is no benediction on incredulity or believing in the absence of evidence. The benediction is upon those who have so understood the Scriptures, who have so understood the Lord Himself, that faith is instantly awakened by the testimony of the witnesses. I must either shrink from Jesus in horror, as a blasphemer, for tolerating without rebuke this idolatry of his disciple, or I too must kneel down beside the delighted Apostle and repeat his words.

* Literally, Become not. Thou art on a dangerous road. The reference is not to a single manifestation of unbelief, but to his spiritual condition generally. The rebuke is finely tender and true.

Pentecost.

"The day of Pentecost was fully come."—Acts ii. 1.

THE Heavenly Comforter, sent down
From Christ the risen Lord,
By cloven tongues of fire was known,
'Mid saints in sweet accord.

That rushing wind, those tongues of flame,
Told God was very nigh,
Imparting, through the Saviour's name,
The "Abba, Father," cry,—

The Spirit's cry, as sons of God,
Now saved, indwelt, and blest,
They stem the world's opposing flood,—
The "Church of God" confessed.

"Baptized in one," no "orphans" now,
Joint-heirs with Jesus made;
In solemn, wondrous joy they bow,
With heavenly power arrayed!

O happy scene, of glory born!
The world its light regains;
The promised Pentecostal morn
Has dawned, and brightness reigns!

ALBERT MIDLANE.

Should China be Divided?—2.

Can She Work Out her Own Reform?

By Rev. J. SADLER, L.M.S., Amoy.

FRIENDS who read the first paper have asked, "What can China do for herself? See how in Africa in a few years, by foreign intervention, barbarism has given place to civilisation. Why should not the Western Powers take hold of China and lick her into shape? Is she capable of working out her own reform?"

Answer: How would we have liked to have our country taken from us when we were in the throes of reformation? It is asked, Is China in the throes of reform? Answer: See what was actually going on last year. There had been the widespread influence of contact with Western thought, specially through the work of the Society for the Diffusion of Christian and General Knowledge. There had been the tremendous rousing given by the Japanese conquerors. There had been the rising up of young China in a new and marvellous spirit of patriotism. These young men of nerve, vigour, and deep moral earnestness were backed up by all the best and most influential minds of the country. A mighty start was made in reform. Conservatism and corruption in government received a severe check. Then came the crisis, when the Emperor stretched out his hand to the West for aid in the reforms which all friends of China desired. Had he received such aid, had he even been duly honoured and upheld by Western Powers when reactionary forces were trying to assert themselves, the good cause of reformation would still have kept its pace. But

A TRAGIC ARREST WAS PERMITTED.

Still, a revelation was the result. It turned out that there were slumbering moral forces in Chinamen that could be roused when necessary. Six reformers were willing to lay down their lives for their convictions, saying, "We will not run away; let our blood be a voice calling our countrymen to carry on the work we have begun." It is privately known that extraordinary efforts are being made to carry forward the good work. Does not all this need serious attention? And is it not enough to call out our deepest sympathy and willingness to encourage self-development?

Further, even those now in power must have credit due. They do not hinder the founding and carrying on of the Imperial University under the famous Rev. Dr. Martin. Here Western learning is carried on without limit. Further, the Imperial Board for Foreign Affairs still grant their encouragement to Rev. Gilbert Reid to carry out the scheme for an International Institute on behalf of the mandarins. From the people there comes the call for English and for European science. The importance of these signs can hardly be over-estimated. The Christians, native and foreign, in China, may be likened to a Cabinet. Then there is a Parliament of men who think, and are prepared to act, for the good of their country. Further, there is a kind of wide democracy of men willing to learn. To is surely better than to partition the country. Rev. James Johnston, a great student of Eastern peoples, has written a valuable book, entitled "China and its Future." (5s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) He has hope as to the future of China for the following reasons:—

ASSIST CHINA IN SELF-DEVELOPMENT

Because the people are awaking out of their long sleep: because of the education movement: because of the effect of the Japanese war. Other points are noted thus: The extent and unity of China: the hope inspired by the past: the people are not enervated by luxury: they have physical stamina: they have intellectual power: further, hope is entertained because of their comparatively high standard of heathen morality: because of the numbers and growing influence of native Christians. The whole book gives reasons for "hopefulness as to the future independence and material and moral progress of China."

Letters from America.

COLOURED EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

IN honour of one of its chief financial supporters, the Shaw University, at Raleigh, N.C., is so named. With its eleven buildings and spacious grounds, it forms an attractive feature of the city. It is dedicated to the education of coloured men and women. All its teachers, except the president, Mr. Charles Francis Meserve, are of the Negro race.

It is interesting to go back to the humble origin of this institution, and to note how hard the struggle had been at first. Only a fully-consecrated couple could have faced all the difficulties and endured all the hardships which presented themselves to Rev. Henry Martin Tupper, an ex-Union soldier, and his young wife, on their arrival at Raleigh in 1865. No kind welcome was extended to them. As soon as their purpose of starting a school among the Negroes was known, they were ostracised and persecuted.

Mrs. Tupper is still able to tell of the anxiety of a night when, fleeing from the threats of their opposers, she and her husband in the rear of their humble cabin, expecting every moment to see their home consumed. Yet God watched over them, and the work progressed.

HID THEMSELVES IN A CORNFIELD

As a larger building became necessary, Mr. Tupper and his faithful helpers shouldered their axes and day by day went into the woods to fell huge yellow pines and hew the logs into timber. After many weeks of hard work and with little help from the north, the actual work of building began, and a large two-storied house, to be used both for a church and a school, was finally erected. The work grew with the progress of the race and the demands of time until Shaw was incorporated as a university. There are to-day, in addition to Normal College, Missionary Training and Industrial Departments, Schools of Law, Medicine and Pharmacy.

It must have cheered President Tupper's heart to see the work to which he had consecrated all the energies of his life becoming more and more the blessing of thousands of young men and women. He went to his rest five years ago. In compliance with his last wish, he was buried on the open grounds in the front of the main building.

GAMMON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ATLANTA.

Among the attractions of Atlanta, the beautiful capital of Georgia, is the Clark University, a series of buildings in which about 500 students of both sexes enjoy the privileges of a Christian and general education.

On the same grounds are situated the buildings of the Gammon Theological Seminary. Both institutions are under the auspices of the Freedmen's Aid and South Educational Society. The nucleus of the latter is said to have been formed by Rev. George Standing, an Englishman, who was the first teacher and preacher of the Episcopal Methodist Church, sent through its Freedmen's Aid Society to Newman, Georgia, where he started work amidst such risks of life that it was found necessary to protect him by United States soldiers. His day-school of 250 and Sunday-school of 700, of all ages, only two of whom could read the simplest word, were the pioneer work which in due time made the seminary possible.

Biblical instruction was given from the first, but as the teachers were also burdened with other work, the result showed the need of an institution for the special training of ministers. Bishop Warren, of Atlanta, undertook what many then considered impracticable. By praying, lecturing, working, he collected half the amount needed for building purposes. The other half was given by the late Rev. E. H. Gammon, who, having been obliged by a bronchial affection to retire from the ministry, had thrown his energies into business enterprises, and become rich. His interest once secured, remained with the work, and proved of the greatest benefit to its growth and development.

The building was dedicated in 1883 as a department of the Clark University. According to Mr. Gammon's wish that a young man should be elected as dean, the choice fell on Rev. W. P. Thirkield, A.M., B.D., whose enthusiasm and energy grew in proportion to the multiplying obstacles. His fertile brain saw great possibilities in apparently ludicrous beginnings. The theological department had opened with only two students. Before the end of the first year nineteen were enrolled. The Dean preached, lectured, travelled, using his platform abilities to influence the church and public, and his pen for informing the secular papers in favour of the school, until at last full recognition was given him by some of the leading people.

Since 1887 the Seminary has been a separate institution, with an average attendance of eighty students. They have no special rules for conduct, but are expected always to behave as becometh ministers of Christ. They choose an advisary council of two from each class to consult with the faculty concerning the general interest, conduct and life of the Seminary. This plan of self-government is highly conducive to the development of Christian manhood.

One prominent feature of the establishment is the Stewart Missionary Foundation for Africa. Its purpose is to secure, sustain, and encourage the evangelisation of Africa by the American Negro. R. Cope Morgan.

Asheville, N.C., April 3, 1899.

[Since writing the above we have returned home. Some observations on Prisons and on Lynching will form the subject of one or more additional papers. Professor W. W. White's friends will be glad to know that I saw him, and that he has quite recovered his health.—R. C. M.]

Northfield Fixtures.

MANY of our readers will be glad to have some particulars of the forthcoming conferences at Northfield.

The World's Student Conference is arranged for June 30—July 9, the list of speakers including Drs. W. H. P. Faunce, A. F. Schauffler, and D. G. Hodges, in addition to Professor George Adam Smith. Increased importance is attached to the Bible classes, and in order that students from each institution may be prepared to lead classes in all the courses in the cycle of Bible study which is being prepared by the student department of the International Committee, normal devotional Bible classes will be conducted simultaneously in each of these courses.

Mr. F. S. Goodman will conduct a less advanced course of studies for delegates from normal and preparatory schools; the subject in Mr. H. B. Sharman's class is "Studies in the Life of Christ;" Professor E. I. Bosworth, of Oberlin College, will again conduct the class in the "Studies in the Acts and Epistles;" and Prof. Wilbert W. White is preparing a course on "Studies in Old Testament Characters."

A helpful feature of the Conference will be the daily hour set apart for the consideration of the various methods and agencies for promoting the cause of Christ among students. It is also recognised that at no time in the history of universities and colleges has there been such a widespread, deep and practical interest in missions. In order to foster and give practical direction to this interest, special preparation is being made for a Missionary Institute, conducted under the direction of the Executive Committee of the Student Volunteer Movement.

The Women's Conference, which is to take place July 13-24, is in process of organisation, as also is the General Conference for Christian Workers, August 1-21, in which Revs. F. B. Meyer, G. Campbell Morgan, and Sidney A. Selwyn will take part, and details of which will be announced at a later date.

Higher Criticism in America.

"HIGHER Criticism" was bitterly attacked by Rev. Dr. L. W. Munhall, evangelist from Philadelphia, at a Methodist ministers' meeting. His theme was "The Integrity and Authority of the Bible." Dr. Munhall conceded that many of those who favour the higher criticism are entirely honest, but he vehemently attacked their teachings nevertheless.

"No sensible person," he said, "will object to any devout and honest effort to ascertain the dates and determine the authorship—humanly speaking—of the various books composing the Bible, and the exact text of the sacred writings, but we insist that the examinations and criticisms shall be made by competent persons; and that, before we will abandon the views and faith held by the historic Church for eighteen centuries, we must have, not conjectures, presuppositions and bold, unprovable assumptions, but demonstrable facts.

"Nearly every objection raised against the integrity of the Bible by the present day higher critics can be found in Voltaire's works, and Paine's 'Age of Reason.' The plan of the battle has changed. The enemy used to be outside the breastworks; now he is inside—in our own pulpits, in our educational institutions and editorial chairs; and the weapons used against the Book are the very same the infidels have always used."

SCHOOLS MAKING INFIDELS.

"I do know," he continued, "that in two of our theological schools the Old Testament professors are giving their students all the objections against the integrity of the record, and making no attempt whatever to answer such objections; and these students are going out to fill our pulpits with little or no knowledge of the Bible, their minds filled with objections to the Book which the Church commissions them to expound. Can we reasonably expect spiritual results from the ministry of such men?

"I know of one of these young men who, within four years of his graduation, left the Methodist Episcopal Church, became pastor of a Congregational Church, then pastor of a Unitarian Church, and then a blatant infidel, all in the same town.

"A wealthy member of our Church, a delegate to the last General Conference, told me:—'I sent my eldest son to a Methodist educational institution not 300 miles from New York City. Before he left home he was considered by all who knew him to be a model Christian young man. While at school he came under the influence of a certain professor who is a higher critic. He returned home an infidel, and has not once been inside a church since.'

"What moral right has any institution of our Church to employ and support such men in its faculty? For any one of them now to employ a teacher who will promulgate infidel and rationalistic objections to the Bible is a gross betrayal of one of the most sacred trusts of the Church."

Although a vote of thanks was accorded to Dr. Munhall for his address, it was not until after sharp criticism had been offered. One minister declared Dr. Munhall guilty of heresy "in putting the text of the Bible higher than the living Christ." Another said: "No such vague charges ought to be made. They should either be withdrawn, or else made specific and followed by an official investigation."

We do not believe, however, that Dr. Munhall would make such statements without being pretty sure of his ground. The charges certainly seem to be "specific" enough, rather than "vague." We shall await the result with interest.

Visiting Swiss Prisons.

By Mr. CHAS. COOK.

So many reports having appeared in the papers concerning Lucchini, the murderer of the Empress of Austria, and friends having written asking me to visit him, I made my way straight to Geneva, where he is confined, in hopes of being allowed to see him. Two ladies from Florence had sent me a cutting from a paper describing him as being in "a subterranean dungeon reached by a corridor so dark as to exclude all light. No bed, save a sack of straw to serve for a seat by day and a bed by night; and he is only taken out once a fortnight for a breath of fresh air."

The authorities, understanding my objects in prison visitation, at once accorded to me every facility for seeing over the gaols, and I soon found myself in the old, small prison of Geneva. Here there were some sixty men, thirty per cent. of whom were Italians.

Lucchini is about twenty-five, and has no appearance of the hardened Anarchist. He has a good, open face, and spoke with a frankness which I was pleased to note. He was at work in a large and airy cell, in which the window, which is like the window of an ordinary room, must have been at least seven feet by five. He was making cardboard boxes, and appeared even bright and cheerful. I judged this was because of the humane treatment he has experienced at the hands of the authorities.

Getting into conversation with him, I spoke of the folly of anarchy, of its uselessness and wickedness, and said I hoped he had now seen his mistake. "Ah, yes! I recognise it now," he replied.

I then held out hopes to him that he might yet turn to God and righteousness, and be an example for good, though in the past he had sinned so grievously. He hung his head down for a time, and then looked at me without speaking, smiling slightly, but sadly.

I offered him illustrated copies of the Gospels of Matthew and Luke, which he gratefully accepted and promised to read.

On wishing him "good-morning" in his own language, he seemed somewhat touched, and exclaimed, "Grazia tanti, grazia tanti; bon giorno, Signor, bon giorno." Since leaving Geneva I have heard a report that Lucchini has attempted to commit suicide, but there is not a shadow of truth in it.

Working in the same prison is a man of most ferocious countenance, in appearance more like an animal than a man; he has been most hardened in bearing for nearly the whole of the twelve years which he has spent there. Convicted of a heinous offence against his mother, he afterwards killed her, and of course was sentenced for life, as there is no death penalty in the Geneva canton. He has been visited all these years by a Christian friend, but has rejected all efforts to lead him to a better state of mind.

One day the visitor took his two little girls with him to the prison, and the youngest of them artlessly approached this inhuman convict, and kissed him. "From that moment," my friend says, "the man's reserve and hardness gave way," and he now listens to all the exhortations that are addressed to him. Some time after the above incident, the man implored him, "You will bring those children again, won't you!" How great a change a little child hath wrought! The man willingly accepted the book I gave him.

M. Victor Lombard not only visits frequently the prisoners in the two prisons of Geneva, but has a large wood-chopping yard, where he can find employment for those who are discharged when their sentence expires. I was interested in the story of the confidential man in charge, who is the foreman of the yard. He is a reformed criminal, having been an incorrigible drunkard; better still, he is a converted man and a spiritually-minded winner of souls.

Geneva very wisely permits suitable and accredited persons to become honorary visitors in the prisons, and the remarkable cases of conversion, and, consequently, permanent reformation of character among the prisoners, is the natural outcome of so wise and beneficent a system. When will our old-fashioned and behind-the-times Home Office learn the wisdom of this course?

Friends have written to me concerning the awful condition of the coloured prisoners in the Southern States of America, asking whether it is not possible to write to the President to look into the matter. I should be glad if some one of more importance than myself would take the initiative; perhaps our good friend—Mr. William Tallack, the Secretary of the Howard Association, of which I am but a humble member—may see his way to do it. Lord Polwarth writes me of his interest in the matter, and surely others have their hearts stirred by the cruelties and inhumanities practised, that could lead George Kennan to say that he "had seen greater horrors among the coloured prisoners in the Southern States than he had ever seen in Siberia." "O Lord, our Lord, let the sighing of the prisoner come before Thee!"

Zanzibar Strangers' Rest.

THERE was a full gathering of friends at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, a few evenings ago, to bid God-speed to Mr. and Mrs. Waugh, new missionaries, sailing for work at Zanzibar. Mr. H. W. Maynard was in the chair, and Dr. Harry Guinness gave the farewell charge.

Mr. J. T. Isaac, hon. secretary, gave a brief statement of the circumstances under which the new missionaries had offered themselves for work at Zanzibar, explaining that the cost of their maintenance would be defrayed by a lady who was anxious to do some definite work for God. The Chairman followed with hearty and sympathetic words. Speaking on power, he remarked that there was first physical, then intellectual, afterwards moral, and finally spiritual power, and it was this last which alone could avail in missionary work. Mr. Waugh gave an interesting sketch of the Lord's dealings with him. Called to missionary work several years ago, he had first spent some time in preparing himself at Harley and Cliff Colleges, and subsequently had a year's medical training at Livingstone College. He went out to the West Coast of Africa, but the climate after twelve months' stay compelled him to return. But he could not resist the desire to be back at his old work, and the Lord having opened this door he felt he must go forward.

Dr. Harry Guinness congratulated the council of the Zanzibar Strangers' Rest on having secured Mr. and Mrs. Waugh for this station. He had known Mr Waugh intimately at Harley House, and believed him to be the right man for the post. Founding his farewell charge on St. Paul's address to the Ephesians in Acts, "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus," he laid stress on the importance of "remembering" Christ's words. What words were his! Loving words, sometimes austere words; and he had spoken also missionary words—"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Unlike many other words, these were repeated in all the four Gospels. "Remembering" implied "doing;" it was practically a call to obey a command.

Kurdistan. — There are 3,000,000 people in Kurdistan consisting of Kurds, Yezides (Nestorian), Chaldean, Christians and Jews. All Kurds are Mohammedans; they have no literature and no education. The Yezides are devil worshippers, and are equally ignorant. Yezides and Kurds speak the same language, and that is the great business language of the country. The Christians suffer greatly at the hands of the lawless Kurds, and their distress is hardly known in other countries. The need of sympathy, relief, education, and evangelisation is truly great. Work among these people has for some time been in progress under the care of Pastor Khamis and his three sons. One of the latter, Rev. Joshua Khamis, is now in England, interesting friends in the work, which is called the Central Kurdistan Mission. These friends are well accredited, the committee of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society acting as treasurers; secretary, Rev. W. A. Essery, 7, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

Soldiers in India.

THE Soldiers' Home at Wellington, Nilgiri Hills, South India, supplies a very real need. Miss Janie L. Moore writes to us:—

"Besides the one regiment constantly stationed here, many hundreds of men come up every spring from the plains below to spend the summer in the hills. A Home is needed where these lonely lads—some of them just out from England—can not only find a refuge and a welcome, but where they can hear the 'old, old story of Jesus and his love.'

"Last October my friend Miss Lowdell and I opened a small home. God has blessed and encouraged us in our work; but as our present house proves quite unequal to the need of the place, the necessity presses upon us of building a new Home. We have, therefore, secured a site, and we hope to have our Home (with a few rooms for furlough men attached) ready for Christmas. Our present estimate of cost (including land) is £800. Very little of this money has yet come in. Our constant aim is to put Christ before the men who attend the Home, and to win them for Him."

Further particulars may be had from Miss Moore at the address given.

Mr. Stead and the Czar.

IN The Times of Monday, the St. Petersburg correspondent of that journal says:—

"Mr. W. T. Stead had a long interview with the Czar on Friday, at Tsarskoe Selo, and his Majesty thanked him very much for his support of the peace and disarmament proposal.

"On Sunday night Mr. Stead delivered an address at the British and American Church in St. Petersburg on the way in which the English people had received the Imperial proposal for a conference on armaments. Rev. A. Francis took the chair, and a number of Russians, including Mme. Olga Novikoff, as well as Englishmen and Americans, were present. The novelty of such a meeting in St. Petersburg was enhanced by the still greater novelty of the lecturer's remarks, which included some very severe strictures on the working and eccentricities of the Russian censorship and an appeal to Russian society to hold meetings in support of their Emperor's proposal.

"The work of the Peace Crusade was, of course, eloquently described, and such special questions as those of Finland, Siberian prisons, and the Dukhobortsi were touched upon, with the usual arguments in approbation of Russian official action and policy which are now familiar to Mr. Stead's English audiences and readers. The meeting concluded with a collection for the starving peasantry of the eastern provinces, whither Rev. A. Francis starts for the purpose of organising the distribution of relief."

The McAll Mission.—Thursday, May 11, was the sixth anniversary of the death of the late Rev. R. W. McAll, D.D. A meeting was held in the Rue Royale, Paris, to commemorate his death, and several of the oldest members of the mission and colleagues of Dr. McAll took part. Messrs. Sautter, Réveillaud, and Brown spoke, giving instances of Dr. McAll's humility, love, and sympathy; by which he had so endeared himself to the French people amongst whom he laboured. The best way to honour his memory is to carry on the work he founded.

The Late Rev. G. Clutterbuck.—Many of our readers will, no doubt, have read the interesting volume by the late Rev. G. W. Clutterbuck, entitled "In India; or, Bombay the Beautiful." It makes now a pathetic appeal from the fact of the author's tragic but heroic death in the wreck of the Stella. Mr. H. J. Osborn is devoting the proceeds of its sale to his bereaved family, and is supplying single copies at 2s. 4d., six for 13s., twelve for 25s. The book is of stirring missionary interest, and well repays perusal (Ideal Publishing Union, 33, Paternoster Row.)

Worker Wanted in Milan.—It is most important to reach the children of this priest-ridden land. I am constantly asked to receive fresh girls in my "Beehive Orphanage," but we need funds and workers. We need a bright Christian young lady with deep love for children, active, healthy, musical and domesticated, who would come as a self-supporting missionary. A knowledge of the language is not essential to begin with. God is blessing us not only in the orphanage but at our new mission hall, which is crowded with eager listeners, principally young men. We have Sunday schools, Y.W.C.A., etc. Jane Cose.

25, via Correggio, Porta Magenta, Milan.

(629)

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 21. Joshua xxiii.

THIS is the chapter of Review and Retrospect, and enables us to understand what the Church will feel and say when she reviews from the vantage-ground of an achieved victory all the steps by which she was brought to it. You and I will join that great congregation which, from the hill-tops of glory, will survey the past.

It will then be seen how all success was due to the Divine interposition. When the list of the Church's victories is mentioned, this significant sentence will be appended, "Ye have seen all that the Lord your God hath done unto all these because of you." In all spiritual conflict our one aim should be so to live in fellowship with God, and to do his will, that there should be no interference on our part with the free action of his Almighty help. Cleave unto the Lord your God, and He shall thrust out the enemy from before you, and ye shall possess their land.

It will be recognised also that not one good thing has failed. It sometimes appears that good things are lacking in our lives, and that good gifts are withheld; but we shall so learn God's reasons for delaying them, and shall be so satisfied with the life He has meted out for us, we shall be so satisfied with his bountiful kindness, that we shall say, as Joshua did, once and again, not one good thing has failed—all, all, ALL has come to pass.

It will be seen, also, how foolish we were in looking right and left for help. One man, with God at his side, can chase a thousand. One of the regrets of eternity will be that we did not make more of God in earth's battlefields.

MONDAY, May 22. Joshua xxiv.

The chapter of the Deeds of God. It is remarkable to notice, in the earlier verses, how every onward step in the history of Israel is directly attributed to the gracious interposition of God. "I took. . . I gave. . . I sent. . . I brought. . . I did. . . I destroyed. . . I would not hearken. . . I sent. . ." Whatever Israel had thought of the prowess of her sons, it is here shown that throughout their history all their triumphs and successes were due to the mighty God, who had chosen them from amid the idolatrous peoples which dwelt beyond the Euphrates Flood. Every step of development in your life, on which you have been sometimes disposed to pride yourself as a proof of your sagacity or courage, is really due to one who now stands suitor for all your heart's love and faith.

When you want to influence people, it is sometimes best to declare your own fixed resolve. This was Joshua's policy. Instead of saying Go, he cried, Come. Instead of attempting to drive the people, who might have resented his interference, he cried, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord;" and elicited the immediate response, "God forbid that we should forsake the Lord to serve other gods." And the more Joshua dwelt on the high and lofty claims of God, the more absolutely did the people press into his service.

In the absence of public documents, stones and other objects were associated with great public decisions and events. And with us also, how many scenes in nature have been associated with great resolves! I saw the tree recently under which Wilberforce made covenant with God that he would never rest till the slave trade was abolished.

TUESDAY, May 23. Judges i.

This chapter tells the story of success and failure, of success to the man of faith, who relied on God as Judah did; of failure to others. It is a miserable record from verse 27 to the close of the chapter! With what knell-like notes those words ring forth, "did not drive out," "did not drive out!"

The importance of the Church pondering these solemn words cannot be exaggerated. There are gigantic Jebusite citadels in our midst where drink, impurity, and other gross evils abound. It seems tacitly understood that they cannot be dislodged. Perhaps they may become tributary, but that is all. Like the disciples at the foot of the Mount of Transfiguration, we stand paralysed and ashamed; and may well approach Christ with the inquiry, "Lord, why cannot we cast these evil spirits forth?"

There is no tone of hesitancy in his calm, unfaltering voice, "Because of your unbelief; for if ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye should say to this mountain, 'Be thou removed into the sea,' and it should remove, and nothing would be impossible to you."

Faith unites a man with God, and opens a tiny doorway for the irresistible might of God to pass through it to the overthrow of sin and Satan.

> All things are possible to God,
> To Christ, the power of God in man,
> To me when I am all subdued,
> When I in Christ am born again,
> And witness, from my sins set free,
> All things are possible to me.

There are many subsidiary lessons; such as the rebound of the cruelty on Adonibezek; the courage which asked for upper as well as lower springs; the lavish and ready generosity with which an earthly father gave good gifts to his beloved child.

WEDNESDAY, May 24. Judges ii.

This chapter is in many senses the summary of this book. It contains a brief and comprehensive summary of the principles which underlie the story which it tells—a very varied story, in which light and shadow are variously intermingled. Many earth-born clouds intercepted the blessing which God would have sent without intermittence on his people. Their iniquities separated between them and their God, and their sins caused Him to hide his face, so that he could not hear. He had said that He would never break his covenant with them, but by their persistent violation of their side of that covenant they had forfeited all claim to its stipulated benefits, and caused on God's part an apparent breach of promise.

Note in the first verse that the R.V. uses the definite article, the—"The Angel of the Lord." It has been generally supposed by Jewish commentators that reference is made to some specially commissioned messenger, perhaps Phinehas, the high priest (Hag. i. 13, Mal. ii. 7). It is, however, more probable that he was the Angel of the Covenant (Ex. xxiii. 20, Josh. v. 14), who had already appeared as the captain of the Lord's host, and who now came from the place which had witnessed their solemn dedication to God to remind them of the obligations they had broken. God often comes to remonstrate with us; let us heed his voice, whether it come in the inner voice or through the pleading looks and tones of those that love. For, oh, how pitiful the Lord is! Just so soon as there is the least sign of penitence and faith, He returns to his people in the greatness of his compassions.

This book powerfully accentuates the strength of individuals when linked with God, a fact of which the history of the Church down to these latest days is blessedly full. "By faith," the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews says (Heb. xi. 32, 33).

THURSDAY, May 25. Judges iii.

The nations of Canaan escaped extermination because of the unbelief of Israel, and yet even this, by the goodness of God, was made to subserve the true benefit of his people. Without doubt, we shall some day praise God for difficulty and temptation as among the most precious gifts of his wise Providence. And even though we may have been personally accountable for them, still we shall see that they were overruled by God to our advantage.

We now began to be familiar with the oft-repeated phrase, "The children of Israel cried unto the Lord, and the Lord raised them up a deliverer." What tender beauty there is in the recital of the Psalmist:—

> Many times did He deliver them;
> But they were rebellious in their counsel,
> And were brought low in their iniquity.
> Nevertheless, He regarded their distress
> When He heard their cry,
> And He remembered for them his covenant,
> And repented according to the multitude of his mercies.

Two classes may be addressed here. First, those who have come into great distress. Let such inquire whether this may not result from spiritual declension, and if so, repent and return unto the Lord. Second, those who feel that the Spirit of the Lord is upon them for some special purpose. Let such yield themselves up to it. Men are filled and used by the Spirit, not for speaking only, but for legislating, governing, and ruling. The power of such men is often never realised till they die (11, 12).

FRIDAY, May 26. Judges iv.

After their overthrow by Joshua, the power of the northern states was broken, until it revived under Jabin. With the aid of his chief captain, Sisera, he established a military despotism over the northern districts of Canaan, which lasted for twenty years.

The more to magnify God's power, a woman was selected as the channel through which the Divine Hand wrought. There seems, at first, and it was doubtless intended that it should seem so, a great disparity between the 900 iron chariots and Deborah, the prophetess, who dwelt beneath the shadow of the palm-grove. But God is not limited in his choice of agents, and as in the case of Mary in the Gospels, the touch of a woman's weak hand may direct the flow of Divine Power to raise a child or a Lazarus from the grasp of death.

God's servants know his secrets, and it was her assurance about his purpose that made Deborah so decisive and wise in her arrangements. Barak means "lightning;" he was probably famous for his decisive and deadly action. Tabor was central as a rendezvous, and the assurance that Jehovah had already preceded Barak to the battle-field was in the highest degree reassuring.

What a comfort there is in knowing that God goes before us against all foes, temptations, and perplexities! The Breaker, as Micah says, always precedes us, clearing the way through all the tangled undergrowth of the forest and through the dense battalions of the adversary. "When He putteth forth his own sheep, He goeth before them." Up, child of God, why slumberest thou on beds of down? Why tremblest thou at the masses of opposition? Is not the Lord gone out before thee?

SATURDAY, May 27. Judges v.

This great song of Deborah has dyed with its thoughts all the minstrelsy of Israel. There is nothing like it; even apart from its inspiration; it stands alone amid the battle songs of the world. The march of God before his people, with dropping clouds and flowing mountains; the desolation of Israel in the days of Shamgar and Jael; the spreading rumour of deliverance at the well-head and in the tapestried homes of the rich; the mustering of the clans; the description of the battle by the waters of Megiddo; the flight of the proud captain, Sisera; his death; the exhausted patience of his mother and the ladies of her court—there is a graphic power in all this which is without parallel.

Twice the freedom with which the people offered themselves is recited (2, 9), reminding us of the words the Psalmist builds on them: "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." God wants volunteers, and not pressed men. Let us ask ourselves whether, in the stress of conflict against evil, we have willingly offered ourselves to the service of our King.

On the other hand, let us never forget the curse that befel Meroz, that did nothing; but refused to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty. We are always talking of God helping us; do we sufficiently remember how urgently God needs our help? If it is true that without Him we can do nothing, it is also true, let us reverently say it, that without us He will do nothing. We are his fellow-workers, and his one aim is to bring us into such living sympathy with Himself that He can achieve through us wonderful things which we looked not for. The curse of most man-made religions is on those who do wrong, whilst that of the Bible befals those who do not do right.

Glimpses of Romanism.

VIII.—Mariolatry in the Papal Church.

By Rev. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

FRA PAOLO SARPI, the greatest of the Venetians, in the second book of his "History of the Council of Trent," when relating the discussion that arose in the Council on the question of Original Sin, sketches, in few words, the rise and progress of Mariolatry in the Papal Church. He tells us that the phrase Mother of the Divine Son, which towards the close of the third century was applied to Mary, was so used not in her honour, but solely in honour of Christ, to show that He was born divine. In the same way, after the deposition of Nestorius, the Patriarch of Constantinople, by the Council of Ephesus, in 431, the picture, so common now everywhere, of the Madonna and Child, was adopted in order to show that Jesus was divine from his birth, in opposition to the heresy of Nestorius, which was that Christ was born merely human, but that afterwards at baptism he received the Holy Ghost without measure, constituting him divine. Then, pian piano, the phrase I have referred to was used in honour of Mary, not of Christ; and, in the same way, the mother became venerated in the picture, and not the Child, until restando egli nella pittura come appendice (he remains in the picture as an appendix). In conformity with this, I may here say, the picture itself was altered.

Originally, as is still seen in the sculptures and mosaics of St. Mark's Church, Mary was the chair on which Christ, the God-Man, sat, He having all the emblems of divinity—the gold disk with the shadow of the Cross on it, the open Bible, and the hand raised in blessing; now, in most modern pictures, He is represented as a helpless babe, and as the Divine mother (not the mother of the Divine Son), the Queen of Heaven.

SHE IS CROWNED AND SCEPTRED,

To go back to the record of Fra Paolo Sarpi, he tells us that in the eleventh century a canonical office was instituted in honour of Mary, with forms of prayer only addressed previously to the Divine Wisdom. Mariolatry, thus introduced, gained ground slowly during succeeding centuries by the decrees and bulls of Popes and Church Councils, until the Jesuits came on the scene in the sixteenth century, when it advanced by leaps and bounds. And now in the own day it and nothing else is the cult of the Papal Church. The worship of Mary has supplanted that of God and Christ, and almost every one else. Every Church has its Lady Chapel, which is almost the only one frequented by worshippers, and hung with votive offerings.

Not content with exhibiting the picture, dishonouring enough to Christ, to which I have referred, the priests frequently set a life-size figure of Mary on the altar, usually a hideous doll, dressed up in old, faded, cast-off finery, with an abundance of

GLITTERING TINSEL ORNAMENTS.

To her honour are dedicated more festivals than to any one else, festivals the non-observance of which would be a mortal sin—her Nativity (September 8); her Presentation in the Temple (November 21); the Annunciation (December 18); her meeting with Elizabeth (July 2); her Immaculate Conception, promulgated by Pio Nono, on December 8, 1854, and observed on the anniversary of that day; her Purification, called also Candlemas, from the lighting and consecration of candles in the Church (February 2); and her Assumption (August 15).

Besides these great festivals, to be observed by all her worshippers, almost every city and town and village has its own local Madonna day. Then, over and above all that, each Saturday is dedicated to her, and the whole of the month of May, called emphatically Mary's Month. Throughout this period, as on the other occasions mentioned, her praises are chanted in the Ave Maria (Hail Mary), the Ave Maria Stella (Hail Mary, Star), the Litany of Mary, which consists of a long series of verses, in each of which she is invoked by an extravagant title; and the Rosary, which consists of 150 repetitions of the Ave Maria, with a Pater Noster after every ten. Prayers, too, are directly addressed to her (indeed many of the hymns to Mary are prayers, like her litany), and sometimes, though less seldom, they are addressed to God through her.

Now all this Mariolatry in the Papal Church has not sprung up by chance. It has been carefully and by none more assiduously than the present; and, as it is not unfrequently said in England that there is now no real Mariolatry in the Papal Church, I shall here quote this Pope's own words, which endorse and add to his predecessors' utterances on the subject. In an encyclical, issued in 1893 in praise of the use of the Rosary, he says:

CULTIVATED BY SUCCESSIVE POPES,

As often as occasion permits me to re-kindle and augment the love and devotion of Christian people towards the great Mother of God, I am penetrated with a wondrous pleasure and joy. For, indeed, the holy affection for Mary that I imbibed almost with my mother's milk has vigorously increased with growing years. The many and remarkable proofs of her kindness and goodwill towards me, which I recall with deepest thankfulness, and not without tears, kindle and inflame more and more my responsive affection. For in the many varied and terrible trials that have befallen me I have always looked up to her with eager and imploring eyes, and my hopes and fears, my joys and sorrows, have been deposited in her bosom; and it has been my constant care to entreat her to show to me a mother's kindness, and to be always at my side. When then, in the secret council of the providence of God, I was raised to the chair of the blessed Peter, I strove in prayer for the aid of Divine assistance, trusting in the maternal love of the most blessed Virgin. And this, my hope throughout all my life, has never failed to help and console me in every crisis. Hence under her auspices, and with her mediation, I am encouraged to hope for still greater blessings, tending to the salvation of the Christian world and to the glory of the Church.

It is therefore right and opportune that we should set apart the month of October to the celebration of our Lady and august Queen of the Rosary. For when we betake ourselves in prayer to Mary, we betake ourselves to the mother of mercy, well disposed towards us; that, whatever trials we may be afflicted with, she may be always at hand and may lavish on us the treasure of that grace which from the beginning was given to her in full plenty from God that she might be a worthy mother of Him. Let us therefore not approach Mary timidly or carelessly, but pleading those maternal ties wherewith she is most closely united with us through Jesus; let us piously invoke her ready help in that method of prayer which she herself has taught us and accepts. Then we may rest securely and with joy under the protection of the best mother.

The above is only a specimen of a thousand utterances of Leo XIII. in favour of Mariolatry, because of which he has been called the "Pope of the Rosary." And now, in conclusion, let us ask, "Why does the Papal Church thus devote itself to Mariolatry?" To this question many answers may be given. Some have thought that Mary embodies qualities the human heart craves for, and that the Church therefore lends itself to her cult for the satisfaction of these wants. But the human heart has no needs that are not met and satisfied in Jesus Christ No, the reason must be sought elsewhere, and I think it is this. The Papacy is simply and Mary, in its system, just takes the place of the ancient classic goddesses.

PAGANISM VENEERED WITH CHRISTIANITY,

After Count Campello left the Papal Church, the Archbishop of Spoleto sent a message through his sister, then an ardent Papist, that he wanted to see him. On Count Campello calling upon him, he said: "I was glad to see you in the chapel of the Holy Images the other day, and I hope you felt them influencing you to return to the bosom of the Church?" Count Campello replied that he felt no such influence. "Then," said the Archbishop, "go to such a Madonna, and pray there and leave a gift; and if she does not help you, go to such another; and if you are still obdurate, go to such another." Count Campello could stand it no longer, and so he retorted, "It is a shame of you, a so-called Christian Bishop, to talk to me in that way. Why, you are no better than an old Pagan, who would say, 'Go to Venus, and if Venus does not help you, go to Diana.'"

And this brings me to say that as money is a prime object in the Papal Church, as it was in Paganism, Mariolatry is cultivated because it pays. The words of the Spoleto bishop show that the Church can to any extent she likes. We have seen that every place has its local Madonna festival day, because every place has its local Madonna. And the people are taught to pit the one against the other. "Our Madonna is stronger than yours," the inhabitants of one village will say to those of another. "No, ours is strongest" will be the reply. But as no Madonna acts without the stimulus of gifts, and as her strength is proportioned to the number and value of these, the way to have a good responsive Madonna is to give.

MULTIPLY MADONNAS

Therefore the more Madonnas, the more Madonna festivals; and the more Madonna competition, the more money flows into the coffers of the Church and into the pockets of Pope and priest. We may be sure that Mariolatry, like every other feature of the Papal Church, has its root in the pagan, "What shall we eat, and what shall we drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed?" "The servant is not above his Lord;" so need we wonder that a Church that sells Christ day and daily on the altar should traffic also day and daily in the sale of his mother?

Professor Newell's Bible Studies.

DURING his approaching visit to London, Professor Newell will lecture on the Gospels, the first two chapters of Genesis, the Books of Samuel, and the Book of Daniel. His meetings will be held as follows:—

Lower Exeter Hall, Monday afternoon, 4.30; evening, 8; June 5, 12, 19, and 26.

Conference Hall, Stratford, Tuesday evening, 8; May 30, June 6, 13, and 20.

Morley Hall, Wednesday morning, 11.30; May 31, June 14 and 21.

Mildmay Conference Hall, Wednesday afternoon, 3.30; May 31, June 7 and 14.

Morley Hall, Thursday evening, 8.30; June 1, 8, 15, 22, and 29.

Communications regarding this enterprise may be sent to Rev. F. B. Meyer, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road; or Dr. H. G. Guinness, Harley College, Bow.

Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth.—In connection with the anniversary a conference was held on "Revival." Mr. J. E. Matheson and Mr. A. Garstin presided, and Dr. Gritton, Rev. John Wilson and other friends took part. The need of beginning with one's self in the question of revival was felt to be the starting point. Revived life was needed in our assemblies prior to the ingathering of the unsaved. The Church must seek to partake more deeply of the Spirit of Christ. That is the cure for worldliness and indifference. Mr. Lamb, who had recently returned from a visit to Kabylia, North Africa, mentioned that the labours of past years out there are being crowned with blessing, a number of young Mohammendans having witnessed a good confession for Christ.

Village Work in India.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

AMONG the most interesting missionary societies in the Bombay Presidency is the Poona and Indian Village Mission, having its headquarters at Poona, five hours' journey from Bombay.

It was founded in 1893 by Mr. Charles F. Reeve, after much prayer and waiting upon God; and the methods adopted appear so simple and satisfactory that I venture to recite them as furnishing suggestions to those who desire to expedite the evangelisation of this mighty empire.

It is said that 92 per cent. of the vast population of India is found in the villages, of which there are 600,000; and only one missionary to every 400 of them. The number of people living in any one village is most surprising. One, on which we looked down from the summit of a hill on which an idol temple stood, seemed to contain not more than two dozen houses, closely clustered, but the priest told us that it contained at least a thousand souls.

If the perishing souls of India, 1,200 of whom pass into eternity with every hour, are to be won for God, it is imperative that some expedient, like that organised by Mr. Reeve, be set on foot and persistently maintained.

The present number of workers is about 150, most of them young men and women, but with a sprinkling of older ones. I was much struck with their brightness and enthusiasm, which are due in part to their association with one another, spirit kindling spirit, and in part to the principle of reserving one day in the week—generally Thursday—for waiting on God. On that day no work is done, the hours being devoted to prayer and conference. This leaves Sunday free for mission work. I was told by one, who was well able to form an opinion, that there were few missions in which there was so much mutual trust of love as in this, and that the Saviour was greatly honoured in the life which was being lived in the stations beneath the close inspection of the natives.

The principles of the Mission are to accept duly qualified men and women as missionaries, without restriction as to denomination; to receive its support through faith and prayer; and to guarantee no income to its workers, providing them only with such assistance as the means allow. The needs of the work are laid before God in prayer, and no debt incurred; thus, a few weeks ago, when the coffers were almost empty, the workers lived for some days on the ordinary native food, which is very much cheaper than the simple European diet which is usually served out to them. Some £200 was needed at that time, which, in answer to prayer, accompanied by heart-searching and confession, came in in various sums. Mr. Reeve says that when money supplies fail it is not their habit to agonise with God, because it is an understood matter that no forward step should be taken until it is clearly understood to be his will; and surely his children may reckon on Him to supply their need, so long as they are executing movements to which He has prompted them; but times of scarcity indicate the need of self-examination and self-judgment, since there is probably some inconsistency or evil thing that has to be searched out and ended.

But the feature that was most novel and interesting to me was the following. Poona is the central base of the whole mission; it occupies there some four spacious compounds, with convenient bungalows, and other sheds and offices. These were originally constructed as soldiers' quarters. Amongst them are a large hall for evangelistic services, a hospital with two nursing sisters in case of illness among the missionaries, a printing press, workshops for the manufacture of every requisite for the Mission, even to the construction of its conveyances, and store-rooms, where all the necessary provisions for food and dress and medicine are contained, to be supplied to the stations by bullock-carts, which are always going backwards and forwards between the base and the out-stations.

These stations are planted out at distances of ten miles from one another. Directly one is well-equipped and fairly started, another is planted further into the heart of the country, and then another; and this goes on in several directions, like the spokes of a wheel. In each station about ten workers are located, all men in one centre, all women in another, and the time is busily engaged. Where the language is acquired there is perpetual preaching and teaching in the name of Jesus; but where it is yet being grappled with, rules are laid down for study and exercise and recreation, so that health and spiritual life are maintained while familiarity is formed with the habits and methods of thought of the surrounding people.

This system of providing food, clothes, and all else from a common store enables the mission to support its workers at £47 per head, including all expenses of management. And I cannot see why it should not be indefinitely developed to cover the dense network of Indian villages.

In conversation with some of the young men, I found that they adopted the Apostolic method of preaching Jesus and the Resurrection. They said that the Hindus are so familiar with the idea of incarnation that our Lord's birth does not arrest their attention or excite opposition. They are also quite willing to discuss the being and attributes of God; but they flush with anger at the repeated use of the name of Jesus, and spurn the thought of his resurrection with derision. On several occasions these young witnesses have been stoned. Some are English, some Scandinavians, but the majority are Australians, and these but a small proportion of those that apply. Medicines are dispensed, and medical work done at all the centres.

The new comers spend the first months of their sojourn in India at the base, where they receive a course of careful Bible study. Even where they have a good general knowledge of the Word of God they are found to be very deficient in acquaintance with its devotional and spiritual aspects. Twice a week the superintendent leaves the house at four in the afternoon and drives quickly off to visit one or two of the stations in the brilliant moonlight, travelling back so as to be in time to conduct the class for Bible study at nine o'clock on the following morning.

He has evidently passed through many and severe trials. Only last year, when in England, he went to the station at Mildmay without sufficient money to pay his fare to Broad Street, but resting on God to supply his need; and the Christian friend who walked with him from the Conference Hall to the station became God's almoner, as he slipped a sovereign into his hand on parting.

I do not minimise the work of other societies when writing thus, but I do feel that here is an inexpensive, practical, and effective manner of reaching the present generation of village-India.

The Student Movement.

IN the May number of the magazine of this important organisation particulars are given of several forthcoming events. First, perhaps, in point of interest, though not in point of time, is the international conference of the S.V.M.U. to be held in London from January 2-6, 1900. All the principal meetings of the conference will be held in Exeter Hall.

"We hope that 2,000 students, professors, missionaries, Mission Board secretaries, and other leaders of Christian organisations will be present. Among others, the following speakers are expected to take part:—The Bishop of London, the Bishop of Newcastle, Rev. Robert Bruce, D.D., Rev. Richard Glover, D.D., Rev. T. M. Lindsay, D.D., Rev. G. Robson, D.D., Rev. Wm. Watson, M.A., Dr. Harford-Battersby, Dr. Geo. Smith, C.I.E., Mr. Eugene Stock, Mr. John R. Mott, Mr. Robert E. Speer, Mr. G. A. King, and Mrs. Bishop. An exhibition of missionary charts and diagrams will be arranged for. We would appeal at once to student volunteers and others to take a share in making this exhibition a real success and a powerful witness to the world's need."

The summer conference of students will this year be held at Aberystwyth, North Wales, from July 29 to August 7. The magazine says, respecting the arrangements:—

"We hope to have with us the Bishop of Sierra Leone, Rev. G. Johnston Ross, M.A., Rev. W. D. McLaren, M.A., Rev. D. Wilkinson, M.A., Miss Gollock, Miss Richardson —Vice-Principal of Westfield College—as well as several student leaders who have come into close touch with the students of India and America, as well as of Britain. Rev. R. P. Wilder, missionary in India, founder of the British S.V.M.U.; Mr. Frank Anderson, General Secretary of the Indian Student Movement and late General and Travelling Secretary of our own; Miss Rouse, whose two years' Travelling Secretary work in America; and Dr. J. Rutter Williamson, whose tour among the medical students of the United States have been so signally blessed, will, God willing, be amongst us again.

"The sessions will be held morning and evening, and will include addresses on aspects of the Christian life—'The Morning Watch,' 'The Place of Intellect,' 'Personal Responsibility'—on social work, on the missionary call, as well as Bible circles, missionary bands, and open conferences, at which various methods of conducting Christian Union work will be discussed."

A conference booklet is being prepared, copies of which can no doubt be had by students from the offices of the Movement, 22, Warwick Lane, London, E.C.

Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society.—There was a good attendance at the meeting of this Society at the R.N.S. Institution on May 11. The chairman, Canon Fleming, told of our indebtedness to seamen. The Society is doing a quiet but successful work. Admiral Sir Vesey Hamilton and Captain Lowry, R.N., spoke. Thelatter had during his nineteen years' connection with the Society watched the work very closely in our principal ports and hospitals. Rev. E. Sullivan, chaplain R.N., spoke of the help given to the chaplains in barracks and hospitals.

The May Meetings.

China Inland Mission.

NOBLE ambition dominates the China Inland Mission in constantly pressing toward the mark of something commensurate with the enormous spiritual need of the vast empire to which the active labours of this Christian organisation are devoted. Exeter Hall was filled with interested friends and supporters for the thirty-third anniversary of the Mission, celebrated on Tuesday of last week. Two meetings were held on that day; and at the first of these, in the afternoon, Sir George Williams took the chair.

It is a happy thought, said Sir George, to hold this gathering in a building which has such grand associations for the great missionary societies of the world. The year had been one of varied experience in the work of the Mission, including the martyrdom of two devoted servants of God (Mr. Fleming and a native evangelist); and the Master must regard with pleasure the self-denying effort of his people to sustain such devoted missionaries. It is cause for thankfulness that, in answer to prayer, God had provided the Mission with ample funds. The great need now is that may come forward, filled with the Holy Ghost and with power, to carry on the work with patience and perseverance. It is part of our Christian duty to pray that the great Lord of the harvest will send forth labourers into his harvest, for there are thousands upon thousands whom God could use. The Y.M.C.A. had during the year contributed about a hundred workers to the mission field, and he hoped some of them had found their way into the ranks of a mission raised up by God to carry the glad tidings of great joy to the wonderful world of China, which is so full of significance for Christian enterprise.

CONSECRATED MEN AND WOMEN

A letter from Rev. Hudson Taylor, written from China to the meeting, was read by the bearer, Mr. Robert Cooper. It acknowledged the loving sympathy of friends in England regarding the serious illness from which Mr. Taylor is recovering. Lack of strength prevented much reference to the work. Rebellious disturbances have been put down, but there is need of constant prayer on behalf of those engaged in labours for Christ among the Chinese.

Mr. Walter B. Sloan, one of the secretaries, in the course of a brief and interesting review, pointed out that political unrest had made the position of missionaries in the interior more than usually dangerous; and there remains much need for prayer on this account. The eyes of the people having been opened by recent events, to the advantages of European learning and the benefit of fuller intercourse with European nations, there is greater and, at least, to consider its claims. Baptisms in connection with the Mission during 1898, number 1,029. New workers to the number of seventy-one have joined its forces. Grateful thanks to God were expressed for the full provision made for financial need. The income of the Mission in London was £53,460; in China, America, and Australia, £8,117. Taking Great Britain only, there had been received for general purposes, £32,122; and for special purposes, £21,338. Particulars were given about the C.I.M. "Prayer Union and Helping Hand," now including upwards of a thousand members; and the statement concluded by acknowledging the Lord's gracious hand over all the operations of the Mission, while thanking fellow workers for their continued help in prayer, means, and effort toward the furtherance of God's kingdom in China.

READINESS TO HEAR THE GOSPEL,

Coming from the Province of Si-ch'uen, Mr. J. G. Cormack described his resident city as ten miles square, with a population of half a million. A journey of 150 miles, sixty of them by river, disclosed superabundant opportunities for sowing the good seed of the Gospel. When the travellers anchor near some village, the face of the foreigner is quite sufficient to gather a crowd. After preaching and tract distribution, some are certain to follow to the boat for conversation. At the first out-station, where a year ago there was not a single native Christian, there are now thirty-six baptized native converts, and probably at least seventy inquirers. The native disciples come five and ten miles to an evening reading of the Scriptures; and the heartiness of the meeting is full recompense for physical discomforts endured by the travelling missionaries. Next day medicines are distributed; markets are visited with books, and patient dealing with curiosity wins the love of the people. The journey included a thirty-miles walk through rice and poppy fields; and even among opium smokers there is but one opinion as to the evil which attaches to the use of the drug. It seemed necessary to take away a pastor from one place for evangelistic work among a more spiritually needy people elsewhere, but the poor folk among whom he laboured were so affected at the prospect of his removal that they made a strenuous effort to retain him among them by providing for his entire support in connection with the Mission. Their bright faces, upon accomplishment of their object, formed a sight not to be soon forgotten.

INDIVIDUAL NATIVE DEVOTION

was exemplified in a native man of wealth, bearing his solitary Christian testimony to rich and poor in a city of some 30,000 inhabitants, and freely giving of his means to the cause of Christ in various ways. There is nothing like a visit to the out-stations to refresh the spirit and gladden the heart, as one looks upon the bright and happy faces of those who worship God in the midst of idolatry.

Miss Soltau brought from China to her Christian sisters the message of the Resurrection morning, "Go quickly and tell." She had spent more than thirteen months in incessant travelling, covering nearly 6,000 miles, with visits to forty-four stations, and the sight of thousands upon thousands of native Christian faces. These journeys included many seasons of fellowship with workers in waiting upon God; for, while there is much cause for thanksgiving, an inexpressible feeling of sadness comes over one amid the many signs of spiritual darkness. The great walled cities seem like fortresses of the enemy of mankind, and work in them is most difficult. Sunday in the mission stations is a busy day from morning to night, and even the sick are carried long distances to hear the Gospel. There is for China in the influence of Christianity upon its women alone; and some of them implored their English sister to make known the great need which exists for evangelisation. An address full of stirring incident closed with the picture of a Chinese widow gazing upon "happy little girls" in a mission school, and weeping at the remembrance of her own four children, literally sacrificed to idols. Poor, lonely, sorrowing heart! She herself had a personal interest in salvation by Christ; but her face will always bear the marks of the anguish she has gone through.

A WONDERFUL FUTURE

Work in the province of Kan-suh was described by Mr. H. F. Ridley. At first it was found difficult to reach the people with God's message, but some progress was made through the opening of a shop on a main street. The rebellion, however, spread to the district; and while the workers were shut up in enforced idleness, but waiting upon God for guidance, an old beggar brought the news that some 130 wounded men, women and children were gathered in one of the temples. This gave fine opportunity for

PREACHING BY DEEDS.

During nine months 2,000 wounded were succoured by the servants of God. Divine care was wonderfully manifested during the siege, especially in provision of food for the missionaries by officials, who thus showed their appreciation of Christian acts of mercy to the wounded soldiery.

The Chairman here made a suggestion which met with hearty adoption, namely, that a message of sympathy be conveyed from the meeting, through the secretary, to Rev. Hudson Taylor, expressing the hope that his useful life may be spared, and that he may be benefited and strengthened physically.

Cordial words, expressive of fraternal feelings toward the C.I.M., were spoken by Rev. W. E. Burroughs on behalf of the Church Missionary Society. He said there is a great identity of principle between the two societies. Both go forward upon the ground of simple trust in our Lord's command, not asking whether there is a big balance in hand, but taking the living agents God gives them, and sending these forth in simple and scriptural confidence that they whom God sends He will abundantly support. This C.I.M. believes in the power of prayer. He would tell them that, at the recent C.M.S. centenary, prayer was made for 200 additional missionaries; and, in the short time since then, 100 offers of service had reached Salisbury Square.

In the evening Mr. Theodore Howard presided over another large meeting in the same hall, whereat addresses were given by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of New Court Congregational Church, and by missionaries representing various Chinese provinces.

Young Abstainers' Union.

A BRIGHT programme was provided for the annual meeting of the Young Abstainers' Union, held in Exeter Hall on Friday evening, under the genial presidency of Sir George Williams. His opening words met with a ready response from a little sea of happy young faces upturned to greet him. He expressed thankfulness to God for the restoration to health of Mrs. Hind Smith. This Union, "a nice young lady" aged nineteen, had steadily increased in branches and membership during the year. Further development requires more means. The late Mr. John M. Cook was instanced as a striking example of the sufficiency of water-drinking in the case of a great traveller. In the decease of Mr. Richard Cadbury they mourned the loss of another valuable friend of the cause.

Canon Fleming paid a tribute to the abiding sympathy of the Chairman with that young life which is the hope of the country. Although the body grows old, the soul never does so. If we could only make the men of this great England sober, we should be better able to fight the battle of Christian temperance; but their influence is undoubtedly secondary to that of women. Every one of us has a gift for God. It may not be the power of speaking, but women's moulding power permeates the home, the family, and the social sphere. No one has suffered from the drink curse as have women. My mother, said the speaker, was the inspiration of my life, and whatever I am, little though it be, I owe to her. Let the world, the Church, and society know that all our work is Christian work. Our battle with this great evil is the Lord's. In all this the Lord helpeth us. May God bless and prosper this vigorous Young Abstainers' Union, until "the little one shall become a thousand."

Presentations in connection with competitions and prize essays were made by Sir George Williams in his happy manner; and Miss Hatty Purvis sang in tender strains the song, "The Voice of the Father."

Mr. T. P. Whittaker, M.P., spoke on some of the economical aspects of the drink question. This country spends more on liquor than it pays for all its taxes to the Imperial Government, and for all the rates demanded by all the local authorities throughout the United Kingdom. The excess of the drink bill, beyond the amount necessary to pay rates and taxes, would provide free postal and telegraph services. If drink were banished, the money saved would furnish the country with free railways, leaving a surplus of sixty millions; or the money would cover the annual rental of every building in the land. It is a serious fact that between 1875 and 1897 (the last return) the death-rate among women went up 150 per cent. in proportion to population. We cannot be and do our best as a people, and hold our position in the world, unless we be sober.

London Missionary Society.

RICH and varied blessing, accompanied by many anxieties, has been the lot of the London Missionary Society during the past year. The ravages of the plague in South India, the revolution in China, the serious political trouble in Samoa, have all had an effect upon mission work; but the dominant note of the year, as voiced by speakers at the annual meeting, has been that of movement and progress. The meeting referred to was a crowded one, and was held in the City Temple on Wednesday week.

Lord Reay, who presided, said that the constitution of the Society happily presents an open door to all who worship God in spirit and in truth. Amid the present tendency to materialise religion spiritual Christianity is and the heathen will not abandon their idols for anything short of it. The whole earthly career of Christ, judged by worldly standards, was a failure, and for its just appreciation spiritual vision is a necessity. The speaker (ex-governor of a province) had always considered missionaries to be the best auxiliaries of the Indian Government. As to Samoa, the tenets of Christianity, and the instructions of this Society preclude the idea that missionaries have had any leaning to either side in the conflict for the throne. Notwithstanding the troubled state of the country, a satisfactory translation of the Bible had been accomplished. Happy relations among workers of this Society and their Protestant brethren from Paris labouring in Madagascar, had indirectly contributed to friendly feeling between our own nation and France. There is a selfish view, and a broad view of imperialism, and the continuity of our empire depends upon whether we, as a nation, remain true to spiritual Christianity.

A WORLD-WIDE NEED,

Reference was made by Mr. Albert Spicer to the recently-issued of the Society. He hoped it might form a text-book for many papers in connection with Christian Endeavour and other meetings during next winter. He had the pleasure of presenting the first copy to the Chairman.

STANDARD HISTORY

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson reviewed what the constituents of the Society had done in answer to God's call to spread the Gospel, from the point of view of the balance-sheet, and with reference to offers of personal service. The financial statement resolved itself into the fact that the new year commences with an accumulated adverse balance of £10,206; and had it not been for exceptional help in legacies this would have stood at £15,000. The Society is spending £20,000 a year more than its average income. While the executive bows to the heavier burdens of the work, regarding them as a call to renewed confidence in God, there is no excuse for slackness of support on the part of the Christian public. There seems to be a growing wish to specialise gifts by devoting them to some particular station or worker; and the committee are considering how best to encourage this desire. It was to be hoped that, while the Centenary Fund would be worthy of the Congregational body, it might not prejudice of missionary work. There has been a steady flow of high average service offered; but means were not available to send out a large number of the candidates. Work in Madagascar is moving forward. That is also the case in New Guinea; but the Society wistfully awaits a mandate from its friends to enter the interior. Whoever ultimately rules in Samoa, the Society is determined to watch with the closest attention the point of securing religious liberty. All the means needed to open the province of Hunan have been furnished, and the native helpers in Central China are a source of unspeakable joy to pioneers of the work there. Need is always ahead of work in the Society's whole field, but he trusted that support from the churches will not be far behind the broader aims of the Society.

CONTINUED AND REGULAR SUPPORT

Ubiquity and audacity in modern missions was the theme of an eloquent discourse by Rev. Dr. Fairbairn, who has recently returned from India. No land whereon the sun rises is untrodden by missionary feet. Love of gold clothes the meanest selfishness in the most magnificent "patriotism;" but greater than passion or greed is Christian enthusiasm for humanity. The missionary has gone before and beyond the trader, inspired with for men. Aiming to change India is like attempting to lift the earth from its axis; but, without arms or imperial power behind him, the missionary faces its hoary religious system and defies it to overcome his faith. The fact that he still lives and works is the grandest example of audacious heroism in the history of our English race. The problem of reviving missionary interest should be met by sending men of influence to India and elsewhere, that they may return and convert to holy enthusiasm the churches at home. Christ's Church has not yet conceived what the spiritual conquest of India means. He had visited churches, colleges, schools; but what is their united work as compared with the needs of teeming thousands? Much as the missionary does for the native, he does more for his fellow-countrymen in India, standing as an embodiment of conscience, and pointing to what the man who loves empire ought to be among the people whom he rules. Before his visit, the speaker's impression had been that the mission field of India is a dangerous and adventurous one for women, but his experience is that no work could be finer or more successful; and he mentioned instances of the manner in which workers commanded the confidence and respect of the natives in the midst of riot, famine, and disease. Ideal womanhood has the promise of re-making India. Medical missions and Zenana work are accomplishing wonders in the land; while Christian education is gradually changing the temper and texture of Hindoo society. We shall only continue to hold India as, by God's grace, we bring it into unity of thought and faith with our own higher England. The missionary stands to the Hindoo as the great force of reconciliation to English rule. Beyond the missionary is a greater, grander England than that of arms—an England which represents God's life in man. A scientific frontier cannot avail against the power of custom and belief; and unless a nobler faith and higher belief prevail in India, through the Christian churches of our own land, English rule will vanish past recall. There we are, not knowing the greatness of the work before us, to remain there until the people of India become the people of Christ.

A NEW HOPEFULNESS

GODLY AND DEVOTED WOMEN

Rev. W. L. Willoughby (from Phalapye, Bechuanaland) referred to the want of missionary enthusiasm among ministers who favour "Modern Thought"; that theology being destructive rather than constructive, its enterprise is naturally small. It is false and mischievous sentimentalism to say that missionaries love "the dear native" as they do wife or child; but the uplifting of the degraded people of South Africa is none the less imperative upon the Christian conscience.

The Poor Children's Society.

THE annual meeting of the Poor Children's Society was held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday last. Rev. Arthur Woods, who presided, said the key-note of the meeting should be one of praise for the work of the past year. Further exertions, however, were much needed, for the accommodation of the Southend Home was quite inadequate. After Mr. G. Nokes had remarked on the excellence of the work at Southend, Rev. D. H. Moore said the Society should be supported on account of its preventive work. It helped the little ones from homes of sorrow to fresh air, and it helped them to rise above their surroundings.

Rev. J. Tolfree Parr added that he was convinced the Society went the right way to work by entrusting such institutions as were in touch with the children with the task of selecting deserving cases.

London Medical Mission.

AFTER twenty-seven years of quiet but effective progress, the London Medical Mission held its first annual meeting at 33, Short's Gardens, Endell Street, W.C., under the chairmanship of Mr. T. A. Denny. The visitors were shown over the building, which comprises clothing room, invalid kitchen, Gospel Hall, surgery, dispensary, waiting room, and other offices, where the work of the Medical Mission is carried on, much surprise being evinced at the accommodation, considering the unpretentious exterior. At length, the spacious Gospel Hall was filled with enthusiastic friends and workers, the other medical missions of London being well represented.

Dr. Henry Soltau, the superintendent, in pointed and graphic language, briefly summarised the work of the Mission, its many branches and inner workings, the Convalescent Home at Folkestone and the Children's Holiday House at Brasted. He spoke of the golden opportunities and open-doors for Gospel work and soul-winning, and told how God had vouchsafed great spiritual blessing, and had hitherto caused to be sent in the much-needed supplies of money and clothing.

The Chairman expressed his great astonishment and pleasure at the good work so unostentatiously carried on. Dr. Geo. Saunders, C.B., the president, spoke in earnest and forcible terms of the urgent need of the Endell Street Mission twenty-seven years ago, relating interesting instances of blessing amongst the outcasts and wretched in the slums, many of whom had filled high social positions in life. In simple reliance upon God alone, the work had grown, and had never been in debt.

Major Geo. Mackinlay, the hon. treasurer, referred to the special branch of work introduced by Dr. Soltau in training candidates for the foreign field both at Endell Street and Lambeth. These ladies receive practical, medical and surgical instruction while visiting the homes of the patients, thus fitting and preparing them for their future labours. He also spoke, from his own experience, of the privilege and joy of visiting the poor and afflicted at their homes, and how welcome a visitor from the London Medical Mission was, even though a stranger.

Dr. Foster Owen, superintendent of the Lambeth Branch, described the growing work carried on in that overcrowded district, the attendances having nearly doubled in two years —15,500 having attended the dispensary last year alone. "Many," said he, "are waiting upon God to open up larger and more suitable premises in the district." Speaking of the overcrowding and high rents the poor have to pay, Dr. Owen stated that he intended renting houses in the neighbourhood and letting the rooms off to the deserving poor at rentals just sufficient to meet expenses. He quoted many instances of souls being awakened and brought into light and joy through the Gospel, amongst others the case of a late actor whom he called upon to give the story of his conversion.

The Pioneer Mission.

IN connection with the anniversary meetings of the Pioneer Mission, Pastor Archibald Brown invited a number of interested ministers and other friends to meet at his house for special prayer a few days ago. This was followed by a public meeting in Chatsworth Road Chapel, Norwood. The attendance was good, and on the platform well-known ministers supported the chairman (Mr. J. Marnham, J.P.). These included Revs. John Thomas, M.A. (Liverpool), J. Wilson (Woolwich), George Turner (Sutton), E. A. Carter, G. T. Bailey, and Mr. R. Cory, J.P. After the Chairman's words, Mr. Thomas gave an address, in which he spoke in hearty commendation of the Pastors' College work, and testified, from his own knowledge, to the useful efforts being carried on by the Pioneer Mission. Addresses were also delivered by Rev. E. A. Carter (founder and hon. director), Rev. G. T. Bailey (deputation secretary), and others as to the encouraging results already achieved.

Spain and Portugal.

ON Friday afternoon, the annual meeting of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society was held in Exeter Hall with Sir Robert Lighton in the chair.

The statement presented by Rev. Dr. H. E. Noyes, hon. secretary, showed that the work in Spain and Portugal has gone on steadily and well during the year; and although there was not any marked extension to report in the way of new stations, all the old ones have been maintained. Several calls for evangelists or pastors have been received from places where hitherto no reform work has been done; but it has been felt that no further extension can be made until the Society at home rests upon a firmer financial basis.

A very important acquisition of property has been made in the purchase of a block of buildings in Lisbon known as the Marianos Convent, held by the Presbyterian Church for some twenty years. By gifts and loans, added to £1,000 collected by the late Lord Plunket, for an episcopal residence in Portugal, the convent has been acquired without any grant from the general fund of the Society. This important purchase includes a well-built church, an episcopal residence, halls for public meetings, stores and offices, and all these are now available for the work of the Lusitanian Church.

The Bishop of Clogher said that in spite of great pressure upon the reformers of Spain, intensified by famine and war, their good work is maintained. He went to Portugal in February, and found there an open field for reform. The reformed schools were in full operation, and no work could be more advantageous to the movement. The thorough earnestness and reverence of congregations and candidates for confirmation was beyond praise. Conference with clergy in Oporto was most satisfactory in the manifest spirit of devotion and solemnity prevailing. An ordination service in Lisbon was crowded with attentive listeners, and there were 130 communicants. The whole movement impresses one with its reality.

After an address by Bishop Mitchinson, who avowed himself "a decided High Churchman and a sacerdotalist," Canon Girdlestone advocated a speedy completion of the Plunket Memorial Fund, seeing that £2,300 are still needed to make up the £5,000 aimed at. The Reformation was the true "crisis" in church affairs; and its work was accomplished by a handful of earnest men. The spontaneous nature of the Reform movement, apart from any English agitation, was pointed out by Rev. F. S. Webster, who also said that support of the movement will be a timely protest against Romish encroachments, which always mean decrease of true religion.

Friends of Armenia.

ON Friday last the members of the "Prayer Union for Armenia" gathered at the offices, 47, Victoria Street; and it has been decided to continue this every second Friday in the month for definite and united prayer on behalf of Armenia throughout the summer.

The members of the Union agree to pray that God's rich blessing may be poured out on Armenia and its persecuted church, that his servants there may be given wisdom and grace for their labours; also that the children in the orphanages may be trained up to become the restorers of the spiritual and industrial life of the country.

Rev. George Grubb opened the meeting with prayer, after which Mr. Millard pointed out, from Nehemiah iv. 1-9, the supreme importance of prayer in this work, as well as "having a mind to work." There is great opposition and conspiracy to encounter, and something worse even than that—the want of sincerity and spirituality amongst many of the Armenians themselves.

Special prayer was sought for the boys who, having received education, are now ready to go out into the world; also for the thousands of widows who have learned to read and write and are daily witnessing for Christ.

U.K. Band of Hope Union.

THE forty-fourth annual meeting of this Society was held last week at Exeter Hall, Sir George Williams presiding.

Mr. Charles Wakely, the secretary, read a report, which showed an increase of bands amounting to nearly a thousand, and other juvenile temperance societies, bringing up the total to 27,836. The gross membership of these societies is 3,430,000, an increase of over 120,000. The 333 country, town, and district unions showed rapid progress, and the Parent Union, by means of its agents, with the help of honorary lecturers, had extended its influence to every part of the kingdom.

In London the work had been well-sustained, 1,860 ordinary and a large number of special meetings having been addressed by the agents of the Union. The "school scheme" had secured the delivery, in 813 cities, towns, or villages of 4,963 addresses in schools and institutions, and 265,648 reports of the lectures having been written by the children in the form of essays or examination papers. The whole of these returns show a marked increase over any former year.

Important work was also accomplished in connection with a "village campaign," and yielded excellent results. Nearly one million copies of the Society's publications were issued from the trading department and the stock had increased by several useful editions. Illustrated lectures were delivered in a number of Poor-law schools, training ships, and similar organisations. The members and their friends collected over £1,000 on behalf of the Temperance Hospital and Band of Hope movement. The income for the year's work, in its varied and numerous branches (apart from the Special Jubilee Building Fund), amounted to £3,915.

At the meeting of the General Council in the afternoon, it was decided to hold the next autumnal conference at Cardiff, and in 1900 at Manchester. The addresses which followed were of a high order. The speakers were the Dean of Hereford, Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., and the Revs. T. Eynon Davies, and Tolefree Parr.

Brazil Mission.

A MEETING for "welcome and farewell" in connection with the Brazil Mission was held last Thursday evening in the Council Chamber of Exeter Hall. The chair was taken by Mr. W. Hind Smith, who referred to the vastness of the field in Brazil, with its 16,000,000 of inhabitants exposed to the evil and debasing influences of rampant Popery. The objects of the Mission are twofold: to assist self-supporting churches formed by the late Dr. Kalley, consisting of poor people unable to meet the expenses of their own evangelistic work; and, secondly, to promote the wider evangelisation of Brazil from the centres in Pernambuco and Rio Janeiro.

Rev. J. Fanstone, recently returned from a visit to the country, spoke of the beginning of the work in 1892. The first missionary, Mr. McCall, is still labouring in Pernambuco. Twelve workers have been sent out, and other two have been found upon the field. His heart was glad, because all the money contributed has been spent in support of those who are doing a grand work; but the dearth of workers as compared with the need calls for an extension of this interdenominational work. States as large as England are to be found where no missionary of the Cross exists, congregations in abundance with no one to minister to them. People are being saved in Pernambuco, but there is terrible Romish persecution.

NATIVE CONVERTS

are very ready and zealous in preaching the Gospel, catching the spirit of workers sent to them.

Hearty words of welcome were spoken by Dr. Maxwell, to the previous speaker, to Mr. and Mrs. Kingston, and to Miss Melville (on furlough). Brazil, he said, has for 300 years had the full fruits of Romanism, in a low state of morality and in abounding ignorance.

Instances of degrading superstition among the people were mentioned by Mr. Kingston. Some cheering results had been seen among individuals in the displacement of image worship, together with perseverance in spreading truth received. Mrs. Kingston described how the effects of persecution upon the mind of workers is minimised by the sight of faces lit up by spiritual joy on reception of God's salvation. Miss Melville had to tell of a growing Christian educational work at Rio Janeiro among girls and young women. The name of the Lord is familiar, but the people are fed upon husks by those who misrepresent Him.

In fervent thanksgiving and prayer, Dr. Harry Guinness mentioned the returned workers and those who are departing. Dr. Soltau sought to direct the confidence of the outgoing missionaries, Mr. W. S. Cooper and Mr. Alec Telford, to the assurance that for every plant of his own planting, that they may take firm root and bring forth fruit to his glory.

GOD WILL CARE

A few words from each of the friends referred to expressed sensibility, in view of great need, to God's claim for spreading his Gospel, and desire for prayer that He may open unto them an effectual door of utterance. Pastor Fuller Gooch commended a work so evidently evangelistic and dependent upon God, as worthy of a far wider constituency of prayer and practical sympathy. There is a double need for the Gospel where Romanism perverts Divine truth.

Religious Tract Society.

THE one-hundredth "birthday" of the Religious Tract Society was celebrated by a reception at the Mansion House, by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, on Tuesday evening, 9th inst.

In his speech from the chair, the Lord Mayor referred to the time when the Society began its beneficent operations in St. Paul's Churchyard, and from then until now its residence and great success have been associated with the City of London. Remembering its origin, he felt double gratification by taking part in this great commemoration, which celebrates, with praise and thanksgiving to God, all that the Society has been permitted to do, while steering clear of religious conflict and partisanship in the hundred years which have gone by. He trusted that the Society will ever be associated, as it has been, with that which is the alpha and omega of all Christian service.

LOYALTY TO THE WORD OF GOD

Lord Kinnaird felt it an honour to have a share in this commemoration. Some who had not been lavish in annual birthday gifts to the Society will have a good many arrears to make up. The importance of the work is apt to be overlooked amid the many things which crowd upon our attention, especially in the sphere of consideration for the physical necessities of men. The many institutions with which he is connected would be seriously hampered in their operations but for the aid of this Society in providing literature for those to whom such institutions minister. As to the Centenary Fund, it was needful to help the Society in prospect of near renewal of the lease of their premises. Everyone connected with the Church Missionary Society would acknowledge that, but for the Religious Tract Society and the British and Foreign Bible Society, missionary work would be only half done. The Colportage Association, which beneficially influences of our own beloved country, also owes much to this Society. Producers of infidel literature are sending forth periodicals and papers by the million; and to overcome evil with good, in the way of literature, is the only wise course. The Indian reading public are increasing by a million a year. What is the Church going to give them? Unless we do far more than we have done, education will be a very qualified blessing. Lack of funds prevents the adequate accomplishment of the work for which the Society exists. It sends out literature in 230 languages or dialects all over the world, but the Bible Society has publications in some 350 tongues. In conclusion, his lordship made an earnest appeal for help toward the balance of £4,000 on the R.T.S. Centenary Fund.

THE TOWNS, VILLAGES, AND HAMLETS

The moral peril attaching to enthusiasm unfollowed by actions was dwelt upon by the DEAN OF NORWICH.

This danger can only be averted by prayer, the greatest force outside heaven, except love. If the latter is to be active, permanent, and pervasive, it must be reinforced by individual and corporate participation in the spiritual wireless telegraphy, whereby communication is maintained between God and those whom He has left here to represent Him before men. Christians are under great obligation to the R.T.S., as the mother of that fertile offspring, the Bible Society, which has so marvellously out-grown its parent, and is encouraging the hope of even larger scope for the latter in the coming century. The principle, already referred to, of overcoming evil with good has been applied by the R.T.S. in three departments of our literary life. First, it turns youthful curiosity from unwholesome avenues. Then it deals effectively with materialistic rationalism, agnosticism, and open unbelief. In the strength of God's truth we do not fear that which opposes itself; but we have to recognise the existence of what may be called

THE DOMESTICATION OF INFIDELITY.

The Society is not concerned so much with the denunciation of these evils, but discovers in its excellent "Present Day Papers" that fundamental unity upon vital points which is characteristic of all orthodox sections of the Church of Christ. While rationalism seeks to chill, Romanism would stifle us; and to meet the danger of the evil thing which seeks to infect our households and churches, a series of suitable tracts is in preparation by the Society. In the many departments of this great organisation the need is urgent, the fields are white unto harvest, the sphere is enlarging and the opportunities are increasing. Encouragement to the support of a larger enterprise is found in the fact that every shilling of income is administered, without deduction, in direct work, executive expenses being met out of trade profits.

Mr. Henry Robson rejoiced that this Society, a sapling planted in 1799, has grown into such a stately tree, with branches spreading far and wide, and with leaves for the healing of the nations. He remembered the time when to him, as a boy, the Leisure Hour and the Sunday at Home were his delight. The benefit he derived from these publications must have been common to many other readers; and in a day when magazines were few, the Society were in the dissemination of healthful, useful, and interesting literature. The founders were wise in not confining their operations within the channel represented by the name of the Society, although something like thirty-five millions of tracts were circulated last year.

PIONEERS OF EXCELLENT WORK

The Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland was represented at this meeting by the Earl of Moray, who expressed gratitude for the material aid derived by the Scottish organisation from the Society in London. Copious testimony was quoted by his lordship from various agents at work in Scotland as to the need for maintaining an extensive diffusion of Christian literature, and the ready reception which it meets with on the part of the people.

Mr. Edward Rawlings and Mr. R. Holmes White acknowledged the service rendered by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress in hospitably welcoming the friends of the R.T.S. to the Mansion House; and in reply his lordship said that, in common with Christian citizens and the Corporation, there could be no greater source of satisfaction to him than the promotion of every enterprise for the good of men.

The chief functions in connection with the Centenary came to a conclusion with the Breakfast held at Cannon Street Hotel on Tuesday morning last.

(636)

Congregational Union Assembly.

By a Minister.

THE May gathering of the Union always begins with a prayer-meeting at the Memorial Hall. The "business meeting" follows after an interval for tea in the Library, where ministers and delegates foregather to renew ancient friendships and exchange confidences about their work. The Chairman, Rev. Arnold Thomas, M.A., of Bristol, initiated his formal tenure of the chair with a few kindly and gracious remarks, in which he paid a generous tribute to the pastors in obscure corners, who, unlike the occupant of the chair, got very little change, and very often worked for very small salaries on hard and unpromising ground. The report was read by the secretary, Rev. W. J. Woods, B.A. A reference to the New Marriage Act elicited a strong expression of opinion that it is not going to be popular among Congregationalists, whose objection to the former condition of things was not so much any prejudice against the presence of the registrar, but a feeling that equal treatment was not meted out to Dissenting ministers and clergymen of the Church of England. Another noteworthy incident of the gathering was the election of

MR. J. CARVELL WILLIAMS, M.P.,

to the chair for 1900, by a large and enthusiastic vote. Those who have had the privilege of working with Mr. Williams in the non-contentious field of Christian service, as well as those who only know him as the doughty champion of religious equality, equally rejoiced at his attainment of this highest denominational honour. The pleasure of the incident was speedily hushed in a resolution commemorative of the great services and noble character of the late Dr. Berry, whose loss is deeply felt by all his old comrades. The subject of seven-day journalism was dealt with by Revs. J. Brierley, B.A., and Silvester Horne, who carried the audience away by their passionate denunciation of the attack on the sanctity and rest of the Lord's Day.

On Tuesday morning a magnificent audience listened to the Chairman's address, which had been eagerly looked forward to. Mr. Thomas is one of the least militant of our denominational leaders, and we did not expect a belligerent oration. What he delivered was exactly the kind of thing we had expected, though the subject of course had not been anticipated. It was a highly spiritual treatment of the "beauty of holiness" which should characterise Christian life and conduct—crowned by the charm and winsomeness which too often have been conspicuous by their absence in those who are the representatives of that robust faith. Mr. Thomas applied his test in half a dozen different directions, and on each topic he said something suggestive and stimulating; nor was he forgetful of pointing out the distinction between the works that would supplant faith and the works which are the natural fruit of faith. The speaker was listened to with earnest attention, punctuated by frequent applause, and a great hush fell on the assembly when he lifted the veil from the inner life of a minister and showed the lurking perils, glittering and poisonous as a serpent, which beset his character in his peculiar position.

A PLEA FOR PURITAN PRINCIPLE,

The Twentieth Century Fund formed the chief topic of the after-discussion. An outsider might have thought during its progress that a serious division of feeling existed in the assembly; but those who know us better recognised that the difference was purely one of judgment as to the proper allocation of the fund—when we get it!—and we soon showed by the issue that there was no lack of unanimity as to the importance and desirability of the fund itself. It will indeed be no easy task at the best to raise so large a sum in so short a time. We have not the denominational machinery of the Wesleyans, nor half the esprit de corps of our Baptist brethren; and it will be necessary to rouse the churches thoroughly if we are to succeed in so magnificent and "audacious" a scheme.

The afternoon was signalised by a sermon on behalf of the Colonial Missionary Society by Dr. Marcus Dods, of the Free Church College, Glasgow. I have called it a sermon, but it was really a closely-read essay dealing with some of the recent objections against missionary effort on the part of representative writers speaking from the outside. The objections dealt with were these: (1) That savage tribes on which missionary effort is spent are too undeveloped to be within the pale of Christian influence; (2) That it is questionable whether, for the inferior races, certain other religions than that of Christ are not more suitable; and (3) That the result so far, of all missionary work, is distinctly disappointing. On all these points Dr. Dods whole-heartedly stood up for the missionary idea. With cogent logic, and a vast array of learning—behind which loomed of faith—he affirmed that on all these counts Christianity has vindicated itself as the one universal and Divine message of redemption and progress to all the races of men. This was followed in the evening by a splendid meeting in the City Temple, at which Lord Aberdeen presided, and speeches were delivered by Dr. Mackennal, Rev. Silvester Horne, Dr. George, of Montreal, and Dr. Dods, all of whom showed the deep importance of aggressive Christian work among the settlers and inhabitants generally of our colonies in all parts of the world.

A DEEP EARNESTNESS

Wednesday was the L.M.S. field-day. The gatherings were all packed, and the enthusiasm was immense. Though this Society is not officially united to the Union, its supporters are more and more exclusively drawn from the Congregational body, and the delegates look upon these meetings as their own. The day's gatherings were opened with a stirring missionary sermon by Dr. John Smith, of Broughton Place U.P. Church, Edinburgh, on Isaiah xlix. 26. The gist of the discourse was that while God was constantly creating situations, which were sublime opportunities, Jesus Christ was the one source whereby these could be used for the redemption of humanity.

Rev. Arnold Thomas presided over a large gathering in the afternoon in connection with the Watchers' Band. He spoke on the need for more prayer for the missionary cause. It was easy in one sense to pray, but in another sense it was far easier to preach sermons and cheer in crowded annual meetings; but after all depended mainly on the prayerful spirit and consecrated faith of the churches at home. [Wednesday evening's meeting is reported on page 18.]

THE SUCCESS OF MISSIONS

Some more missionary addresses and other papers were delivered to the assembly on Thursday morning, and in the evening a splendid crowd of young people filled the City Temple under the auspices of the Young People's Union. This item in the annual programme is becoming a most attractive feature in the week's fixtures, and the delightful and stirring addresses of Revs. Bernard Snell, Jowett, Aveling, and Campbell (of Brighton) were delivered to an audience responsive to every quickening word or thought. The future of young Nonconformity seems bright, if we may judge by the character of the audience and its magnificent spirit at this meeting.

The concluding session of the week took place on Friday morning, when, among other addresses, a suggestive paper was read by Mr. Compton Rickett on the Sacerdotal movement, and resolutions were passed in favour of the Czar's Peace Manifesto and Old Age Pensions for the poor. The venerable Dr. Newman Hall spoke with wonderful vivacity and force on the question of Ritualism. A beautiful and tender Communion Service followed, presided over by Rev. Arnold Thomas, whose utterances throughout the week were marked by a characteristic loftiness of tone and spiritual fervour; and this brought a very successful series of May Meetings to a suitable close.

[Reports of other May Meetings are held over till next week.]

Seven-Day Journalism.

THE increasing intensity of the popular antagonism to seven-day journalism was powerfully manifested at the great North London demonstration held on Thursday last at Holloway Hall.

The gathering was of lofty spiritual tone throughout, the speakers dealing with the question as one of high principle, and the audience encouraging the platform with an enthusiastic vigour, which left nothing to be desired. The capacious hall was densely crowded, and hundreds were, of necessity, refused admission.

After prayer, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., contended that the issue was one of national importance. Unless the two seven-day papers were promptly stopped a great amount of Sunday labour must surely ensue. He desired to take an eminently reasonable view of the position, and desired to welcome all the aid that was forthcoming in the matter from those who adopted a humanitarian standpoint. Nevertheless, he (Mr. Smith) was free to say that he spoke with STRONG RELIGIOUS CONVICTIONS.

He claimed that practically all newsagents were strongly opposed to the breaking of the "unwritten law of England," and went on to give it as his emphatic opinion that newspaper men, compositors, and others connected with the bringing out of newspapers, would ultimately have to work seven days for the same salary as they now received for six days' work. Moreover, if the seven-day paper were permanently installed, the effect would be as in America, the presence of papers crammed with journalistic garbage, degrading to the intellect, and always tending to increased and immoral sensationalism. The experience of continental countries, formerly guilty of secularising the Lord's Day, was shown by the fact that some of them were now passing laws to suppress Sunday labour. Turning to the question of personal gain, the speaker said it would be a different matter were the proprietors of the Telegraph and Mail working to eke out a scanty income in order to provide for their respective families; but it was impossible to feel any kind of sympathy with a person, who, being proprietor of a journal which brought him a vast income, yet sought to by means of seven-day journalism. After quoting Macaulay's words, that "We are not poorer, but richer, because we have rested one day out of the seven," Mr. Smith asserted that those who travel abroad notice that the greatest safeguarding of Sunday means the highest national tone. A spirited appeal for united action concluded a choice and telling address.

FIND STILL GREATER WEALTH

Alderman Duckworth, M.P., in a scathing speech, said the new departure was introduced in the spirit of the age, which was one of selfishness and greed. After speeches by ministers of all the chief denominations, and by public men well known in the district, the great gathering, which was especially remarkable for its ready appreciation of each reference to the spiritual aspect of the matter, separated at a late hour.

On Friday last a deputation waited upon the Home Secretary, introduced by Sir Mark Stewart, who said that it was representative of millions of people. Sir M. White Ridley agreed that to publish daily newspapers on seven days a week was a most unfortunate departure, and that there was no public demand for such newspapers. He did not at the moment see much prospect of legislation dealing with the matter, but he promised that what the Government could do in the direction advocated by the deputation they would be anxious to do.

At a meeting of the Free Church Council on Wednesday last week it was decided to arrange a deputation to wait on the proprietors of the Daily Telegraph and the Daily Mail to urge them to discontinue the Sunday editions of their papers. Headed by Dr. Mackennal, and including the leading Free Church ministers of the metropolis, this deputation will, it is hoped, wait upon the publishers named this week.

Protestant Outlook.

ANY hopes that Protestants may have cherished that the Church Discipline Bill would relieve the acuteness of the strife in the Church have been utterly dissipated. Sir Richard Webster's Amendment has left the questions at issue very much where they were. The decision will encourage the Bishops in their policy of delay and inaction, and in no way safeguard the Romanising section in the establishment in their lawlessness. The policy of the Government is simply one of fear. The only honest procedure would be to affirm in an unmistakable way the Protestant character of the English Church. A straightforward course is the safe one. Sacerdotalism and its insidious practices and teachings are at enmity with the best religious convictions of the nation.

The Archbishops sat at Lambeth last week to hear the appeals of two clergymen against the directions of their respective bishops to discontinue the ceremonial use of incense. Day by day "expert" opinion and legal argument were elaborated; but in the words of The Record the arguments were "familiar, and, as to an immense bulk of them, astonishingly irrelevant." In the course of the hearing much was said of "primitive" usage, and the elasticity of the term was made to justify astonishing divergence of opinion. The proceedings concluded on Saturday, when the Archbishop of Canterbury said due notice would be given of the delivery of the decision in the matter.

With reference to the suggestion in our last issue that "young people should be taught something of Church History and the points of difference between Romanism and the Reformed Faith," an esteemed correspondent writes:—

This may be all very well if the teaching goes as far back as the time of the Apostles; but what is wanted now is the simple Gospel, th eglad tidings of salvation, and when that has been well implanted by the Holy Spirit, all the Romanism and superstition and priest-craft and idolatry existing in the so-called "Church" would prove to be almost, if not quite, powerless. It is, however, to be feared that this will not suit a good many of our Christian leaders.

Rev. W. E. Collins, chairman of the Church Historical Society, writes to The Times:—

At his synod, held recently, Dr. Bourne, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Southwark, stated that there were fewer (Roman) Catholics in his diocese that in 1895 by several thousands; and that the same thing was true of a certain other diocese. He added that the bishops had known all along that the (Roman) Catholic increase was not keeping pace with the increase of the population, but that they were astounded to find an absolute diminution in their numbers.

The eighth annual conference of the Women's Protestant Union will be held next week at Exeter Hall on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. There will be reports on work among Roman Catholics, as well as statements of Protestant principles. Applications for tickets, available for all the meetings, may be made to the conference secretary, Mr. N. R. Hughman, 88, Sinclair Road, London, W.

A timely booklet is Auricular Confession and the Church of England, by Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A., Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen (1s. Cassell & Co.) Substantially a reprint of an article that appeared some years ago in The Nineteenth Century, these pages enunciate the authoritative teaching of the English Church in contrast to the unauthoritative teaching of the Sacerdotal party. The Prayer Book, Articles, and Homilies, also the Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical, are examined, with results in harmony with the Evangelical position. The tone is as judicial as the drift of the teaching is sound.—An exposure of modern Romanising tendencies that should have many readers has been issued by Messrs. Partridge—The Foundations of Ritualism Exploded, by A Clerical Engineer (4d.).

Children of the Poor.—Mr. Charles Wells, Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, London, S.W., pleads for gifts of Scripture picture-books for the work among the very poor children who gather at the Wednesday evening services.

Obituary.

REV. JOHN SMALL, POONA.

INTIMATION was received in Arbroath, last week, of the sudden death of a townsman, Rev. John Small, missionary of the Free Church of Scotland at Poona, India, which took place on May 9. It is understood that the cause of death was heart disease. He had been a missionary in India for thirty-six years, two of these years at Bombay and the remainder at Poona, where he had charge of the mission station.

REV. DONALD MURRAY.

The death is announced of Rev. Donald Murray, senior minister of the Tarbert Free Church, Ross-shire. The reverend gentleman was in the enjoyment of good health, and looking forward to be present at the General Assembly, until Sunday week, when he developed symptoms of influenza, to which he succumbed on the Monday forenoon. He had completed his ninety-fifth year. During his lifetime his opinions in Church affairs carried great weight in the Highlands, where for over fifty years his stalwart figure and sound judgment commanded universal respect.

EX-PROVOST MACPHERSON, GRANGEMOUTH.

By the death of Mr. Macpherson, which occurred at Crieff on the 8th inst., the cause of religion in Scotland suffers a heavy loss. Although engrossed with many cares, he threw himself unselfishly into all good work. He was a true friend of the churches, and all who had the cause of Christ at heart; especially Y.M.C.A. and evangelistic workers, found in him a sincere sympathiser. But he did not confine himself to generous gifts and to public advocacy of a cause; at an evangelistic meeting he would be found in some back seat dealing with a young inquirer or else giving away booklets and tracts to the careless and Godless at the street corner. There are many to-day rejoicing in Christ who have reason to thank God that they ever met Mr. Macpherson. The Falkirk Associations, the Town Mission, the Y.M.C.A., the mission bands, &c., have lost a devoted friend.

MR. GEORGE MACFARLANE.

Very sincere regret will be felt amongst a wide circle at the sudden and unexpected death of ex-Councillor George MacFarlane, of Glasgow. A member of the firm of Messrs. George Gray Macfarlane and Co., South American merchants, 4, West Regent Street, he was at business as usual on Wednesday week, and attended a church meeting in the evening. He was out again on Thursday morning, but not feeling very well at luncheon-time he went home, where he suddenly expired at four in the afternoon, death being due to heart disease. Mr. Macfarlane, who was in his sixty-eighth year, was born at Dalkeith, where his father was Free Church minister. He began business in 1858 in Philadelphia, where he threw himself very heartily into various branches of Christian work. On his return to Scotland he settled down in Glasgow. In 1874, when Messrs. Moody and Sankey were in this country, Mr. Macfarlane was one of their most active supporters and helpers. As president of the Y.M.C.A., a position he held for eleven years, he found congenial work, and he remained a staunch supporter of the Association to the last. Having travelled much, and being gifted with the power of observation, he was widely known as a popular lecturer. For many years he was an elder in Free St. John's Church; latterly he held the same office in Free College Church. He leaves a widow and four of a family.

A Grand Floral Exhibition of artificial flowers, palms, foliage, &c., the work of poor crippled girls, is to take place this week at the Holborn Town Hall, continuing till to-day (Thursday). The Duchess of York was expected to attend the sale on Wednesday, which is organised by the cripples' branch of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission; the object of the Mission to train these girls (so terribly handicapped) to earn their own living and to provide them with permanent employment.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

The Martyr's Bible.

IT is not very well bound, it has no gilt edges, it is rather heavy, the printing looks very queer to our way of thinking, and altogether it has a very musty, fusty look about it that does not suggest the sort of book you would choose as a prize or present. But look at it again; the edges of some of the pages appear to have passed through the fire. Turn over its leaves and it will be seen that some are stained with some dark substance. If those yellow pages could speak what a story they would tell.

This is the story of this faded old book. In the year 1554, in a little town on the south coast called Brighthelmstone, and known now to us as Brighton, a few simple-minded folk met together at the house of one Derick Carver for prayer and reading their Bible. Certainly not a very dreadful thing to do; but in those bad old days a very dangerous occupation, for in a short time two of the little company found themselves before Bonner, Bishop of London, charged with heresy. Those were sifting days, the fierce winnowing of persecution often separated the chaff from the wheat. But Derick Carver stood firm, and right nobly gave his testimony against the errors of Rome and for the truth of God.

"Turn or burn" was the test then! It was burn if anybody denied that in the wafer which the priest consecrated there was not the actual physical body of Christ. Derick Carver believed in a living Christ seated on high at the right hand of God, and not in a wafer God which a mouse can nibble, or that will go mouldy if kept some length of time.

Derick Carver had confessed his sins to his Great High Priest in Heaven, and had obtained a full and free pardon; so he refused to acknowledge the authority of any man-ordained system of priesthood. Finding that he would not recant, the authorities remanded him until another day for a final hearing. Upon that occasion he was asked if he would still abide by his confession of faith, which involved the denial of the doctrine of the mass. Would he recant? "No," said he; "I will stand to it, for your doctrine is very poison and sorcery. If Christ were here you would put Him to a worse death than he was put to before."

Rome had only one answer to this sort of belief. Derick Carver must be burned alive at the stake in the county town of Lewes, in Sussex. So to that breezy town, high up on the South Downs, he was taken, and on a sunny day in July, when everything around was full of life and light, he willingly laid down his life. It was Rome, not England, that spilled the martyr's blood in those unhappy days, for when he was brought to Lewes to suffer the people called out to him, beseeching God to strengthen him. He thanked them, and prayed God that He would strengthen them with like faith.

When Carver arrived at the Star Inn the people crowded around, comforting him as best they could. He kneeled down and prayed while the sheriff with great haste, made everything ready for the last sad scene. His Bible was thrown into the barrel full of combustibles in which the martyr was to be burned. As soon as he was placed in the barrel, with the faggots all around him, he seized hold of his Bible and threw it out among the crowd that was standing round. The order was given that the book was to be destroyed, but to this day it remains a link between those bad old days and the happier days in which God has placed our lot. It is the book referred to at the beginning of this article.

Before the fire was lighted, Carver addressed the crowd as follows: "Dear brethren and sisters, you are all witness that I am come to seal the Gospel of Christ with my blood, because I know it is true. You know it hath been truly preached in Lewes and in all parts of England, but now it is not. Because I will not deny God's Gospel, and conform to the devices of men, I am condemned to die.

"Dear brethren and sisters, as many of you as do believe unto everlasting life, see to it that you do the works appertaining to the same. As many of you as do believe on the Pope of Rome, or any of his laws, ye do believe to the damnation of your souls, and except the great mercy of God prevent will burn in hell for ever."

The sheriff then taunted him. "Speak," said he, "to thy God, that he may deliver thee now, or strike me dead for an example to the people."

Carver replied, "The Lord forgive you that saying," and then, turning to the people, he exclaimed, "Dear brethren, and all whom I have offended in thought, word, or deed, I ask you, for the Lord's sake, to forgive me, and I heartily forgive all who have offended me." Then he prayed, saying, "O Lord, my God, thou hast written, 'He that will not forsake wife, children, house and all that he hath, and take up thy cross and follow Thee, is not worthy of Thee. But, Lord, I have forsaken all to come to Thee. Lord, have mercy upon me, for unto Thee I commend my spirit, and my soul doth rejoice in Thee." After the fire was kindled he cried, "O Lord have mercy on me," and leaping up in the flames, and calling on the name of Jesus, he went home to receive his crown.

Visitors to Lewes can see the very cell in which Carver was imprisoned; they can ascend the stone steps up which he walked; and, more than that, the Martyr's Bible, which escaped the flames which consumed its former owner, still lives. The present writer had it in his possession only a short time since. Bibles are cheap enough now, but alas! many, we fear, let their Bibles get dusty through not using them. Derick Carver's Bible, with its yellow and soiled pages, is a witness against all who, in these days of liberty, do not treasure the Book of God as did the noble martyrs of the days of long ago.

A wise man once said that "the Bible among books is what the diamond is among precious stones, the most precious of them all."

This holy Book I'd rather own
Than all the gold and gems,
That e'er in monarchs' coffers shone
Than all their diadems.

Nay, were the sea one chrysolite,
The earth one golden ball,
And diamonds all the stars of night,
This Book is worth them all.

W. Stanley Martin.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 176).

From Psalm cxix. and make a list of terms or expressions used in speaking of the Word of God.

Children under TEN write out three verses from the Psalm on "statutes" and "precepts"; children under THIRTEEN, three verses on other four of the terms; and those children over thirteen, three on any seven of the terms used.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 175).

Bible Clock.

I. Life. John iii. 16.
II. Everlasting life. John iv. 14.
III. Light of life. John viii. 12.
IV. In Him was life. John i. 4.
V. I lay down my life. John x. 17.
VI. I am the bread of life. John vi. 35.
VII. I am the resurrection and the life. John xi. 25.
VIII. He that believeth on me hath everlasting life. John vi. 47.
IX. I am the way, the truth, and the life. John xiv. 6.
X. Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely. Rev. xxii. 17.
XI. I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish. John x. 28.
XII. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Matt. vi. 25.

Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Violet Ashworth, Dora and Ralph Aldwinckle, Jennie Almond, Owen Akers.

B—William Berwick, Ella Burton, Phyllis Boyd, Gordon, Daisy and May Bligh, Rose Butler, R. Bulteel, Emily Bridgewater, Herbert Braddon, Gertrude Bush.

C—Edith, Ida and Mabel Cole, John and David Colville, Anna Chanyon, Gussie Clark, Olive Cottereli, Carl and Kitty Cope, Lydia Cleary, Edith Clarence, Lily Church, Edith Chevalier.

D—Stanley Drew, Polognia Daws, Margaret Duke, Nellie Dowsett, Ralph Daintree, G., Constance, Hilda, and Elizabeth Drayson, D. Daintree, Violet, Ivy, and Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Lucy Davidson, Violet Dodsworth.

E—Muriel Ecroyd.

F—Temperance Foskett*, Mabel and Vincent Fleet.

G—Rex Gifford, Clarice and Bertie Gale, David Gardiner, Mabel Golding.

H—Elsie Hatcher, J. Hay, Hetty Hill, Ruth Hinder, Nellie Hatchett, Eric Hill, Willie Hooper, Evelyn and Dorothy Hewer, Jennie Holmes, Beatrice Hastings, Mary Hill, Frances Harding.

J—Thomas Johnson, Betty Jacobs, Emily Jones.

K—Max, Stanley and Eva Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Nellie Keeley.

L—Blanche Lindup, Henry, Sidney, May and Edward Law, Cecilia Lichtenstein, Gertrude Lambert, Margaret Lee.

M—Margie Marston, Annie and Elsie Moule, Hedley Meader*, Marion Maran, Elsie and Dorothy McMullin, Lewis Morice.

N—George Nash, Eleanor Noel.

O—Arabella Onslow.

P—Kathleen and Ethel Pasley, Willie Petter, Ruth Pledger, Kathleen Pincott, Ethel and Gladys Palmer, Myrtle Perry, Lissie Pratt, Lilian Pearson, Mary Plumb, Evelyn, Hattie and Mildred Peters.

R—Alice Reid, Winifred Roberts, Kate Rosenbloom.

S—Minnie, B. and Edith* Shepherd, Flora Simmons, Betty Stocks, Joseph Stephens, Cicely and Marjorie Sherbrooke, Ada, Ethel and Jessie Snowball, Solomon Stockfish, Esther Simmons, Douglas Stevens, Kathleen and Douglas Shepherd, Lucy and K. Solteau, Alan and Mary Symon, Mary Seed, Laura Standen, Annie Shelley, Flora Shadbolt, Amy, Dryll, Fred Stileman.

T—Olive Triton, Theodora Thorn, Frank Tomkins, Derwent Turnbull.

V—Rosetta Viccars.

W—Edith and Edward Wheeler, Florence Wild, Sarah and Annie Wood, Emily Warton, Agatha Ward, Blanche Warren, Phillis, Noel and Cecil Wright, Digby Watson, Dorothy White.

No. 174.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Hal and Victor Armstrong, Gladys Allan, John Adams, Frances* Henry and May Allsop, William Aston, Percy Allen, Enderby Anderson, Ambrose and Irene Ashdown*.

B—Florence* and Lily Blackman, Mary Bryant, Gladys Beard*, Dorothy Benson, Evelyn* and Dorothy Barrett, Leonard, Corbet* and Lindsay Browne, Mabel Bailey, Alcina*, Frank* and Leonard* Bentall, Gordon, Stanley and Lily* Boxer, Louis Berthé*, Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Buhl*, Henriette Bardot*, Rhoda and Ruth Braithwaite, Colin and George Brown, Dorothy and H. C. Berry, J. and Edith Barker, Ashley Bowker*, Teresa and Lilian Blackie, Robert Browne, Edith Badham*, Rex Bulteel, Conyers Baker.

C—Daisy Clarke, Nora Clark, Duncan Campbell*, Cicely and Millicent Craven, Gladys and Beryl Calvert, Alice Crang, Maggie Carter*, Richard Cornthwaite*, Henry Cheney*, Mabel Candlin, Edith Corrie*, Willie Charles, Alice Cady, Katie, Guy and Oscar Cross, Ethel Craigie, Eleanor Chance, Dorothy Clarke, Susie Cumbers, Kitty Cope, Joan Clarke, Janie and Nellie Crawford.

D—Ernest Davies*, Marie Denizot, Marjory Dyke*, Harold Davis*, Vera Dickinson, Hattie Disney, Constance Devenish-Meares, Blossom Davis*, William Dilly*, Mai and E. V. Davidson.

E—Helen Eardley-Wilmot*, Muriel Edwards*, Leonard Ewin.

F—Hyacinth FitzSimons, Bessie, Kate, Maggie* and Mabel Fletcher, Mary* and Bessie* Freeman, Aileen and F. A. Figgis, Jeanne Faucon, Louise Filhol, Janet Fawkes*, Helen Forbes, Agnes, Muriel, and Augustine Fry, Marian Freegard*, Lewis, Flossy*, Maggie* and Agnes Fullarton.

G—Thos. Groombridge, Alfred Gibbs, Harry Gribble. Elsie* and Norman* Good, Alice Goad, Margaret*, Edith*, and Dorothy Gray, Edith Grieve, Agnes Grierson, Minnie Giddings, Ernest*, Hedley*, and Daisy* George, Nancy Grove*, Mildred Greenwood, Aileen Gardner*, Mary Glass, Dorothy Garfit, David Gardiner.

H—Dorothy Harris, Harcourt and Helen* Hunter, Marjorie Hogge*, Kathleen Hughes, Netta and Gladys Hussey, Rosy Hamilton, Francis*, Florence*, and Stanley* Hoyle, Edith* and Winifred* Harvey, Georgette Hoffmann, Kathleen Hamilton, Ruth Harrison, Ella Hake, Violet Holford*, Willie Hopkins, Elsie Hanson, Freda and Mary Haines, Freda Hunton, Fergus, Charlie, and Ronald Haig.

I—Katie Ireland*, Daisy Iredell, Isabel and Mary Inglis.

J—Betty Jacobs*, Kate* and Norman* Johns, Lizzie Johnstone* Sinclair Jackson, Arthur Jones.

K—Jeanie Kyle*, Flossie Key, Grace Kerr*, T., Alex., Willie*, Agnes* and Isa* Kay.

L—Mary Lindsay, Dorothy Linney, Carrie Livingstone-Learmouth, Harriet Lynham*, E. and Nellie Lockhart, Henry Laing, H., F. and Alan Light, James, Norah, Edith, Harry and Linda Lowe, Hannah Lovell*.

M—Lois Mewburn*, Christine Marshall, Charlotte Millar*, Dora Muir*, J. and Barbara Maconchy, Dorothy*, Margaret* and Daniel* Morris, F. Mackenzie*, Edith Monet, Margaret Macphee, Kathleen McClure, Ian McGregor, Mabelle Mounstephen*, Daisy and Tita Mackenzie, Ella and John McMurray, Dora Marples, Olive Mewburn*, Mary and Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Frank and Charles Medcalf, Elsie* and Annie* Moule, Jessie McFarlane*, Daisy*, Nellie* and Annie Mackenzie, Annie Macnair, Della Mack*, Evelyn* Gwendoline* and Howard* Moir, L. F. Mace.

N—Mary, J. W. and H. Neligan, John, Peter and Cissy Nicholson, Herbert Newton.

O—George O'Beirne*, Eva and Maude Oakes, Sidney and Kate Oliver, Harriette*, Mina* and Lottie* Orr.

P—Elsie Parnell*, Winnie Page, Daisy Phillips, John Pearce*, Nellie and Ernest Potter, Eva Petter*, Muriel Patten, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Walter Perryman, Eddie and Ada Palmer, Evelyn Pechey*, Vera, May and Daisy Petrides, Willie and Jessie Palmer, Laura Percy.

R—Gordon Remington, Herbert and Marjorie Rainey, Gwennie Ravenhill, Jessie and Isabel Roe, Gussie and Marion Rosch, Sidney Robertson, May Reed*, Nora Read.

S—F. and Amy* Stileman, Douglas and Kathleen* Shepherd, Marjorie and Cicely Sherbrooke, Nellie Skinner, Bessie Symes*, Violet and C. R. Salvesen, Nellie Sery*, Nannie Sturrock* Gwendoline*, Eric, Mervyn, Wilfred and Gladys Shaw, Herbert Stuart, Flora Shadbolt, Ronald Studd, Arthur and J. Speed, Violet* and Evelyn* Shaw, Duncan Stopford, Mary de Spiganovicz*, D. D.* and T. M. Stanier, Elsie Slark, Edith Saunderson, Bessie Scantlebury*, E.* and Susie* Sutton, Janey Sinclair, Constance Schaeffer, Edgar Stocker, Mabel Stembridge.

T—Alice* and Frank Thompson, Peverll Turnbull, George Taylor, Marjorie Tracey, Alice Truelove, Louie Tibbits*, Harry Thompson, Frances and Lucy Trotter, Olive Trench.

U—Queenie Upton*.

W—Myra Webb*, Dorothy Woodforde, Amy and Charles Wingrave, Edward and Edith Wheeler, Connie Wood*, Ronald Watson, Leonard Wall, Georgina Wilson, Agatha and Leonard Ward, Ernest and Kenrick Wakeford, Robert and Thomas* Weddell, Pringle Wilson, Lissa* and Louisa* Walker, Helen Webb, Zoe, Edith, and Ruby Wilkins, Evelyn Wood, Charles Williams, Annie Watkinson.

Y—Gladys* and Eva* Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 164—Christine Pearson (Tasmania). No. 165—Theodora Guinness (Tasmania). No. 166—Ezra Matthews (South Africa). No. 167—Minnie* and Cuckoo Lister, Ezra and Queenie Matthews (South Africa), Dora Wallace (Canada). No. 168—Daisy McArthur (South Africa), Launcelot Mayes (U.S.A.), Llewellyn Dale* (India), Dora Wallace (Canada). No. 170—Eliza Scott, Lottie, Rotha and Ivan St. George (Canada), Vera Sjöström (U.S.A.).

Personal.

Cuckoo Lister.—Thank you for your interesting letter.

Lois Mewburn.—I am sorry you have been ill. Many thanks for your flowers.

J. Hay, Carl Cope, and Ernie.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers."

Many thanks for boxes of flowers received.

Those who do not find their names in the list are either incorrect or have broken some rule. The papers are very carefully examined.

Uncle Tom's Cot—G.A., 1s.; W.D. and H.B., 1s. 6d.; F.T., 1s.; M.T., 2s. 6d.; G.B., 1s.; A.B.C., 2s.; Gordon Road Mission, S.S., 4s.; F.B., 3s. 6d.; Collected, M.E.C., 3s.; T., 2s.; L.J., 5s.; E.B., 3s.; G. and I.W.P., 6s.; F.A., F.H., and L.M.T., 1s.; Mrs. S., 5s.; A Domestic, 5s.; J.T. and D.D.S., 3s.; per E.M.S., 4s.; Anon., 1s.; A friend of the little ones, £1; G. and E.G.P., 3s. 7d.; H.H.B., 1s.; Mrs. F., 10s.; Dressing Case and other articles, F.L.S.—Total, £4 9s. 1d.

For Sale.

FOR UNCLE TOM'S COT.

In response to the appeal that appeared a fortnight ago for a "cripples' cot" in the Home at Southend (in which my young friends have more than once interested themselves), "A Father" has very kindly sent me the following articles to be sold for its benefit.

1. A case of seven first-class razors (as good as new), named with the days of the week. Price 35s.

2. A gentleman's fitted leather dressing-case. 25s.

I hope some of my young readers will succeed in finding me a purchaser for them.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Hellifield, May 18; Clapham, near Ingleton, May 19; Pershore and neighbourhood, May 20-25; Leominster, May 26; Malvern, May 27-28; Derby, June 1, 2; Hawkestone Hall, June 6; Mr. J. Spiers, Corn Exchange, York, to May 19; Mr. J. S. Tyler, West Horsley, May 27-30; Mr. Hankinson, Guildford, June 3, 4; Epping, June 6; Howerton, June 27; Mr. Hewlett, Chelmsford, May 18; Mr. F. A. Glover, with caravan, Hemyock, Devon, Mr. Frank McLaine, with caravan, Staplehurst, Kent; Messrs. Hewlett and Harrison, with caravan, Busper, Sussex, May 18-25.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending May 27.

Sun.,	May 21	Acts,	ii. 1-21	Thurs.,	May 25	Acts	iii. 12-26
Mon.,	„ 22	„	ii. 22-36	Fri.,	„ 26	„	iv. 1-18
Tues.,	„ 23	„	ii. 37-47	Sat.,	„ 27	„	iv. 19-37
Wed.,	„ 24	„	iii. 1-11

Scottish Churches in Council.

THE prospect of a near union with the Free Church was undoubtedly foremost in the minds of the members of the United Presbyterian Synod as they assembled last week at Edinburgh. No important question had been sent up by the inferior courts for settlement. The only other claimants for a large share of attention were the Reports on Church Life and Work, and on Foreign Missions. The determination to bring the Union proposals to an issue is growing, not abating; but the importance of the step is becoming more apparent as the Joint Committee proceeds with the examination and settlement of all the questions involved. Next year it is expected that the committee will lay before the two Church Courts a draft of the Uniting Act. Professor Orr's address in moving the adoption of the report was a model of calm dignity and clearness. His seconder was Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh, who made a rousing appeal to the deepest spiritual sympathies of the brethren, and showed the enormous advantage to be gained in aggressive work by such a closing up of the ranks.

Dr. Alexander Mair opened a conference on "the state of religion, the need for revival, and the means of its attainment;" and it was noticeable that the deepest feelings of the gathering were stirred by the different points raised. References to the Sheldon literature were applauded in a manner which proved how deeply and widely men are thinking of the far-reaching nature of Christ's demands. Among remedies proposed for existing indifference were the greater emphasising in sermons of the fact of sin, the abolition of pew rents in churches, and the adoption of adequate provision for carrying on evangelistic work under the control of the Church. At the close, it was agreed to instruct Presbyteries and Sessions "to arrange meetings for conference and prayer, with a view to the promotion of revival of religion within their bounds."

On the Report on Evangelistic Effort, Rev. Robert Campbell (Glasgow) made an effective appeal for the placing of home mission work on a more satisfactory footing. The results of the home mission unions of Dundee and Glasgow were referred to in terms of approbation.

Rev. James Buchanan (Foreign Mission Secretary) said he had never been privileged to submit a more interesting or satisfactory report. Mr. Duncan McLaren, in moving its adoption, said the increase in the membership of the native churches had been double that at home. As usual, the Wednesday evening was devoted to a public missionary meeting. On this occasion the dominant note of the proceedings was one of thanksgiving. The number of baptisms is said to average ten per day.

Attention was called to the leakage among the young people of the congregations. With a steadily growing adult membership, the Sabbath schools are practically stationary, while there is a decrease both in the numbers attending the Bible classes and in the staff of Sabbath school teachers. The Care of Youth Committee reported a substantial increase in Christian Endeavour Societies. The Committee on Temperance and Public Morals expressed the opinion that legislation should be directed to the causes of intemperance rather than to its effects. The Sabbath Observance Convener referred to attacks often made by the Press on the sanctity of the day, and asked whether the curses had not now come home to roost in the introduction of seven-day journalism.

Prominent among accredited representatives of other churches was Dr. Alexander Whyte, moderator of the Free Church. The Moderator (Dr. John Robson) expressed his anticipation of good results, both at home and in the foreign mission fields of the two churches, through the closer relations into which they hope to enter.

Tower Street Mission School.—The annual report of the useful work so long maintained at this centre amid the dense population of Seven Dials gives evidence of steady progress, the various organisations for the spiritual and social welfare of the boys and girls of St. Giles's slums being largely attended and carefully conducted. Address Mr. Paul Keed, hon. secretary, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

The Coming Glasgow Campaign.

Sir,—I have been asked to appeal to the Press to assist us in arresting the attention of the people of Glasgow, and of Scotland at large, on the projected Evangelistic Campaign for next autumn and winter. We invite all Christian people to make this concerted movement for the better religious well-being of Glasgow a matter of daily private intercession at the throne of heavenly grace, and of public prayer in all congregations or religious meetings held within the city.

All the churches appealed to have, through their local courts and otherwise, cordially and unanimously pledged themselves to co-operation; so that this is a combined effort of every Evangelical and Reformed church within the bounds—(1.) To seek a great quickening of pure and undefiled religion amongst ourselves; and (2.) thereby to seek the ingathering into the Church of Christ of those multitudes still without. The city has been divided into nine districts, each to be regulated by its local committee of ministers and other Christian helpers, with the guidance and sanction of the Central Committee. Arrangements for a sustained series of meetings, going on simultaneously in each of these, for children and for adults, and extending from October to March, are being rapidly completed. I am, &c.,

James Paton,
Convener of the Prayer Committee.

Hyde Park Services.

THE opening services for the twenty-eighth year in connection with Mr. Charles Cook's work took place on Sunday evening, May 7. A magnificent audience numbering several thousands stood from six till eight o'clock, charmed by the singing of the choir and attracted by the message of the glorious Gospel of the Grace of God.

Mr. T. N. Goad, Mr. W. Fuller, and a Waldensian Pastor were there to take part, and it was acknowledged that there had never been more interest evinced or more blessing seen. At the close of the meeting many in the audience were moved to tears, and at the service which followed in Hyde Park Hall from eight till nine — which was inconveniently crowded—evidence was given of real revival blessing.

Four persons who sat together, who came from three different parts of London, confessed Christ, whilst close by a young Italian and a young girl accepted the Saviour and left the meeting rejoicing in Christ. During Mr. Cook's absence on the Continent, where he has been engaged in prison visitation, the work has been vigorously carried on by his lieutenants and the splendid band of workers which have grown up with the work. Their motto, "For God and for souls," speaks of the spirit which possesses them in their arduous and almost nightly work for God among the masses of the Edgware Road, and the teeming thousands who flock to the park of the West End during the summer months.

Camp Meetings for Rothesay.

IN connection with Glasgow mission work an effort is being made to organise a series of great camp meetings at Rothesay, to be held during the last fortnight of July. At that time vast numbers of Glasgow visitors take advantage of the "Glasgow Fair" holidays, in order to visit the beautiful seaside resort in question, and it is felt that a vigorous evangelistic mission should be arranged on an extensive scale so as to grasp the manifest opportunity of preaching the Gospel to the unsaved.

It is proposed to erect a large tent capable of accommodating 2,000 persons, and among those who have already expressed willingness to take part are Dr. McKilliam and Mr. Henry Varley. It is hoped that this may prove to be the seed of a yearly camp meeting on the Clyde during the summer holidays. Friends who are interested in the matter should communicate with Mr. John Robertson, 122, Ingram Street, Glasgow.

International S.S. Lessons.

May 28.

Christ before Pilate.—John xviii. 28-40.
Golden Text.—John xix. 4.

Time and Place.

IN our last lesson we left Jesus before the Jewish Sanhedrim. The crowing of the cock announced the dawn of day. They then condemned Him to death for blasphemy (Luke xxii. 70-71), but as the Jews could not put anyone to death without the consent of their Roman rulers, they conduct their prisoner to the Judgment Hall of Pilate, the Roman governor. The Pretorium has been described as partly a tyrant's stronghold, and partly a fairy pleasure house. It was a building in two marble wings, far surpassing the glory of the Temple, surrounded by magnificent parks and gardens. Externally built with intricate colonnades, within, the floors and walls were covered with the rarest stones. Into this gorgeous place our Lord was led, bound like a common felon, weary with his awful night of suffering. (Try to make this scene a vivid reality.)

Explanatory.

Let the scholars read also the parallel accounts, Matt. xxvii. 11-31, Mark xv. 1-20, Luke xxiii. 1-25; get them to point out the fresh incidents in each.

Verse 28. The word used for "early" means the fourth watch, from three to six a.m. The Jews expected Pilate to give the order for Christ's death without special inquiry, as they had condemned Him. Note the hypocrisy of these men—too religious to enter the house of a heathen during the Passover time, but desiring the murder of an innocent man.

Verse 29. Pilate's chair of state was carried out on to a raised pavement platform, around and behind him were the Roman soldiers, the prisoner on the platform in front of him, the crowd below.

Verses 30 and 31. The accusation was threefold—1, Sedition; 2, Refusing to pay tribute; 3, Saying He was King (Luke xxiii. 2). The Jews were in a hurry and angry.

Verse 32. The death for blasphemy was by stoning; the Roman death for criminals, crucifixion. Jesus had foretold the mode of his death—where? when? (Matt. xx. 17-19; John iii. 14, xii. 32.)

Verse 33. Pilate calls Jesus into the Judgment Hall to have a private conference. The emphasis in the question is on the "Thou."

Verses 34-36. It made all the difference whether the question was asked from a Jewish or Roman standpoint. Christ's answer cleared Him from the false accusation: his disciples were not a band of soldiers, but scholars in the school of truth. Truth was what Pilate could not understand.

Verse 37. Cæsar's kingdom was over men's bodies, supported by soldiers, arms, forts, and was limited to this world. Christ's kingdom is over men's hearts and spirits; ruled by heavenly principles and love, it has no limit.

Verse 38. Luke's account is wanted here, and the trial before Herod, who was tetrarch of Galilee.

Verse 39, 40. Jesus again before Pilate, who makes a third attempt to release Him. The Jews chose Barabbas, a robber and murderer (Mark xv. 11; Luke xxiii. 18). At this juncture comes the message from Pilate's wife; he washes his hands, but that did not really remove his responsibility. Then the patient Saviour was cruelly scourged and mocked by the Roman soldiers, and Pilate brings Him out clad in an old royal robe and crowned with thorns. "Behold the Man." Finally he yields to the threat that they will accuse him to Cæsar.

Contrast the Characters.

Jesus Christ.—Gentle, loving, pure, proved innocent by all his judges. Only answering rightful questions (Isaiah liii.).

Pilate.—Unjust, violent, cruel, vile. Condemning and ill-treating a prisoner whom he declares innocent.

The Soldiers.—Cruel, barbarous, adding insult to injury.

The Jews.—Full of envy and hatred, led blindly on by the priests, calling down vengeance on their own heads (Matt. xxvii. 25).

Lesson Points.

Warning from Pilate against vacillation and acting against the dictates of conscience.

Jesus Christ proved quite perfect; the son of God; suffering the just for the unjust. Suffering the punishment due to my sin. Jesus Christ the true King over all true hearts. Is He my King? What is truth? (John xiv. 6, xvii. 17.)

Evangelistic.

MR. HENRY THORNE has conducted a ten-days' mission at Sunderland Y.M.C.A. Special efforts were made to reach men, and on the Sunday afternoons about 250 gathered together in the Assembly Hall. An interesting out-door service was held in the early morning of the last Sunday in the Park. It was addressed by Pastor Marsh. Afterwards, a breakfast was provided at the Y.M.C.A., attended by a large company of young people, to whom Mr. Thorne spoke on "Equipment for Service." Several conversions were professed, and many of God's people were greatly blessed. Bible readings were given each afternoon, and Mr. Thorne told the story of his life to a large audience in the Victoria Hall. The meetings were much helped by a special choir.

Rev. JAMES WHARTON conducted an eight-days' mission at Cocoanut Grove, Florida, the most southern church in America (on the mainland). Many professed to receive benefit by the services.

JAMES BOLTON,
Pastor, Congregational Church.

Three weeks' special services have been conducted at Morchard Bishop, North Devon, by Mr. JOHN ELLIOTT. Some who seldom, if ever, hear the Gospel have been regular attendants. The room has been engaged by a few earnest Christians, who will use it regularly for Gospel preaching.

A most interesting fifteen-days' mission has been conducted at Hoylake by Miss SCHOFIELD and Miss M. STURDEE, of the Pentecostal League. The meetings were held first in the Town Hall, then in the various churches in succession. Many were convicted of sin and turned to God, while believers were revived.

F. PEIRCE, M.D.

A twelve-days' Gospel mission has been conducted by Mr. and Mrs. ALEXANDER in connection with St. John's Presbyterian Church, Tottenham. Many yielded to Christ. The blessing received by all had been so great that the meetings were continued. The presence of God was again manifestly felt, and others were added to the Kingdom.

Mr. W. R. BRADLAUGH recently conducted six-days' evangelistic services at Longton, Staffs. The spiritual tone of the meetings was high, and a number of the unconverted came out on the Lord's side. The Bible readings also were very helpful, the inner meaning of the Word being brought out with clearness. The services prove to be a season of great blessing to the mission, the Churches, and the town generally.

T.R.M.

A ten-days' mission, under the auspices of the Free Churches of Bishop Stortford, has been held by Mr. W. R. LANE. On Sunday afternoons a noteworthy meeting was that for men only, about 800 being present. On the Sunday evenings upwards of 1,000 people gathered to hear the Gospel message. The earnest and powerful addresses of the evangelist produced a great impression. Many stayed till the after meetings, and a large number publicly confessed Christ. Christians of the various churches have been drawn nearer to each other and stirred up to more earnest effort. No such mission has been held here for ten years or more.

We praise God for gracious answers to prayer during the ten-days' mission conducted at Cage Lane Hall, Plumstead, by Miss Glover, of Edinburgh. Believers have been quickened into new energy and zeal for the souls of those around them. God's Spirit has worked mightily in the hearts of the unsaved, convicting of sin and leading into the joy and liberty of the sons of God. Last Sunday evening the hall was crowded, every bit of standing room being occupied and many having to go away. God was working, as the souls who came out at the close revealed.

KATE ANDERSON.

Evangelists' Engagements.

MR. W. D. DUNN.—May 21-June 4, Motherwell; 18-30, Bethany Hall, Glasgow.

MR. W. R. LANE.—Till May 21, Sidcup; 27-June 5, Brockley.

MR. E. P. TELFORD.—May 21-28, Bromley. During June, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End.

MRS. E. LE BAKYERTZ.—Till May 22, Newcastle-on-Tyne; June 18-July 8, Annan.

MR. JAS. SPRUNT.—May 21-28, Billinghurst; during June, Sundays and Thursdays, Walthamstow; Wednesdays, Wimbledon.

MR. NEWTON JONES.—May 21, Oxford; 27-29, Bedford.

MR. HENRY THORNE.—May 21, South Croydon; 27-June 5, Ramsden Road, Balham; 11 and 12, Wimbledon; 18-25, Bromley.

MR. J. J. SCROGGIE.—May 21 and 28, Tunbridge Wells.

BROTHERS WEAVER.—Till May 26, Paisley.

Pastor F. E. MARSH.—Till May 19, Tamworth.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, Sunday, May 21, at 7, and Thursday, May 25, at 8, Mr. P. H. Thompson; Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill, Sunday, May 21, at 7, and Thursday, May 25, at 8, Mr. J. G. McVicker.

MR. JOHN ELLIOTT.—May 21—June 4, Puddington; June 18—25, Central Hall, Pokesdown, Bournemouth.

(640)

Y.M.C.A.'s for East London.

THE spiritual and social needs of the young men of East London were stated very emphatically at a large and enthusiastic meeting at the Mansion House on Monday afternoon last. The primary object of the gathering was to raise the sum of £10,000, to be devoted to building or renting premises in the most important districts, maintaining a Training Institute for works, and conducting, to an extent commensurate with the requirements, all the agencies for ministering to the welfare of young manhood which are associated with Y.M.C.A. effort.

The LORD MAYOR, who presided, recalled with keen satisfaction his long and happy connection with Y.M.C.A. work. He recalled in feeling terms the kindly help and sound Christian influence which he experienced when he was a youth just commencing a commercial career at the City Institution in Aldersgate Street. He heartily welcomed the new effort to make the work as extensive and successful in the East as in other parts of London.

Mr. R. L. BARCLAY, hon. treasurer, contended that the case was an urgent one. The opportunity for work in the East End was unique, but the present centres were inadequate and badly equipped.

After Sir T. Fowell-Buxton had given a brief but pithy address, Dr. BARNARDO declared that the community owed a great debt to the Y.M.C.A. Pleading urgently for the fund, he said the associations provided a home, safe companionship, healthy recreation, and religious influences for young men.

Dr. HARRY GUINNESS contended that East London was so large and so important and so destitute that it ought to possess at any rate fifty large and flourishing associations. He instanced the Stratford and Hackney branches as proving how vast a work could be done, and in a forcible portrayal of the forlorn and neglected state of East London pointed out that in its great artery there was a public-house every hundred yards but no Y.M.C.A. In huge, densely-populated blocks, filled with all but forgotten multitudes, were numbers of young men who only needed reaching and training to make splendid missionaries.

A spirited word of encouragement was added by Mr. T. A. DENNY, who said that a better object lesson of the excellent effects of Y.M.C.A. influences than the Lord Mayor himself could scarcely be found. Communication respecting the work may be addressed to Mr. R. C. Barclay, 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Duke of Connaught has consented to open the handsome new building now in course of erection for the Newcastle-on-Tyne Young Men's Christian Association.

Resolutions of protest against seven-day journals, and authorising the removal from the reading-rooms of such newspapers as publish Sunday editions, have been passed by the Y.M.C.A.'s at Sheffield, Needham Market, Devonport, Shoreditch, Carlisle, Ballymena, Stockton-on-Tees, Newton Abbot, Taunton, Paddington, Bayswater, &c.

The Rio de Janeiro Association has recently entered into new and commodious premises, at the opening of which there was an audience numbering over 500 persons, including representatives from all the churches. The building is very large, but part only is at present occupied by the Association, the rest being let out in order to pay the debt incurred in its construction.

The new premises of the Perth Y.M.C.A. have been opened by Sir Robert Pullar in presence of a large audience. Mr. Aitchison, the secretary, stated that more than the amount required to cover the expenditure had subscribed. During the evening addresses were delivered by Bailie Drighorn and Mr. William Oatts, Glasgow, and Andrew Bell, Edinburgh.

The annual report of the Anglo-American Y.M.C.A. in Paris is a record of faithful labour. With more prominent and commodious premises the work of this Association would be greatly enhanced, for it would become increasingly a place of beneficial resort, and where many more might be shielded from allurements which so often have proved ruinous to many. It is especially desirable that the move be made before the Paris Exhibition of 1900. A committee has been formed to develop an extension scheme. The hon. secretary is Mr. J. Forrester Anderson, 89, Boulevard, Malesherbes.

Personalia.

Mr. John Jones, evangelist, Shepherd's Bush, has laboured in the Gospel for forty years. A few days ago a meeting of his neighbours and friends was held in Park Hall, Providence Place, whereat Mr. Jones was enabled to unfold a deeply interesting story of Divine leading and blessing on his work.

Mr. A. S. Lamb, just home from North Africa, is free to assist in pastoral or evangelistic work in connection with any body of evangelical Christians. Mr. Lamb both sings and preaches the Gospel, and has been already blessed in his ministry both at home and abroad. (1, Thornwood Terrace, Partick, Glasgow.)

Rev. F. B. Meyer is going once more to the Northfield Convention, thus acceding to an earnest invitation from Mr. Moody. He hopes to leave Liverpool on July 29, after attending the Keswick Convention. This will make Mr. Meyer's sixth journey to the United States at the request of Mr. Moody.

Pastor Charles E. Faithfull, of the Chamberi Evangelical Church, Madrid, is at present in England for a brief season of much needed rest. He will be in London from June 12 till the first week of July, when he would thankfully accept invitations to speak of the Lord's work in his hands.—Address, care of Mr. Raymond, 16, Paternoster Square, London.

Professor L. J. Bertrand, of the Œuvre des Prêtres Convertis, is in England once more. He has of late suffered from ill-health, induced by overwork consequent upon the increasing anxieties attending mission operations among ex-priests in France. He has now recovered, however, and hopes to find many old friends at home during his travels in England and Scotland. Letters to him may be addressed 39, Woburn Place, Russell Square, London, W.C.

Rev. Charles Neil has accepted the living of St. Mary's, Stamford Brook, Hammersmith. An esteemed correspondent writes:—"Mr. Neil has spent thirty-three years in East London, having been appointed first to the vicarage of St. Paul's, Bethnal Green. After holding this living for nine years, the late Bishop of London presented him to the vicarage of St. Matthias, Poplar, where he has spent the last twenty-three years. He has been president of Sion College, has held the office of secretary to the Stepney Deanery for some years, and has represented the clergy at the London Diocesan Conference from the day of its institution. But Mr. Neil is best known perhaps throughout the churches of England, America, and the colonies by his various theological works, such as his "Expositions of the Pauline Epistles," his "Classified Lesson Bible," and his "30,000 Thoughts." The Bishop of London has conferred a benefit on the Church at large, and on the parishioners of St. Mary's in particular, by this excellent choice. It is to be hoped that it will be followed up by the selection of other devoted and earnest Protestant Evangelical East London clergymen for North and West London parishes. There are some whose rich experience and able public ministry would strengthen the cause of the Church of England immensely if they were transferred to more prominent and influential neighbourhoods."

Temperance Notes.

THE Karen tribe, Burmah, has renounced its savagery, and has accepted Christianity without the drink. Nearly every village has its church and school, and crime and drunkenness are unknown. The high standard is accounted for by the fact that every member of the Christian community is an abstainer—that being a condition of Church membership.

* * * * *

A Bill has been introduced into the Belgian Senate reducing the number of cabarets or drinking places from one to every thirty inhabitants, the present legal proportion, to one to 150 inhabitants in communes of under 10,000; one to 200 in from 10,000 to 20,000; one to 250 in from 20,000 to 50,000; and one to 300 when the population is over 50,000. The Bill will reduce the number of cabarets in Brussels to one-tenth of the present number—that is, to 700.

* * * * *

The Birmingham Auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance has issued a pamphlet, entitled "A Record Year of Crime in Birmingham," and asks the question, "Who is responsible?" It states that in 1898 more than 12,000 persons fell into the hands of the local police, and more than 8,000 passed through Winson Green Gaol, a much larger number than in any previous year. Of these latter, 1,900 were young people between sixteen and twenty-one years of age, and 985 children between the ages of seven and sixteen were before the courts for misdemeanour, drunkenness, or vagrancy. The gaol was filled to overflowing, and the workhouse and asylum were crowded. It was only necessary to read the local Press to see that the open public-houses generate crime.

Letters to the Editor.

Vindication of the Microbe.

SIR,—The opinion of those who believe in inoculation for the cure and prevention of diseases, receives a serious assault in the assertion, on medical authority, that the presence in the system of germs, long regarded as the causes of specific diseases, is necessary and beneficial. In a paper read recently before the British Gynaecological Society, Dr. G. G. Bantock practically challenged the whole theory of pathogenic micro-organisms.

After supporting his position by a great weight of evidence in the form of facts, Dr. Bantock concluded: "I claim to have shown that the poisons of variola, vaccinia, and syphilis are not and cannot be the product of a bacillus; that Loeffler's bacillus is not a constant, and therefore cannot be the essential element in the production of diphtheria; that the essential element in typhoid fever is not the bacillus typhosus; that there is no evidence worthy of the name that tuberculosis is due to the ravages of the tubercle bacillus; that the comma bacillus cannot be regarded as the essential element in the production of an attack of cholera, and that the same can be said of the plague and its special bacillus; that the so-called pathogenic (disease-producing) micro-organisms are constantly found under conditions consistent with perfect health, and that, in more than one instance they not only appear to, but actually do, exert a beneficent influence. All these things—which are facts, not opinions—capable of demonstration and proof, go to show that the modern doctrine of bacteriology is a gigantic mistake; that we are already at the parting of the ways, and that it is safe to predict that, ere long, it will come to be recognised that these various bacilli play a beneficent rôle in the economy of nature."

Anti-vivisectors have always asserted that in following the vagaries of bacteriology, the medical faculty was forsaking the sane and scientific lines of therapeutic inquiry, and now their views are proclaimed from the profession itself. Considering the large sums voted by different States to enable specialists to experiment in cultivating germs and preparing from them inoculating sera for the supposed cure and prevention of disease, this discovery is rather painful.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

MAURICE L. JOHNSON.

1, Alton Villas, Warwick Road, Cotham, Bristol.

Missions to the Jews.

DEAR SIR,—At our most enthusiastic missionary meetings, where every heathen or Mohammedan field may be pleaded for, seldom, very seldom is a single voice raised on behalf of the Jews. This and another fact, viz., that our ordinary hymnology, notwithstanding its wide range and much spiritual beauty and power, furnishes very few hymns specially suitable for use at a Jewish missionary meeting, are significant of age-long Christian indifference.

It is the more remarkable because of the wave of missionary enthusiasm which has swept through the Church during the Nineteenth Century, and yet at its close we find her only beginning to arouse herself and see that she has literally reversed God's order, "the Jew first," and considered him last of all.

That there is a judicial aspect to this blind indifference we are aware, but it is largely due to ignorance of God's purposes concerning the nation as his chosen channel of blessing to mankind at large. So few are taught by preacher or teacher that "the history of Israel is the history of Redemption." From Genesis iii. 15 to the last verse in Revelation, the Coming One is the great, glorious truth round which all other truths revolve, and with which they are closely intertwined. First, in humiliation and sacrifice to which the whole Mosaic economy pointed. "He came unto his own, and his own received Him not!" But "the veil" was upon the heart of the proud nation, and remaineth even until this day. The second time He will come in glory, and in the midst of their deepest humiliation they shall look on Him whom they pierced (Zech. xii. 10), and He will reveal Himself as their Deliverer and King (Zech. xiv.).

If the leaders in the Church, the College and the Press, would only give to these truths a greater prominence, there are many thousands who would study the Bible with increased interest and intelligence, and learn to "pray for the peace of Jerusalem." Its contingent promise, "They shall prosper that love thee," has never yet been claimed by Christ's Church. Who can venture to say how much blessing and prosperity have been lost to her thereby? "This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise."

M. E. SEARLE,
Australasian Hon. Secretary
Prayer Union for Israel.

Children's Holiday Fund.—An interesting development in connection with this useful society is the issue of examination papers to be sent round to schools on reassembling after the summer holidays, with a view to encouraging the children who go into the country for their fortnight's holiday to learn to observe and care for the sights and sounds of nature. Particulars may be obtained from Mrs. H. O. Barnett, Toynbee Hall, Whitechapel, E.

New Forest Gipsy Mission.—The annual report affords an interesting glimpse of a branch of work which is in some respects of exceptional interest. Impressions are made by varied means. Bibles or Testaments are given to those who can read, and also cards on which a simple prayer is printed. Much time is very properly devoted to visiting among the tents and caravans. Particulars may be obtained from Mr. G. R. Shaw, Salisbury Road, Totton, Hants.

Ross Evangelistic Mission.—During the past eighteen years much good work has been done in a quiet way by this Mission, which from the centre at Ross has carried on colportage in the towns and villages of several counties. By means of house to house visitation, Bible carriage work, special missions to militia encampments, many have been blessed, while the tent meetings have a highly satisfactory record. Grants of tracts and books have been made to needy works, and large numbers of Testaments distributed in places of spiritual darkness. Superintendent, Mr. John Coates, Northleigh, Cantilupe Road, Ross, Herefordshire.

The Churches.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of* SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Southwell is still suffering from the effects of a serious attack of influenza, and it is stated that there are rumours in the diocese of his early retirement.

Rev. E. Lee, vicar of Christ Church, Doncaster, recently announced in church that he would shortly appear before the Archbishop of York with respect to the ritual and ceremonial at his church.

St. Paul's Church, North Shore, Blackpool, will be consecrated by the Bishop of Manchester on Wednesday, July 19. This church will supply the needs of a new district to be eventually formed out of Christ Church parish.

Dr. G. C. Fisher, who has been appointed an Assistant Bishop in the diocese of Norwich, with the title of Bishop of Ipswich, was, until 1898—when family reasons compelled him to retire—Bishop Suffragan of Southampton. He had previously been in charge of the important parishes of St. George, Barrow-in-Furness, St. Nicholas, Beverley, and Croydon.

Congregational.

The restoration of Kingswood Hill Chapel, Bristol, is now being pushed forward.

Fourteen members were recently admitted into fellowship at Queen's Park Church, Manchester, by the pastor, Rev. J. M. Dryerre.

Owing to continued ill-health, Rev. D. M. Jenkins, of the Welsh Congregational Church, Park Road, Liverpool, has intimated his intention to resign at the close of the year.

The Leeds Council have voted £1,500 towards the cost of a new chapel in Harehills Road, on condition that the congregation raises £1,000, half the sum to be forthcoming by August.

Mr. F. Crofts Rollin, the senior student, and Mr. J. Beveridge Thompson, also student of the Yorkshire United Independent College, have been appointed to the charge of churches in Johannesburg.

The following pastoral changes have occurred:—Rev. W. H. Alexander, to Willesden; Rev. R. W. Johnson, to Silloth; Rev. J. D. Fletcher, to Cawsand Church, Plymouth; and Rev. W. Batcock, to Debenham, Suffolk.

Rev. William Mottram recently reported that the growth of temperance principles among the Congregational churches is remarkable. Eighty-four per cent (as compared with thirty-four in 1880) of the ministers are now total abstainers, and 264 out of 280 theological students in the colleges have taken the pledge.

Baptist.

Pastor H. F. Gower, of Cann Hall Church, Leytonstone, has consented not to act at present upon his intimated intention to resign.

Rev. James Carvath has become minister of the church at Bourne; Rev. W. J. Dyer, at Bridgnorth; and Rev. Thomas Woodhouse, at West Street, Rochdale.

Rev. Frederick C. Spurr, Missioner for the Baptist Union, has just concluded a fruitful ten days' mission at Onslow Church, South Kensington (Rev. John Garden).

Rev. Dr. Maclaren has preached in the Methodist Free Church, Higher Openshaw, Manchester, kindly lent for the occasion, in aid of the proposed new Baptist church.

Rev. John Jones, who has been in the Baptist ministry for sixty years, twenty of which have been spent in charge of the cause at Llandrindod Wells, brought his ministerial work to a close last week. His successor is Rev. J. Gimblett.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare has visited George Street Chapel, Plymouth (Rev. S. Vincent), and after paying a high tribute to the manner in which Mr. Vincent had carried out his presidential duties during the past year, spoke on behalf of the Baptist Twentieth Century scheme.

At Bow Road Church special sermons were preached in connection with the Sunday School anniversary by Pastor Fred H. King and Rev. A. Tildsley. At the public meeting a most encouraging report was given by the secretary. Among other items, over £40 has been donated to foreign missions.

A new chapel in Tenterden Street, Bury, which, together with a school adjoining, has been erected at a cost of about £5,000, was formally opened last week by Mrs. Clifford Davies, of Bury. At the service which followed a sermon was preached by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare.

The twentieth anniversary of the foundation of the work at Bournemouth (West) has just been held, Revs. H. E. Stone (London), A. W. Wood (Winchester), A. Corbet (Lansdown), and the pastor, G. D. Hooper, taking part. About £50 was raised towards liquidation of debt. It was stated by Mr. R. Colman, J.P., that the thirteen members originally forming the church were all living and working for God in some part of the world.

Rev. H. C. Wagnell, of Blackpool, has commenced a series of evangelistic services on Sunday evenings at Her Majesty's Opera House, Blackpool. Very large congregations have gathered, the proceedings have been characterised by homeliness and deep feeling, and a cheering spiritual work has resulted. Many who were strangers to a place of worship have attended and some have professed to find salvation. The attendances are increasing.

The Baptist Union of South Africa has been in session at Pretoria. At one of its sittings President Kruger attended, and was presented with an address, in which the assembly spoke of Mr. Kruger as "a strong, God-fearing ruler," whose support of his own "Puritan Church" they had noted with interest. In his reply the President expressed his belief that in their adherence to the Word of God and to Jesus Christ they had ground for hoping that minor differences would one day be forgotten.

Methodist.

Rev. Thomas Champness is on his way back from Australia to England.

Stirring meetings are being held by the Bible Christians in connection with the effort to raise a Century Fund of 100,000 crowns.

The committee of the Wesleyan Missionary Society have received a donation of £500 from an anonymous donor, through Rev. Dr. Rigg.

Mr. George Clutterbuck, sen., desires to express his grateful thanks for all the kind tributes paid to the memory of his dear son, and also to ask any who can give any personal reminiscences of Rev. G. W. Clutterbuck to address them to Rutland House, Peckham, S.E.

The report of the Wesleyan Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund shows that since the initiation of the movement ninety-four new chapels have been built, the cost of which approximately has been £700,000, and towards which, in grants, &c., the fund has provided £220,000.

A much blessed ten days' mission has been conducted at Longsight, Manchester, by Rev. T. Cook. Ministers and members co-operated heartily. Large congregations assembled and great power rested on all the services.

The report of the council of the Primitive Methodist West African Missions shows that the gravest difficulties are caused by the drink traffic. It is the growing opinion of missionaries that total abstinence from strong drinks should be a condition of membership in the mission churches.

The ninth annual report of the Wesleyan Soldiers' Home at Buckingham Palace Road, with its branch Home at Pirbright, has a good story to tell of the year's doings. The lease has been purchased, and the home enlarged, making the premises most complete and attractive.

The first Welsh Wesleyan Methodist assembly of Wales will meet at Machynlleth on Tuesday, June 13, and will remain in session for three days. The president of the conference will preside, and the ministers designated by the conference to accompany him are Revs. Dr. H. J. Pope, Dr. T. B. Stephenson, and John Hornabrook.

Memorial stones of a new Bible Christian chapel at Wellington, Somerset, have been laid. The total cost of the work is estimated at £2,200, towards which upwards of £1,700 has already been either subscribed or promised. The services were attended by Rev. W. B. Lark, President of the Conference, and Rev. H. W. Horwill, nearly all the ministers of the Free Churches in the town also taking part.

In the little village of Portbury, the only Nonconformist place of worship is a disused railway carriage. In this modest house a Wesleyan Society meets, and a Sunday School is taught. A gracious work has been going on for some time, but the owners of the land have given warning that the removal of the carriage may be required at any time. The lord of the manor has given a site for a chapel, but the villagers are too poor to build.

Presbyterian.

Rev. John Owen, of Mold, has been appointed secretary of the Theological College, Bala.

Rev. J. M. Wilson, of Hexham, brought his ministry there to a close last week after forty-three years' service.

A meeting has been held in Marylebone Church (Rev. Dr. Hanson) to welcome Miss Keith, the newly-appointed lady missionary.

The Presbyterian Hall, which is being erected at Wembley through the generosity of an anonymous donor, is now externally complete.

Rev. J. Campbell MacGregor, lately of Kilfinichen, Mull, has been unanimously elected assistant minister by the kirk-session of Stevenston Parish Church, Ayrshire.

The Secretary of State for India has nominated Rev. Alan Cant to be chaplain on the Bombay ecclesiastical establishment, in succession to Rev. A. B. Watson.

A Welsh Presbyterian has intimated his intention to give £20,000 towards the liquidation of the debts on the Calvinistic Methodist chapels of North Wales.

Next year is the jubilee of New College, Edinburgh. Dr. Stalker, convener of the College Committee, has just issued a circular requesting subscriptions towards enlarging the college buildings Steps are being taken for the formation of a congregation at Harrow. An excellent site has been secured for a church and hall, midway between the London and North-Western and the Metropolitan Railway Stations.

The Presbytery of Philadelphia have congratulated Rev. Dr. N. E. Schenck on his entering on the eighty-first year of his age. From 1854 to 1887 he was the able and efficient secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Publication.

At a meeting of the Deer Established Presbytery, the Rev. Dr. Stewart, Peterhead, intimated a gift of 700 volumes of theological works, to be placed in the church hall at Peterhead for the benefit of his successors in office.

The Church Extension Committee of the Manchester Presbytery have decided to continue permanently the services now being held in the Conservative Hall, Heaton Moor, and steps are being taken to secure a young probationer to take charge of the district.

The young people's missionary meeting, which was held this year for the first time in connection with the synod of the Presbyterian Church of England, took place in Dr. Thornton's church in Camden Square. Rev. Alex. Connell, of Regent Square, was the principal speaker, and delighted the children greatly by talking in a pleasant way about his visit to China.

Aberdeen Presbytery of the Church of Scotland has adopted a report in connection with communications which had been laid before them by Rev. Jacob Primmer with regard to Ritualistic practices. The report acknowledged Mr. Primmer's ability, but opposed the taking of any formal action by the Presbytery on the ground that there were more constitutional means by which the end Mr. Primmer had in view might be attained. Dunfermline Presbytery has unanimously recommended that a grant be made from the Home Mission Funds to Mr. Primmer.

Society of Friends.

At the Board of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association Clara Hooper dwelt on the urgent need for more workers among the women of India. The Madagascar Committee brought forward a proposal for the reopening of the work at Arivonimamo which was so cruelly destroyed by the Malagasy rebels. The Board sanctioned this step, and a new mission house is to be erected there.

The Foreign Office has intimated to the secretary of the Friends' Foreign Missionary Society that the French Government has agreed to settle the claims of the Society for the hospital at Antananarivo, which it took from the mission for military purposes three years ago. It proposes to pay £6,000 in three instalments, together with interest at the rate of 3 per cent. for the past three years. The first £2,000 is to be paid at once, the second in 1900, and the last in the following year.

At the Meeting for Sufferings the question of prisoners in the Southern States of America was considered. It was thought the question might be hopefully left in the hands of American friends, but that it might be helpful in strengthening their work if the forthcoming yearly meeting would encourage them in their efforts for the coloured people. William Tallack thought there was evident need of pressure. He could not admit that the statements made by the Howard Association were exaggerated.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. T. GRIFFITHS-NEWELL, pastor of Gohebydd Memorial Church, Barratt's Grove, London. Mr. Newell, who was a native of North Wales, was ordained at Barratt's Grove in 1893, and has laboured with much diligence in a sphere beset with difficulties. He had been married but nine weeks.—Rev. R. O. JONES, minister of Moriah Congregational Chapel, Bedlinog, who had taken part in most of the public movements within the parish of Gelligaer and district for the last thirty-five years.—Rev. Dr. DUNCAN, minister of Bridge of Weir Parish Church, for over fifteen years. He was much esteemed.—The death of Rev. ALEXANDER HUNTINGTON CLAPP, at New York, removes a leader and father from the Congregational churches. Dr. Clapp, after several pastorates, became secretary of the Congregational Home Missionary Society in 1865, and served in that and other important functions to the end of his life.—Buxton Road Wesleyan Circuit, Huddersfield, has lost its oldest member by the death of Mr. JOSHUA RILEY, one of the members when the circuit was formed in 1845. He was for many years circuit steward and superintendent of the Sunday school.—Rev. ROBERT FISH, Wolverhampton, who was in the Congregational ministry for about sixty years in Dorset and Gloucestershire.—In Northern India, Mrs. ESHWAR DAS (Grundy), of the Indian Christian Realm Mission, for many years a devoted missionary worker.

The Aldersgate "Mid-day."

ON Monday last Mr. R. C. Morgan gave, at the request of friends, a summary, necessarily brief, of his impressions of the United States.

In describing the characteristics of a Southern revival, a series of Gospel meetings, conducted by Mr. Jas. Wharton and Mr. Wintle, were particularly instanced with an interesting description of the scene at the "mourner's bench." The speaker alluded to the administration of American prisons, remarking on the degree of ease and comparative comfort which prevailed, and the opportunity for Christian work among the inmates. There were some well-known habitués of the gaols. One man, if discharged during the earlier part of the week, invariably managed to return by the Friday, on the ground that he must have his Sunday porridge. The greater familiarity between warders and prisoners allowed Christian officials to exercise a beneficent influence. With an appreciative reference to Mr. Moody, Mr. Morgan said that the American evangelist was, in spite of the vagaries of occasional newspaper criticism, a greater power for good than ever before, commanding general respect. A stimulating conversation, full of deep feeling, arose from the speaker's moving account of the racial troubles in the Southern States, particularly as manifested in the sufferings of the Afro-American women and children.

"MAY" MEETINGS.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.	Place of Meeting.	Chairman
MAY.
Fri. 19	1.15 p.m.	Religious Tract Society	s St. Mary's, Aldermanbury	Rev. Griffith Thomas.
Tues. 23	7.30 p.m.	Peace Society	m Devonshire Hse, Bishopsg'te St.	Sir J. W. Pease, M.P.
Wed. 24	7.0 p.m.	Women's Protestant Union	co Exeter Hall	Mrs. Arbuthnot.
"	8.0 p.m.	" " "	m " "	Mr. T. A. Denny.
Thurs. 25	11.0 a.m.	" " "	co " "	Mr. Robert Scott.
"	3.0 p.m.	" " "	co " "	Rev. George Olver.
"	7.30 p.m.	" " "	co " "	Mr. W. H. Seagram.
"	7.30 p.m.	Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society	s St. Mary's, Aldermanbury	Rev. J. Ormiston.
Fri. 26	11 a.m.	Women's Protestant Union	co Exeter Hall	Rev. F. B. Meyer.
"	3.0 p.m.	" " "	co " "	Miss E. Smyly.
"	7.30 p.m.	" " "	co " "	Dr. T. J. Barnardo.
Sun. 28	11 a.m.	Religious Tract Society	s St. John's Wood Pres. Church	Dr. Monro Gibson.
Mon. 29	3.0 p.m.	Racecourse Mission	m Exeter Hall	Mr. T. A. Denny.
"	6.30 p.m.	Friends' Foreign Missions	m Devonshire House, E.C.	Mr. Joshua Rowntree.
Tues. 30	3 p.m.	Shipwrecked Mariners Society	m Hotel Metropole	Earl Stanhope.
"	6.30 p.m.	British Jews Society	m Exeter Hall	Mr. R. Green.
Wed. 31	3.0 p.m.	Daily Prayer Union	m Council Chamber, Exeter Hall	Archdeacon Sinclair.
"	5.0 p.m.	Field Lane Refuges	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Earl of Aberdeen.
"	6.30 p.m.	Friends' Temperance Union	m Devonshire House, E.C.	Mr. John Hilton.
"	7.0 p.m.	Christian Community	m Exeter Hall	Mr. F. A. Bevan.
JUNE.
Thurs. 1	3.30 p.m.	Invalid Children's Aid Society	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Earl of Aberdeen.
Fri. 2	3.0 p.m.	St. Giles' Christian Mission	m Mansion House	The Lord Mayor.

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; co.—Convention; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soiree.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

OWING to the intervention of the holidays, we have been compelled to hold over several important matters (such as the C. E. Convention report) which, in point of time, should have appeared this week. These will duly appear in our next issue.

No item of news in last week's papers created livelier satisfaction among Christian people than the announcement in the Daily Mail: "Death of the Sunday Mail. Frank concession to the religious feeling of the public."

The directors acknowledged, further, the strong opposition of their own staff, who objected to the substitution of a rest day in the middle of the week for the Sunday to which they had been accustomed, and the consequent loss of the Saturday half-holiday. In their memorial the Harmsworth employés said:—

> For those of us who work on the Sunday Edition (and this number includes practically the whole of the staff), and are on duty until midnight on Saturday, it is impossible to reach home until such a late hour on Sunday morning that we practically lose the whole of the day, and are deprived of all chance of joining in the Sunday reunion of the family circle or availing ourselves of those Sabbath opportunities and participating in the observances that are inseparable from the recognised English Day of Rest.

This confirms the contention that with the most careful adjustment the introduction of the Sunday newspaper would mean increased pressure on those who produced it, and the loss of the Sunday itself as a rest-day, and with it all opportunity of religious worship.

The victory thus gained is a considerable one, but the battle is only half won so long as the other offending journal—the Daily Telegraph—continues its Sunday issue. And unless some very potent argument, probably of a material kind, can be applied to its proprietor, it will apparently continue in the field. If pressure can be put upon large advertisers in its columns, and they take action, some good may be done. We have heard of one firm that withdrew its advertisements, which amounted to several thousand pounds. To reduce the circulation of the offending journal is, of course, one way to reduce advertisements; but this is difficult to any considerable extent. Yet we fearlessly appeal to all Christian people not to buy a copy of The Daily Telegraph, nor to advertise in it, until it discontinues its Sunday issue.

In her usual letters to the Daily News, Mrs. Crawford recently made some observations on Sunday observance in England and in Paris which ought to carry great weight. She recalled the opinion of the late M. Léon Say, that the steady energy of the English during the six work-days of the week was due to the Day of Rest. It seemed to him most honourable for a commercial nation to shut up shop completely one day in seven. He started the Sunday Rest movement, and obtained a half-holiday on Sunday tor post-office clerks and letter-carriers. So deeply did he impress his views on others that Paris is not now like what it was under the Empire, for "few shops are open at all on Sunday; provision shops close at twelve o'clock." We have some things worth having, one of them is the Sunday.

Mrs. Josephine Butler, always alive to the subtle dangers which threaten the sacred cause of purity, expresses her conviction that at the approaching Conference on "The White Slave Traffic" the presence and activity in it of known regulationists of vice means that "the enemy is about to bring into the midst of the pure motives of the promoters of the Conference some element which will weaken the force of their action and promote division." Her fear is that attention will be fixed upon those who are traders in women and girls in such a manner as to overlook the rich villains who pay them, and whose vice is the fons et origo of the whole hideous traffic. Replying to the objection that these men cannot be found and cannot be reached by the law, Mrs. Butler remarks:—

> Perhaps not! The application of the law must be limited in most cases of personal immorality; but the less these men are attainable by legal penalties, the more should they be condemned by an informed and awakened public conscience.

There can be no manner of doubt that it is the recognition, by the State, of vice as a necessity that is the greatest feeder of the trade in girls, and that system must be unpityingly exposed and unsparingly attacked at the approaching conference.

The Peace Congress has been very auspiciously opened. That fact alone has a deep significance, and is in itself a guarantee of some measure of success. The question of disarmament is at least being seriously considered, and behind it come other matters which will receive adequate discussion. The present mood of the delegates is said to be "non-committal;" but there is already an improvement in the tone, and prospects are brightening that some substantial results will be attained. That this promising beginning is largely due to the Peace Crusade in this country and abroad is unquestionable. So far, however, from slackening their hands, and thinking that their work is done, those who have this matter laid on their hearts and consciences should redouble their efforts in the good cause, and wait constantly at the throne of grace on its behalf.

The attempt of the Pope to get the Vatican represented at the Peace Conference has been defeated, and by way of retaliation the Papal Nuncio has ostentatiously left the Hague by way of marking his displeasure. This method of showing sympathy with a great religious and humanitarian movement is, to say the least, peculiar for the leader of "the largest church in Christendom." The craving for political recognition and temporal power is ingrained in the Papal office, and accounts for not a few of the evils and tragedies of history, as well as for the terrible condition of all Roman Catholic countries just now. The Peace Conference will succeed none the less surely because the Pope's representative is absent from its conclaves. The probability is that it will succeed all the more surely.

Now that the Peace Conference is in session, it may be well to reflect upon the military forces which the countries represented at the Hague possess. In all, the peace footing of the assembled Powers reaches the total of 3,500,000 trained men, while the war footing would touch the enormous figure of 17,750,000; and if the untrained forces of British Volunteers and men on the Continent who pass straight into the reserves be included, the grand sum would be swollen to about 23,000,000. It is difficult to realise this aggregate of men ready for mutual slaughter at the bidding of rival potentates.

It was a foregone conclusion, under the present tension in the sacerdotal controversy, that the Bishop of London's Fund would suffer a great falling off in income. We trust that the Bishops will be wise enough to attribute the deficit to the real cause. The laity, as a body, have lost confidence in their lordships' willingness to deal fairly with the Protestant agitation, and therefore refuse to support diocesan appeals. It is as Sir C. R. Lighton says:—

> Let the Bishops and clergy be true to their vows, and respect the principles of the Reformation, and I have no doubt they will not appeal to the public in vain.

It is truth and honesty in their religious teachers that the laity are looking for, but in vain. Ordination vows are not respected. Loyalty to articles of faith does not appear. The attitude of the laity is clear enough.

The trend of the Ritualistic movement is shown by an incident arising out of the visit to Russia of Bishop Macrorie, Canon of Ely. He told the Metropolitan Antonius, "I am happy to meet again the head of the Russian Church, with which we desire to be united." This Russian Church is the persecutor of the Stundists and the Doukhobortsi and the Lutherans, and as intolerant and superstitious as any Church in Christendom. It is a sad set-back to find the representatives of our National Church thus showing more sympathy with the most degraded forms of faith than with the Nonconformists of their own land and blood. Sacerdotalism blinds the eyes and warps the heart of its victims. It is the enemy of true spiritual reunion with those who hold to the Evangelical faith.

It is a significant sign that the week of special prayer, suggested by the Protestant Alliance, in association with several other Protestant Societies, has been so widely observed. Prayer is the great power faithful hearts can employ in a crisis like the present to bring about the intervention of God. It is not spasms of supplication, however, that will effect any great improvement in the situation. Ceaseless prayer, in which the heart lives with God in holy fellowship, is the most powerful spiritual force that man can use. "God's hand is stretched out still" to succour, when the effectual fervent prayers of righteous men rise to heaven on the wings of faith.

Revival is the subject of unceasing prayer in many lands. The need of the world corresponds with the prayer of the Church. Who will not read with a sorrowful acquiescence the following sentences from an address to Congregational ministers, delivered in 1853 by Rev. John Angell James:—

A better ministry would make a better Church; and a better church would make a better world. Yes, yes: let us hear it and tremble, and weep, and pray, and improve. The world's conversion, the glories of the millennium, the universal reign of Christ, are accelerated or hindered chiefly by us ministers.

There was an incomparable tract published some years ago, entitled "A Revived Ministry the only hope of a Revived Church." Its tenderness was equal to its pungency, and its humility to its boldness. Some complained of its title, and others disliked its uncompromising fidelity; and we showed how little we wanted to be revived by suffering its circulation to languish, instead of pushing it in every direction. We suffered the voice of meek reproof and affectionate exhortation to fall on heedless ears, and we were not revived because we did not wish to be. But it is a solemn truth, which we ought to ponder; and I repeat it again, "A Revived Ministry is the only hope of a Revived Church," even as a Revived Church is the only hope of a dead world.

These considerations are as true to-day as they were when first spoken. May the God of John Angell James impress them upon the heart and conscience of his servants!

We have recently had several communications on the subject of the Person of Christ; and as often as points on this sublime theme are raised, we are thrown back upon Sacred Scripture as the sole authority to inform and decide. The Written Word is our source of knowledge regarding the Living Word; and the two are marvellously combined in the Divine dealings with men. The Scriptures testify of Christ (John v. 39); in like manner also does Christ fulfil and unfold the Scriptures (Luke xxiv. 44-48). "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." As opened up and expounded by the late Dr. Saphir in CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES, these truths and relations have proved a blessing to many. If introduced to Scripture study on the lines laid down in that stimulating little work, our young people would assuredly develop a much-needed knowledge of the truth, and strength of character for Christian service and the conflict with present-day error. (1s.; 1s. 6d.; and 2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

In an article entitled "Spiritual Diagnoses," the Independent touched the spiritual equipment of ministers for soul-winning. This is above all things the power that God uses in carrying on his work in the world. Mental culture is an important feature in the successful presentation of the Gospel in order that it may reach all classes of mind. Preachers need to be students, to bring forth, for the edification of their flocks, "things new and old." But they must know men in their spiritual struggles, in doubts that paralyse, in infidelities that deceive. More and other knowledge is required than books supply. Light and strength must come from persistent contact by prayer with the living Christ. This as the source of power is absolutely indispensable.

The "Ministerial" office requires a practical knowledge of the soul's difficulties and sorrows—a knowledge not of books but of men. . . . We insist upon our ministers learning in some practical fashion how to deal with men whose sickness is moral and spiritual, how to apply the warnings and welcomes to the unconverted, how to edify the people of God.

This does not discount ripe scholarship and mental training, but it demands the culture of the heart with assiduous care.

A very threatening cloud, which hovered over the industrial world last week, has suddenly been lifted, greatly to the relief of thousands of families. The friction between employers and employed in the building trades had for some time been serious, and a great strike was imminent. Through the good offices of the Editor of the Daily News and other friends of both parties, they have been brought to consent to a meeting for discussion of the points under dispute, on a basis which is likely to lead to a settlement. Abroad and at home, therefore, we find that the principle of conciliation is replacing the old belligerent attitude. They are both but beginnings; but sometimes beginnings mean a great deal, and though the end may not be yet, it still may be within sight.

The attempt to legalise betting-stands for bookmakers in the public streets has been summarily defeated by Her Majesty's judges, and the validity of the County Council's bye-law prohibiting such a practice has been upheld. It is well known that most betting transactions in London are even now made on the streets; and if once the rogues who, under various pretexts, such as newsvending and other employments, induce thoughtless lads to venture their hard-earned money on horse races, could secure a right, the evil which is already only too rampant would be increased tenfold. But it is not enough to refuse the right; it is necessary to suppress the illegal practice. The police should be instructed to be more watchful of these nefarious customs which go on under their eyes, or "round the corner." Too often "the sight of means to do ill deeds makes ill deeds done," with the young and thoughtless youths of the city. They should be protected from their own credulity and foolishness as far as possible.

There is something extremely pathetic in the self-consciousness of degradation of some drunkards, and in the longing they have to be confirmed in better habits and to be reinstated in the confidence of their fellows. They will hang about temperance meetings like the sick folk at the pool of Bethesda, dimly hoping that some good angel will come and help them, and save them from themselves. Some of them are now turning to the Inebriates' Act, hoping that it may bring them some succour. Mr. Thomas Holmes says in the Contemporary that numbers of men, mostly young, have consulted him with a desire to be committed to some Inebriate Reformatory. When he told them the conditions, four times in one year before a magistrate, "they have gone away sorrowing, for self-respect was not yet dead in them." This is the old story of men not bad enough to be helped. There is cause for a further readjustment of our machinery.

The case of the needy in some parts of the world is at this time enough to awaken pity in any human heart. Seven great provinces in Russia are famine-stricken, and the people are suffering both from starvation and pestilence. Six millions out of a total of twelve millions of people in the eastern provinces on the Volga have no food. Yet it is said that there is food enough in Russia for everyone. Surely this is a case in which the great military resources of the country might be employed to good purpose in the distribution of food and grain. And if the people are too poor to pay for it, a governmental system of credit might be adopted. Then, also, in Armenia there is great distress owing to the old oppressions and exactions being enforced. And from India comes the news of an outbreak of cholera. Some day, when men shall have learnt that they are members one of another, the need of one place will be the call to all the rest to give aid, and they will hear and answer.

Protestant Outlook.

INFLUENTIAL laymen in the county of Dorset have presented a memorial to the Bishop of Salisbury, in which they say:—

At this crisis, which causes so much anxiety, when many of the clergy of the Church of England seem to be disregarding the teaching of the Prayer Book and introducing services which are alien to the principles of the Reformation, as enunciated therein, we desire to strengthen your hands and to help you in your endeavours, with all faithful diligence, to "drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word," and to offer our hearty support in carrying out such measures as may tend to accomplish the end, and secure for you all submission to your authority.

The Bishop of Oxford has spoken on the subject of "Confession." We could wish his condemnation of it had been more definite. True, he stated that no clergyman has a right to impose confession on the young in preparation for confirmation and their first communion, and he strongly advised the disuse of any manuals that recommended minute or suggestive examination before absolution. So far, so good; but he then went on to attack in the strongest language those who were crying out against the practice. The Bishop seems to forget that the Romanising priests caused the outcry by doing the very things he condemns, and his rebuke of those who are justly grieved is calculated to take away the edge from his condemnation.

At the West Hackney Parish Church, the sidesmen and the treasurer of the Assistant Clergy Fund (Mr. Glynn) have resigned office, in consequence of the vicar's having heard private confessions in the church. The sidesmen have sent to the vicar, Rev. A. L. Jukes, a letter, in which they state that their resignation is due to their belief "that it is quite contrary to the spirit of the Reformed Church of England that any man should make private confession of his sins to his minister, and receive from him 'the benefit of absolution.'"

A meeting convened by the National Protestant Church Union was held in Birmingham on Thursday last week to consider "the present crisis in the Church, its gravity, and its remedy." Sir Christopher R. Lighton presided, and the other speakers included Prebendary Webb-Peploe and Mr. J. W. Mellor, Q.C., M.P. The last-named said things had come to such a pitch that they were fighting for their religion, their families, and their homes. He did not think either of the Archbishops had realised the extent to which the mischief had gone, or that the battle was being fought by laymen for truth and justice as against priestcraft. What was wanted was a Protestant party in the House of Commons.

Widespread interest has been manifested in the petition, heard in the Consistorial Court of London, to remove crucifixes and other ornaments from the Church of St. Ethelburga, Bishopsgate. It appeared in evidence that—

Even the colours used to drape the picture of the Virgin, blue and white, were the same as those used in the Catholic Church. The Roman Catholic Missal was followed in the service, even to the prayer for the Pope, the priest substituting the word Pontiff for Pope. The choir sang the "Inquisition Hymn," the hymn sung while heretics were being burnt in olden days.

It was subsequently stated by a parishioner that at one service there was a picture of the Madonna put up. It was surrounded by about thirty candles, which were ceremonially lighted by an acolyte at a time when it was broad daylight. At Easter time there was a "crib" or "manger" fixed up. Around it were placed a number of kneeling-mats for the members of the congregation, in order to do reverence. Holy water stoups were placed about, and Father Phillips walked around the church and sprinkled the congregation with holy water.

A contemporary states:—"Out of the fifty-nine selected speakers at the forthcoming London Church Congress, I can only find the names of ten who can in any way be termed Evangelical. Lord Halifax is a selected speaker. Ought not his recent pronouncements alone have been sufficient to justify the Subjects Committee in quietly passing him by this year?'

Should China be Divided?—3.

The Diffusion of Christian and General Knowledge.

By Rev. J. SADLER, L.M.S., Amoy.

TO show that the Chinese are capable of change, we may remind ourselves of the Tai-ping Rebellion. Says Mr. J. Johnston: "That rebellion, with all its inconsistencies and cruelties, showed that the Chinese mind was capable of freeing itself from its own fetters, and of adopting new and progressive ideas in harmony with the highest form of civilisation; and it is to be deplored that civilisation was employed to crush it after it had conquered three-fourths of the Empire, and was on the eve of victory over its enemies, the Manchus."

As to religious changes, let us remember the rise of the three religions of China, and of Nestorianism (which is said to have failed through its own fault) and of Early Roman Catholicism. If we complain that the progress of Christianity is slow to-day in China, the answer is, not slower (making a fair comparison) than was the progress in the Roman Empire during the first fifty years.

We come now to consider the rise and progress of the Society for the Diffusion of Christian and General Knowledge as a factor of importance in the life of China. In the year 1877, the first General Conference of Missionaries was held in Shanghai. Very earnest attention was given to the preparation of literature. In accordance with the authoritative advice of the Conference, the S.D.K. was subsequently formed, and has been doing grand service. Its aim is to prepare and to establish, so far as funds will allow, libraries, reading-rooms, and book-stores in large cities. This kind of work has been wonderfully blessed. High-class newspapers have found their way into highest quarters.

BOOKS SUITED TO PRESENT-DAY NEEDS,

The same is true of books, such as books on Western Governments, the relation of China to them, international laws, books for the times, mathematics, geography, physiology, political economy. The "History of the War with Japan" was the only reliable one, and the Chinese were so grateful, and showed such confidence in the missionary (Dr. Allen) who had prepared the work, that they handed to him all their private telegrams, so as to make the history the more complete.

In one case, a lady has rejoiced over her book-store as a means of bringing men to the Saviour; again, by literature a native doctor and all his connections became influenced heavenward; a village has thus been opened to the Gospel. We have to bear in mind that the earnest movements of young China were

INSPIRED BY THE ORIGINAL S.D.K.

It is not too much to say that this same Society prepared the way for the mighty changes advocated by the Emperor last year. Serious hindrances have arisen to the rate of progress in all such movements, but if we judge correctly the antagonism created will rouse the deeper earnestness. The newspaper of young China to-day is named the Universal Gazette, and I am told it is widely read.

Our duty is to see that the breathing space now granted be used to make all due preparations. Last year there was an unreadiness for all the great opportunities given. Books, funds, teachers, and general workers were inadequate. A strong public opinion should be created in favour of the S.D.K. At present, Christians have a vantage ground. It is for them to meet this desire for learning; otherwise mischief will follow. Hostile forces will work against us, and then our efforts will need to be tenfold greater. If evangelical friends will exert themselves, they may greatly help to secure evangelical results. We should be proud of the S.D.K. as one of the best parts of our missionary work, the only means for reaching the educated in the first instance. How can we aid? By funds, by giving strong reasons to the home societies for supporting it, by furnishing weighty facts concerning its history and progress to important conventions, not only local, but international ones, such as the one to be held at New York.

If any plead, "First Christianise and then give general knowledge," the answer is, We cannot force the Chinese into our methods. If we win their confidence in a way they can understand, other things will follow. We have to learn the A.B.C. before being able to read our Bibles; so with the Chinese. Our Saviour used all means to win men. He even condescended to win them by healing their bodies.

Sunny-Souled Christians.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

A TRUE Christian has not only a right to be happy—he is commanded to be so. "Rejoice always," exclaims sunny-hearted old Paul—the hero who had not a roof of his own to cover him, and whose back was scarred by the lash of his persecutors—"and again I say, Rejoice!" The secret of his fortitude and perpetual cheerfulness was that Jesus Christ lived in the very depths of his soul. A perennial well-spring was opened in the Apostolic soul when he was converted: the novelty of the first experience at Damascus passed away; but the deep, clear, living fountain of joy never ran dry.

Too many professed Christians are the creatures of circumstances and conditions. They go up and down with the tide: to-day they are happy; to-morrow they are in the dumps. When business thrives, they are great believers in Providence; when times become hard and income falls off, their faith goes out like a candle under an air-pump. In revival seasons they can sing and pray and perhaps exhort with a glib tongue; when the surrounding atmosphere cools down, they are as lukewarm as ever. The reason is that they live on circumstances, and

DO NOT LIVE ON CHRIST.

Genuine spiritual joy is heaven-born. It is not the effervescence of animal spirits or exuberant health, nor does it depend on external conditions. There is a vast amount of wretchedness behind brown stone fronts, and a vast deal of genuine happiness under lowly roofs among those who wear coarse raiment and eat their frugal meals off pine tables. Some of the most miserable people in Greater New York are grumbling over their porcelain and silver, and lay their uneasy heads and sin-pricked hearts every night on couches of rosewood. During my long pastorate I loved to visit certain members of my flock who lived in such obscure quarters that the tax collector did not discover them. Their worldly assets were not worth assessing. They have very little of this world, but a great deal in the next; they take short views of this life, but long views of the life to come. They have the knack of setting open the windows of their souls for the Sun of Righteousness to stream in.

In the depths of a devout, loyal, and trustful heart, Christ kindles a glow that cannot be extinguished by pains of sickness, or storms of adversity, or even by the tears of bereavement. One of the most sunny Christians I ever knew was racked with the tortures of a rheumatism that had distorted every limb. In the darkest hours Jesus can give triumphant "songs in the night." When Dr. Horace Bushnell was writing a letter of consolation to a brother who had met with a severe bereavement, he said, "Soften your grief by much thanksgiving." Gratitude for what Jesus has done for us sinners, for what He gives us every day, for what He has laid up in store for us in Heaven, and for the solid assurance that we shall meet our loved ones there—such gratitude can pour its rays into our hearts and put a new song into our mouths.

Is it possible for all of us who claim to be Christ's followers to live steadily in the bright sunshine of Christ's love? It must be possible; for the Master never bids us do what we cannot perform, or be what we cannot become. Sinless perfection may not be attainable in this world, or unalloyed happiness. But there is one thing which all of Christ's redeemed people can do, and that is to keep themselves in the atmosphere of his love. "Abide ye in my love." It is our fault and our shame that we spend so many days in the chilling fogs, or under the heavy clouds of unbelief, or in the bleak atmosphere of conformity to the world.

"If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love."

THAT MEANS OBEDIENCE.

"Building up yourselves on your most holy faith, keep yourselves in the love of God." That signifies godly character. "Praying in the Holy Spirit, keep yourselves in his love." That means that the wings of prayer can lift us into the sunshine of Christ's countenance.

Do you want peace, power, fruitfulness, and to be a blessing to others? There is one sure way—and that is to live in the light-giving, warmth-giving sunshine of your Saviour's love.

Sow, and Faint Not.

SOME years ago a Christian lady visited the village in which I live, and scattered some of the precious seed of the kingdom, apparently with no result. She went on her way, and knew not that a seed which she had dropped had entered the heart of a young girl to yield a glorious harvest. As this servant of Christ gave forth her message, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life," light came with the driving home of the word hath, and the new life was received as a present possession.

Our young friend soon became an earnest worker, and after awhile was called of the Master to service in the foreign field. In the midst of her labour in Africa, which was being owned and blessed of Him at whose word she had gone forth, she bethought herself of her spiritual birthplace, and sent over a thank-offering to be used in connection with the work of the Lord there. The money was used in special efforts for the salvation of souls. A fortnight's mission was held in the humble building, of sacred memory; several souls were gathered in, of whom three are now engaged in active service for Christ.

This mission stirred the heart of a lady interested in a neighbouring village, which for many years had seemed very barren in a spiritual sense; there also a mission was held, which was abundantly blessed. A goodly number accepted Christ, and are witnessing for Him. Such manifest blessing led on to the holding of another mission in an adjacent town, where many more were brought to full decision for Christ. This last mission has been held during the present year.

Who can estimate the final ingathering from that one grain of seed-corn? Fellow labourers in the great harvest field, let us sow on in faith and hope! M. J. F.

Epileptics.—The Duke and Duchess of York will on Thursday, June 22, visit Chalfont St. Peter to open four new Homes at the colony established there by the National Society for Employment of Epileptics, of which his Royal Highness is president. These homes comprise two for children, one for men, and one for cases requiring special care and treatment; and they will in the aggregate increase the existing accommodation of the colony by nearly a hundred beds. The cost of building the new homes has been defrayed by special donations given respectively by Mr. Passmore Edwards, Mr. Frederick Greene, and Mrs. Dearmer, but the cost of the necessary furniture and equipment has as yet been only partially provided.

A Dream and Its Message.

"AFTER MANY DAYS."

DURING my dear mother's last illness, she had a remarkable dream, which she told to my sister and myself the next morning. She said:

"I thought I was in a little boat on a wide and swiftly-flowing river, but not at all in a comfortable situation, for being quite near the shore the boat was swaying and lurching with every swell of the tide, and did not seem to be making any progress in any direction. Suddenly a large vessel came in sight. It was nobly proportioned and gaily painted, flags were flying from the masts, and a band was playing most bewitching music.

"As it came nearer I could see the decks crowded with passengers, who were having a splendid time, for their laughter mingled with the other festive sounds that reached my ears. The ship came near enough for me to see quite plainly the faces of the people on board; but I only recognised one, that of David Cameron."

I must explain here that this David Cameron was the foreman in my father's works, a faithful servant of his earthly master, but with a power of resistance to the claims of a heavenly One that had hitherto withstood all influences that had been wooing him to the service of Christ.

My mother, who had often to pause in her narrative through weakness, went on: "David was standing in a very prominent place on the deck, apparently enjoying himself as much as anyone; and as most uncomfortably on the wave caused by the passing of the large vessel, I grew quite impatient at my position, and could not help exclaiming, 'I don't know why I am here; I wish I were in that splendid ship!'

MY BOAT SWAYED AND ROCKED

"I merely uttered the words as a relief to my feelings, for I thought I was alone; but they were instantly answered by a voice—oh, so sweetly musical—'Do not wish that, my child; that ship is without a helmsman and the rapids are near, and all who remain on board must perish. But your boat is in my charge; she is safely anchored, and very near the shore. Be patient, only a few more tossings and you WILL BE LANDED IN THE HAVEN."

My mother told us all this with a sweet content in her face that showed that to her the dream had a joyous interpretation, and we checked our tears for her sake. The end of her lovely life came soon afterwards, and in the evening of the day when, amidst rare marks of universal mourning in the little town where we lived, she was borne to

HER LAST EARTHLY RESTING-PLACE,

I wrote the account of her dream and sent it to David Cameron, who had been one of the bearers at the funeral of his beloved mistress.

It was impossible not to be moved, by a death so calmly triumphant, into a keener desire that others might show the loving faith in Christ that had led to it; and I pleaded with David, whatever the apparent sacrifice in earthly pleasures might be, to embark with Christ, and meet the dear honoured lady, who had always been such a true friend to him, on the heavenly shore.

In my youthful inexperience I expected immediate results from my appeal, very much like the child who sows seed to-day and looks for its up-springing to-morrow. But David made no sign, nor sent any answer to my letter, and when I afterwards met him, disappointed me by an aspect of stolid indifference, which I afterwards found was far from genuine. In a short time a turn in the wheel—not of fortune but of Providence—closed the old home and the old works, and removed us from the town, and as David Cameron and his family also went, but in another direction, it was years before I heard of him again.

Then, on a return visit to Y——, I met with Mrs. Cameron, who was also staying with friends in the place, and who, hearing I was there, came to see me. She had always been a reserved, hard-mannered woman, who had never encouraged any of my attempts to be on friendly terms with our workpeople. But now all was changed. She came to me with hand outstretched and a face beaming with welcome, and I soon heard the secret of the influence that had ploughed up the hard soil of her nature.

She told me that David, who was a man of few words (I did not wonder when I remembered her former ungenial manner!), had said little when he received the account of my mother's dream; but he had told her to read it, and to show it to their only child, a girl of about eighteen, as stiff and reticent as her parents. But from that time she could see many tokens of increased interest in spiritual things. His Bible was more frequently opened, and his attendance at Divine worship became more regular, and, most happily, in the new home to which they went, an earnest, brotherly-souled minister won his confidence, and soon had the joy of leading him to Jesus.

The change thus wrought was so marked, his character blossoming into geniality and kindliness, as the

EARTH BLOSSOMS INTO BEAUTY

under the breath of spring, that, as Mrs. Cameron said, "Both Mary and I thought we must try the same road, and to-day, miss," she went on, "I'm bound to say there is not a happier home anywhere. Both my husband and Mary are Sunday-school teachers, and Mary is engaged to be married to a fine Christian young man who is a teacher too, and they are going to live next door to us, so we shall be like one family still."

"But, Mrs. Cameron, why did not your husband write and tell me all this?" I naturally inquired. "I have had many troubles, and this would have been such a bit of sunshine for me!" "Well, miss, we've often talked of it; but my husband is not much of a man for writing except on business, and Mary and I did not feel as if we could express it all plain enough; so David made up his mind that the first time he had a holiday, and there was a cheap trip, he'd come over and see you, and one way and another it has got put off."

It was "after many days," but the bread cast upon the waters had been "found"—according to the faithful promise—and the sowers and the eaters rejoiced together.

Percy Park, Tynemouth. M.C.F.

"Waiting for Summer."

What will the summer bring?—
We vainly try to pierce the silver mist,
Which hides the nearing landscape from our view;
Will golden days be ours, and sunshine that shall fill
Our hearts with gladsome songs of praise anew?

What will the summer bring?—
The heavy clouds must sometime veil the blue—
The flowers would fade, all nature droop and die
If showers never fell, nor morning dew,
And the sun always shone in a clear sky!

What will the summer bring?—
Ah, that is best which the dear Master wills;
It may be that thou couldst not bear the glare
Of the bright sunshine's fierce unclouded rays—
That so much radiance filling all the air
Might hide the face of Jesus; and the gaze,
From looking unto Him, be earthward bent.

Wouldst thou not rather walk in shady ways,
Where thou canst see his face, and e'en must cling
More closely, as the shadows deeper fall
To his strong hand? Yet shalt thou joyful sing,
Midst cloud and storm his praise, who ordereth all,
And giveth strength sufficient for thy days.

What will the summer bring?—
Leave it in his wise hand. He knoweth best
If rain or shine be good for thee. Just rest:
He doeth all things well, and thou shalt see
Whatever He shall send is right for thee.

E. L. D.

Words to Workers and Others.

A WORTHY EXAMPLE.

I NEVER cared to meddle with things that were controverted, and in dispute among the saints, especially things of the lowest nature; yet it pleased me much to contend with great earnestness for the word of faith, and the remission of sins by the death and sufferings of Jesus. But I say, as to other things, I would let them alone, because I saw they engendered strife, and because that they, neither in doing nor in leaving undone, did commend us to God to be his. Besides, I saw my work before me did run into another channel, even to carry an awakening word. To that, therefore, did I stick and adhere. John Bunyan.

A SPIRITUAL CORDIAL.

In time of trouble, say:—First—He brought me here; it is by his will I am in this strait place; in that will I rest. Next—He will keep me in his love, and give me grace in this trial to behave as his child. Then—He will make the trial a blessing, teaching me the lessons He means me to learn, and working in me the grace He intends for me. Last—In his good time He can bring me out again, how and when He knows. Say—I am here (1) by God's appointment; (2) In God's keeping; (3) Under his training; (4) For his time. Dr. Andrew Murray.

BE NOT DISCOURAGED.

What is approved by God—honours Him—resembles Him, must be made successful, triumphant, and predominant, in his empire. He will not for ever suffer the enemy's camp on his grand field. The awful mystery why this triumphant ascendancy is so slowly achieved—so long delayed in this world—will, it is reasonable to believe, be one of the subjects for illumination in a higher state of existence, where enlarging faculties will have endless duration for their exercise. It may then be seen that the whole course of this world, from the beginning to the end, was "a day of small things," as compared with the sequel—only as a brief introduction to an immense and endless economy. John Foster.

BEWARE OF PERSECUTION.

Men forget that zeal for truth unmixed with love is the very essence of persecution. Just in proportion as men in the support of their opinions indulge in malice, wrath, and all uncharitableness, they cherish the spirit and evince the character of persecutors. They are persecutors in a small way, and would deal in it more largely if the law did not prevent. Whoever, I repeat, seeks to degrade an opponent as well as to confute him—to insult him by scorn as well as to answer him by reason—to make him appear ridiculous as well as erroneous—to wound his feelings by irony and sarcasm as well as to convince his judgment by argument and persuasion—who, in short, is not satisfied with demolishing the system he upholds, but aims to crush him personally to the earth—such a man may be a conqueror, but he must be content at the same time to add to this the character of a persecutor. John Angell James.

DEALING WITH SIN.

It is important that you should effectually open to the person with whom you are conversing "the plague of his own heart." You may find it easy to adduce instances of outward sin; you may conceive it to be the most obvious and effectual manner of bringing home the charge of actual guilt, and you may be more particularly tempted to act on this principle in cases of gross profligacy, where immoralities constitute the grand aspect of character; but in all cases, if you do not entirely avoid this method, you should lay on it very little stress. Make no use of the sins of drunkenness, lying, profanity, Sabbath-breaking, or any other outward sin, but as an occasion of tracing up these acknowledged wrongs to the source of evil within the breast. If you do not exhibit and establish the fact that the heart is evil, that the indulged passions and cherished purposes of the soul are wrong, you do nothing towards the production of any valuable effect. A man who does not know and acknowledge this, neither acknowledges nor knows his great criminality, and can never take his right stand before God. You should therefore be very particular in this respect, and press with earnestness and perseverance the instructions and illustrations by which this often strange, and always unwelcome, truth may be fully manifested to the understanding and riveted on the conscience.

John Howard Hinton.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 28. Judges vi.

A CHOICE devotional booklet by a beloved brother in the ministry begins with the startling exclamation of a stalwart coloured woman, as she sprang to her feet in the midst of mass meeting of hopeless, down-trodden slaves. "Is God dead?" she cried. Such might have been the exclamation extorted from the Israelites during the terrible oppression of Midian. They had to learn that their sins had come between them and Him, as a black cloud may blot out the sun, and that a cry was sufficient to bring about his manifested help.

First, we are told that the angel of the Lord came (11); then, that the angel of the Lord appeared (12); then, the phrase becomes clearer and more emphatic—the Lord looked on him (14); and the Lord said (16); finally, Gideon feared that he would be overtaken by the death that the mortal incurs when God is manifested (22). What could prove more conclusively that this was one of those appearances of Christ which preceded and anticipated his incarnation and eternal presence with his Church? As He was to Gideon, He will be to us, and more also. He will cast on us the empowering look, and send us to save, and pledge Himself to be with us. He will do wondrously with our poor gifts laid before Him in love and reverence. "Peace be unto thee" is familiar enough to his lips; and his sweetest name is Jehovah-Shalom, for He is our peace.

O soul of man, though thou be nothing in thine own eyes, the youngest, weakest, and most unworthy of his children, what may not be thy destiny if thou wilt only let Him clothe Himself with thy nature. We are told that the Spirit of the Lord clothed Himself with Gideon! (chap. vi. 34, R.V. marg.)

MONDAY, May 29. Judges vii.

This chapter might well be termed the Winnowing Chapter, for it tells the story of God's way of reducing the vast host which followed Gideon, to 300 picked and chosen men. The key lies in the second verse: "The people that are with thee are too many for Me." The fearful and the self-indulgent must be winnowed out: they can have no part nor lot in the victory of God. And yet if we may take the reading which is suggested by some who endeavour to account for the presence of Mount Gilead in the narrative, we may conclude that these were directed to march across the Jordan into the district upon the further side that they might be able to harass the discomfited Midianites as they fled eastward to their own country. "Let him return, and fly round from Mount Gilead." Thank God that there is work for us all, if not in the front rank, yet in the second or third.

Would you be in the first rank, amongst the 300, by whom the Lord delivers? Then remember you must not cast yourself prone on the bank, to quaff long draughts of the refreshing water, as though you had no other purpose in life than to gratify the flesh. There must be no relaxing of the girdle, but the erect attitude of him who, because the foe may be near and the trumpet may sound, dares only catch a handful from the brimming water, and always keeps his loins girt.

Learn also the lesson of the cake of barley bread. To the wandering tribesman, barley spoke of the settled agricultural people; but to us it speaks of the commonest and poorest. When God is with such, there is no withstanding them, when one condition is fulfilled, then their cause is so identified with God's that their sword is his and his theirs. The broken pitcher, the flashing light, remind you that the treasure is in earthen vessels that the excellency of the power may be of God.

TUESDAY, May 30. Judges viii.

The moment of victory is never without its dash of bitterness. Here, the men of Ephraim chide with the young conqueror, and the men of Succoth are taught, and the children of Israel yield homage to the ephod, the emblem of "the day of Midian." Dark clouds rolled up on the sky and overcast the landscape. How little we know the bitter ingredients that mingle in the cup of earthly success! and how often the man at whose feet a nation is bowing has no time to be proud because of the anxieties and cares which success brings!

The kings of Midian have passed, but the proverb which they quoted, as the youth hesitated to kill them, will always remain pregnant with truth. "As the man is, so is his strength." Our strength for God does not depend on what we know, but on what we are. Let each ask, What am I? What are the contents of my nature? What are the constituents of my inner life? For, what a man is, so is his strength.

From this old story also comes one of those deep true words which open the heart of things. The men of Israel said unto Gideon: "Rule thou over us, for thou hast saved us." The foundation of Gideon's power lay in the salvation which he had wrought. And may we not, with these words upon our lips, approach the Lord Jesus and say unto him, "Rule Thou, for Thou hast delivered, and dost deliver, and wilt still deliver"? Thou art worthy to receive power and might and honour and glory, for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God. He is prince because he is Saviour; He is king, though meek and sitting upon an ass, because He bringeth salvation.

WEDNESDAY, May 31. Judges ix.

I heard the other day a conversation amongst a number of eminent men as to the best way of presenting the Gospel to the masses of the working men; and one of them said that, in his judgment, nothing attracted them more than to speak of our Lord's brotherliness to all who were sorrowful and needy. One is reminded of that remark when one reads that the men of Shechem inclined to follow Abimelech, for they said, "He is our brother." The cry of the French Revolution was for "Liberty, equality, and brotherhood," three words which express yearnings of man's heart which are destined to be unrealised until, one by one, men enter through the new birth into that sonship to God, which means brotherhood to man.

The compact between Abimelech and the men of Shechem, founded in treachery, ended in disaster. No alliance between man and man which is founded on wrong-doing is permanent. Sooner or later, an evil spirit will arise between them. God has so constituted the world that sin inevitably avenges itself. This does not appear in a cursory view of the world, but those who have lived long enough to see the issues of men's actions, will acknowledge that no confederacy in crime can withstand the inevitable hour of retribution. The men of Shechem fall out with Abimelech. Abimelech revenges himself on the men of Shechem, but himself dies by a woman's missile. And 2 Sam. xi. 21 shows how unavailing was his attempt to save his memory from disgrace.

THURSDAY, June 1. Judges x.

Well might this be entitled the Chapter of God's Grief. At first, he said, "I will save you no more. Go, cry unto the gods which ye have chosen; let them save you." And when the children of Israel refused to take this as his final answer, and threw themselves at his feet, abjectly crying, "Do Thou unto us whatsoever seemeth good unto Thee, only deliver us," then his soul was grieved for the misery of Israel. This verse reminds us of the tears of Christ over the approaching desolation of Jerusalem, and of the pain suffered by the Spirit of God, who, the Apostle says, yearns for us even unto jealous envy. (Jas. iv. 5, R.V. marg.)

Is not this a key to God's dealings with ourselves? When we forsake Him, and serve Him not, He surrenders us to the full onset of difficulty, trial, and suffering. He, so to speak, sells us into the hand of the Philistines, who vex and oppress us, so that we are sore distressed. But He never ceases to love us, and his soul is full of pity for our suffering beneath the weight of penalty which our sins have incurred. And He waits beside us until the favourable moment comes when we are prepared to be delivered on his own terms. "Only deliver us."

Have you lately been doing that which is evil in his sight? Have you forsaken Him and served your own desires, notions, and plans, living at the dictation of self in one of its many forms? Do not be surprised if this breaks down the holy cordon of protection, and lays your soul open to all sorts of attack. Put these things away, I pray you. Let the grief of God excite your grief. Let his broken heart break your heart. Let his pity excite your pitifulness. Look upon Him whom you have pierced, and mourn.

FRIDAY, June 2. Judges xi.

Jephthah, living on the other side of Jordan, had probably had few facilities of becoming acquainted with God's law. He was just a strong, rough outlaw, who held his own position by the strength of his right hand. But he was a man of faith. We hear the great human heart throbbing under his coat of mail. Quick to resent his expatriation, and to contrast it with the entreaty for his help in the hour of national calamity, he yet believed that the success of battle lay with Jehovah, who alone could deliver the children of Ammon before him. It is interesting to hear that he spake all his words before Jehovah at Mizpah; to follow his recital of Israelite story; to notice his perpetual reference to Jehovah, the God of Israel (21, 23, 24); and to hear him speak of Jehovah as the Judge. He reminds us, indeed, of Cromwell's Ironsides, who combined doughty deeds with a strong religious faith. His was a brief, concise, strong soldier's creed.

And then, also, how touching that vow! He no doubt expected that some slave, valuable perhaps, would be the first to greet him, never thinking that his only child would break through the proprieties in the exuberance of her welcome. And how magnificent his determination, since he had opened his mouth unto the Lord, not to go back. Alas! too often we have opened our mouths, and gone back! But his determination to abide by his vow is even surpassed by the noble resignation of his child. It is hard at first for the young life to face the shadow of death, but for Israel's and her father's sake she folds her meek hands over her breast and resigns herself to knife and fire. O Christian parent, have you dared to give your child to God? O Christian child, have you flinched?

SATURDAY, June 3. Judges xii.

The Chapter of Shibboleth!—a word which has passed into the speech of the world, especially in matters of religious controversy. We are all anxious that men should pronounce every letter of our religious faith, and if they refuse we are inclined to slay them at the ford. Remember that the forty and two thousand of this verse is not forty-two thousand, but forty added to two thousand, which is a Hebrew way of expressing such numbers. This should be borne in mind throughout the Old Testament. Add together the numbers as they are given, to obtain the sum total.

The Master told us that we were not to imitate the men of Gilead in this. He said distinctly, "Let both grow together until the harvest, lest in gathering up the tares ye gather up the wheat also." Where there are notorious offenders in the Christian community, 1. Cor. v. tells us we must put them away. It is necessary on account of the Church's testimony, which otherwise would be invalidated, and also for the salvation of those exposed to discipline. But this is altogether different to the attitude of those who are always subjecting others to creed tests, and refusing fellowship with such as are unable to agree with their way of stating truth, to the dotting of the i, and the crossing of the t.

What a comfort it is that our entrance into heaven does not depend upon our being able to answer every question in the Catechism, or being able to pass an examination in the doctrines of the evangelical faith! These things are not unimportant; but our salvation depends on whether, amid much ignorance and misconception on many points, we are still trusting in Jesus Christ, to believe in whom is to be saved.

Other Lands.

Letters from America.

BOSTON—HARTFORD.

AFTER leaving Detroit we spent two or three enjoyable days in Boston, so full of memories and relics of the Pilgrim Fathers, who landed at Plymouth Rock, a few miles away, when they went out from their native land, not knowing whither they went.

Here, as everywhere else in the States, one is struck with the imposing character of the public offices, in the construction and furnishing of which no expense has been spared and no convenience left unsupplied. Native granite buildings, with pillared halls of Italian marble, rooms luxuriously furnished and replete with every modern and useful appliance, from whose walls pictures of the illustrious nation-builders of the past look down upon the millionaires and prospective millionaires of the present—nothing too great or too good for the Royal People. Yet the inequalities of condition are as wide and as manifest in this new home of liberty and fraternity as in the hoary European lands from whence their populations have been derived.

Through the courtesy of the Speaker, the Hon. Mr. Bates, we were introduced to the floor of the House of Representatives and the House of Senators, which were both in session, and it interested us not a little to listen to their discussions.

THE LOG OF THE MAYFLOWER.

The Bradford Journal, or "Log of the Mayflower" (a manuscript history of the experiences, sufferings, and exploits of the Pilgrim Fathers), has a prominent position on the table of the State House library. It was surreptitiously brought to England, and some years ago found in the Library of Fulham Palace. A little over two years ago, by order of the Consistorial Court of London, it was sent back to New England. It was pointed out to us with peculiar satisfaction.

MR. T. R. ROBERTS.

Twenty-five years ago I met, at the Boston "Moody and Sankey" meetings, a young man, a race-horse rider, who had recently been converted at the Y.M.C.A. Forsaking the turf, he devoted himself to the cultivation of his mind and to seeking the good of others, especially the poor and destitute. By steadiness, diligence, perseverance, and character, he attained one position after another until now he has become a trusted and influential man in all things connected with the deserving and undeserving poor in Boston. Many of the latter he has been instrumental in lifting out of the mire into respectable life, some of them into the Kingdom of God. Mr. Roberts is the superintendent of the Boston Industrial Home, in connection with which for years he was a fellow labourer with the late Dr. A. J. Gordon, and where he carries on an excellent work for the amelioration of the masses. He is a native of Penzance, Cornwall, which place he visited two years ago, and returned with his second wife.

It was a pleasure to see once more my old and valued friend

MR. H. L. HASTINGS,

editor and proprietor of one of the best papers in America, which bears the same title as our own. Mr Hastings has signalised himself for fifty years by his pungent and illuminating anti-infidel writings and lectures, of which he has distributed many millions in number and many tons in weight. His bow still abides in strength. When his work is done he will be remembered, like the apostle, "as poor, yet making many rich."

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

We were glad of the opportunity of spending a Sabbath with our old friends Rev. and Mrs. E. Payson Hammond, at Hartford, Conn., which we reached on Saturday night and left on Monday morning. At 9 a.m. on Sunday our host took us to the County Gaol, where he has often preached to the assembled prisoners, and ministered to them individually in their cells. At the invitation of the chaplain, Rev. E. B. Dillingham, whom I have met more than once at Mr. Moody's Northfield Convention, and who is an earnest, sympathetic, and indefatigable worker, Mr. Wintle and I addressed the prisoners, of whom several requested to be personally visited. Among them was a cotton-weaver from Lancashire, who came to the States some months ago, leaving his wife and children at home. He was a man of good character and sober habits, and had saved about 150dols. towards the passage of his family. In the previous week, a friend from England called upon him, and he, wishing to show himself friendly, took the course, so common and so detrimental to working men, of giving him drink in a saloon. The result, as he tearfully confessed, was "a little spree," continued on the following day, when he was arrested for being drunk and disorderly. He was fined five dollars for this, ten for resisting the police when taken, and seven for costs. Though he had 150 dollars at home, he was not allowed to fetch it, nor would the authorities send to tell his friends, although he offered to pay the messenger, but sent him to gaol for sixty days. Mr. Wintle went with Mr. Hammond to his lodgings to verify his statement, which they found to be true, with the result that it was arranged that the fine should be paid in time for the man to be liberated the following morning, and thus retain his situation.

A LORD'S DAY AT HARTFORD.

We heard a timely discourse from Dr. Stone, Baptist minister, on "Jesus looked on Peter," of which one chief point was, that though our words may belie us, our faces generally tell the truth.

Our evening was fully occupied with a Christian Endeavour Missionary Meeting in Dr. Stone's lecture-hall, a talk to a congregation of Danish believers in a room of the Y.M.C.A.; a look into a coloured meeting round the table of the Lord, the soft and reverent singing and prayer of which left an indelible impression upon me. Then we visited the Open Hearth Mission, where Rev. B. N. B. Miller, an evangelist gifted with the love of souls, and knowledge and tact in dealing with them, ably seconded by his wife, is carrying on a splendid though unobtrusive Gospel work in one of the out-of-the-way places, where much of the most effective work is wrought. The congregation consisted chiefly of men of the working and out-of-work class, of whom, after addresses by the pastor and Mr. Wintle, seventeen came forward professing faith in Christ.

On leaving Hartford the following morning, our friend Mr. Hammond, speaking to some friends in the railway carriage, did not perceive that the train had begun to move. I called to him and he ran for the door. The speed had become dangerous before he sprang from the step; another second would have been too late. I daresay his escape may afford an illustration in a future Gospel address.

A new generation has sprung up since Brother Hammond last visited our shores, and I believe that in the revival which has already begun he would find again in England and Wales, in Scotland and Ireland, a warm welcome from the parents who owe their conversion to him in their childhood, and a fruitful field among their children. R. Cope Morgan.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.—The many friends of this Mission will rejoice to learn that the new mission house enterprise, to be called the Gordon Calthrop Memorial, has received substantial help through a donation of £1,000 recently received from a lady supporter of the Mission. This brings the amount in hand on behalf of the scheme to a total of £2,600. The committee of the Mission, of which Prebendary Webb-Peploe is chairman, hope soon to secure a desirable freehold site upon which to build. At present the Mission is conducted in hired premises, 262, Commercial Road, E.

The Gospel in North Italy.

THERE is encouraging movement in North Italy, deeply interesting particulars of work being reported from Guastalla in the province of Reggio, Emilia. As usual, the Gospel has been stigmatised as heresy by the Papal authorities; but in the presence of large congregations the Waldensian and Free Church pastors have set forth the truth and exposed Romish error. At a small place named Codisotto, not far from Guastalla, regular meetings have been started, with a night school and many adjuncts of Christian service.

Nor has persecution been wanting at Codisotto. On November 27 M. Zini, an evangelist, was severely wounded as he was posting up the notice of a conference. The priest organised a procession in honour of St. Anthony, the patron saint of the district, in January, and the presence of the Bishop of Guastalla and a band from Luzzara gave zest to the rejoicings, which, besides the procession, included a fair and a public ball! On the same day Pastor Borgia gave an address, which attracted such a crowd that 300 people were unable to find room in the building. In spite of the holiday, some devout Roman Catholics were amongst the attendants. The following day the audience numbered 1,000, also a large number on a succeeding day, and, strange to say, many women. Finally, on the Sunday the crowd was large beyond precedent, and when the lecturer apologised for speaking for an hour and a half, "No, no," they cried; "continue till midnight. We shall never be weary of listening to you."

Meantime, the work in Milan makes steady progress. The soldiers often attend the Sunday sermon, and the want of a temple in the vicinity of the barracks has been felt for several years. The site chosen is in the Via Boccaccio, and subscriptions for the construction of the building already amount to 10,000 francs, but the estimated cost is 50,000 francs.

Christian Alliance Mission.

THE tenth annual spring convention has lately been held in New York. Grateful acknowledgments to God were recorded for his goodness shown in so many ways; in preserving the lives of workers at home and abroad; in pouring out his Holy Spirit so abundantly at meetings and conventions; in extending and strengthening the work in all the fields; in the generous contributions of friends; in the opening of doors in foreign lands; and especially in the power of the Holy Spirit, resulting in additions to "the little flock" throughout the world.

As regards South America, the work is distributed through most of its Republics. There are three missionaries in Venezuela, and the work has been encouraging. In Ecuador there are also three, two in the far interior and one near the coast. A bloody revolution, inaugurated by the priests, has just closed unfavourably to them, and again there is a season of religious toleration.

In Chili there are four missionaries at two stations. There have been many conversions, and cheering evidences of the Lord's gracious working. From Bolivia Mr. Mebius writes of a long journey, during which the seed had been sown. In Brazil there have been three labourers, two in Mattagrosso, and Mr. Cook, who spent the year among the Indians on the banks of the Araguay river.

The Argentine Republic is the head-quarters of the mission, and in it is the home of Mr. Emilio Olssen, who has returned to New York just in time for the Convention, after having made another most remarkable journey of several thousands of miles through the heart of the Continent.

Special acknowledgements were given to friends in England, under the direction of Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, Mr. Henry Ridings, and others, who are working most successfully for the support of the mission stations in South America, and through whom the large sum of 2,300dols. was contributed during the past year. Mr. Ridings' address is 31, Carson Road, West Dulwich, S.E.

South Africa General Mission.

By A CAPE COLONIST.

"GOD only knows where we should have been, had it not been for the Mission," said a lady in South Africa to the writer. The expression conveys the feelings of a great number who have received blessing through this agency; while at the same time it illustrates the need which existed for such a work.

The Cape General Mission, as it was at first called, was founded in 1889; being more or less the outcome of work previously carried on by Mrs. Osborne-Howe, and of a mission conducted by Mr. Spencer Walton in Cape Town in 1888. The first party of six landed in 1889, and started work in an obscure street in Cape Town. The plan of campaign has from the first been to stir up the European centres, and then to go on to the heathen. From the excellent results achieved, this has proved to be the wisest course that could have been adopted. The work developed with rapid strides. A fine hall was soon built in a better part of the town; and the meetings were attended with great blessing. Opposition was soon stirred up, and the reproach attaching to those who sympathised with the work was a real thing. As time went on work was started in various native centres. Here, however, the development was not so rapid, owing to the amount of darkness and superstition to be overcome.

It would seem that the Lord foresaw the need of South Africa, and sent his servants out there just as

THE GOLD RUSH WAS COMMENCING.

When Johannesburg sprang into existence a branch was opened in that town, but only indifferent success was at first met with.

Then came an epoch in the history of the Mission. There were some twenty or thirty missionaries at work in Cape Town, and it was felt that an altogether deeper tone was needed in the work. It was therefore decided to have a time of waiting upon God. A farmhouse at the base of Table Mountain was secured, and here for three days the whole staff sought the Lord. Many of the workers entered into closer union with Christ, and in a few weeks' time more than half of the party had responded to the call of God to go further afield.

It was some time after this that a fresh party settled in Johannesburg. They had no resources, humanly speaking, and on their arrival they had to take up a rental of £600 a year! Being "strong in faith," they were not allowed to want, and in eleven weeks from the day on which they left Cape Town they had a hall built to seat three hundred people, every penny of the expenses was paid, and the whole affair in thorough working order. The blessing which followed this move was immense. It was soon found that the hall was too small, and it was therefore enlarged to double its original size. Large congregations, composed almost entirely of men, constantly attended, and many have been saved and sanctified.

After some years of work it was decided to amalgamate with the South-East African Mission, and thus was formed the South Africa General Mission. This step, of course, widened the sphere of work from the Cape to the whole of South Africa, more especially taking in Natal and Zululand.

One portion of the European work which has been specially blessed is

THE VILLAGE WORK.

Many of the small towns and villages are in the most deplorable condition spiritually. To meet this need a regular system of missions has been organised. The plan adopted has been to settle two workers in a certain village for a month or two; then, after the place has been thoroughly visited and interest awakened, a missioner is sent to it for a ten days' mission. By this means hundreds have been brought to Christ and whole neighbourhoods awakened.

Another very marked success has been the Conventions. These were inaguarated soon after the Mission was founded, and now there are several held in various parts of the country. English readers, familiar as they have been for the past quarter of a century with this kind of thing, will readily understand how much the Church of Christ in South Africa owes to this move. Hundreds from all parts of the country have entered into deep spiritual blessing, and are to-day consistently witnessing for Christ in their respective spheres.

As stated above, the European work is generally regarded as of a more or less temporary character, the ultimate aim being to reach the heathen. Acting, therefore, upon this principle, it was felt some eighteen months ago that sufficient had been done in Cape Town to justify the removal of the headquarters to Johannesburg. All the work, except the Soldiers' Homes and Sailors' Rest, was accordingly handed over, as far as possible, to local agencies, and the workers took their departure for the Transvaal.

OF THE NATIVE WORK

much might be said, though at present it is only in the embryo stage. Swazieland was first occupied in the year 1891, and naturally the work there is more advanced than in other parts. Several stations have been formed, and already a number of converts have been baptised. In Pondoland, Zululand, Bomvanaland, and Tembuland the work is also progressing; though in the former it is specially difficult owing to the witch-doctoring, &c. In Durban there have been a large number of baptisms, natives flocking there from all parts; and at Johannesburg work is also carried on among the thousands of natives who work in the mines. The last station opened is in Gazaland, some way up on the east coast. The first workers to accompany Mr. Dudley Kidd to this terribly needy centre were two who had joined the mission as a result of the European work in Johannesburg. Here there are now three men at work, and it is confidently hoped that they will soon see fruit for their labour.

No account of the work of this Society would be complete without some mention of its honoured President, Rev. Dr. Andrew Murray. To his prayers, to his wise counsel, and to his saintly life, the Mission no doubt owes much of its success. As may easily be supposed, many grave difficulties have had to be faced in the work at various times, and on such occasions the benefit derived from his mature Christian experience is very great. May God long spare him to the Mission, to South Africa, and to the Church at large.

In conclusion, it is not too much to say, after closely observing the work for several years, that for depth of spirituality as well as for abundant fruitfulness, it can scarcely be equalled much less surpassed by the work of any agency which the writer has seen in England. If it be asked:

"WHAT IS THE SECRET of this success?" the reply is given unhesitatingly that it lies in the fact that the workers have both preached and lived a very high standard of holiness.

The weekly "Consecration Meetings," and the periodical "Half-Nights of Prayer," have all tended to deepen the spiritual experience of the members; while the teaching that every individual believer may receive a Pentecostal filling of the Holy Ghost has had the effect of making them depend absolutely upon Him, and thus secure for them the blessed results of which we have spoken.

Many and many there are in South Africa to-day who praise God for ever raising up this organisation, and eternity alone will reveal the full extent of the work accomplished by the South Africa General Mission. Any further information can be obtained from the Secretary, Arthur Mercer, 14A, Lingfield Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

Madagascar.—The Foreign Office has officially informed the Society of Friends, whose mission hospital at Antananarivo, Madagascar, was seized in 1896, under military requisition, that the French Government has agreed to make suitable reparation. It proposes to pay £1,200 for the drugs, furniture, &c., which were in the hospital at the time of the requisition, and also to pay £6,000, in three instalments, for the building, together with interest thereon at the rate of 3 per cent. as from 1896.

Notes from Peru.

AN interesting account has been sent by Mr. A. R. Stark, of the work in which he is engaged on the coast of Peru. It will be remembered that the work which Mr. Stark and his fellow missionaries inaugurated in 1894, is now carried on under the direction of the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union. Mr. Stark writes:—

"The year that has closed finds Lima, Callao, Trujillo and Cuzco occupied by evangelical missionaries. Referring to our labours in the first three of these places, the circulation of Scriptures probably claims the premier place. Amid discouragement and persecution the precious seed of the Kingdom has been scattered far and wide. The number of those who have professed conversion is not large, but God is working, we believe, and the brighter day for which we have been praying and toiling may soon break upon us. There are hundreds of inquiring minds awakening from papal gloom and superstition, and seeking after the Word of Life and Truth.

"On our arrival in Peru in 1894, Bibles were lying in the Custom House, Callao, as contraband, through the influence of priestcraft. In 1895, besides the circulation in and around Lima, Scriptures were circulated in Matucana, Oroya, Tarma and Palca; and for the first time Protestant missionaries stood on the eastern slopes of the Andes of Peru, and on the banks of streams that pour their waters far into the Atlantic. In 1896 the most important journey was along the coast as far south as Pisco and forty miles inland to Ica, when the Scriptures found their way into new homes, and many for of salvation through Christ. It was a desert route, with small towns and villages nestling in the scattered valleys watered by the snows of the Andes.

THE FIRST TIME HEARD THE GOOD NEWS

"It is a dreary region, food was bad, and the tambos, or wayside inns, provided little comfort for the weary traveller. H. Backhouse, who was accompanying me, fell ill through bad food and the lack of necessary rest, and had to return from Ceno Azul to Lima by steamer. Persecution and opposition, also, were not wanting. At Mala, where we spent four days, the priest denounced us from the pulpit as deceivers, and our Bibles as false. Failing to secure our expulsion from the town, the friars collected and burned many of the Scriptures that had been sold, most of which, however, were subsequently replaced. In the next village

A LODGING WAS DENIED US.

The cura of Pueblo Viejo tried to have us arrested, and in Pisco and Ica the fanatical friars opened a campaign against us. In one of the tambos the landlord and family joined with us in family prayers morning by morning. During 1897 Scriptures were scattered along the coast, in the Sierra and onward into the Montana, with encouraging results; 1898 finds a larger circulation over a more extended area.

"In a country where preaching is under ban of law, where entrance into a Protestant place of worship is a mortal sin, and where our religious beliefs are grossly misrepresented by a corrupt priesthood, Bible and evangelistic itinerating become of great importance. Here, as in other places, there is ample scope for a forward movement in evangelistic work."

Communications in respect of the mission in Peru should be addressed to Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, at Harley House, Bow, E.

Canary Islands.—It is proposed to open a House of Rest on Grand Canary Island for missionaries and others who go to Africa. The climate of this island is most invigorating and tonic, and is well placed for shipping and all supplies. A house there, for the entertainment of weary workers, would save many lives.

"The Spirit-filled Life."—A praiseworthy effort to tempt the popular appetite for literary "pennyworths" with helpful reading, is made by the issue of "The Spirit-filled Life," by the late Rev. John MacNeil, the Australian evangelist. There is much in the book that makes for true consecration, while the earnest prefatory note by Rev. Andrew Murray forms an excellent introduction. (1d. Marshall Bros.)

Famine in South Russia.

In a recent letter to Rev. Samuel Wilkinson (Mildmay Mission to the Jews), Pastor Gurland, of Odessa, writes of the famine in South Russia: "Several governments, especially the Volga and German colonies, are sorely visited. In consequence of insufficient nourishment, scurvy and typhus have now attacked the population. In spite of the Russian Government having already spent more than ninety million roubles for the starving provinces, the distress is by no means relieved. There are repeated appeals for help from the suffering brethren which reach us and claim public benevolence.

"Thank God, Christian charity is mighty, and not only the rich and well-to-do, but also the poor are giving willingly to meet the distress, and thousands of roubles daily are sent out to Odessa for the starving. We here are fellow-sufferers by the distress through the rise in price of all kinds of food. Our poor converts now feel the pressure the most. Who will think of the poor Jews at such a time?"

Princess Alexandra Lieven writes:—"During the whole spring and summer we have scarcely had a drop of rain. The consequence of this is a terrible famine. The peasants of the afflicted provinces, especially the Tartars and the half-savage Finnish tribes, are simply starving. You cannot imagine what they eat; anything is looked upon as good enough to fill the stomach. Typhoid fever and scurvy are the natural results of bad and insufficient food.

"I am doing my best to help the poor people in the Government of Kazan, near Tchistopol, but my private means are not sufficient, and I am obliged to CRY FOR HELP.

It is not a pleasant business, and a very new one for me, because, not being very deep in charity, I never asked anybody to help me in my enterprises. But now I have no right to be silent; the misery is too great, and I feel too much my responsibility. So, putting aside my pride, I stretch out my hand and beg: 'Help me to save some more lives out of the perishing thousands; try to collect something from your friends and acquaintances.'

"We use what we get with the greatest discretion: one child costs us the ridiculously small sum of one rouble, fifty koppecks, or even less, a month. My younger sister, Miss Wassiltchikoff, in the Government of Samara, Bougouroustan District, and myself in Tchistopol, with the help of charitable persons, keep from absolute starvation several thousands of people; but it is not sufficient, we must do more, and we cannot do it without help. Another of my sisters is now in the Samara Government with a sanitary expedition, in the midst of scenes of misery and suffering difficult to describe."

Rev. A. Francis, of the British-American Church, St. Petersburg, writes to us:—"Over an immense area there is dire need, horrible sickness, and a high death-rate. The affected provinces have over 11,000,000 of people, of whom about half have to be fed up to the next harvest; and a large proportion of those who are starving have to be nursed and supplied with medicines.

"H.I.M. the Emperor has contributed 3,000,000 roubles, and the Empress also has subscribed liberally for the relief of the peasants. The Red Cross Society is devoting all its energies to the same end, and private charity is abundant. Princess Lieven, for example, has given Rs. 3,000 (£300) for the one district about which she writes. Yet, as the Princess and all others who are informed upon the subject unanimously declare, all that is being done is whence the request to me to appeal for co-operation to all whom my voice may reach.

MUCH TOO LITTLE,

"Before this reaches you I shall have started for the famine districts, going in the first place to the Government of Kazan, about which Princess Lieven writes. I intend making arrangements for the distribution of the money which I feel sure will be sent from Britain. During the last famine, when, by the way, England and America were distinguished beyond all other nations by the generosity of their contributions, I had the privilege of co-operating in distributing relief with the late Sir Robert Morier, British Ambassador, and also with two American Ministers Plenipotentiary here, viz., Mr. C. Emory Smith, now Postmaster-General, U.S.A., and Mr. Andrew D. White, now Ambassador at Berlin; and, as I am personally unknown to many of your readers, I beg to refer them to the last-named gentleman should they wish for any information regarding myself.

"Subscriptions will be received and acknowledged by Mr. J. T. Woolrych Perowne, 3, Bryanston Place, London, W.; Mr. W. Porteous, solicitor, 11, York Buildings, Edinburgh; and forwarded to Mr. J. L. Nobbs, assistant manager of the Private Commercial Bank, St. Petersburg, and treasurer of the British-American Church Famine Fund, 1899. One of my members here has started the fund with a subscription of Rs.1,000 (£100), and other subscriptions of large amounts have been made."

Since writing the above, Mr. Francis has started for the seat of want, and we hope to receive from him further particulars of the efforts to relieve distress.

The Gospel in France.

THERE is an intense interest in following the evangelistic career through Europe of the Irish saints in early times. At the close of the sixth century Columbanus was seized with a strong desire to bring the Gospel to France. Quitting Lough Erne with twelve Irish companions, he landed on its shores, the country at that time being sunk in immorality. Their character and ministry soon became known and appreciated, and "crowds flocked to the Irish teachers to learn the secret of a pure and happy life" (Stokes' Celtic Church).

Not a few of the French people of to-day are learning this "secret of a pure and happy life" from their own fellow-countrymen, evangelists, colporteurs, and pastors; but, it is lamentable to add, there is a general conspiracy of hate on the part of the abettors of the politico-religious system prevailing towards Bibles, tracts, and the preaching of the pure and simple Gospel; and this, be it understood, in gross violation of the principles of its Republican Government.

It is a remarkable fact that in many villages and towns in Central Western Departments, there is a waking up to the consciousness of the little there is in the Roman Catholic system as it displays itself amongst the people in its present workings, to meet the cravings of their never-dying souls; and they hail the arrival of evangelists in their midst.

THE FOLLOWING NARRATIVE

illustrates the interest of the people, the Christian spirit of the evangelists, and the un-Christian spirit of some (happily we can add not all) of the Curés.

Two evangelists obtained from the municipality of St. A. the large hall of the Mairie, and the Curé hearing of it announced his intention of putting in an appearance to "Ecraser les Protestants." This was permitted him; thus there were to be three speakers. The population of St. A. and its environs flocked to the Mairie half an hour before the time, waiting for the opening of the doors.

"I own," says Mr. G., "I trembled at the responsibility which was about to rest on us, and Mr. F. and myself recommended ourselves to God, and then mounted to the assault. We began by explaining what true religion was, who we were, and why we preach the Gospel. Then we gave the word to Mons. le Curé, and he spoke as follows":—

"'The Methodists that you come to hear, gentlemen and ladies, tell you they are Frenchmen. Well, there is one cry they have omitted to put forth; it is that which I invite you to utter with me—Vive l'Armée. Ah! the army; this army that we love; this army for which we make so many sacrifices; this army which protects the modest labourer, which favours commerce. They betray it, your Methodists, they sold it to the Germans in 1870. Do you want a proof? Here is a carte de visite of one who dares to call himself agent of the Société Biblique Britannique et Etrangère. You understand, my dear friends, 'Britannique'—that is to say, English; 'Etrangère'—that is to say, German. What would you say if I told you that this said Society disposed of a budget of fifty millions?'

"He continued for half an hour in this style, mixing the most perfidious insinuations with the basest calumnies, speaking absolutely nothing but politics, and of subjects fitted to awaken the anger of his hearers. However, they cried out, 'Mons. le Curé, speak to us of religion at this time.' Again and again the tumult drowned his voice, whilst when we began our reply, they warmly cheered us. At the end of the Curé's discourse, he was visibly embarrassed. He sought for words, coughed and blew his nose. Then he began to read an interminable article in a newspaper—this to gain time, and, at length, to escape.

"But being decided not to leave the auditory under an impression so little edifying, I mounted the tribune after him, and said, 'Gentlemen, we have come amongst you to speak only of religion, and God is my witness we never intended to make the least remark about political matters. Mons. le Curé has not observed this reserve, and now I am obliged to defend myself against these imputations and to follow him on the ground he has taken; on him lies the responsibility. We cry, as strongly as he, "Vive l'Armée," for we love the army, and we have proved it in satisfying the military law of our country. The one of us, the colporteur, whom Mons. le Curé has so cowardly attacked, has served for sixteen years as adjutant, and retired from service with the best testimonies of his chiefs. As to Mons the Curé, who cries out so loud "Vive l'Armée,' I am sure he has never carried a gun. He brings

AFFIRMATIONS WITHOUT ONE PROOF.

Let him show one case where Protestants have betrayed their country.' I was about to proceed, when, boiling with rage, he rushed towards me and cried out, 'You are a friend of Dreyfus.' These words unloosed a storm. We exhorted our auditors to be quiet, but in vain. The noise went on increasing, and le Curé, rubbing his hands, exclaimed, 'My friends, let us conclude, we have been long enough here.'

"This day has been a good day for us on account of all the sympathy we have gained. We were very warmly applauded; he had a few cheers, but a great number of groans.

"We only employed courteous and Christian words, avoiding everything wounding. We were accosted with such words as 'salutists,' 'traitres,' and 'vendus.' But intelligent people like the French are quite able to draw their own conclusions; words go with them a very little way; the clergy fail to see that they are doing themselves a deal of harm; but it is this kind of weapons against Gospel preaching that are used ad nauseam over the country."

G. P.

Father Chiniquy's Work.

In the name of the executor of the late Father Chiniquy and of the Board of French Evangelisation of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, we hereby inform the public, and especially the friends of Father Chiniquy, that all the missions carried on by him during his lifetime have been transferred to said Board, and will be continued under its management.

It is deemed most important that there should be continued and strenuous effort in furthering the aims of this great man's life; and therefore it is earnestly requested that all contributions and bequests be forwarded to the treasurer of the Board, Rev. Dr. Robt. H Warden, Confederation Life Building, Toronto.

J. L. Morin, Executor.
D. H. MacVicar, Chairman, Board of French Evangelisation.
S. J. Taylor, Secretary Board of French Evangelisation.
Y.M.C.A. Building, Montreal.

"The Woman of Ross."

THE LATE MRS. MARFELL.

"WORK while it is called to-day, for the night cometh." "And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, for ye serve the Lord Christ." These words might well have been the motto and inspiration of the late Mrs. MARFELL (often called by those who loved, her "The Woman of Ross"), whose beautiful life and work on earth ended in May, 1898.

She was brought to God when fourteen years old by a sermon from the text, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." A severe illness followed. Symptoms of heart disease, such as had carried off other members of the family, showed themselves, and she was sentenced by the physician to a life of semi-invalidism.

It was a heavy trial to the bright, winsome girl, who had been the sunbeam of the household, and the leader in all innocent fun and adventure. But while she had to give up her pony and "study to be quiet," within doors and without, she made up her mind that work for her newly-found Saviour could and should be done. As health improved, the young girl resolved to rise always at five o'clock to secure time for Bible and prayer and Christian service. "I will live much if I cannot live long," she said.

God permitted her to do both, and for seventy years she unwaveringly kept her resolve, except when illness compelled her to break it. One hour was always given first to God, and then, with needle or pen, she worked diligently till breakfast time. Probably millions of stitches were set, and miles of flannel and print cut up and fashioned for missions or charitable uses, during her long life of early morning toil. Every inch of material, every hour of time, every shilling of money were then and always held simply and literally in trust for God, to be put out in honest usury for the spread of his kingdom and the help and comfort of the needy.

Her father was Mayor of Gloucester on more than one occasion, and her brother, Rev. Edward Dowling, rector of the Crypt Church in that city until his death.

Seventy years ago, parish work for young ladies was almost unheard of, and the word "slumming" had not been invented; but in the narrow streets that still kept the memory of Robert Raikes and his first Sunday school, there was a world of work to be done. As she grew older, systematic visiting of the poor was allowed, and, giving herself unstintedly to the service of the lowly, she started evening classes for factory girls, and Dorcas meetings for mothers in the poorest parts of the city.

Great was the lamentation when her marriage to Mr. George Marfell took place, and she went away to live in Herefordshire. In the little country village that was now her sphere of labour, there were no noisy streets or crowded alleys, but much spiritual darkness and moral heathenism in the scattered cottages of the poor. Every house was visited, meetings for prayer and Bible study being begun in her home. Children were gathered into Sunday-school, the musical powers of the villagers utilised in a choir for the village church, taught and trained by herself, and every man and woman she could reach was spoken to on the need of personal salvation.

For soul-winning was the great work of her life, to which everything else was subordinate. As she realised the uncertainty of her own health, and knew that at any moment sudden death might come, she seemed to hear always a voice saying, "That thou doest, do quickly," and to her "now" was the accepted and the only time.

Yet this exceeding eagerness to make the most of time, in the near view of eternity, never lent any sense of stress or strain to her intercourse with others. Always bright and hopeful, quick to see the merry side of things, and, with unquenchable faith in the ultimate victory of good over evil, her radiant smile was always ready, and with speech, witty as well as wise, she put heart and cheer into many a flagging cause.

When her husband's health failed, the country home was given up, and a house bought near Ross. After his death she commenced a Saturday working party in her drawing-room, for girls of all ranks and ages, to work for the Church Missionary Society. All expenses of materials came out of her own pocket, and for thirty years the meeting was vigorously sustained. There were no class distinctions in that gathering; rich and poor sat side by side and partook of home-made sweets together; and work, plain and fancy, useful and ornamental, grew into a store that astonished onlookers at the yearly exhibition and sale.

Her views of life were broad and cultured, and she was quite abreast of the times in knowledge of passing events. THE CHRISTIAN she took from its first number; it was always read through, and then sent on tour in a long round of lending among friends. One of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons was read aloud by her servants every Saturday night before prayers, and then in turn carefully passed on to other readers.

From a Photograph by Mr. M. Guttenburg, 27, Triangle, Clifton, Bristol.

Her favourite method of using her home as a talent for God was to give an invitation for a fortnight's visit and rest, expenses paid, to tired workers in the Master's service. One of these said lately, "I shall thank God all my life for my stay under her roof. She put me up to so many things I could do for God that I had never dreamed of before, and her companionship was like a mountain breeze."

Invitations to breakfast or supper to workers unable to come at other times, lawn parties to working mothers and their babies, music lessons on the harmonium for young people unable to learn otherwise, sweet-making for sale on behalf of the Missionary Fund, the rearing of choice canaries within the house and prize rabbits outside for the same cause, and countless other unusual and ingenious ways of doing good, filled her house and time to overflowing.

Through it all she rarely passed a day without pain, and the discipline of almost every form of physical suffering followed her through life. But she adhered to two rules made by herself as a girl—never to talk of her ailments to others, and never to think of them while work wanted doing. Brave self-forgetfulness and indomitable perseverance kept her working on to the end.

When past three-score and ten she began a Sunday Bible Class for married women in her drawing-room. It began with fifteen women, and ended, after years of strenuous yet joyful work, with 120 members, every one of whom had been personally visited, written to, and prayerfully and lovingly shown the way of salvation. Pages might be written of all Mrs. Marfell did and suffered in this portion of her life-work.

Incessant labour proved too much, and her health so completely broke down that the class had to be yielded to other hands. For a long time it seemed only a question of waiting for the summons home. Gradually strength came back, and the pony carriage again went its daily rounds of blessing; the sewing machine and knitting needles went cheerily on once more. She could not rest, even at eighty, without some definitely aggressive work of righteousness, and the children now seemed to have the greatest claim upon her.

Though urged repeatedly to take stimulants for health's sake, she had been for long years a consistent abstainer, and many to whom the wine-cup had been a snare owed their deliverance to her efforts and prayers. She began a Band of Hope for children, hiring a room at first for the meetings. The law of growth was in everything to which she put her hand, and soon they were crowded out. Her income was not vast, but purse and basket and store were all elastic in the service of God and humanity. So a pleasant room was reared in her own garden, and named the Victoria Hall in honour of the Queen's jubilee. It was dedicated on her last birthday, and nearly three hundred children were soon in attendance, boys and girls alternately. Much more than temperance was taught in these gatherings, for the goal of all her work was Christ, and to lead the children to Him was the passionate desire of her heart. Truly she had her reward.

Other meetings for prayer and Bible study were often held, and plans for still wider service were forming in her loving heart, when suddenly the voice from heaven was heard saying, "Come up hither!" On her last day of life she visited the poor and wrote letters, observing still her lifelong rule to pen some word for God in every epistle sent forth. She presided at the Band of Hope meeting, and finished her seventy years of unselfish toil with loving counsels to the boys assembled.

At daybreak next day an attack of illness came on, and within an hour she had gone hence in the fiery chariot of pain to the rest she had so nobly denied herself in life, and to the "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

J.

A Saviour Still.

Lines written on reading Oliver Cromwell's remark:
"I know that I once had grace."

O Saviour! not on feeling past,
When most from Heaven they seemed;
On Thee alone my hope I cast,
Who hast my soul redeemed.

Thou only know'st how dark a hue
Hath dimmed what once was bright;
To Thee I look, the only True,
The sinner's changeless Light.

Bare, as when first I felt my need,
Cling to this hope I WILL:
If yet I am not saved indeed,
Thou art the Saviour still.

T. H.

Co-operative Holidays.—The programme of the Co-operative Holidays Association shows what astonishing economies can be effected by careful organisation. Holidays are announced at Whitby, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Lakes, and amid the wild and little-known scenery of Swaledale. The association has opened a delightful guest-house on the Gareloch, Scotland, and has federated with the London Polytechnic. Programme can be had by sending stamped addressed envelope to the Secretary, Abbey House, Whitby.

The May Meetings.

The B.W.T.A.

AMID every sign of abounding vitality and enthusiasm the National British Women's Temperance Association held its annual gathering in London last week. The meetings of council were in Great Queen Street Chapel, while the usual evening public rally took place in Queen's Hall, Langham Place.

The proceedings this year have not been marked by any feature of unusual interest, except perhaps that the imminent issue of the report of the Licensing Commission awakened anticipations as to what the ultimate outcome may be. Lady Henry Somerset presided over the principal gatherings, and her presidential address on Tuesday morning was marked by all the intensity of feeling and eloquence of expression with which her ladyship has accustomed us. It may here be noted that on the closing day of the council Lady Henry was re-elected president almost by a unanimous vote. There was the customary large attendance of official delegates (numbering nearing 800) from different branches throughout the country, and also a number of fraternal delegates from other lands. Many pathetic references were made to the loss sustained by the temperance cause by the death of Frances Willard.

On the Monday there was a prolonged devotional service at St. Martin's Town Hall, when brief words of exhortation were given at intervals by such well-known friends as the President, Dr. Monro Gibson, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and others.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS

referred, by way of strong protest, among other matters, to the drink licences recently obtained by Messrs. Lipton and Company, and to the fact that many clergymen and women hold shares in brewery companies. The book on the temperance reform lately written by Mr. J. Rowntree and Mr. A. Sherwell was commended as a valued addition to the literature on the subject. The work of the Royal Commission, of course, formed the subject of special remark, and the moral drawn from its proceedings was the urgent and constant need for greater combination and unity of action among those who are fighting the drink evil. "The Trade" is powerful because it is united in defence. Christians must also be united in defence of the home and the family.

A reference to the life-work of Miss Willard led up to an earnest plea for the education of public opinion in the direction of prohibition. Some pathetic references followed to the blight which falls on child-life among the poor through the drink curse, and the work among the young at Duxhurst was very feelingly described. The closing section of the address was a most strenuous appeal for which, after all, is the only effectual way of lifting up those that have fallen through the drink, as well as of recruiting the ranks of abstainers. The address, as we have said, was singularly telling and eloquent, and will well bear close and repeated perusal.

MORE PERSISTENT INDIVIDUAL EFFORT,

The great public meeting in Queen's Hall on Wednesday evening was as inspiring and stirring as any of its predecessors. Lady Henry Somerset's address was largely on the lines of her presidential utterance, and was at once full of thankfulness for past progress and of hope for still greater achievements in the years to come. The second speaker was Dean Farrar, who, needless so say, was at once eloquent and earnest. He indicated that his personal share in the great fight for temperance must now be nearing its close, and his earlier remarks were rather of a discouraging tendency, indicating the little that has been accomplished compared to the efforts put forth. When the Dean came to speak, however, of woman's work in this great cause, his words were hopeful and rousing. He brought many instances from the history of the past, classic and modern, to show what one devoted woman had been able to do, and he warmly exhorted the women before him to emulate the achievements of those who had gone before.

The closing speaker was Rev. Benjamin L. Gibbon, of Bloomsbury. He, too, dwelt at some length on the dark side of the picture; but he powerfully showed how the temperance cause had won all along the line so far as argument was concerned, and how many influential classes of society were now ranged on its side. He was very emphatic on the hindrances that have come in the past from disunion within the temperance ranks, and he called for a united rally so that such measures as Sunday closing, the abolition of grocers' licences, and some form of popular control of the traffic may soon be brought to pass.

In answer to calls from the audience, Lady Carlisle, who sat by the side of the president, made a brief but very stirring speech. She declared that she could see no reason for discouragement, but many for encouragement and hope of a speedy victory. She warned her sisters against entertaining any idea of municipal control of the traffic; if it be wrong for women and clergymen to hold shares in a brewery, how much worse for the whole community to make itself responsible for the carrying on of an evil trade, even if gain should result in a commercial and monetary sense!

Coalies and Carmen.

A HAPPY anniversary was celebrated on Tuesday week by men and their families who come under the influence of the Mission to Coalies and Carmen in connection with the London City Mission. A tea for coal porters and their wives was followed by a public meeting in the Mildmay Conference Hall, Mr. W. R. Rickett in the chair. The coalies have a choir of their own, and members thereof were joined by their mates among the audience in making the evening bright with sacred melody.

